What does this all add up to? It adds up to what we call delinquency, but I think the time has come now when we shall have to use the term "general delinquency" because this delinquency embraces not only the youth of the land but adults too. When you stop to consider that over ninety percent of the divorces in the United States are caused by what is termed infidelity, which means nothing more or less than immorality, adding to general delinquency out of which is developed vandalism, immorality, mental and physical indolence, and profanity. I mention profanity because much of this modern-day literature spells out in bold type some of the most vile oaths that any of us have ever heard.

What about a change in all of these conditions? Is there not something that can be brought about to awaken the American people to a destiny of degradation and weakness, spiritually, mentally, and physically unless the sources of reading material are changed, affording only that which is noble, uplifting, and cultural? As in ancient days when the finger of the God of Israel wrote the doom of Babylon, this same penalty hangs over any nation that forgets God to the extent that the Bible is found in few homes and where the youth of the country are not familiar with the teachings of Holy Scripture. Yes, just as Babylon was called to an accounting by the God of Israel, so will the people of this great nation be called to an accounting for permitting youth and old alike to be indoctrinated with the principles of the evil one through the reading of immoral and vulgar literature.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

What about us, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? The Lord has loved us to the extent that he has been kind enough to give us the safeguards against evil thoughts, for he has revealed to us:

And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith. (D. & C. 88:118.)

Then, back in the days of Kirtland, there was set up the School of the Prophets for the sole purpose of acquainting our leaders with the best that could be found in wisdom, and among other things was said that this school was not only for the high priests, but it was also for the deacons. And so the Lord intended that all should enjoy revealed wisdom, revealed truth, that we might be enabled to carry forth his great work and consummate his plans here upon the earth.

The great responsibility in guiding the thinking of youth rests in the home. That obligation rests squarely upon the shoulders of parents. I sometimes think that we parents are prone to leave the matter of what our boys and girls think too much in the hands of the schools. As Bishop Richards indicated yesterday, doctrine is being taught to our boys and girls that will undermine their faith, and I say that the Lord is going to hold us accountable as parents if we fail to take an inventory of what is being taught to our boys and girls in the institutions of learning in the land. Not only that, we as parents usually are very careful about the kind of associates our sons and daughters shall have. But I want to say to you there are other associates to which we should also give very careful consideration; namely, the books they read, for, after all, books are more than associates because they are so intimate. Let us remember that the books that these young men and young women read will store away in the storehouse of memory the thoughts that will either motivate them to deeds of nobleness or evil.

BOOKS FOR LATTER-DAY SAINT HOMES

In every Latter-day Saint home we should find the library of the Lord. It is small as far as the number of books is concerned. There are but four, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price. In addition to these there can be purchased thousands of books written by inspired men, and I am sure that the Lord expects us to have in our homes his library. Brigham Young made it plain that without the library of the Lord we would walk in darkness and that we would not enjoy the Spirit of our Heavenly Father. Brigham Young had this to say:

On reading carefully the Old and the New Testaments we can discover that the majority of the revelations given to mankind anciently were in regard to their daily duties; we follow in the same path. The revelations contained in the Bible and the Book of Mormon are examples to us, and the book of Doctrine and Covenants contains direct revelation to this Church; they are a guide to us, and we do not wish to do them away; we do not want them to become obsolete and to set them aside. We wish to continue in the revelations of the Lord Jesus Christ day by day, and to have his spirit with us continually. If we can do this, we shall no more walk in darkness but we shall walk in the light of life. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 1943 edition, p. 12.)

I am sure there are no Latter-day Saints here but what are anxious that their children will understand the revelations as found in the Bible, in the Book of Mormon, and in the Doctrine and Covenants. How often do you or I ever sit down with our children and take up one of the sections of the Doctrine and Covenants, point out the great truths revealed therein, and what it will do if we apply these truths in our daily lives?

MEMORIZING THE SCRIPTURES

I think the time has come when it would be a fine thing to take at least one verse a week and have the whole family memorize it. Think of what Brother Matthew Cowley told us yesterday with reference to his father—at the age of nineteen having memorized four hundred eighty-three verses of scripture. I am quite sure when this young man went into the mission field he was able to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ vigorously, intelligently, and to do a great work. If we were to teach our children one verse of the scriptures a week, that would amount to about fifty-two verses a year, and in ten years it would amount to five hundred twenty verses. And think of their going out to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ with five hundred twenty verses of scripture at their command! Think of the time it would save! Think of the impression that it would make upon those that they come in contact with. And far and above this, it would inculcate into their minds and hearts, great truths and light which would motivate them to noble deeds. We should consider the Book of Mormon, for, as President Grant said:

I am convinced in my own mind, my dear brethren and sisters, that this book, the Book of Mormon, is the greatest converter of men and women as to the divinity of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is in every way a true witness of God, and it sustains the Bible and is in harmony with the Bible.

How many of our young people become acquainted in the home with this American Bible? You and I can best answer that question. I think if we are to protect youth against the evils of the land, against evil thinking, against evil books, we can do no better than to teach them the great truths that are found in the Book of Mormon. There we find the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ given to us in its fulness, and its simplicity.

WISDOM OBTAINED THROUGH GOOD BOOKS

Speaking of rules that we should adopt, to discriminate against that which is bad in our reading, may I give you a suggestion as it comes from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. He said this :

My rule now is, never read anything that is not worth remembering. I know now that all the wisdom of the past is for our use, and that the only place we can learn that wisdom, which comes from all that men have thought, and worked, and suffered, and achieved, is from good books; and wisdom is one of the most precious gifts that the Lord has to give. When Solomon of old was made king, he asked the Lord for wisdom only, and because he did not ask for the lives of his enemies, nor for riches, wealth, and honor, the Lord gave all of these to him and then wisdom also in great abundance, so that from that time until now, Solomon has stood as the wise man of the ages.

Then, too, brethren and sisters, if we are going to have the kind of home that Latter-day Saints should have, we might well follow the counsel found in Proverbs 24:3-9.

Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established: And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches. A wise man is strong; yea, a man of knowledge increaseth strength. For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety. Wisdom is too high for a fool: he openeth not his mouth in the gate. He that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person. The thought of foolishness is sin: and the scorner is an abomination to men.

Never let us forget that the glory of God is intelligence, and that no man will be saved faster than he gains knowledge and intelligence. Therefore, as we think of our minds and our thoughts as related to our hearts, our hearts should become pure, if we understand the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. What did the Lord say about the pure in heart?

Therefore, verily, thus saith the Lord, Let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion—the pure in heart; therefore, let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn. (D. & C. 97:21.)

May we have as a motto the words of that lovely old song: "Beautiful Zion for me," and always remember the scripture of that ancient one: "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he, . . ." which I pray for in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I think, my brethren and sisters and friends, that no apology for repetition is necessary during this conference. The pioneer theme so dominates the occasion and our thinking that we can scarcely be expected to do other than speak about it. So I propose to address myself to the subject, "What did the pioneers bring?"

PURPOSE OF MORMON PIONEERS IN SETTLING THE WEST

Pioneer movements for reclamation of new territory were not uncommon in America a hundred years ago. Land was the most commonly accepted form of wealth, and the availability of new lands made their quest a dominant pursuit of the people. Colonization had built America, and the extension of her frontiers was a general enterprise.

There were, it is true, many unusual circumstances attending the pioneer settlement which we now commemorate. The distance from established communities covered by the migration and the penetration into unexplored and forbidding country were much greater than those of average advances. The number of people moved and colonized was exceptionally large; the territory sought to be included in the project was vast; the expulsion of the people from their homes and their cruel and intolerant treatment in a free democratic country would serve to give character to this migration. The continued persecution of the people after their settlement here and the adverse attitude of their government were unusual items. All these circumstances might well serve to focus attention upon the pioneer movement of 1847 as being unusual and distinctive among comparable undertakings of frontier peoples of our country; but, in my opinion, these conditions, of themselves, do not adequately account for the historical placement of the Mormon colonization of the West in the number one position among all pioneer movements and conquests in America, certainly from the standpoint of resources available and results achieved.

To understand the pioneers and their accomplishments, we must examine their motives. Herein we shall find the difference between them and other pioneers and frontiersmen of our country. They came for freedom and peace as others have done. They came to make homes for themselves as others have done. They came to worship God and practise their religion to the satisfaction of their consciences, as others have done; but here is one thing they came for which, so far as I know, has no counterpart in any other pioneer movement: They came with the avowed purpose of establishing a society so that they would be able to take back to the civilization from which they had fled, yes, even to their persecutors, the principles of life and conduct which were the source of their own inspiration, cohesion, success, and happiness. I do not mean to say that missionary efforts have not been undertaken by other groups, but for pure Christlike altruism in purpose and deed, I place the founders of this commonwealth on the very summit of all Christian endeavor.

It was ingrained in their very beings that their greatest blessings would come in blessing others. They knew they had a message that was a boon to mankind; they knew they were under obligation to propagate that message among the peoples of the world; and they never for one moment lost sight of that obligation and their endeavor to fulfil it. In the processes of subduing a most stubborn country, with all its discouragements, disappointments, and exactions of time, energy, patience, and courage, they never ceased to give liberally of their hard-earned substance and their limited man power in carrying abroad the sacred principles which dominated their lives. The early companies of immigrants in their long marches across the prairies met countermarches of missionaries toiling back over the same hard road they had so recently trod with the same determination, equal expectancy and hope, and oftentimes comparable sacrifice as when they undertook the long trek to the West. Thus the pioneers came and went back as no other people have ever done, and their descendants have kept up the process for a century of time.

BELIEF IN ANCIENT PROPHECY

What was the compelling force which drove them to such superhuman exertion and such widespread sacrifices? Strange as it may seem, it was their literal acceptance of an ancient prophecy revived by modern revelation:

... It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. (Isaiah 2:2, 3.)

Every pioneer believed that prophecy with his whole heart. He saw the vision of its fulfilment in all his labors, trials, and privations. He wanted a home with comfort for his family, of course. He wanted a good society and prosperity, but all these were subordinate to the fulfilment of this prophecy—the establishment of Zion.

We all rejoice in the general high esteem accorded Brigham Young as a master colonizer, statesman, and empire builder. He is fully entitled to this acclaim from his fellow men, but not many outside his own followers have understood the real secret of his success. It is true that he was practical, far-sighted, and adept at organization, but those who know the inner forces behind his accomplishments will tell you that his power was spiritual, rather than temporal. The unity so essential to the cooperative effort of the people was a spiritual unity, arising out of a universal conviction of the sacred nature of the cause they espoused and a common acceptance of the responsibilities it entailed. In all of Brigham Young's work and ministry there was another in spirit always at his side, always supporting him and inspiring him, whose guidance and direction he ever acknowledged. That was his predecessor, Joseph Smith, the earthly founder of the cause he represented, the inspirer of the people through whom their destiny had been revealed. Brigham never forgot and never ignored Joseph; neither did the people. They fought with all their strength to carry out the mission he had put upon them. That mission was both temporal and spiritual but predominantly spiritual.

INDUSTRY, EDUCATION, LOYALTY BROUGHT BY THE PIONEERS

What then did the pioneers bring? They brought industry in a measure that has seldom been equaled. They taught and practised the gospel of work as the foundation for success and happiness. That gospel was perhaps more widely accepted in their day than it is today, unfortunately. They demonstrated its efficacy, and their demonstration stands today as an example and incentive to the world.

They brought education and a love for the artistic and beautiful. Not many of them were scholarly. Their opportunities for learning had been very meager, but they had within them an innate yearning for truth, which, after all, is the real basis for education. It was an integral part of their conception of the purpose of life to develop intelligence and acquire knowledge. Intelligence was invested with the highest possible attributes, proclaimed to be the very glory of God. It was but natural, therefore, that education and its cultural, refining influences should receive their ardent support. The education which they fostered was not narrow and restricted as some education is. It was directed toward the acquisition of knowledge in all phases of life and the universe; and it did one thing which, unfortunately, modern education does not always do—it did not subordinate the quality of intelligence essential to comprehend the things of the spirit to the order of intelligence necessary for the acquisition of other facts. With this lofty concept of intelligence came a deep-seated love of the beautiful which is the foundation for creative art, as well as for artistic appreciation. This love of beauty did not always find tangible expression, but it prompted many worthwhile and sometimes outstanding endeavors in architecture, music, drama, and other cultural projects. It was undoubtedly this deep love for learning and truth which has been responsible in succeeding generations for the high position our state has attained in the field of literacy and education and in the percentage of its population who have won recognition in scientific and other fields of learning. I believe that Utah has been among the foremost, if not first, of all the states in the Union in these respects.

They brought with them a high order of loyalty and a great capacity for firm devotion to the cause they espoused. We can scarcely estimate what this meant to the success of their enterprises. In the main they were rugged individuals, free men, many of whose immediate ancestors had fought for liberty; yet they were willing and eager to consecrate themselves and all they had to the cause which brought them here—the cause they loved. Theirs was the type of unselfish devotion which makes for the success of great causes in the world. Without that devotion no leadership, however competent, could have succeeded.

WISDOM AN OUTSTANDING QUALITY OF THE PIONEERS

I come now to the greatest thing of all which the pioneers brought with them, and that I characterize as wisdom, wisdom about the important things in life. The really vital and fundamental aspects of our lives and living may be clasified under very few headings. I think about four would be sufficient—the body, character, the family, and the social order. If everything were all right with these four items, the world would be in good order, and wisdom about these things is and always has been the greatest need of mankind. The pioneers brought with them this much required wisdom. It was not of their own making. It was given to them before they came here. In fact, it was not of any man's making, for it was the wisdom of the ages bequeathed to them by Divine Providence.

First, consider the body of man. Everyone wants a sound body. Not all are willing to take the steps to secure it. The pioneers brought a new concept of the body which invested it with sacred significance. They taught that the body is the earthly tabernacle wherein the spirit of man, the literal child of God, is housed and that the body cannot be defiled or polluted or otherwise abused by taking into it poisons and deleterious substances without offering affront to God whose spirit dwells therein. In this concept infractions of the laws of health are attended not only with physical penalties, but with spiritual consequences as well. There is a double duty to preserve the wholesomeness of the body; and, for guidance in this duty, they brought with them a code of health rules, which, although given more than one hundred years ago, have had the sanction and the corroboration of scientific researches never even thought of at the time of their origin. Here was wisdom about the body, and the contributions coming to the people from that wisdom are immeasurable.

Second—character or personality, if you will. I see but little difference. I define character as the sum total of all the attributes incorporated into the structure of a man's life, and the complexion of his character is determined by the preponderance of good or bad qualities. Now the wisdom which came about character was not new. It was very old, but it had a new and very special emphasis. It taught not only that man is the child of God, of the most noble lineage but that he is destined also, if he lives for it, to be associated with his Heavenly Father in carrying forth his eternal works in all time to come. Could there be a higher incentive for worthy living and character, with no uncertainty as to the criteria upon which all elections and choices should be made? I know of nothing more stimulating to the attainment of high character in men and women than a clear concept of their divine origin and eternal destiny.

Next—the family. What a world of joy and sorrow and tragedy and bliss that word spells for us! It fills the pages of countless books. It is the subject of articles, orations, debates, and controversies of legislation and judicial decision, and right today I notice a magazine writer who questions the necessity of the institution and mildly predicts its extinction in the not-too-distant future. What was the wisdom the pioneers brought about the family? Why, they invested it with the noblest and most exalted attributes which have ever come to it in all the history of the world. They taught that it is not only a basic unit for happy life and progress here on this earth but that it constitutes also the very foundation of our hope for supreme exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God. Indeed, the heaven we seek is little more than the projection of our homes into eternity. How at variance with these lofty concepts of home and family are the tragic evils in domestic life today—divorce, broken homes, neglected, wayward children more to be pitied than abused because of the disintegration of family life. In my thinking this very disintegration has been responsible in no small measure for the growth of the disorders and “isms” in government and society which have so plagued the world and which today constitute our greatest menace. Oh, if the wisdom which these humble pioneers brought could only find application in the families of the world what a boon it would be to the comfort and the happiness and the progress of humanity.

Lastly, the social order by which I mean to include the art of men's living together comfortably and in peace. The wise contribution which the pioneers brought on this altogether important aspect of life can be told in a single word—brotherhood. They taught, in the most realistic way, the concept of all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples belonging to the family of God. They taught fraternity but not without paternity. The whole doctrine of Christian relationship, altruism, and service may be summed up in the designation, “my brother,” “my sister.” They believed a hundred years ago that the only substantial hope for universal peace lay in the extension of this doctrine of brotherhood throughout the world. Many others in times gone by and at the present have proclaimed this doctrine. I am grateful that it is so. I hope their proclamation will help, but I confess to some skepticism when I see the reception this doctrine gets. Some months ago I heard an address over the radio from an eminent divine, the Archbishop of Canterbury, speaking from Philadelphia. Brotherhood and peace was his subject. I was pleased to hear him make the declaration that there was little chance for the establishment of brotherhood without recognition of the Fatherhood of God. I read an account of his speech in the public press the next day after it was given, and a few weeks later I read another account of it in a magazine. In neither account was there any mention whatever of this declaration which I regarded as the most important and vital thing in his speech. What the world needs for composition of its difficulties and the establishment of a lasting peace is not merely a so-called spiritual brotherhood which makes a fine sounding phrase, but also a brotherhood of the sons of God in this earth translated in terms of mutual, practical helpfulness.

That was the wisdom about the social order and peace which the pioneers brought and demonstrated when they came to this land.

All of my fellow members of the Church will readily understand that these wise contributions of which I speak and many more were but principles of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ which had been restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith but a short time prior to the event which we commemorate this year. It was because of the pioneers' implicit faith in this transcendent message of life and truth that they established the Lord's house in "the top of the mountains." It was a great thing to set up a commonwealth and transform a desert into cities, towns, and villages with the homes, schools, and facilities we now enjoy. It was a vastly greater accomplishment to establish the kingdom of God and send forth from Zion that salutary message of hope and faith and divine, eternal wisdom to all mankind. This was the real heritage our noble pioneers brought with them and left to us and our friends who have come to join us in this lovely land which we call the Zion of our Lord. It is the most precious gift in life. God help us to prize it, to live it and to spread it, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

My dear brothers, my dear sisters; I feel very timid and, I am sure, humble in appearing before this large gathering of fine people in this historic building. I know you will forgive me, you who know me well, if I ask that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers for the next few moments; I feel very dependent upon the help of the Lord; and I shall appreciate your assistance.

I have been deeply touched by the fine messages that we have listened to today. I know they have made me more humble. I appreciate the lovely music from this great university [Brigham Young chorus] named after our great leader.

GRATITUDE EXPRESSED FOR KINDNESS

During the past four or five months, I have worried a great deal about this experience. I have thought about it, but even after that thought and that prayer and that worry, I had no idea of what it would be like to face this congregation. I would be very ungrateful to my brethren of the General Authorities, and particularly to my Father in heaven, if I failed to thank him publicly for the opportunity that I have had of knowing these men personally. They have been most kind to me, most encouraging, most patient. They have attempted to make me feel welcome, and they have put themselves out to extend to me many kindnesses for which I am grateful. I came to them a stranger, and they took me in. I can bear you my testimony that I know they are men of God, and I know the veil between them and the sphere of their Father in heaven is indeed thin.

My work has brought me in very close association with Bishop Richards and Bishop Wirthlin. I think they are two of the finest men that you could ever know. They are sweet; they are tolerant and kind. They have been very patient with me, and I am grateful for the opportunity of knowing them as I do.

A PLEA FOR INACTIVE MEMBERS

There are great responsibilities that all members of the Church bear, if they are to do that which is required in assisting the Lord to bring about the immortality and eternal life of man. The Holy Ghost is given each of us that we may be led aright and be made equal to the tasks that are given us, and I am very confident that we would fail without the companionship of the Holy Ghost to help us. I am fully convinced that one cannot find a full and complete life without service to his fellowmen, and I can think of no greater way to be of service to his fellow men than by helping in the service of our Father in heaven who is the Father of all of us. Mormonism leads to the habits of industry, thrift, temperance, tolerance. It makes people self-reliant and self-supporting. It tempers independence with humility. It sustains law and encourages patriotic citizenship.

If it were in my power, I would like to say a word to my brethren who are somewhat inactive in the Church. I know many of these good men, and I wish I could appeal to them to become more active in the Church because I am satisfied that they are really missing some of the greatest blessings and the greatest happiness in the world. I have been appointed to do a little work with adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood. I know that many of those fine men who, perhaps not of their own fault, (maybe the rest of us have neglected them at times in our lives), are now a little inactive in the Church. They have become a little disinterested in the Church. May the Lord give us strength that we may reach out a hand of fellowship to these fine men. I had lunch with two of them a week ago. One of them was a doctor, and he said to me after we had discussed some of the activities of the Church, in a very serious expression, "How can I get started in the Church again? It's years since I have attended any of my Church duties." He is only waiting for somebody to extend a hand and help him over that first hurdle. These men are successful businessmen and professional men, and if they have the ability and judgment to be successful in their own lines of endeavor, I am sure they have the ability to see the blessings that are in store for them by becoming associated with the Church in our different activities in the Church.

INCIDENTS REGARDING PRAYER

I am sure that the habit of prayer plays a great part in our lives. We have heard a lot today about being close to our Father in heaven, and I don't know any other way to stay close to our Father in heaven except by prayer. I know sometimes in our busy lives we get away from that fine principle that the pioneers brought here. I cannot help referring to a story of my grandfather who accepted the gospel in Denmark years ago, when he left his father and mother, brothers and sisters, never to see them again, came to this country, crossed the plains, but the finest story I think of all that I remember from his stories was the one when he told me that he never sowed the seeds of grain until he opened his sacks of grain and knelt down beside those sacks and prayed to his Father in heaven that the grain would grow. I remember that story from the time when I was a young boy, and that is one principle that I have tried to live, if I failed to keep any others.

I am very grateful that I was taught the habit of prayer, and I had one of the sweetest experiences by passing that on to a son. I have only one son, and I love him just as you love your sons, and I did try to teach him the habit of prayer. I had a beautiful experience last May when he was attempting to graduate from the university his last quarter, so he could fulfill his mission. I knew he was studying late at night, and I can't see any danger, any wrong in a boy's praying about his studies. I am grateful that no teacher was able to destroy that in his life. One night as he was staying up late to study, I knew it was getting morning, and I tiptoed into his room and opened his door without knocking—possibly I should have knocked—but as I came into his room, there I saw him on his knees at his desk praying to his Father in heaven that he would be given ability to finish his school year, graduate, and go on a mission. His prayers were answered, and I am grateful to my Father in heaven that he answered those prayers and saw fit to permit that boy to go on a mission. My son is enjoying his work back in the New England Mission with President and Sister Reeder. I know that the Lord will answer our prayers! I bear you my testimony that without those prayers being answered, I fear we would be great failures.

A SINCERE TESTIMONY

I bear testimony to you that I know the gospel of Jesus Christ is true. I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and the only way that I can say that I know it is because of the dictates of my conscience and because of the spirit of my Father in heaven that has permitted me to feel that I know those things to be true. The Lord has blessed me abundantly, and if he will give me health and strength, I will try to render some service in a measure for the many blessings that I have received. The Lord has magnified his people. Many times I have heard men lay their hands upon the head of a brother and pray to their Father in heaven that he would magnify him. I didn't always know or realize what that meant, or perhaps I didn't give it enough thought, but I know now that the Lord will magnify his people if we will but pray to him and trust in him and place ourselves in his hands.

May the Lord continue to bless us as a people, that we may be grateful for the opportunities that we have, that we may extend the hand of fellowship and love so perfectly exemplified by the President of our Church today, President George Albert Smith. Whenever I feel that I am getting out of patience or becoming perturbed, I think of his beautiful spirit, and then I have to mellow and realize that the spirit of love is the spirit of our Father in heaven.

May the Lord bless us that we may have that pleasure, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus and the Congregation sang: "O Say, What Is Truth?" by Jaques; Hymn Book No. 59, L.D.S. Hymns No. 191. Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

You are a glorious audience to look upon, and if the Church represented nothing more than what we see before us here from this pulpit, it would be an inestimable power for good in the earth. But to look at you and to realize that you represent only a fraction of one percent of the total membership of the Church is a glorious thought to contemplate.

MUCH EXPECTED OF THE CHURCH

I suppose we all like to hear success stories, and the centennial is a success story. The statistical report of the Church, read here yesterday morning by President Clark and by Brother Joseph Anderson, is a success story of the cumulative accomplishment of the past hundred years.

The Lord expected much of those six people who officially organized the Church in 1830, and I feel sure he was not disappointed. He expected much of the twenty thousand who made up the population of Nauvoo and vicinity about a hundred years ago, and, while some faltered, their total achievement was glorious. I hesitate to think how much more he expects of us today as we stand at the beginning of the second century in this valley.

The past has little meaning except in terms of the future. What is only past is a dead thing, but what of the past may be builded upon is something else, and I look at the centennial not only as an occasion for looking back but also as an obligation for looking forward, and again, I hesitate almost to think of what would be expected of about a million people with all of the advantages we have in comparison with the accomplishments of those who have gone before with what they had.

CHALLENGE FOR MISSIONARY WORK

Surely it may be said that in no century of the history of the world has greater change taken place than in the past century which we now celebrate as our centennial, and I should like to indicate, by citing a few facts and figures, some of the accomplishments, and some of the things that face us squarely as a challenge for the century to come.

For one thing, the total population of the world has more than doubled in the past century which we now commemorate. There are more than two billion people on the face of the earth today. It is estimated by statisticians of population that this will double, or more than double, again, being permitted to do so, in the next century, which would mean something between four and five billion people. To an organization that has the obligation to preach the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, this is something to consider.

Sometime before the war (and I don't know just what the figures are at this moment), there was an estimated net gain of about thirty million people being added to the population of the world annually. About one hundred fifty thousand new faces were appearing in this world each day. About a hundred thousand were dying each day. These figures are also something to contemplate by a Church that has the obligation of carrying the message to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. What does a hundred fifty thousand new faces each day mean in terms of missionary work, and what does the great number of those who depart mean in terms of temple work?

Some years ago I took an annual report of the British Mission, when there was a rather strong corps of missionaries active there, and paralleled figures with some of the vital statistics from Great Britain, and discovered that in the oldest and perhaps best established European mission in the Church, at that time at least, there was about one person born in Great Britain every year to every tract we were distributing; there were about four born in Great Britain every year to every door answered to our missionaries; about ten born every year to every gospel conversation; and about sixty born every year to every family visited. Multiply this result by the total figures for the world, and we have some more facts to take into consideration in terms of our own obligations.

The Book of Mormon has been translated into about twenty-four languages, and printed, I think, in eighteen. But the French Academy recognizes about two thousand seven hundred ninety-six distinct languages on the face of the earth. You can see what the Lord started when he took a hand in the confusion of tongues at Babel after the flood, and it is marvelous to contemplate how magnificently men cooperate when confusion is called for—two thousand seven hundred ninety-six languages! The World Almanac recognizes forty-five major languages in use today. These are other facts for us to consider.

Now I submit to you that the Lord does not deal in statistical impossibilities, and when he places upon any people the obligation of preaching the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people it is an assignment to be taken seriously and not something beyond possible reach. I have made the statement often that if every person in the Church did his job as a missionary as well as Wilford Woodruff once did, this would be accomplished now.

But in addition to such service there are many tools that have been given to us which multiply the power of men's efforts and which I am sure the Lord expects us to make good use of even as tools are being made use of in all the other pursuits of life for man's enrichment and comfort and for the material advancement of the world. A man with his bare hands doesn't have much to work with in this world, but a man with a tool or with a machine, which is a tool multiplied in power and complexity and function, may do the work of five or ten or a thousand or more men.

I am sure that our Father in heaven expects us to use all available resources intelligently and to multiply our personal efforts by every modern facility that is available to mankind in this our day, even as our pioneer fathers a hundred years ago used everything that was available to them. It is not for us to use their methods alone but to use the principles on which they builded and by which they lived, and to add to and multiply the use of those principles by everything that is available to us.

If we can have a conversation with one man, well and good, but if we can multiply this by modern means of communication by a million or several million, so much the better, and by such means, as well as by our individual opportunities and efforts, this obligation that has been placed upon us is within realization, theoretically at least, practically, I believe.

These are just a few passing thoughts of the significance of our centennial. I should like to add two more before sitting down.

THE HOME MISSIONARY FIELD

One, that I believe there is no greater mission field, however much we may emphasize others, than there is at home and in the home.

Night before last, I read in the newspaper of a mother who had been chosen as Utah's Mother of 1947, and who had fifty-eight living descendants. I remember of reading of an elderly patriarch in Utah County, some years ago, who was then living but has since died, and who then had one hundred forty-eight living descendants. I recall having seen a picture of President George F. Richards and his excellent family on the occasion of his eightieth birthday. They then numbered, as I recall, more than ninety descendants living, and they no doubt have added many more since then in these past five or six years. What would have been the cumulative result if, many years ago, someone hadn't done his duty in the Church, and had allowed one of these three whom I have mentioned to become indifferent or estranged from the Church early in life or to become offended for some reason?

When we are dealing with the life of a boy or girl, we are not dealing with an individual only. We are dealing with a whole posterity, and not with time only, but with life eternal. And there is no greater mission mothers and fathers can perform than to keep their sons and daughters close to them and close to the Church, and no greater mission that we at home can perform than to see that no one has cause for offense because of us, and that no one is allowed to lapse into indifference and inactivity, and that no one who is now inactive, fails to be labored with, with all that we have to give, because we are not dealing with an individual only; we are dealing with generations and with ultimate consequences of which we have no conception. I plead with you, my brothers and sisters, to consider this fact, and whenever you look at an individual, don't think of him just as he is, but think of the potentialities of his life and of generations to come—and never give him up.

FEAR OVERCOME BY TRUST IN THE LORD

And now, returning to the subject of world populations: A few months ago on a nationwide radio network two of America's eminent statisticians and authorities on population advocated as a solution to world troubles a planned limitation of population. Almost at the same time or a little later another authority was telling us that within five years from now, perhaps not more than ten percent of us would be left living. These two views are difficult to reconcile. It would be wonderful if the experts could only agree, but where they can't, confusion is the result.

But we do know what the Lord's plans and purposes are; what he expects of us; and the fear in our hearts concerning these things can be quieted; and our confusion and our apprehension in these times of wild rumor and of potentialities that are beyond our understanding for good and for evil, for destruction as well as for the making of good things, can be made to give way to calm assurance, if we will follow the counsel of the Lord, accept the counsel of his appointed servants, and live our lives as we know they should be lived. If we will do so we need not worry about these predictions, but we shall find satisfaction and happiness and peace and accomplishment in life, and can go our way and trust our Father in heaven for the ultimate consequences. That we may do so I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I wish each one of you could have seen the expression of pride and satisfaction that covered the face of President Howard McDonald as his thrilling choir stood up to sing each time. I am sure that each of you has enjoyed the glorious singing of these fine young people, quite as much as has their president. I have greatly enjoyed them.

I would like to read you something which I do not necessarily recommend for its poetry, but I do recommend for the sentiment that is there:

LIVING WHAT WE PRAY FOR

I knelt to pray when day was done,
 And prayed, "O, Lord, bless everyone;
 Lift from each saddened heart the pain;
 And let the sick be well again."

And then I woke another day,
 And carelessly went on my way;
 The whole day long I did not try
 To wipe a tear from any eye.

I did not try to share the load,
 Of any brother on the road;
 I did not even go to see
 The sick man, just next door to me.

Yet once again when day was done
 I prayed, "O, Lord, bless everyone,"
 But as I prayed, into my ear
 There came a voice that whispered clear:

"Pause now, my son, before you pray,
 Whom have you tried to bless today?
 God's sweetest blessings always go,
 By hands that serve him here below."

And then I hid my face and cried,
 "Forgive me, God, I have not tried;
 Let me but live another day,
 And I will live the way I pray."

RESPONSIBILITY TOWARDS THE SUFFERING

Day before yesterday afternoon, a very good friend of mine, came to our office at the Deseret News and told me about a family that has just come from Holland after having endured the bitter war years in that country. These people had starved; they had gone cold, many of them without sufficient clothing. They had no heat in their homes. They had endured one of the great tragedies that come into human lives. They became so hungry over there that whenever they could get such things as potato peelings, they would regard them as the greatest of delicacies. These people have come to America. The other night as they sat down around the table of my friend, they could hardly believe that such wonderful food in such great abundance could be made available to anyone. Why, there on their table were, not the peelings, but the potatoes themselves, beautiful white, whipped, creamy potatoes! They had thought that the peelings alone were a delicacy.

It breaks your heart when you think what these people have gone through. When I listened to that wonderful report given yesterday by President Clark and heard the remarks made regarding that family referred to by Brother Stover, living upstairs, without heat, with the glass broken out of their windows, the little girl without any shoes, insufficient clothing or bedding, the children lying there in bed shivering, hungry, cold! Well, it touches your heart to think that human beings must pass through things like that. And when I think of the many others who have similarly suffered, when I think of the conditions related here yesterday by Brother West and Brother Max Zimmer and Brother Babbel who have just come from those countries, I wonder if we appreciate what we have and what is our great responsibility to those who have not.

PARABLE OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

You remember one day the Savior was talking with a lawyer about the two first great commandments, one of them: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is the way the scripture reads:

... a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live. But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor? And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him. And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise. (Luke 10:25-37.)

LIVING THE WAY WE PRAY

Speaking of living the way we pray, I suppose the priest who passed by that traveler who had been attacked and beaten and left half dead must have been a praying man. That was his business. Probably he was paid for it. But in spite of all his prayers, he was not enough interested in the way he lived, he was not enough interested in translating his prayers into action to be willing to do anything about this poor, half-dead man who was abandoned there after having been beaten by thieves.

I am sure, too, that the Levite was likewise a praying man. I suppose there was probably no more pious man in all Palestine, and I am sure that he could pray as well as any Pharisee who might say that he thanked God that he was better than other men. Even this Levite, forgetting all his prayers and forgetting the real meaning of true religion, was willing to stand there and look at this man, and pass by and leave him there without supplying the necessary succor for him.

I thought of this yesterday as President Clark read that welfare report. It was a good report. Much was accomplished through the welfare program, but much more should have been accomplished. When Brother Cowley spoke here of our fast offerings, I felt it is not enough. There are too many among us who do not live the way we pray.

I suppose there are no more frequent prayers offered than the appeals that go up to the Lord asking him to bless the poor and the needy, and yet our fast offerings are down, and we still have many people in the Church who do not live enough the way they pray so that they are unwilling to get in and work with the welfare program and make that welfare program work for those who are in need. How well do we live according to the manner of our prayers?

When I think of the stakes or wards that have gone now these eleven years without storehouses and without permanent projects, when I think of the number of people who are constantly criticizing the welfare program, not understanding it probably, then I think, too, of what James said at one time. You remember James in his epistle talked about faith and works and said:

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? (James 2:14-16.)

Likewise when we pray and say to the Almighty, "Bless the poor and the needy," and then, to apply the scripture,

Notwithstanding we give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

HELPING THE POOR

Well, some people say: "I would like to help the poor in my own way."

I think we all should help the poor in our own way, but I think likewise we should help the poor in the Lord's way, and the Lord has said so much in so many words: Said he:

And it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. But it must needs be done in mine own way; and behold this is the way that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints, that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low. (D. & C. 104:15, 16.)

I call your attention to the fact that the Lord says that the helping of the poor "must needs be done in mine own way," and the Lord's own way in 1947, in this centennial year, is that organized assistance be given through the Church welfare program and through the priesthood quorums allied with that program. We ask you one and all who are laborers in this Church to cooperate fully and heartily and willingly with that program, and remember that not your way, but the Lord's way is to be done.

Speaking again of living the way we pray, I suppose everyone within the sound of my voice, at least those of the membership of the Church, every day pray that the Authorities of the Church may have the guidance and inspiration of the Lord. I hope you pray that way. We need the faith and prayers of the Saints. But remember that you have a responsibility to live the way you pray, and when you ask that the leaders of this Church may be guided by inspiration, then you be willing to live by the inspiration that comes from those Authorities. Part of that inspiration, I say part of that revelation, is the Church welfare program, and we invite all to participate in it earnestly.

After the Lord says it must be done in his own way, he says this:

For the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment. (D. & C. 104:17, 18.)

I used to think the Lord was pretty harsh in saying that if we are not willing to help the poor and the needy in his way, we would be in danger of the torment of hell, but when I began to read that in the light of Matthew, twenty-fifth chapter, and think of it along with the Church welfare program, I began to understand what the Lord had in mind. You remember the Savior said this:

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them saying, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me. (Matt. 25:31-45.)

OUR LIVES PROVE OUR LOVE FOR GOD

We are living in a day of tribulation. Peace has been taken from the earth. Tribulation will continue among us. It may be that you and I may never be face to face with starvation. It may be that you and I will never look upon the forms of our little children, as they have been described from abroad by Brother Benson, and others, in the last stages of starvation. We may not have a trial of that kind, but I tell you that we are being tested here and now, whether we realize it or not. Our everyday lives are demonstrating to the Almighty whether or not we love him, whether or not we love his children, even our neighbors as ourselves. We are demonstrating by our lives whether we are selfish, whether we are grasping, whether we are willing to help the other fellow, whether we are willing to share.

How do we measure up? Are we willing to share by paying fast offerings? Are we willing to share by laboring earnestly in the Church welfare program? Or are we going to drag our feet? Are we selfish? Do we love our neighbors as ourselves? Do we live the way we pray? Are we like the priest and the Levite in the story of the Good Samaritan? Or do we love the Lord our God with all our hearts, realizing that we cannot love God whom we have not seen if we do not love our brother whom we have seen?

Yes, we are in a testing ground, testing whether or not we are worthy to be called Saints, whether we love the Lord our God with all our hearts and our neighbors as ourselves. We are being tried to see if we are willing, even in a time of extremity, to share, if it is our last crust of bread, with another who is hungry.

Whom have you tried to bless today?
God's sweetest blessings always go
By hands that serve him here below.

When you pray for the poor, remember that the poor must be helped by somebody, and there is no one better to be that somebody than you. That we may all live as we pray, that we may serve God by serving our fellows, I humbly pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We are now approaching the closing exercises of this session of the Conference. After this Conference session, which will conclude in a short time, the next meeting will be at 7 o'clock this evening, and in accordance with the custom of the Church, the General meeting of the Priesthood will be held. That session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Sunday, April 6, 1947, will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

Referring to the meeting tonight at 7 o'clock, I hope you will be here in good time and if you have the experience we had at the last Conference, you may all get seats because we were all able to squeeze in last time.

The Tabernacle broadcast tomorrow morning is from 9:30 to 10:00, and those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats by 9:15 a.m. As the Choir will be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is desirable that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast.

The Church of the Air Broadcast, on which Elder Albert E. Bowen of the Quorum of the Twelve will be the speaker, will begin at 8 a.m. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 7:45 a.m.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10 a.m.

The choir singing for this day's sessions of the Conference has been by the Brigham Young University mixed chorus, with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting, Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. We have been delightfully entertained by this splendid aggregation of singers from that great university.

By the way, I know of no reason why the Brigham Young University should not be the greatest of all the universities in the world and if we will do our part, teach our people, encourage them to enjoy training such as they get down there, it may become the greatest. When I think that we can have our sons and daughters educated under the influence of men and women who believe in God and who are willing to exemplify his teachings, I realize that it is a privilege. I would like to say in passing that that school has probably turned out more prominent individuals who have become known nation-wide, and some world-wide, than any other school of equal numbers in this part of the world. All that the world has in the way of education we may have at the Brigham Young University, plus the gospel of Jesus Christ, and so I hope that we will keep in mind how important that is, and when we have this splendid group come from there to sing to us and we have the opportunity to feel of their spirit, I am sure we feel benefitted.

There will be a service at 5 o'clock p.m. upon the hill at the mouth of Emigration Canyon. This is the place where the monument is being constructed, and at 5 o'clock it is intended to lay the cornerstone of that great monument. Those of you who have conveyances I am sure will enjoy being there. The services will be broadcast over KSL so that if you cannot get up there, you can probably be where there is a radio and you can enjoy it in that way, and if the sun will shine and we can look out over the valley as we sometimes do from that point, I think that during this period we are talking about, the one hundred years anniversary, you will get a real thrill out of it. When that monument is finished, it will be one of the finest monuments to be found in the world. You are all invited if you feel that it is possible for you to be there at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The Brigham Young University mixed chorus will now sing "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works." The closing prayer will be offered by President Stephen E. Busath of the Sacramento Stake, after which we will be adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening.

Singing by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus: "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works," by Gaul.

Elder Stephen E. Busath, President of the Sacramento Stake, offered the benediction.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air program was presented Sunday morning, April 6, at 8:00, over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for the service. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The Choir sang as an opening number, an Easter anthem, "Alleluia,"—Jones.

The hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"—Wesley—Holbrook—Cornwall—was sung by the mens' voices of the Tabernacle Choir.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

CHURCH OF THE AIR Sermon

Friends of the Church of the Air:

The account of the transcendent event which signalizes this day and entitles it to rank among the first of all memorial days is brief and simple.

THE RECORD OF THE RESURRECTION

Jesus of Nazareth, who had proclaimed himself the Son of God, had been crucified and his sorely tortured body entombed in a borrowed sepulchre. At the dawning of the third day, "at the end of the Sabbath," certain devoted women returned there to perform some unfinished offices for the dead. They found the tomb empty, and his burial clothes folded together. Their agitation was quieted by a heavenly messenger who, announcing that he knew they had come seeking Jesus, gently reproved them asking:

... Why seek ye the living among the dead?
He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, Saying, The son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.
And they remembered his words. (Luke 24:5-8.)

The record adds little to that epoch-making story except that the risen Lord identified himself to Mary, one of the women; then, on various occasions, to his intimate disciples, and finally to a considerable body of people as he took his earthly leave of them.

According to accepted reckoning, all this happened more than nineteen hundred years ago, but that simple account, widely spread, and accredited by millions, has persisted without interruption down through all the intervening centuries. Today, betokening the depth of its penetration into the pattern of their lives and the farflung extent of its dominion, people, over that whole broad section of this earth comprising what is called the Christian world, will flock in multitudes to their churches, or have already done so, to pay homage to him who crowned his earthly ministry of mercy and redemption by triumph over death, giving assurance of the indestructibility of life and its perpetuation beyond the grave for all the race of men. That is the meaning and the message of the empty tomb.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF JESUS THROUGHOUT HIS LIFE

But the story comprehends more than a mere recital of the incident of the resurrection. That, standing alone, likely could not have prevailed over the opposition raised against it. It had to be coupled with the life and works and teachings of him whose body came forth out of the stone-covered, guard-protected sepulchre. Neither would the life alone nor the teachings alone have sufficed. They had to be crowned with the sanction of immortality which came from victory over the grave. All these—the life, the teachings, the death, and resurrection—are inseparably bound up together, into one whole and may not be considered as severable parts.

The integrity of the unified account is enormously fortified by subsequent happenings, for it has profoundly changed the course of the world's history and has been the determining influence that has for long made western man dominant among the peoples of this earth.

Clearly this phenomenal consequence was not attributable to the worldly rank or earthly possession of Jesus. He had neither. I do not, however, wish to dwell upon the humble circumstances of his birth nor the lowly station of his life. All this has been immemorably the subject of eloquent discourse.

I do, though, want to emphasize that the life of Jesus was not lived nor his doctrine propounded among a benighted or naively credulous people. He lived and wrought among, and, following his death, his disciples carried his message to peoples boasting a two-thousand-year-old civilization. The banner of Rome spread out over all the lands whose shores are washed by the waters of the Mediterranean. There were converged the learning of the ancients; the record of the laws and theistic beliefs of Israel with its noble literature and the majestic messages of the Hebrew prophets; the art, literature, poetry, and music of Greece; the fruits of the organizational and governmental genius of Rome. There, in the heart of the world's culture, Christianity was born. That is where, among the peoples who had created that culture, the Church found its early adherents and sent down its firm-bedded roots. There it won its place and got itself accepted as the worship of the majority of the people of the erstwhile persecuting empire and spread itself over all the nations of the western world, stamping them with the very name of Christ. From thenceforth it has influenced and shaped the course of nations, supplying them, to this day, their noblest ideals, their best standards for evaluation of behavior according to which conduct is extolled as being right or condemned as being wrong, introducing the concept of human brotherhood and of the individual worth and dignity of man. History furnishes no parallel to the power and influence of Jesus the Christ. In all the achievements of the nineteen centuries since his death, nothing has been produced to challenge this preeminence. In this marvelous day when study of physical forces has seemed to bring knowledge about them almost to its very pinnacle, there is in all our learning, physical or metaphysical, mystical or philosophical, nothing to grip the hearts of men as they have been gripped by the compelling power of the Man of Galilee. "Whence hath this man his power?"

SPIRITUALITY EMPHASIZED IN THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS

In all his teachings Jesus emphasized the supremacy of the spirit. The message he committed to his disciples was a spiritual message, whose power was inherent in itself and not derived from any materialistic source or dependent on the caprice of human favor.

That is the secret of its conquest. He came teaching not a mere code of ethics, but a religion.

That is what he commissioned his disciples to spread everywhere. His charge to them was,

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. . . . (Matthew 28:19, 20.)

The reality and directive authority of God, he made the central theme of all his teaching, declaring that he had come from the Father to whom he would return and whose will alone he had come to do. He prayed fervently to the Father and taught his disciples to do so. It was to those who believe in the Father that he promised eternal life. The last words he uttered as he died upon the cross were: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." (Luke 23:46.) Implicit in all this is the doctrine that he lived premortally with God and is his Son. He distinguished man, too, as an eternal being, a child of God, thus bringing him into direct relationship with the Father and the Son. Nothing else so dignifies man or stabilizes him in his behavior once his soul is pierced with that conviction.

That concept, basic in the Christian religion, shaped the thought processes of men and expressed itself not only in their forms of worship but also in the secular affairs of their lives and in the very frameworks of civil governments themselves. It is at the foundation of the whole civilization and culture of the Christian nations of the world.

PRESENT DISORDERED CONDITION OF THE WORLD

How stands that civilization, if we pause to assess it, this Easter day?

It is sick, terrifyingly sick, the whole world is, and everybody knows it. Hate, suspicion, envy, covetousness, and lust for power, stalk the earth, keeping the whole globe in turmoil. Gripped by fear, the nations are congealed with terror. Christian civilization has suffered a tragic moral collapse. No thoughtful person disputes that. But it is very doubtful if we have correctly diagnosed the malady. Rather does it seem that we are toying with symptoms while the root causes of the disease are left to flourish and propagate, administering palliatives instead of cures.

Commonly we attribute our ills to the war. That is an explanation so ready at hand. War is ugly anyway, and the source of so much evil that it is easy to lump onto it the sole responsibility for all our afflictions. But it is clear that the war is not the root cause of our disorders. It is only a symptom, evidence of a basic ailment which produced it. If the war had been the cause, then the cause would have been removed when the fighting stopped, and we should have had only to convalesce from the sickness. That is not what happened. We seem further from peace now than when the battle was raging. The pressure of the conflict had some cohesive, unifying power which is now wanting. Many small nations seem merely to have changed masters, and their lot is not improved. They seem to have lost all immediate prospect for controlling their own destinies. War is rightly recognized as an evil scourge, and there is a feverish desire to prevent its recurrence. But war arises out of antecedent causes, and the only way to prevent it is to remove those causes.

DESTRUCTIVE INFLUENCES AT WORK

The truth of the matter is that our problem is a spiritual problem, and unless that is solved, our civilization is lost. The cure does not lie, as so many fondly believe, entirely in technical and economic reconstruction. I have already said that the civilization of Christendom is founded on belief of God. You will destroy that civilization if you let its basis perish. To live, it needs constant nourishment at the source. The Nazi youth were cut completely off the Christian practices which had been the basis of man's living for centuries. They were trained to deny Christ's teachings; so were the Fascist youth. You know the result, and it was not good. Unfortunately the undermining of Christian faith has not been confined to Nazidom, or to Fascist controlled lands or to Bolshevik revolutionaries. True, the same methods have not been used in most parts of Christendom, but destructive influences have nonetheless been long at work all over the Christian world.

Jesus is reduced from Godhood to the status of a mere moralist, and his teachings from a religion to a code of worthy ideals without binding force. The man-centered humanistic creed by which it is sought to supplant the God-centered Christian religion is thus stated by one high in the realm of educational thought.

The cosmos as a whole, out of which human life emerges, gives no evidence of being, or wishing to be, intelligent. The human spirit is alone in an otherwise nonhuman, nonspiritual universe. Whatever it has, or may ever have of sensitiveness, of wisdom, of generosity, of freedom, of justice, it has made, and will make, for itself (Alexander Meiklejohn, Education Between Two Worlds.)

Over against this humanistic atheism I set the confession of a doctor of philosophy, teacher in one of our large universities, who was sent to Germany to record the emotions and reactions of the defendants at the Nuremberg trials. As he went through his experiences there, and after having witnessed the desolation of that ravaged land, he is reported to have said:

I was one of those smart boys who at my university used to ridicule the idea of God and who helped my students mock him. But now as I stand in this place of utter ruin and see the judgment of God which has come upon this city, and this people, and which is crushing these defendants, the leaders of Germany, I am going back to America and cry with the loudest voice I can muster: "It is time that we turn back to God, lest a worse fate befall us."

THE WEAKENED CONDITION OF CHRISTENDOM

It cannot be forgotten that the scourging war, which has just devastated the earth, broke out right in the heart of so-called Christendom. Christian nation destroying Christian nation. The degradation left in its wake, the tragic collapse of morals, the earth-searing desolation spread everywhere, and the tottering of the whole social order among peoples who have forgotten God, should teach us lessons in humility and make us know that puny man, of himself, standing in the midst of this universal wreckage, "is no more capable of saving the world than he was of creating it in the first place."

It is high sounding to deny divinity and to say that man must make for himself whatever he has or may ever have. Men may profess to accept Jesus as a great moral teacher and his doctrines as comprising the best code of ethics the world has known. But his ethical and moral teachings derive their influence over the lives of men out of the majesty of divine authority with which Christ's gospel invested them. There they have their roots. They cannot support a civilization if severed from their nourishing roots any more than the bloom of a flower can be kept after cut from its parent stem. We have been trying to maintain faith in a Christian ethic without faith in the religion that produced it. That cannot be done! True, a civilization and its culture may go on after a fashion after it has lost faith in the power from which it rose, carried on its acquired momentum. But unless it is nourished at the roots, it will ultimately exhaust the surplus on which it draws. You can no more go on drawing indefinitely on moral reserves without replenishment, than you can go on drawing from a bank without keeping the account current by new deposits. For too long now, the civilization of Christendom has been living on the remnants of a discarded faith. Its weakened condition is apparent in the lack of moral direction which characterizes these times. It is the teaching of history that moral decay follows upon the withering of belief of God.

A committee comprising the most prominent clergy of England, after prolonged study, reported:

... a sharp decline in truthfulness, personal honesty, an alarming spread of sexual laxity, and of the gambling fever. Magistrates have expressed their anxiety at the rise of juvenile crime. Schoolteachers complain at the difficulty of impressing upon their young charges the abomination of lying and stealing which they copy from their elders at home.

The sorriest part about it all, is that the most debasing vices are practised without shame or remorse. But these things, too, are but symptoms of a blighting distemper bedded down deep in the souls of men. The committee found:

Depravity is the sure symptom of spiritual disease. The idea of man as a responsible person is in danger of disappearing with the loss of belief in a Living God.

You have only to read our own press to know that conditions in our country closely parallel those deplored by the English clergy. If you do not think so, read the column in the Los Angeles Times giving the list of crimes for a day in that city.

FAITH OF THE EARLY DISCIPLES OF JESUS

It should be remembered that it was the religion Jesus brought—the gospel—that won over Rome against such overwhelming odds. The men whom he picked and left behind to represent him, and whom he commissioned to spread his gospel all over the world were lowly men, without political power or armed might. The only resource they had was the message the Master had left them and bidden them proclaim. They had to fight every step of their way forward against the unleashed fury of the mightiest empire on earth. They believed to the depth of their souls in the truth of what they declared. Their strength was their unyielding faith in the Living God and in the redemptive mission of Jesus the Christ.

Our observances of this Easter day, though we may have thronged to our churches, will be futile unless we come from them refreshed in that faith and strengthened in the will to restore it as the power that can save the world.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

Sunday, April 6, 1947. Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the Conference, which convened at 10:00 a.m., the regular Sunday morning nation-wide Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00 a.m. The large Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before the hour arrived for the presentation of the broadcast, people from all parts of the Church having assembled to listen to this radio program and the Conference meeting which was to follow. The Assembly Hall on the Temple Square was also filled with people, and hundreds of others assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, where they listened to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle for the benefit of those who could not find accommodation in the Tabernacle.

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then on signal the Organ and Choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to the end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls as music and the spoken word are heard again from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, at the Crossroads of the West. * * *

We begin with a theme fitting unto the meaning and message of this day on which we commemorate the resurrection of Jesus the Christ. It is the Easter hymn from "Cavalleria Rusticana," by Mascagni: "We will sing of the Lord now victorious! All the terrors of death were in vain! Let us sing of the Christ ever glorious. He is risen in glory to reign!"

(Choir sang: "Cavalleria Rusticana"—Mascagni)

Announcer: The music of this day continues as Alexander Schreiner presents one of the chorale preludes of Johannes Brahms: "Adorn Thyself O My Soul."

(Organ presented "Adorn Thyself O My Soul"—Brahms)

Announcer: As we turn back the centuries to a New Testament scene, the Tabernacle Choir sings a Moravian folk song, arranged by Harvey Gaul: "Our Risen Lord at break of day with the three Marys went His way. To the disciples gathered near, [saying] 'My peace be on ye here.' 'Look, ye doubters,' Peter cried: They saw His forehead, hands, His side. Spoke Thomas, 'Who could doubt our Lord when we have heard His living word?'"

(Choir sang: "Our Risen Lord"—Gaul)

Announcer: Turning again to music for the organ we hear the quietly thoughtful phrases of the "Adagio in A Flat" from the 3rd Sonata by Alexander Guilmant.

(Organ presented: "Adagio in A Flat"—Guilmant)

Announcer: There is no compromising with death. We may differ much in our preparedness to meet it, but not in our ability to avoid it. And the prospect would be dark indeed except for the event which this day commemorates: the return from death to life of Jesus the Christ, the Son of God, the "first fruits of the resurrection," by whose triumph over death all mankind are assured a like coming forth from the grave. This brings us face to face with these uncompromising facts: Either this event as witnessed and recorded in history is true or it is not. Either men are immortal or they are not. Either we, ourselves, shall pass through death to life and shall come forth again by resurrection or we shall not. Such issues are not to be set aside or explained away. They are true or false. Of course, we are free to believe what we want to believe. It is quite reasonable that men should be reluctant to accept what they cannot explain, and it is certainly true that no man now living can explain the process of resurrection. But the fact that there are some things the Lord God has not told us would be a miserable excuse for not accepting what He has told us. And, who is there among us to explain how life came to be in the first place—and who is there to deny that we live? There will always be unanswered questions—questions that rise upon questions as hills rise above hills on an eternal horizon. And if we should have to give up everything that men cannot explain, we should have to give up much indeed, including life itself. But fortunately neither truth nor God is limited by man's understanding. If they were, we might expect nature and the universe to be in the same chaos as are man's own affairs. Fortunately, they are not. That we should live forever is surely no greater miracle than that we should live at all—for the same God who gave us life here, has also given us life hereafter—us, and all men, and all those we love and cherish. And so we accept this day in recognition of the reality that if a man die he shall rise again. "Believest thou this? . . . Yea, Lord, I believe. . . ." (John 11:26 and 27.)

(Choir sang "Christ is Risen"—arr.—Deis)

(Organ presented "O Thou Kind and Gracious Father"—Careless)

Announcer: We have heard from the organ the hymn by George Careless: "O Thou Kind and Gracious Father" which was preceded by the Choir's singing of a seventeenth century German air: "Christ Now Is Risen in Glory."

And now two other traditional chorales, arranged by Darl Deis, add their message to the music of this day: "Easter Joy" and "Alleluia," recalled from out of their old world settings.

(Choir sang: "Easter Joy" and "Alleluia"—arr. Deis)

Announcer: (organ background) "And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of Him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of Him: that He lives!" . . . "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."

(Choir sang: "Christ the Lord is Risen Today"—Wesley)

Announcer: As we leave you now within the shadows of the everlasting hills, again we wish for you peace, this day—and always—even that peace offered by Him who is the Prince of Peace, and who will come yet again, even as He has promised.

This concludes the 924th presentation, continuing the 18th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

Immediately following the conclusion of the Choir and Organ Broadcast, the Conference session commenced.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the sixth session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In other words, this is the birthday of the Church, the 117th. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. The Tabernacle is packed to overflowing and hundreds of people are standing. We have just listened to the great broadcast that goes out from this building every Sunday. There are seats in the Assembly Hall adjoining that will accommodate about two thousand more in addition to what we have in this building.

It may interest you to know that last night in these two buildings a company of men numbering over 12,000 were in session at the annual Priesthood meeting.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, KSUB, Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello, Idaho.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and with Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the morning session, and Elder Frank W. Asper for the afternoon session.

We will begin this morning's session by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing, "Come O Thou King of Kings," by Pratt, hymn book 192, L.D.S. Hymns 158, Elder Richard P. Condie directing.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Elmo S. Sorenson of the Gunnison Stake.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Come, O Thou King of Kings."

President Elmo S. Sorenson of the Gunnison Stake offered the opening prayer.

President George Albert Smith:

These beautiful flowers that decorate the stand and have done during the Conference, including those that have come this morning, the lilies are from the Berkeley Stake. President W. Glenn Harmon of that stake is here, as well as other members of the stake. The daffodils are from President I. T. Smith and the members of the Buckley Branch (Washington) of the Northwestern States Mission. We thought that we should like to call your attention to these flowers this morning and to thank those who have been so gracious as to provide them.

There is one item that I should like to read to you in the quiet of the Conference before we start this morning. Sister Julia Caroline Beal Burr is celebrating her eighty-ninth year. She has 243 descendants, 225 of them living. These include 13 children, 75 grandchildren, 152 great-grandchildren, and 3 great great-grandchildren. Her people are visiting with her today at Orem. I simply mention this that the strangers who are here and those who come from California and other places will know what we do here in Utah. (Laughter)

We will now listen to the Tabernacle Choir sing, "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy." This is by Stephens, a man who is loved by this great Church for his contribution to the music of the Church.

After the Choir sings President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will address us.

The Tabernacle Choir sang: "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

One hundred years ago today there was held at Winter Quarters near Council Bluffs, Iowa, a conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Easter Sunday was part of that conference if it included Sunday, as it is part of this conference today. Of all groups in the world who profess to believe in Christ, none have more assurance in their hearts of the reality of the resurrection of Christ than did this group who met at Winter Quarters. They could say, as all true members of the Church of Christ today can say, in the words of the salutation of the early Christians, "Christ is risen," and the reply, "He is risen indeed."

The historian Lord Macaulay says that "the people who do not revere the deeds of their ancestors will never do anything to be remembered by their descendants."

PIONEER MIGRATION

Eight days after that conference at Winter Quarters, the first band of Pioneers were encamped on the Elk Horn about fifty miles west from where the Saints had spent the latest winter. The group, as you know, consisted of one hundred forty-three men, three women, and two children. Two of that group were non-members of the Church. Three were colored.

That encampment suggests a picture worthy the skill of your sovereign artists—a band of fewer than one hundred fifty men facing nine hundred miles over an unresponsive, defiant desert and plain. Behind them, stretching from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to the British Isles, were forty thousand people with faith in their hearts in the restored gospel, and an unwavering confidence in the leaders of the Church. And what were those leaders facing? What did they see at the end of their trail? A barren valley on the shores of a great inland sea, a part of the Rocky Mountain territory for which United States Senator McDuffin said he would not for agricultural purposes

"give a pinch of snuff." With all those thousands of people headed toward an uninhabited desert, try to imagine the magnitude of the responsibility carried by President Young and his associate leaders. Six months after the first advance company had entered the Great Basin there were over two thousand people in and around Great Salt Lake City; and in May 1848, that number was more than doubled, for President Young in that month having returned to Winter Quarters, led a company of six hundred wagons and approximately two thousand more people.

In the spring of 1848, the pioneers planted about five thousand acres, principally in wheat. Suppose that the hordes of crickets that blackened the sky in the month of May that year had destroyed those crops, the principal if not the only means of subsistence for the people in the valley and for the thousands who were coming. It is conceivable that there might have been a tragedy second only to that which overtook the ill-fated Donner Party. Truly President Young was right when he said he didn't lead the people here. It was God. Even as it was, the harvest was insufficient to supply the wants of the populace. Food was rationed. People dug sego roots, cooked weeds, and even thistles, for subsistence.

These are the pioneers of whom the historian Bancroft writes:

All ties of the past had been sundered. They were so poor that their utmost hope was to secure the merest necessities of life. If ever a dream of anything like comfort or luxury came to them, they made a grave in their hearts for that dream and buried it that it might not longer vex them.

LEGAL OPENING OF THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

On May 1 this year will be the legal opening of the Utah centennial celebrating the advent of these intrepid Pioneers into the valley of the Salt Lake. On that occasion the pioneers now living, who came to Utah prior to the completion of the railroad in 1869, will be given fitting deference.

May I call your attention on this occasion to some of the features planned for the centennial year, a statewide celebration. The complete schedule of events is now printed in our daily papers, but I wish to call your attention to a few this morning that you may get the spirit of it.

In behalf of the governor, the state legislature, and the centennial commission, I take this opportunity to thank the press, the radio stations, and the hundreds of committee members who are all so sincerely and untiringly devoting their efforts to make this centennial year a worthy expression of our gratitude for the rich and honorable heritage left by the Utah pioneers.

Already the Utah symphony orchestra has given twenty-two performances in thirteen cities. To have an orchestra of such excellence visit so many towns in a state at so little expense to the people is undoubtedly an outstanding record in the United States, and possibly in the world. We are glad the people appreciate it. Here is a sample of what they are saying: From the students of the West High School, in Salt Lake City:

We wish to thank the centennial commission, Doctor Lorin Wheelwright, and Werner Janssen, for bringing the Utah symphony orchestra to our school. To us it was an unforgettable experience, and should aid substantially in building an adult audience interested in the finest of music. You have truly awakened in us a desire to hear this orchestra again and again.

And their principal says:

Never in my experience with high school students has an audience of young people been so attentive and courteous to and so appreciative of this type of performance as were the West High School students on this occasion. The success of the experiment proves that high school boys and girls really appreciate things of high quality.

Our higher educational institutions, the University of Utah, Brigham Young University, and the Agricultural College, are giving their respective dramas in approximately fifty-eight different localities, making a total, including Blossom Time, of one hundred eighty-seven appearances.

The traveling art exhibits have been booked for fourteen cities. I am informed by the chairman of the arts division that they will have visited every county in the state with one or more of these events before June 1.

Last Sunday night in this auditorium, the Tabernacle Choir rendered a sacred concert of unequalled excellence. Mr. Max Krone, who is at present director of music at the University of Southern California, and an outstanding authority on music, after hearing it, said, and said truly, "This is the greatest choral organization in the United States." That was the first of a series of eight Sunday evening concerts to be given by our choir.

In the music educators' conference, held in the Tabernacle, Wednesday night, April 3, four hundred students from fifty-two high schools united in song with an orchestra from thirty-two high schools from southern California.

EVENTS AHEAD

Following the tribute to the pioneers the first of May (to be specific May 5) The Message of the Ages will be given in the Tabernacle, continuing until June 5.

Following that, the Young Men's and Young Women's M.I.A. conference and centennial celebration will be held, which promises to be the greatest conference ever conducted by these organizations.

July 22, commemorating the entrance into this valley of the advance company, the Sons of the Utah Pioneers will complete a trek from Nauvoo to Salt Lake.

July 23, a pageant in the form of a cavalcade, telling the story of Utah from its first explorations through one hundred years, including a glimpse of the future, will be staged here.

On the morning of July 24, dedicatory services of "This is the Place" monument will be held at the mouth of Emigration canyon. On this occasion there will probably be assembled two thousand band performers from the schools of Utah to participate with the Boy Scouts in their parades of youth.

July 24th there will be pageants in Ogden, Logan, Salt Lake City. There will be encamped on Fort Douglas grounds five thousand or more Boy Scouts, perhaps the largest encampment of its kind ever held in the country.

An historical cavalcade will be held at Brigham Young University, July 4 and 5.

One hundred years of American painting will be opened at the Capitol, July 15 to August 30, and it is hoped that acceptance exercises will be held near October at which will be exhibited the marble statue of President Brigham Young, which is to take its place in the Statue Hall at Washington, D. C.

The conference of governors of the United States will be held here July 13 to 16.

As a fitting climax, there will be given in the University stadium, the opera pageant, "The Promised Valley," depicting through song and pageantry the history of the pioneers as told or experienced in the imagination of the author and musician through the people who made the trek.

Members of the state fair board, in cooperation with the centennial commission, are preparing the greatest exposition in the history of the state in which agriculture, horticulture, animal husbandry, mining industry will all be given due recognition.

In the field of athletics champions from Switzerland, France, Sweden, and Canada have already thrilled thousands in the centennial ski tournament. Fifteen other events are on the program. I shall not take time to narrate them.

Officials in every county with the possible exception of one county, are uniting wholeheartedly in making this statewide celebration such as will do honor to those who participate and be a worthy tribute to the heroic men and women who have left us such a rich heritage. To this end music, drama, art, pageantry, athletics will all combine to interest, instruct, and inspire young and old. In every important town from Cache valley on the north to St. George and Kanab on the south, from Vernal on the east to the Salt Flats on the west, there will be appropriate dignified events commemorative of the accomplishments of these pioneer builders of this western commonwealth.

Neighboring states are contributing to this celebration and even asking the privilege to make monetary contributions. Worship, education, music, drama, recreation, art were all fostered in our early history by the pioneers, and we do well in paying honor to them to emphasize these phases of culture and progress.

Well, I've given you just this glimpse of what the hundreds of men and women on the centennial committees are doing to make the year '47 memorable in tribute to the past achievements and inspirational to us for future accomplishments.

HIGHEST HONOR SHOWN EMULATING IDEALS

But the best way to honor the pioneers is to emulate and make practical in our lives the ideals and virtues that strengthened and animated their lives. These eternal ideals and principles which they fostered and upheld, even under the most adverse conditions, are as applicable today as they were when emphasized by the pioneer leaders.

I should like to take time this morning to refer to only a few. As I name them, will you please mentally point out their applicability to present world conditions?

Foremost was their outstanding faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and in his restored gospel. The very first instruction given when they began their journey across the plains was that they should pray morning and night and keep holy the Sabbath day. When they arrived here in the valley, to quote the words of President Young, they prayed ... over the land and dedicated it and the water, air, and everything pertaining to them unto the Lord, and the smiles of heaven rested upon the land and it became productive.

Among the outstanding virtues of the pioneers were industry and thrift. They condemned idleness and wastefulness as not being in accordance with the rules of heaven. Said President Young:

My experience has taught me, and it has become a principle with me, that it is never any benefit to give out and out to men or women, money, food, clothing, or anything else if they are able-bodied, and can work and earn what they need when there is anything on earth for them to do. This is my principle, and I try to act upon it. To pursue a contrary course would ruin any community in the world and make them idlers. ... To give to the idler is as wicked as anything else.

CAPITAL AND LABOR

I have here notes on their ideas of capital and labor. Elder Widtsoe has already called our attention to this ideal, and I'll pass it without further comment except this added quotation:

Labor builds our meetinghouses, temples, courthouses, fine halls for music, and fine schoolhouses; it is labor that teaches our children, and makes them acquainted with the various branches of education, that makes them proficient in their own language and other languages, and in every branch of knowledge understood by the children of men; and all this enhances the wealth and the glory and the comfort of any people on earth.

Then President Young admonishes his people to join with what he calls the capitalists. He says:

I am acquainted with a good many of them, and as far as I know them, I do not know but every man is an honorable man. . . . Work with them, receive your wages and then use them to build up the kingdom of God.

Of home life: To the pioneers marriage was ordained of God. It was not something which should be entered into lightly, terminated at pleasure, or ended at the first difficulty that might arise. They taught that the marriage bond should be as eternal as love, the most divine attribute of the human soul. Most surely, then, that bond should continue as long as love is an attribute of the spirit. Said the President:

Let every man in the land over eighteen years of age take a wife, and then go to work with your hands and cultivate the earth or labor at some mechanical business, or some honest trade to provide an honest living for yourselves and those who depend upon you for their subsistence, observing temperance and loving truth and virtue. Then would the women be cared for, be nourished and honored and blessed, becoming honorable mothers of a race of men and women farther advanced in physical and mental perfection than their fathers. This would create a revolution in our country, and would produce results that would be of incalculable good.

He further admonished:

Strive to make your little home attractive. Use lime freely, and let your houses nestle beneath the cool shade of trees, and be made fragrant with perfume of flowers.

One way, then, truly to pay tribute to these builders of the west is to clean up, fix up and paint up our own homes.

CHASTITY AND VIRTUE

What was their idea regarding chastity and virtue? As fundamental to domestic happiness and social uplift they cherished these ideals. Said President Young on one occasion:

Any man who humbles a daughter of Eve to rob her of her virtue and cast her off dishonored and defiled, is her destroyer and is responsible to God for the deed. If the refined Christian society of the nineteenth century will tolerate such a crime, God will not, but he will call the perpetrator to account. He will be damned; in hell he will lift up his eyes, being in torment, until he has paid the uttermost farthing, and made full atonement for his sins. The defiler of the innocent is the one who should be branded with infamy and cast out from respectable society and shunned as a pest or as a contagious disease is shunned. The doors of respectable families should be closed against him, and he should be frowned upon by all high-minded and virtuous persons. Wealth, influence, and position should not screen him from their righteous indignation. His sin is one of the blackest in the calendar of crime, and he should be cast down from the high pinnacle of respectability and consideration to find his place among the worst of felons.

BIRTH CONTROL CONDEMNED

Those pioneers condemned the artificial means of limiting the number of children in the family, a growing evil, not only throughout the United States but also here in our own settlements. Said the great leader:

To check the increase of our race has its advocates among the influential and powerful circles of society in our nation and in other nations. The unnatural style of living, the extensive use of narcotics, the attempts to destroy and dry up the fountains of life are fast destroying the American element of the nation.

Regarding self-control, the pioneers voiced the teachings of the Church on this principle:

Let each person be determined, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to overcome every besetment—to be the master of himself, that the spirit God has put in your tabernacles shall rule; then you can converse, live, labor, go here or there, do this or that, and converse and deal with your brethren as you ought.

You cannot inherit eternal life, unless your appetites are brought in subjection to the spirit that lives within you, the spirit which our Father in heaven gave. I mean the Father of your spirits, of those spirits which he has put into these tabernacles. The tabernacle must be brought into subjection to the spirit perfectly, or your bodies cannot be raised to inherit eternal life; if they do come forth, they must dwell in a lower kingdom. Seek diligently, until you bring all in subjection to the law of Christ.

We often hear people excuse themselves for their uncouth manners and offensive language by remarking, "I am no hypocrite," thus taking to themselves credit for that which is really no credit to them. When evil arises within me let me throw a cloak over it, subdue it instead of acting it out upon the false presumption that I am honest and no hypocrite. Let not thy tongue give utterance to the evil that is in thine heart, but command thy tongue to be silent until good shall prevail over the evil until thy wrath has passed away and the good spirit shall move thy tongue to blessings and words of kindness. . . . When my feelings are aroused to anger by the ill doings of others, I hold them as I would hold a wild horse, and I gain the victory. Some think and say that it makes them feel better when they are mad, as they call it, to give vent to their madness in abusive and unbecoming language. This, however, is a mistake. Instead of its making you feel better, it is making bad worse. When you think and say it makes you better, you give credit to a falsehood. When the wrath and bitterness of the human heart are molded into words and hurled with violence at one another, without any check or hindrance, the fire has no sooner expended itself than it is again re-kindled through some trifling course, until the course of nature is set on fire.

SLANDER AND BACKBITING

On slander, already mentioned by the President of the Twelve, George F. Richards, the pioneers held this:

Some are in the habit of talking about their neighbors, of vending stories they know nothing about, only that Aunt Sally said that Cousin Fanny told Aunt Betsy that old Aunt Ruth said something or other, or somebody had a dream; and by the time the story or dream reaches you, it has assumed the semblance of a fact, and you are very foolishly spending your time in talking about things that amount to nothing, or that you have no concern with. A report is started that such a one has done wrong and by the time it has gone its rounds, has become anointed with the salve of the backbiter and talebearer—become endowed with their spirit. . . . When you know what right is and are capable of correcting a person that is wrong, then it is time enough for you to judge.

PROFANITY

In this connection they condemned profanity.

If any are in the habit of taking the name of God in vain, cease doing so today, tomorrow, and throughout the coming week, and so continue, and you will soon gain strength to overcome the habit entirely; you will gain power over your words.

So taught the father of our country, George Washington, who said to his soldiers on one occasion:

The general is sorry to be informed that the foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing, a vice heretofore little known in an American army, is growing in fashion. He hopes the officers will, by example as well as influence, endeavor to check it and that both they and the men will reflect that we can have little hope of the blessings of heaven on our arms if we insult it by our impiety and folly. Added to this, profanity is a vice so mean and low, without any temptation, that every man of sense and character detests and despises it.

SERVICE

The pioneers helped each other in adversity, shared with the hungry the last loaf of bread, gave their time and means for the upbuilding of the community and on not a few occasions offered their lives for the truth. That is service.

Thus they exemplified in their teachings the two great commandments, love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself. Truly they followed the example of the Prophet Joseph, who, as we have already heard today, was ever an inspiration to the great leader of the Mormon pioneers. "If my life is of no value to my friends, it is of no value to me."

Truly, in this centennial celebration, we can re-echo the words of the great composer, Evan Stephens:

Zion's children sing for joy,
Praise the great and guiding hand
That led you to the chosen land,
Oh, dauntless pioneers!

Sing His praise who made you free
In the land of liberty,
Thank the Lord, who raised a band
Of noble pioneers.

Zion's children, shout for joy,
Make the hills and valleys ring.
Great the theme the song ye sing,
Immortal pioneers.

God give us the power to perpetuate their faith and ideals, and thus help make their lives and deeds an everlasting blessing I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My brethren and sisters: This is a day of grace, a day that brings to our minds the life of our Savior, Jesus Christ, and the lives of noble men and women who have made the world better and brought to civilization a knowledge that God lives and Jesus Christ is the Savior of the world.

CHRIST'S RESURRECTION A TESTIMONY FOR ALL LIVING

I wish to read what thousands of people are reading and thinking today. Thousands of men in the service of their country who are in Europe and in far-off Asia, are marching according to orders to the cemeteries, where white crosses bear testimony of the many who have given their lives for God and country. As they pass through the portals to the cemeteries, they read certain sentences written in gold. They are taken from the last chapter of Mark:

And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.

And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.

And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified: he is risen; he is not here: . . .

But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you. (Mark 16:1-7.)

Mary and those other women who had gone to the sepulchre left and went down the highway, knowing in their hearts that Jesus had risen, and it was only a short time before he assured his disciples that as he had risen, so shall the children of God also rise from the tomb.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MISSIONARY WORK

This is a day of grace; it is grace unto us because it is divine knowledge that we have. You brethren who hold the priesthood, you seventies, who are responsible for giving to the world the message of Christ our Lord, must go forth as never before with your souls ringing with testimony. All of us bearing this Holy Priesthood must awaken to this great cause of truth. Live righteously because it is right, and do the things that we have been admonished to do, in this conference of the Lord. We must remember, brother seventies, that as Jesus of Nazareth, after his crucifixion, sent his disciples into the world to preach the gospel, so he is sending his disciples today into the world, and they will be heard.

It is wise and good for us to remember that the Sermon on the Mount undoubtedly was an ordination message. The Twelve and the Seventies were sent in the very early life of the Savior into different parts of Palestine. They were to teach the people, and you will note from this, that the word "seventy" is a very divine word. It is sacred; it literally means "universal" and comes from one of the oldest words of one of the oldest languages of ancient times.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

Think how our attention has been called to the Prophet Joseph Smith, President Brigham Young, and all the pioneers, who were looking to the future when the gospel was restored and the priesthood of God given to them. They were told to look to the future because they had to go forth and bear the power of their priesthood. Think of how they knew—the vision they had! We are seated today in a building which is now the largest symphony hall in America, possibly in all the world. The great symphonies of the world will come here and play to the world. Great music has already been given. It is only recently that one of the noted architects of America found here what he called an example of the old Greek classical art; he saw the beauty of these columns, these long graceful columns, holding this gallery up. How the pioneers built for the future is a glorious story.

Not long ago a new course of study was inaugurated at St. John's College in Maryland, a system of academic work which the educators of America said was one of the most forward looking things in the academic world. Students were to enter that college and read the masters of history, the masters of literature. Before the people started west from Nauvoo, a library was to be built by the seventies, and President Joseph Young inaugurating it through the permission and the blessing of the Prophet Joseph Smith, announced that, "There shall be erected in the city of Nauvoo a library where the learned may come and read the great literature of the world."

In 1850, President Joseph Young again had in mind the building of a great library, and Truman O. Angell became the architect of it. He drew plans for one of the most beautiful buildings to be erected on the western frontier which should house a large collection of books for the use of the seventies.

They were looking to the future, to preach the gospel. My brethren, we must keep in mind always that we must become students of world history. Think of what has already been said from this pulpit concerning the pioneers, and I leave you this angle of thought which has already been expressed. It is now known that the five great institutions of civilization, that came from the very beginning of man's history upon the earth, have been perpetuated up to the present time. They were perpetuated in this state by the pioneers, and they lie at the root of our civilization. They are first, industry based on agriculture; second, the home; third, the state; fourth, the public school system; and fifth, the church.

Paul, the Apostle, was a seventy and a graduate of the University of Tarsus. So were Barnabus, and the evangelist Luke. They fostered these institutions, and we are to perpetuate them. We are to live by them, and hold them sacredly as we work our way through life.

My brother seventies, and all the priesthood, may we dedicate our lives as never before to the perpetuation of this great work, and always know that it is art, knowledge, and religion that bring spirituality, and it is the spiritual forces that will save the world.

God bless us. May we understand and see as never before, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brothers and sisters, you would think, if you could test my blood pressure and feel my heartbeat, that what I am going to say is the only thing that counts in this conference. I am under no illusions on that score, however, but I would like to have what I say be in harmony with the spirit of this great occasion, and I would like to have your faith and prayers while I stand here.

THE CHURCH A LIGHT TO THE WORLD

A great deal has been said in this conference already about the welfare program and about the pioneers. I have not been able to get my thoughts off these two great subjects, and so I think I shall talk about them both.

This entire centennial year we are appropriately dedicating to the honor and memory of our pioneer fathers who a century ago arrived in these mountain valleys after a long and tedious journey. Truly, they played well their important role in the great pioneering drama of this last dispensation.

But that drama did not begin or end with the taming of the wilderness and the subjugation of the desert, for the Church is commissioned to hold up a light to the world and a standard for its members in all things pertaining to righteous living and the eternal welfare of men. The Lord made this abundantly clear in March 1831, when he said:

... I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people, and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me. (D. & C. 45:9.)

The everlasting covenant spoken of in this revelation is the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the keys of the gospel have been committed to the Church. Continuous pioneering—going before and preparing the way for others to follow—is therefore the inescapable responsibility of the Church. Its over-all pioneering assignment, as the revelation states, is to prepare the way for the second advent of the Redeemer.

PIONEERING CONTINUOUS

Much pioneering was done before the Saints crossed the plains; and a beginning was made even before the Church was organized, for a flood of new light and knowledge burst upon the world in the Prophet's first vision, before which the narrow frontiers of sectarian ignorance fell back in hopeless rout. Surely, the Prophet Joseph Smith was a mighty pioneer in obtaining a knowledge of God and of religious truth. The Church has been a pioneer in many other fields, particularly in health and education.

To some extent the pioneering movements of the Church have followed a common pattern. Usually a present need has been felt, to meet which divine guidance has been sought and received, and always the solution has struck at the fundamental issues of the problem involved, so that in the process not only has the immediate need been met, but the building of the kingdom of God has also been advanced.

Since pioneering is a continuous responsibility of the Church, we Latter-day Saints of today, if we are true to our heritage and professions, must also be pioneers, and I believe that we are. We heard here Friday in the welfare section of the annual report, something of what has been accomplished during the last ten years and of what is now being done in Church welfare. After thinking of these activities in connection with the pioneer movements of the Church, I am persuaded that the Church today is meeting its pioneering responsibility through its welfare program, and I believe that if we carry it forward to its full possibilities, we shall accomplish a pioneer task in our day and time equal to the one accomplished by the pioneers of 1847.

THE MEANING OF THE WELFARE PROGRAM

I believe, as President Clark has said, that through the welfare program the Church is attempting to abide by the second commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Matthew 22.39); that the Lord tried to bring his people to this condition through the United Order but was unable to do so and had to take the United Order from us; that the records will show that the reason was the selfishness and greed of the people; that had the people lived the United Order, we could have had a millennium then, a hundred years ago; that if we do not go forward with the welfare program and live it now, it will be because of our selfishness and greed, and the Lord will take the program away from us; and that in such case the members of the Church a hundred years from now will look back upon our day with the realization of the fact that we could have brought in a millennium if we had but lived this law. When we live it, then only will swords be beat into plowshares and that day of peace arrive.

President Grant characterized it as ... one of the greatest and most important things the Church has ever undertaken to put over.

The development of the welfare program has followed the usual pattern. In the first place, it emerged under its present name out of a pressing current need. There has been some criticism of it on this point, as if the function of the Church was not to deal with problems of the day. But how can it be a light to the world if it does not deal with the problems which plague the world?

The Church was dealing with a present problem when it undertook the great westward trek a century ago. The Prophet Joseph was dealing with a current question when he received his first vision, for others in the community in which he lived, as well as he, wondered which of the contending sects had the truth. It was not the nature of the problem but what was done about it, which set the Prophet apart from his fellows and marked him as a pioneer.

In the second place, the welfare plan was inspired by the Lord and is divinely led. President Grant, the prophet through whom the Lord established it under its present name, so considered it. President George Albert Smith has referred to it as the "Lord's great welfare program." President Clark, President McKay, and Elder Harold B. Lee of the Council of the Twelve, all men who stood close to President Grant in the early days of this program, have testified that it was inspired of the Lord, as have others of these men whom we sustain as prophets, seers, and revelators. Of course, acceptance of it as being of divine origin has not been universal. No truth was ever so accepted when first revealed.

APPRECIATION EXPRESSED FOR WELFARE WORKERS

I call to mind a visit from a venerable brother who came to my office some three years ago to protest what some of the brethren had said about Church welfare. In the course of the conversation he said he had emigrated to Utah during the administration of President Wilford Woodruff because that prophet of the Lord had advised it. He thought President Woodruff spoke by the inspiration of God. He also thought that President Snow and President Joseph F. Smith so spoke. I asked him if he thought President Grant, who was, at the time of our conversation, the President of the Church, spoke by the inspiration of the Lord, and he said, "I think he ought to keep his mouth shut about welfare questions."

It is not so difficult to profess acceptance of the dead prophets. The real test comes on the acceptance of what the living ones say, for that requires absolute sincerity and the courage of one's convictions.

And right here, lest I forget it, let me parenthetically pass along to you, my brethren and sisters, who by the tens of thousands have heard the voice of the Lord in the welfare program and have accepted it and are carrying on as true pioneers, my tribute. I express to you my sincere appreciation.

In this connection, I have record of 3,088 people who deserve special mention. On the strength of their belief that the welfare program is the Lord's plan, 1,729 of them have discontinued and 1,359 of them have refrained from accepting public relief, all against a tremendous public and private pressure to take it. From a bishop's letter to me of January 28, 1947, I quote the following:

A check of the ward records shows me that there have been thirty-five people who have either stopped taking the old age pension or have refused it since the plan's inception. There are also six other families who have accepted the Church program, each of them being eligible for more than a hundred dollars a month of government money. Of the forty-one mentioned, who have refused government aid or dole, we are helping only ten. Only one receives all her sustenance; all are working except one, who is our present problem. All forty-one have received some help. I sincerely believe that the support received by these people which has meant the most, is moral support. These fine people have accepted the Church guarantee of help, and while leaning on that promise, have gone ahead on their own resources very largely, and are living happy, useful lives.

Financially, we have had to ask for approximately three hundred dollars from the stake and the Presiding Bishopric during the past year, but since we have had three funerals from among the group and severe sickness, we still feel good about it. If our people were to pay an honest fast offering, we should have had hundreds to spare.

The import of the figures given in this letter is tremendous. Of forty-one persons who were receiving public relief, thirty-one of them are now self-sustaining. Only one of the remaining ten needs to be wholly supported. From the resources of this one ward in fast offerings and welfare contributions and through the welfare storehouse, plus just three hundred dollars from some other ward's fast offerings, the public welfare funds are being saved $2,175.00 a month, or $26,100 a year. You yourself may compute what it would mean by way of a saving from public welfare funds if every ward and stake in the Church made the welfare program function fully. Here indeed is a practical demonstration of the inspiration of the plan.

I doubt not but that thousands of you who are within the sound of my voice can bear truthful witness from your own experiences that the program is divinely led, and I testify that all the rest of you can have that witness for yourselves if you will follow the admonition given by Moroni with respect to the Book of Mormon. (See Moroni 10:4,5.)

And although it neither adds to nor detracts from the divine origin of the plan, it is a common experience, while showing visitors through Welfare Square, to hear them express surprise, if not actual amazement, at the program and its accomplishments, and to hear them express their conclusions that nothing short of a religious motive and a great spiritual faith could induce people to carry on such an endeavor.

As it does in other things, the Church through its welfare program strikes at the fundamental issues underlying the problems to be solved, for the Church is never an opportunist. It does not deal in half measures. To solve the liquor and tobacco evils, it teaches Church members to abstain from the use of liquor and tobacco. The solution of the Church to social disease is chastity and virtue. To eliminate war, the Church would substitute for hate in the hearts of men, and for force, love and meekness.

The Church does likewise in its welfare program. It affords an opportunity for its members, while receiving the help they need, to preserve and develop within themselves through self-effort, those pioneer virtues of industry and thrift which are the priceless possessions of every self-respecting person and which are indispensable to man's eternal progression. In this way the Church would conquer idleness and indolence and exalt the poor, saving them from the awful degradation of the temporal political and spiritual bondage into which the panaceas of the world, which neglect the development of these fundamental virtues, inevitably lead.

To finance its welfare plan, the Church accepts the free will offerings and consecrations in cash and services of God-fearing people, who are voluntarily seeking to subscribe to the Master's admonition to love one's neighbor as oneself.

FAITH NECESSARY TO CARRY FORWARD THE WORK OF THE CHURCH

Thus the Church, through its welfare program, is not only meeting the immediate problem of supplying the necessities of life for its members, administering to them according to their need, but also at the same time it is building the kingdom of God by pioneering a way in which all men, rich and poor alike, may be brought together as one in love and unity. Certainly, the Church in this work is going before and preparing a way for others to follow. It is holding up a light to the world, a standard for its members and for the Gentiles to seek to attain.

And there are among the Gentiles those who are seeking such a light, and some have caught a glimpse of it. Recently an industrialist who has come to Utah to establish a manufacturing industry, told me that the thing which first attracted him to Utah was the statement of President Grant in the middle thirties, calling upon Church members to avoid the curse of idleness, eschew the dole, give a full day's work for a day's pay, and preserve in their living the pioneer virtues of industry, thrift, and self-respect. He said that those statements sounded to him like a rallying call of a great leader in a disintegrating civilization. Such was his reaction to the battle cry of God's living prophet.

Now, my brothers and sisters, how far shall we go in this modern pioneering work? Shall we succeed? The answer to these questions depends upon how much faith and courage you and I have. You will recall that at the time President Grant characterized it as "one of the greatest and most important things the Church has ever undertaken to put over," he added: "And it will be put over because we have the ability and the power to do it."

For my single self, I am persuaded from all I see and hear in the world of today, and such inspiration as I enjoy bears to me the same witness, that a continuation of our way of life is contingent upon a triumph in the lives of men of the principles of thought and action implemented by the welfare plan. I feel no doubt about the ultimate outcome. To me the unknowns in the equation are "the time it will take and how much suffering will be required to bring us to obedience. For the Lord has said his "... people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience" to these principles, "if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer." (D. & C. 105:6.)

He also makes it clear that this obedience must come as a prerequisite to the redemption of Zion. (See D. & C. 105: 1-6.) And none of us doubts that Zion will be redeemed. It is therefore abundantly clear that the Church, through its welfare plan, is pursuing its over-all pioneering assignment of being a messenger before the face of the Lord, preparing the way for his glorious coming. God grant that we shall not falter. I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," by Phelps; Hymn Book No. 194, L.D.S. Hymns No. 231.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM
Of the First Council of the Seventy

I humbly pray that the spirit of the Lord will be with me that I may be blessed as I fill this serious task.

I rejoice this happy morning to know that people have been trailing for hours up the mountainside of Mt. Tamalpais and Mt. Rubideaux and many other places for Easter services. Yes, all across America crosses have been raised and people have gone or are going to renew their faith in the Lord that fear may leave their hearts and that joy may enter there.

I am happy that America is a Christian country although we hear much about its sin and misgivings.

THE SPIRIT OF EASTER BRINGS REJOICING

I hope and pray that this happy Easter morning into the heart of General George C. Marshall, our Secretary of State, will come a renewed faith in God. I hope that he will have the courage of a great pioneer in a new world to hold fast to what he said last week: When Germany's problem is solved, it will be of the people and by the people and for the people. These are not his exact words, but what he said were the words of a man representing a free people.

I rejoice in the spirit of Easter. It was faith that rolled back the stone to let the Savior come into the garden. It is faith that will roll back the stone across the path of the human race and let the spirit of the Son of Man come again. Fear will vanish as we cultivate faith in our hearts and lives.

I rejoice in the glorious centennial celebration that is before us. May I say there are other pioneer bands standing now on eastern hills that overlook this valley and a thousand others. It is the youth of America, and they are ready to go forward into the valley of their dreams and do great and good things. May we, the leadership of this Church, have faith in them and give them the opportunity to come forward with their glorious faith and strength. They are waiting for it. They are anxious for the responsibility of it.

AN INCIDENT AT THE TEMPLE AT MESA

Two years ago at the temple at Mesa, Arizona, I was with about a thousand of our young people. From the temple wall we had a glorious Easter morning service. The orchestra played; the chorus sang; it was lovely; and then I walked around the temple wall. As I passed one corner, I saw over behind a tall pine tree a young man embracing a young lady and kissing her. It was one of those embarrassing things that we sometimes see in life, and yet we confess we are somewhat interested. I started hurriedly to go away, and the young man motioned to me to come. I went over to him, and he said, "Brother Kirkham, we are not at all ashamed of what you saw. I just asked this young lady to be my wife, and when you looked, she had said, 'Yes,' and I was sealing the bargain." "Well," I said, "I hope you are coming back here again." "Yes," he said, "that was part of what we had talked about."

Back to the temple of God! Yes, that was the desire of their hearts. Let us have more faith in them, not fear, but faith in them.

THE CENTENNIAL A YEAR OF MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITY

I have looked forward to the happy day that is now here—our centennial celebration. I love a parade. I love to hear a band playing. I love to see banners flying. I love to see great monuments unveiled. These are lovely things to see and hear. When I was in Mexico City recently and stood on the crowded streets watching the parade when President Aleman was made president of that great republic, there were many things going on in the streets; but the great things were happening on the sidewalk. I did not see Mexico as the military units went by displaying their pride, but around and about me on the sidewalk was the real story of Mexico; and so it will be with us. The people that come will be listening to the story on the sidewalk as well as enjoying what they see in parade. This is a great year of missionary service for us—a great year for the pioneer spirit. I saw it in my mind's eye yesterday, so beautifully exemplified when President Smith, at our great priesthood meeting last night, told the Boy Scout that had given his seat to an adult, "Now you may come up and sit with us." Yes, that was the spirit of his father and his grandfather. He was only carrying on. No spoken words were more glorious than that.

When President Clark made the appeal again, as he has done before, to "be one," I saw a united band coming into this valley. They were one.

President McKay last night after the priesthood meeting called together the bishops and the presidents of stakes of some of these near-by stakes. He was recruiting for our great pageant to be held in this tabernacle. It has been difficult to get men, but it wasn't difficult when President McKay stood before them recruiting two hundred that will participate. Every hand went up when the people heard the voice of the president. I thought I saw Brigham Young recruiting the Mormon Battalion.

When our friends come to our homes as President Smith said, "Open your doors in hospitality." They will forget much of the glamor of the street and the highways, but they will see the pioneers in what we do.

May there be children there to play with them. May there be family prayer held unafraid. Let the children pray. When they lift the photo from the mantle and say, "Does this happen to be your son?" may you have the high privilege of saying, "Yes, he's our ambassador. He's out in the world preaching the gospel." Then when they leave your home, the memory of these things will linger with them when all else is forgotten.

God help us to remember that this is a missionary year; and in honoring those that went before, we shall courageously and with faith-destroying fear give to these visitors the hope of the gospel of Jesus Christ by our humble living. I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren and sisters, listeners here and elsewhere:

JOSEPH SMITH'S FIRST VISION

Mormonism, as the world generally calls the religious faith taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is noted for many characteristic teachings, one of which is that Joseph Smith was divinely called, beginning with a most wonderful and glorious vision. Relative to this matter a basic and fundamental question that every member of the Church may rightfully ask, as well as every honest investigator, is "Did Joseph Smith really see God?"

As I view it, this is perhaps the most natural and logical question that can be asked concerning the origin of Mormonism. It is one that might well challenge the attention of every person who believes in God and in life beyond the grave, whether he is a Mormon or non-Mormon.

All informed Latter-day Saints know the story of the first vision as related by Joseph Smith. He was a member of a sincerely religious family but belonged to no church. Though he was only fourteen years old at the time, this fact of non-church membership worried him. As a means of helping him to solve his problem, he read the Bible with deep interest, for he wanted to know which of the contending churches was the right one to join. He therefore resolved to heed the injunction of James (James 1:5, 6) and so went into the woods and prayed that God would give him wisdom that he might know what to do. In answer to the boy's simple prayer, he related that he was enveloped in a pillar of brilliant light which descended from above. Looking up he beheld two personages standing above him whose brightness and glory defied all description. One of them, calling him by name and pointing to the other said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!" and then Joseph heard the voice of Jesus Christ, the Son, and received instructions from him.

Thus, according to his story, Joseph Smith, the fourteen-year-old lad, saw the Father and the Son and heard their voices. So far as the records indicate, this was the most glorious vision ever given to mortal man. Never before had both Father and Son appeared simultaneously to any mortal man. I have called your attention to Joseph's story because of its extreme importance to our faith—to Mormonism, which we testify is the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. So I ask again, did Joseph Smith really and in fact see God? I believe all of us can profit by asking ourselves this question, occasionally at least. The correct answer can be stimulating and satisfying to us.

THE VISION GAVE EVIDENCE OF A PERSONAL GOD

The implications of the affirmative answer are tremendously significant. Through misunderstanding and wrong interpretations the world had lost the correct conception of the image and personality of God. To restore the truth, a new revelation was imperative. Though from the beginning to its end, the Bible, as we understand it, teaches that God is a personal being in whose image we are made, and that the Father and the Son are two separate and distinct personalities, alike in image and attributes, yet the modern world, through ignorance and lack of understanding, denies these fundamental truths. And so important are these truths to a satisfying faith that, I think, they are absolutely basic. Without any concrete conception of the image of God, how can one develop the necessary faith of the kind that the Apostle James asserts is needed to get an answer to prayer. Yes, God the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ, are personal beings in whose image man himself is made, so declared Joseph Smith. Hence in this sense we do believe in an anthropomorphic God and take great satisfaction in this belief.

TRUTHFULNESS OF JOSEPH SMITH'S CLAIMS

In addition to seeing the Father and the Son, Joseph also claimed he was visited, in his eighteenth year, by the Angel Moroni who among other things told him that his "... name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people." (Joseph Smith 2:33.) This was a very daring and reckless statement for Joseph to make, unless in very truth it was spoken to him by a divine messenger; for Joseph was then only seventeen years of age, a very poor and unschooled lad, living in a frontier village. Humanly speaking, there were no discernible prospects that he would ever be known beyond the limits of his own backwoods area.

Now, what evidence can we present of the truthfulness of Joseph Smith's claims, one might ask. Such a question is both natural and reasonable. My time in this meeting will permit of indicating only a few of the highlights relative to the man, his teachings, and his works. In his great Sermon on the Mount, Jesus emphasized the principle that a tree is judged by its fruits. Can there be a more fair, just, and satisfactory basis of judgment than this? All followers of the Prophet will ask for no other.

JOSEPH SMITH'S ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Then as to the man: He was born of worthy parents who lived in humble circumstances in one of the rural areas of Vermont. When Joseph was ten years old, the family moved to the frontiers of western New York where it continued by dint of frugality and hard work to earn a very modest livelihood. Joseph grew to manhood denied most of the opportunities for even a common school education, his school training therefore being very limited. Judged by modern standards, he was practically uneducated and untrained for leadership in any sphere of intellectual endeavor. Thus handicapped in the eyes of the world, is it any wonder that he was rejected by people generally and his stories regarded as the product of a wild and foolish imagination?

But notwithstanding all the severely handicapping conditions from an economic and educational point of view, what did Joseph Smith become? Let me make a few quotes. First from John Henry Evans' book entitled, Joseph Smith, An American Prophet, we read:

Here is a man who was born in the stark hills of Vermont; who was reared in the backwoods of New York; who never looked inside a college or high school; who lived in six States, no one of which would own him during his lifetime; who spent months in the vile prisons of the period; who, even when he had his freedom, was hounded like a fugitive; who was covered once with a coat of tar and feathers, and left for dead; who, with his following, was driven by irate neighbors from New York to Ohio, from Ohio to Missouri, and from Missouri to Illinois; and who, at the unripe age of thirty-eight, was shot to death by a mob with painted faces.

Yet this man became mayor of the biggest town in Illinois and the state's most prominent citizen, the commander of the largest body of trained soldiers in the nation outside of the Federal army, the founder of cities and of a university, and aspired to become President of the United States.

He wrote a book [the Book of Mormon] which has baffled the literary critics for a hundred years and which is today more widely read than any other volume save the Bible. On the threshold of an organizing age he established the most nearly perfect social mechanism in the modern world, and developed a religious philosophy that challenges anything of the kind in history, for completeness and cohesion. And he set up the machinery for an economic system that would take the brood of fears out of the heart of man—the fear of want through sickness, old age, unemployment, and poverty.

In thirty nations are men and women who look upon him as a greater leader than Moses and a greater prophet than Isaiah; his disciples now number close to a million; and already two granite shafts pierce the sky, one over the place where he was born, and the other over the place where he received the inspiration for his Book.

JOSIAH QUINCY'S OPINION

Further, you may be interested to hear what a nationally-known writer and publicist and once mayor of Boston, Josiah Quincy, wrote about Joseph Smith. In May 1844, Mr. Quincy and his cultured friend, Charles Francis Adams, son and grandson, respectively, of two United States Presidents, happened to make a two-day visit to Nauvoo. Being well-known, prominent men they were entertained at the Mansion House, Joseph Smith's residence. An account of this visit is given by Mr. Quincy, in the last chapter of his book entitled Figures of the Past, published in 1880. I quote the following from this twenty-four page chapter:

It is by no means improbable that some future textbook for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that interrogatory may be thus written: Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet. And the reply, absurd as it doubtless seems to most men now living, may be an obvious commonplace to their descendants. History deals in surprises and paradoxes quite as startling as this. The man who established a religion in this age of free debate, who was and is today accepted by hundreds of thousands as a direct emissary from the Most High,—such a rare human being is not to be disposed of by pelting his memory with unsavory epithets. Fanatic, imposter, charlatan, he may have been; but these hard names furnish no solution to the problem he presents to us. Fanatics and impostors are living and dying every day, and their memory is buried with them; but the wonderful influence which this founder of a religion exerted and still exerts throws him into relief before us, not as a rogue to be criminated, but as a phenomenon to be explained. The most vital questions Americans are asking each other today have to do with this man and what he has left us. . . . Joseph Smith claiming to be an inspired teacher, faced adversity such as few men have been called to meet, enjoyed a brief season of prosperity such as few men have ever attained, and finally, forty-three days after I saw him, went cheerfully to a martyr's death.

Born in the lowest ranks of poverty, without book-learning, and with the homeliest of all human names, he had made himself at the age of thirty-nine a power upon earth. Of the multitudinous family of Smith . . . none had won human hearts and shaped human lives as this Joseph. His influence, whether for good or evil, is potent today, and the end is not yet. . . .

Mr. Quincy concludes his chapter with these words:

I have endeavored to give the details of my visit to the Mormon prophet with absolute accuracy. If the reader does not know just what to make of Joseph Smith, I cannot help him out of the difficulty. I myself stand helpless before the puzzle.

QUOTATION FROM NEW YORK TIMES

Now I recite one more quotation from an unfriendly writer in the New York Times of September 4, 1843:

This Joe Smith must be set down as an extraordinary character, a prophet-hero, as Carlyle might call him. He is one of the great men of this age, and in future history will rank with those who, in one way or another, have stamped their impress strongly on society.

It is no small thing, in the blaze of the nineteenth century, to give to men a new revelation, found a new religion, establish new forms of worship, to build a city with new laws, institutions, and orders of architure, to establish ecclesiastical, civil and military jurisdiction, found colleges, send out missionaries, and make proselytes on two hemispheres. Yet all this has been done by Joe Smith, and that against every sort of opposition, ridicule, and persecution.

In the short space of fifteen years, Joseph Smith, unschooled in the learning and the methods of the world, did all these important things. How was it possible? Does not the only rational explanation lie in the claim that he was God-taught and that the statement is literally true which asserts,

. . . I raised you up, that I might show forth my wisdom through the weak things of the earth. (D. & C. 124:1.)?

Yes, Joseph Smith was able to confound the wise, to astonish the learned, and to outmarvel the great.

TRUTHS TAUGHT BY JOSEPH SMITH

I have briefly indicated who Joseph Smith was and some of the things he accomplished. Now another important question is what characteristic things did he teach—things not taught by other churches. A number of these are mentioned in the thirteen widely used Articles of Faith of the Church, and written by the Prophet himself. Many of his teachings are not accepted by the world, but time will permit me to speak of only a few of them. I have already indicated one such teaching—a very important and basic one—the personality and image of God the Father and of Jesus Christ his Son who redeemed mankind from the bondage of death, brought about by the fall of Adam. He also taught that we are spirit children of the Father and had an individual, conscious existence with him and Jesus Christ, our elder spirit brother, before we were born in mortality. Unquestionably, God created us in the flesh, and biologists teach that the human family came from the same parents. It follows that the universal brotherhood of man, both in the spirit and in the flesh, is a divine truth.

Another closely related teaching to the fatherhood of God is the personality and actuality of Satan, the devil. He is a real person with a spirit body in the image of man. He is here on earth, accompanied by a multitude of other spirit persons who cooperate with him in his evil work. This fact should be kept in mind by all who sincerely desire to live righteously and resist temptations to do wrong. All such temptations stem right back to the devil and his host of evil spirits, spirit brothers of ours who because of rebellion were cast out of heaven. They are permitted by the Father to be here as a means of testing us to find if in the exercise of our free agency we can prove ourselves worthy to return to his presence.

And this suggests a word relative to free agency—the freedom the Father has given to every child born in mortality to do as he pleases so long as he does not infringe upon or deny this freedom to others. Multitudes of people in the world today deny the existence of a loving and merciful Heavenly Father because he permits war with its associated terrors and horrors. Such persons do not understand the divine doctrine of free agency, else they would never hold the Lord responsible for the wickedness, crimes, and horrors in which his children engage. The Lord is merciful, loving, and good to all his children who will refrain from doing evil and follow the way of life he has given them. He said to Moses:

... this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

And the Lord will not fail in his purpose with those of his children who will render obedience to, and cooperate with, him.

This leads to a word relative to the beautiful doctrine of salvation for the dead, taught by the Prophet Joseph Smith. This doctrine, as I understand it, absolutely reveals the Father as a God of love, mercy, forgiveness, justice, and all other attributes we ascribe to a perfect Father. He has given his children their free agency. He has prepared for them a plan of eternal progression. Not one of them will be annihilated—all will have eternal life, be they saints or sinners. Every one coming into mortality will in this life or in the life beyond the grave have the opportunity of hearing and accepting the gospel of Jesus Christ. Those who comply with all the conditions, which they will have the privilege of doing, will eventually be saved in the Father's kingdom.

Brethren and sisters, how beautiful is the way of the Lord! How great his mercy and forgiveness! How all-embracing his love!

But it is very largely to the teachings and labors of the Prophet Joseph Smith that the modern world is indebted for a correct interpretation of the plan of life, salvation, and exaltation that the Lord has provided for his children to follow if they would care to return to his presence.

I close with the thought that Joseph Smith, his claims, his teachings, and his achievements are so very remarkable in character that they challenge every normal human being able to do so, to make an honest and thorough investigation of them. A refusal to do this is likely to bring sometime, somewhere, painful regrets and handicaps as a consequence. Certainly every member of the Church, in justice to himself, should rouse up to the performance of this important duty. May every one of us worthily seek the help of the Lord in responding to the calls of duty I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

After the singing and prayer, this Conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

This afternoon the audience should be in their places not later than ten minutes before the opening hour and if you want a seat you had better come an hour before that.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The choir will now sing, "Come, Come Ye Saints," by William Clayton, arranged by Cornwall.

The closing prayer will be offered by President John Howard Shawcroft of the San Luis Stake.

Closing number by the Choir, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

Elder John Howard Shawcroft, President of the San Luis Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference commenced at 2 o'clock p.m., Sunday, April 6th.

Again the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, and, as was the case at the morning meeting, the Assembly Hall was filled with people and a large number of others congregated on the Tabernacle grounds, where they listened to the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the seventh and closing session of the 117th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Again I want to emphasize the fact that this is the Church's birthday and I am sure we wish it many happy returns. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, KSUB at Cedar City, and KDYY at Pocatello.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "I will Give Thanks Unto the Lord," by Campbell Tipton.

The opening prayer will be offered by President W. Hazen Hilliard of the Smithfield Stake.

Singing by the Choir: "I will Give Thanks Unto the Lord."

The opening prayer was offered by President W. Hazen Hill-yard of the Smithfield Stake.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle is filled to overflowing, hundreds are standing and the Assembly Hall is similarly situated.

We have a message from New Zealand that I think maybe some of you would like to hear.

"Missionaries and saints enjoying a wonderful hui tau at Korongata send greetings arohanui and best wishes to General Authorities and all assembled in General Conference. Kiaora Koutou Katoa. [I do not know whether that is right but Brother Cowley can tell you the next time you see him.] New Zealand Mission, Reed Halvorsen, President."

It is delightful to know that while we are in session here that wonderful group of people in New Zealand are holding their hui tau, and I am satisfied they are having just as happy a time as we are. One of the best experiences of my life was attending a hui tau in New Zealand and I hope that some of the people who are here in this house who have been missionaries there will have the satisfaction I have in getting this cablegram or aerogram, whatever it may be, this day.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing, "Allelujah," by Thompson, after which President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of this General Conference.

Singing by the Choir, "Alleluia."

President George Albert Smith:

One of the interesting sights at a General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the voting to sustain the General Authorities of the Church, or not, as the case may be. People come here from different parts of the world and marvel when they see this vote by uplifted hands. I suggest that that is our privilege today, to either vote for or against, if there is any reason why we should not sustain these men. I would suggest that we vote with uplifted hands, that we raise our hands so that they can be seen.

President David O. McKay of the First Presidency will now present the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of this General Conference.

President David O. McKay then presented the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, and they were unanimously sustained by the Conference, as follows:

President George Albert Smith:

If Elders Henry D. Moyle and Eldred Gee Smith are in the congregation, we shall be pleased to have them come forward at once and take their places on the stand.

The choir and congregation will now sing: "We Thank Thee O God for a Prophet." After hearing the reports of our brethren regarding other parts of the world, surely we recognize the hand of our Heavenly Father in the blessings that have come to us as a result of the restoration of the Gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters: In a very old-fashioned way I ask for an interest in your prayers. I wish also to express gratitude for your uplifted hands and your sustaining vote. I hope that what I shall say will not detract in any way from the beautiful truths that have been given to us already in this conference, particularly with reference to the pioneers. My grandfather was one of the original group to enter this valley. I am proud that his statue will grace the new monument with Wilford Woodruff and his file leader, Brigham Young.

THE FORMER INHABITANTS OF THE AMERICAN CONTINENT

I have been thinking today also, of the pioneers, but of other pioneers who preceded the ones we have been honoring today. About twenty-five centennials ago, a hardy group left the comforts of a great city, crossed a desert, braved an ocean, and came to the shores of this, their promised land. There were two large families, those of Lehi and Ishmael, who in not many centuries, numbered hundreds of millions of people on these two American continents. Their scriptures and records taught them of God. They had many blessings, and many promises. They were given, by the creator of this land, a clear title to the Americas—a certificate of title, free and clear of all encumbrance. There was, however, one condition: They must serve the Lord their God if they were to retain title to the property. Their wickedness brought on wars, which scattered and destroyed them and divided them into two factions, the Nephites and Lamanites, and finally they peopled the continents. The years went apace; the Savior came to them after his resurrection—which glorious event we are celebrating today, this Easter day. The Savior so inspired them that for twice the period of our own Church history they were righteous and were devoted to their Heavenly Father. And then came prosperity and wealth. The sins of the world overtook them, and for about one hundred and seventy years, both factions were wicked, very wicked indeed, until the great battle on Cumorah when the Nephites were literally destroyed. The Prophet Mormon recounted sixty thousand people lying in their blood in death, and this because of their wickedness. Their enemies had been permitted to come upon them. Mormon exclaims:

And my soul was rent with anguish because of the slain of my people, and I cried:

O ye fair ones, how could ye have departed from the ways of the Lord! O ye fair ones, how could ye have rejected that Jesus, who stood with open arms to receive you!

Behold, if ye had not done this, ye would not have fallen. . . .
(Mormon 6:16-18.)

The penalty for their wickedness was that they were to be scattered and driven, cursed and scourged. They were to be "cut off from the presence of the Lord." Scales of darkness were to be their curse, and they were to become "as chaff is driven before the wind" or "a vessel is tossed about upon the waves without sail or anchor or anything wherewith to steer her."

. . . wherefore, as they were white, and exceeding fair and delightful, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them.

. . . I will cause that they shall be loathsome unto thy people, . . .

And cursed shall be the seed of him that mixeth with their seed: . . .

. . . they did become an idle people, full of mischief and subtlety. . . .
(II Nephi 5: 21-24.)

APPRECIATION FOR THE DESCENDANTS OF LEHI

I do not know when I began to love the children of Lehi. It may have come to me at birth, because those years preceding and after I was born, were spent by my father on missions among the Indians in Indian territory. He was president of the mission. This love may have come in those first years of my childhood, when my father used to sing the Indian chants to us children and show us souvenirs from and pictures of his Indian friends. It may have come from my patriarchal blessing which was given to me by Patriarch Samuel Claridge, when I was nine years of age. One line of the blessing reads:

You will preach the gospel to many people, but more especially to the Lamanites, for the Lord will bless you with the gift of language and power to portray before that people, the gospel in great plainness. You will see them organized and be prepared to stand as the bulwark "round this people."

I do not know when my appreciation for them came, but I have always had a sympathetic heart for the sons and daughters of Lehi, and so, recently, when President Smith called Brother Cowley, Brother Ivins, and myself to give attention to their problems and to ... the work of disseminating the gospel among the Indians. . . . not only to the Indians close to us but also over the world, in the islands of the sea and elsewhere. . . .

a great thrill came to me such as I have had few times in my life.

FULFILMENT OF A PATRIARCHAL BLESSING

I had waited forty-two years for the fulfilment of this patriarchal blessing! When I was called to the mission field in 1914, my assignment was to the Swiss-German Mission, and then the war broke out and prevented my going there, and I was sent to the Central States Mission. I knew there were no Indians in Switzerland and Germany. I knew also there were Indians in the Central States Mission, but in all my two years' mission, I had not seen an Indian. I wondered, "Can I have failed, or did the patriarch err," and now, forty-two years after the promise, President George Albert Smith called me to this mission, and my blessing was fulfilled.

I love those downtrodden and deprived people. Brother Cowley and I spent some time on the Hawaiian Islands last summer, and those good people found their way into my heart. We have about a half-million children of Lehi in the islands of the sea, and about sixty million of them in North and South America, about a third of them perhaps, being pure-blood Indians, and about two-thirds are mixtures, but they have the blood of Jacob in their veins.

Someone said:

If my pen might have the gift of tears I would write a book and call it "The Indian," and I would make the whole world weep.

I hope I may help to make the whole world weep for the children of Lehi. Can one refrain from tears as he contemplates the fall of these people who have been brought down from culture and achievement to illiteracy and degradation; from kings and emperors, to slavery and serfdom; from landowners of vast continents, to indigent wards of governments and peons—from sons of God with a knowledge of God, to rude savages, victims of superstition, and from builders of temples to dwellers in dirt hogans.

MIGRATION OF NEPHITES TO PACIFIC ISLES

The predictions concerning the scattering of the early American was fulfilled to the letter. Not long before the birth of Christ, a great man by the name of Hagoth left continental America with colonies of people. He ... went forth and built him an exceedingly large ship . . . and launched it forth into the west sea, . . .

And behold, there were many of the Nephites who did . . . sail forth with much provisions, and also many women and children; and they took their course northward. . . .

And the next year:

... this man built other ships. And the first ship did also return, and many more people did enter into it; ... and set out again to the land northward.

And it came to pass that they were never heard of more. ... And ... one other ship also did sail forth. ... (Alma 63:5-8.)

It has been thought by many people that they went to the Pacific islands. And the scripture would so indicate:

But great are the promises of the Lord unto them who are upon the isles of the sea: wherefore as it says isles, there must needs be more than this, and they are inhabited also by our brethren. (II Nephi 10:21.)

Elder Cowley and I visited some of these peoples on the "isles of the sea" and found them developing and progressing and doing well.

But we are not so fortunate here at home in the United States. There are some bad conditions in our own nation and continent.

THE SAD STORIES OF THE CRUELITIES OF THE SPANISH CONQUERORS

The conquerors came and robbed and despoiled and destroyed. The battle of America, a four-hundred-year struggle began with the discovery of America and ended not until the owners were dispossessed of nearly everything they had owned. Cortez with a handful of soldiers came into Mexico and through deceit and misrepresentation was able to conquer thirty million people. Preying upon their superstitions and beliefs in the return of the Fair God, he gained access to their beautiful city, took their lives, carried off their treasures and desecrated their homes and temples. He gave them a soldier's helmet which they brought back to him full of gold nuggets. They laid at his feet great quantities of gold and silver, jewels, and other priceless treasures. These valuables seemed only to whet his appetite, and he sacked their chests and vaults for more. His soldiers closed the three exits to the courtyard at Cholula, it is written, and with his mystery weapon, the cannon, massacred them by the thousands. And in their loved city of Tenochtitlan his soldiers were permitted to profane the temples with the very blood of the Indians who were slaughtered in great numbers. The Aztec king was tortured and assassinated. It is a sad story how they were despoiled and dispossessed of their rich homeland—how whole valleys together with thousands of the Indians for servants, were granted to individual Spanish conquerors. The Aztecs were enslaved and branded. The history of Mexico claims that in 1800 though "... only ten percent of the population was Spanish, but almost all the property belongs to them." And even after the slaves were presumably freed, their condition of servitude as peons for centuries following, was nearly as distasteful and onerous. The millions of Indians could literally have smothered the invaders with their very bodies, but it was not to be. For the prophecies had to be fulfilled.

THE INDIANS A DOWNTRODDEN RACE

That is a gloomy picture, but the world should weep also at the treatment of the real Americans in our own states. As the colonists came from Europe and settled along the Eastern seaboard, the great "push" continued. Mile by mile we crowded them back. When the Indians resisted our encroachments, we called them "murderous redskins" and continued our relentless aggression. When they killed us "whites," we called it a massacre, but when we took their lives, we termed it a necessary riddance of a menace. We were fighting for their lands and rivers and forests and minerals, but they were fighting for their rights, their homeland, their families, their very lives.

I would not justify any evil that the Indians ever did, but can we not see that they were on the defensive, fighting for their liberty, for independence and to perpetuate their rights to the promised land to which they had title from the Creator?

But the laws had been broken. They had forfeited their rights because they had failed to keep the commands of God. The prophecies must be fulfilled, and the plan of God must now be consummated. It was necessary, for the ultimate good of the Indian himself, that the Gentiles must come from foreign shores to become "nursing fathers" to these benighted people; the Pilgrims and Puritans had to come to settle this land; the Revolutionary War had to be fought and won so that peace and freedom and liberty could be established here, and so that the gospel could be restored, and this that the record of the ancestors of the Indians might come forth, and the gospel of Jesus Christ be made plain to them.

The prophecies were being fulfilled by us Gentiles. We pushed the natives ever westward until the Pacific stopped their further movement in that direction. Then we crowded them into the corners and upon reservations, oftentimes territory of little value. The country became crowded, and we pushed southward, this time making war on Mexico, a Lamanite country. Again we used might, and subdued and took from the original Lehithe owners and also from Mexico, the new claimants, the great territory of the southwest, including much of the states of Arizona, New Mexico, California, Utah, Wyoming, and Nevada. We did pay for this vast empire, some fifteen million dollars, which is the approximate present value of the one little Gila valley in Arizona where I lived for so many years. We later paid ten million dollars for another area involving a considerable portion of Arizona, known as the Gadsden Purchase.

We went relentlessly on in our battle of aggression until we finally were undisputed conquerors of this expansive domain, so rich in natural wealth.

TROUBLES MULTIPLIED THROUGH INJUSTICE

Down near Lordsburg, New Mexico, there is an pretentious monument. On it are the words, "Here Geronimo surrendered, thus ending Indian wars in America forever." The final war of self-defense was waged in the southwest by the Apache chief, the courageous Geronimo. He led his thirty-four warriors with their wives and children against the United States army. And the battle of America lasting four hundred years had ended. We battled but a few short years for our independence from Britain and were rewarded with success. The Indians fought valiantly four centuries for their freedom and lost. This proud people was reduced from wealth to poverty; from two vast continents to crowded reservations. We hail George Washington as the great patriot because he led us successfully against our aggressors. And because they cannot, we erect a tiny monument to mark the spot where the last survivor chief was subdued while resisting our aggression. It is a sad story. Let the world weep.

But there were still some outbreaks. Because of the chaotic condition and the hopelessness of their situation, some groups of natives continued to commit depredations against the new alleged owners of their properties. The Navajos were in the way also. We sent our army against them. We tracked them into the mountains and canyons of northern Arizona and killed them in great numbers; they claim we killed their sheep numbering fifty thousand; we destroyed all their thousands of peach trees, in Canon de Chelly.

Our war against them was relentless. The ultimatum was surrender by July 20, 1863, or extermination.

Orders were given to kill every male Navajo capable of bearing arms, wherever he may be found. Women and children were to be captured and held as prisoners.

And then to Colonel Riggs came these instructions:

I have been informed that there is a spring called Ojo de Cibola . . . where the Navajos drive their stolen cattle and "jerk" the flesh at their leisure. Cannot you make arrangements for a party of resolute men from your command to be stationed there for say, thirty days, and kill every Navajo and Apache they can find? A cautious, wary commander hiding his men and moving about at night might kill off a good many Indians near that point.

A bounty of twenty dollars was placed on a good Indian horse, and a dollar for a sheep.

We did an efficient job of it. The Indians claimed later that they did not know they had an option to surrender; they thought that they were the victims of an extermination order, and not till they were starved out did they finally raise the flag of truce. We took them over into New Mexico on a reservation and after four years of starvation and freezing and hopelessness for them we imposed upon them a treaty. They were to commit no more depredations and were to be given that vast area of territory of little value. They were to receive some small allowances. They were to require their children to go to the schools, and we were to furnish them a school, and a teacher for every thirty children. If you could go with me to the reservation and hear these Navajo parents plead for schools for their children, you would realize how greatly we have failed to live up to our part of that treaty of 1868. There are more than twenty-four thousand children of school age, but with all the government schools, plus those schools operated by churches, only about 5,100 of the little folk can hope to get into a school. The nearly 19,000 children yearn in vain for schooling. In September, ambitious parents send these little ones long, rugged miles, to a school building, only to find it filled to capacity, or to find it locked for want of repair or a teacher. Back of these long rugged miles, even longer now, they trudge home to wait another year, still hoping for better luck next time. There is a big backlog with many thousands of children and adults who have never had a day of school, and unless we change our policy, these defrauded people in the heart of this rich and educated nation, will still be illiterate fifty years hence. The median school year for the Navajo is .9 of a year, as compared to 5.7 years for the average Indian and 8.4 years for our own children. The records reveal that while 3.7 percent of us have had no schooling, and 25.2 percent of the Indians in general have had none, there are sixty-six percent of the Navajos who have never had such opportunity. Illiteracy is reported to be about seventy-five percent among the Navajos while the United States negro is only 16.1 percent and we United States whites are 1.5 percent illiterate. When we speak of educated Indians, we do not mean those with degrees but those who can read and write. Of one hundred ninety-five literate, "educated" Navajos surveyed, only sixteen had more than eighth grade training. To take care of the children on the reservation it would require twelve five-hundred-pupil high schools. There is not a single one available. The tribal leaders say:

A PLEA FOR SCHOOLS FOR CHILDREN

Why? Why can we not have schools? We cooperate always. We reduce our sheep when we are told we have too many. We do everything. But all they do is to close our school.

In Tolani area there are six hundred school children with one little school building which might accomodate sixty, but even it is closed. At Tohatchi, New Mexico, is a large school plant with school buildings, dormitories, residences, hospital, but for five years it has been closed. The officials say there is no appropriation to repair and fit it for school purposes. At Aneth, Utah, are 1,500 Navajos. They beg for a teacher for the one little closed school there. At Sheep Springs the Indians called a mass meeting and wrote us:

. . . We want a Mormon school here so our children will get good education by you Mormons. The government cannot take care of us all . . .

One group came to the superintendent and asked; "Can't you help us build a school?" The superintendent said he was sorry, but "there is no money for lumber, doors, windows, nails, roofing." So the Indians collected one hundred dollars for materials and with old lumber and logs built themselves a building, then begged for a teacher to train their children. The appeals of these untaught people cause one to weep in sympathy. They wrote:

Our little children beg us to go to school, but there is none for them. We cannot vote. We do not have influence with congressmen. We pay taxes and send our sons to war. The United States Congress makes big treaties with other countries and makes big loans, but not once in history has it observed the sacred treaty of 1868 to give us schools.

Even under most unfavorable conditions of roads and long distances and cold weather, the attendance of the children is eighty percent to ninety percent. In our little school at Blanding, Indian mothers kneel at the desk of their little ones and urge them on in their learning.

PITIALE CONDITIONS

The Lord had promised the sons of Lehi:

They shall prosper in the land of promise if . . .

But little prosperity has come to the Navajo and little can come until we Gentiles, their "nursing fathers," help to train them. Though they have sixteen million acres of land, it is of such barrenness that it takes about one hundred sixty acres to support a horse. Of seven thousand three hundred livestock owners only about one hundred have an economic unit. The average of seven sheep, a half-acre of land and the little they can make from rug weaving and silversmithing and incidentals, will bring about eighty dollars a year, or $1.50 a week, income, for each person.

It is estimated that the Navajo woman makes about three cents to seven cents an hour at her weaving and the silversmith makes little more. During the war the allotments from the three thousand six hundred service boys gave the tribesmen some financial relief, but now they are reduced again to their starvation incomes.

The health conditions are deplorable. They have but one full-time dentist for sixty-three thousand people and no field nurse or doctor, though they should have twenty-five or thirty of each to even approach rural standards. The birth rate is high, but the death rate is also very high, being sixteen per thousand as against 10.5 for the nation and 6.36 for the Church. The large family lives in the dirt hogan being one small circular room with dirt floor, no windows, and with a stove or fire in the center. All members of the family sleep on sheep pelts on the floor. There is no privacy, practically no furniture or equipment. There are no sanitary conveniences inside or out. With a single towel, a common cup, no hot water nor disinfectants, it is easy to see why trachoma, impetigo, and other skin diseases run through the family, and why dysentery, venereal diseases, and tuberculosis run rampant. In a survey of thirty-one families it was found that three in each family had tuberculosis. In their scattered condition, and with such limited hospital facilities, many lie in their hogans, coughing in the air, spitting on the floor, to finally die on the ground floor without medical assistance. Their numerous superstitions bind them down. The use of peyote is increasing, and its demoralizing opiate effect is most destructive. The Indians have learned all the white man's vices, and liquor is "at flood stage" there. And thus they live without the power to raise themselves from the deplorable situation. They cannot lift themselves by their bootstraps. They must have help. They realize it. The late chairman of the tribal council epitomized their thinking when he said:

We are a ward of the people—that means we are slaves. They chase us down . . . with a gun . . . to Ft. Sumner. . . .

"WEEP AND PRAY FOR THE INDIAN"

How I wish you could go with me through the Indian reservations and particularly Navajo Land and see the poverty, want, and wretchedness, and realize again that these are sons and daughters of God; that their miserable state is the result, not only of their centuries of wars and sins and godlessness, but is also attributable to us, their conquerors, who placed them on reservations with such limited resources and facilities, to starve and die of malnutrition and unsanitary conditions, while we become fat in the prosperity from the assets we took from them. Think of these things, my people, and then weep for the Indian, and with your tears, pray; then work for him. Only through us, the "nursing fathers and mothers," may they eventually enjoy a fulfillment of the many promises made to them. Assuming that we do our duty to them, the Indians and other sons of Lehi will yet rise in power and strength. The Lord will remember his covenant to them; his Church will be established among them; the Bible and other scriptures will be made available to them; they will enter into the holy temples for their endowments and do vicarious work; they will come to a knowledge of their fathers and to a perfect knowledge of their Redeemer Jesus Christ; they shall prosper in the land and will, with our help, build up a holy city, even the New Jerusalem, unto their God.

Only in our doing all in our power to restore these people to their heritage can we even approach a justification for having taken their promised land. May the Lord assist us all to see our full duty respecting these people and give us the courage and determination to guarantee that they have the education, culture, security, and all other advantages and luxuries that we enjoy—I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Through seven inspirational sessions I have not lost faith that my time would come.

To one who has spent the major part of the last year amidst the rubble and destruction of war-torn Europe, this conference has been doubly inspirational and appreciated. As I have looked into the faces of this well-fed (almost too well-fed in many cases) audience, well-clothed, surrounded with all the comforts and blessings of life, I have found that my thoughts have many times drifted across the Atlantic to those of our brethren and sisters with whom I have been closely associated during recent months. I love them, my brethren and sisters, as I am sure you do, many of you having descended through progenitors from those nations.

We have heard much in this conference regarding Europe and the Latter-day Saints in those countries. You heard testimonies from two of the former mission presidents of those missions who told of the suffering of the Saints and who bore fervent testimony to the faithfulness and devotion of Latter-day Saints in Europe. You heard from Brother Frederick W. Babbel, my companion and faithful associate, regarding his observations in Europe. If the Lord will bless me during the next few moments, I should like, in keeping with the suggestion of President Smith, to refer briefly to some other phases in connection with observations and travels in Europe, covering a period of some ten months and more than sixty thousand miles.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF GOD'S DIRECTING HAND

I hasten to suggest, my brethren and sisters, that even though many fine comments were made regarding our mission over there, I assure you I know the source of the success which attended our labors. Never at any time have I felt it would be possible for me or my associates to accomplish the mission to which we were assigned without the directing power of the Almighty. I shall never forget my feelings when I read in the press the announcement by the First Presidency regarding our call. The magnitude of it seemed overwhelming. They gave us a four-point charge: First, to attend to the spiritual affairs of the Church in Europe; second, to work to make available food, clothing, and bedding to our suffering Saints in all parts of Europe; third, to direct the reorganization of the various missions of Europe; and, fourth, to prepare for the return of missionaries to those countries.

Our great desire was to live so that the Lord would bless us in carrying out those directions, and I testify to you this afternoon, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord has in very deed blessed us on every turn. He has gone before us. Barriers have melted away. Problems that seemed impossible to solve have been solved, and the work in large measure has been accomplished through the blessings of the Lord.

I remember well our first inquiry as to the time we could set sail, either by plane or boat. We were told it would take three months, that all bookings were filled for that period. Yet within twenty-one days from the time our appointment was announced, we landed at Hurn Airport sixty miles south of London. And in spite of a most acute housing shortage in London, two days thereafter suitable headquarters had been established; how, I do not know, except through the blessings of the Almighty; and had we been free to select a spot for our headquarters, as it developed later, we could not have done better for our purpose. And so today I am grateful beyond my power of expression for the blessings that have accompanied us on our mission in Europe.

THE FAITHFULNESS OF THE EUROPEAN SAINTS

I am grateful for the love of the Saints over there, and for their devotion, for their faith, for the manner in which they received us. They are a great people. I have never seen greater faith anywhere in the Church than we saw among the Saints in the war-torn countries.

I will not take time today to describe the terrors of war, the worst of which is not the physical combat but that which follows: the abandonment of moral and religious restraints, the increase in sin, disease; the increase in infant mortality; and all the suffering which accompanies famine, disease, and immorality. We saw these things on every side. We saw nations prostrate, flat on their backs economically. We found it difficult even to get a telephone call through from London to many of our missions on the continent when we arrived. We could not even make a telephone call to Holland, let alone countries like Poland and Czechoslovakia, and other nations. Almost the only type of transportation available was that under the control of the military. But through the blessings of the Lord we were able within eight days to make our first trip to the continent, and from Paris made our journey into the various nations of Europe.

I think I shall never forget those first meetings with the Saints. They have suffered much, my brethren and sisters. We wondered just how they would receive us, what the reaction would be. Would their hearts be filled with bitterness? Would there be hatred there? Would they have soured on the Church? I well remember our first meeting at Karlsruhe. After we had made visits through Belgium, Holland, and the Scandinavian countries, we went into occupied Germany. We finally found our way to the meeting place, a partially bombed-out building located in the interior of a block. The Saints had been in session for some two hours waiting for us, hoping that we would come because the word had reached them that we might be there for the conference. And then for the first time in my life I saw almost an entire audience in tears as we walked up onto the platform, and they realized that at last, after six or seven long years, representatives from Zion, as they put it, had finally come back to them. Then as the meeting closed, prolonged at their request, they insisted we go to the door and shake hands with each one of them as he left the bombed-out building. And we noted that many of them, after they had passed through the line went back and came through the second and third time, so happy were they to grasp our hands. As I looked into their upturned faces, pale, thin, many of these Saints dressed in rags, some of them barefooted, I could see the light of faith in their eyes as they bore testimony to the divinity of this great latter-day work, and expressed their gratitude for the blessings of the Lord.

That is what a testimony does. We saw it in many countries. I say there is no greater faith, to my knowledge, anywhere in the Church than we found among those good people in Europe.

SPIRIT OF FELLOWSHIP PREDOMINANT

Many interesting things happened as you can well imagine. Oftentimes our meeting rooms were in almost total darkness as we were forced to close the windows, filled with cardboard instead of glass, because of a rainstorm. But the Saints insisted that we go on with the meeting. Other times we would close a meeting, and then they would ask if we could not hold another before we sent them home—they were so happy to have the opportunity of meeting with us. I remember in Nuremberg that the people had waited two hours for us—we were delayed because of detours around bombed bridges and other things. Shortly after we arrived, the curfew rang; but they requested that we allow them to stay on; and after the meeting was over, they were forced to stay all night in the old partially bombed-out-schoolhouse, because of curfew restrictions. Words cannot adequately express the joy of the Saints for the first missionwide conference following the war in England, Holland, Sweden, and other countries.

We found that our members had carried on in a marvelous way. Their faith was strong, their devotion greater, and their loyalty unsurpassed. We found very little, if any, bitterness or despair. There was a spirit of fellowship and brotherhood which had extended from one mission to the other, and as we traveled, the Saints asked us to take their greetings to their brothers and sisters in other countries although their nations had been at war only a few months before. Local missionaries had carried on during the war period. In some districts there had been more baptisms than during a comparable period prior to the war.

They had lived the standards of the Church. The Word of Wisdom has been a great blessing to them. Whereas many people, driven by the pangs of hunger, had had their desire for tobacco intensified and would trade their meager food allowance for more tobacco, the Saints traded their rations of tobacco for more food. Truly this revelation of over one hundred years ago is a great blessing to them.

SUFFERINGS OF THE SAINTS

They have suffered much, my brethren and sisters. You heard President Clark read a letter here on Friday from President Walter Stover in Berlin. You may think that is an isolated case. It is only one of hundreds, many of which are much worse than the one he referred to, because our Saints in some cases have suffered more than death. It is worse than death for a mother or a father to have to stand at the point of a gun while they witness their little thirteen and fourteen-year-old daughters being ravished by fiends in human form. Some of our Saints were forced to go through that.

Yes, they have been hungry; they have been cold. We saw many such families long before welfare supplies arrived in Europe. Thank God that the welfare supplies are there now!

Our local mission presidents have performed a marvelous work. The local leaders, district and branch presidents, have done yeoman service for which we are deeply grateful to them. The local people have rallied around and supported them in every way.

Probably the saddest part of our mission was with our refugees. These poor, unwanted souls, have been driven from their once happy homes to destinations unknown. They came with all their earthly possessions on their backs, but after organizing them into branches, calling them into meetings, they sang the songs of Zion with a fervor I am sure has never been surpassed. We visited some of their homes—their shacks—where as many as twenty-two people were living in one room—four complete families! And yet they knelt together in prayer night and morning and bore testimony to us regarding the blessings of the gospel.

THE WORK OF THE WELFARE PROGRAM IN EUROPE

Now, just a word about the welfare program. I bring to you, my brothers and sisters, the deep gratitude and thanksgiving of the Saints in Europe. The spirit of the welfare program was there long before we arrived. The Saints in various countries had sent help to their less fortunate brothers and sisters in other nations. Welfare gardens had been planted. We found them among the bombed-out buildings. We ran on to many instances where following bombings, branches had joined together and pooled all their remaining supplies, food, clothing, and household articles, and turned them over to the priesthood for distribution according to need.

It was a great joy when the welfare supplies came through. It was also a great surprise to the military authorities and others to learn with what dispatch the supplies arrived from Zion, after arrangements were made, and the cable sent back to Zion, March 14, 1946, to start shipments. They could hardly believe that there was a Church in existence with a hundred storehouses well stocked, ready to dispatch supplies to the suffering people in Europe. You have heard figures regarding the quantities that have arrived—some fifty-one carloads. That means over two hundred European carloads, or approximately two thousand tons, and I am sure that if the cost of transporting it on the European end was considered, it would total well over three quarters of a million dollars. The bulk of that, of course, has gone to the countries in greatest distress, Germany and Austria, Holland, Norway, Belgium, with quantities going to many other countries according to need.

I have faced congregations of more than a thousand Latter-day Saints where it was estimated by the mission president that more than eighty percent of the total clothing worn was clothing from Zion, sent through the welfare program. My brethren and sisters, do you need any further evidence of the need for this program and the inspiration back of it? I wish you could have spent a few days with me in Europe during this past year. I tell you God is directing this program. It is inspired! Had it not been so, there would have been many, many hundreds more of our Latter-day Saints perish with hunger and die of cold because of the lack of simple food commodities and clothing.

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH PROGRESSING

Now the work is going forward in Europe. New buildings are being provided. Under the direction of the First Presidency, purchases have been made in Sweden, England, and Holland, of buildings and lots. New headquarters have been established and the work of the Lord is progressing. We have fine cooperation from the military authorities, from civic, business, and professional people. Our United States embassies have cooperated fully. The radio and the press have been friendly. And on the whole, with mission presidents now back in all of the missions, except the West German, and permission granted for a president to go there, with four hundred and fifty missionaries already called and assigned and one hundred others waiting for visas, the outlook is encouraging. Even in Germany and Austria, where missionaries have not been permitted to go in numbers, some seventy local missionaries are serving full time to carry on the great work.

Two distributions of welfare supplies have been made in all districts in Germany and in the East German Mission; a third distribution was made through purchases on the Swiss market before welfare supplies arrived. A third distribution is now being made in the western zones which comprise the West German Mission. In Holland and Norway the work is progressing equally well.

EUROPE IN HOPELESS STATE

While the outlook for the Church is favorable in Europe if peace can be maintained, certainly the outlook for the world at large is anything but encouraging. After two years, following the second world war in twenty-five years, the world is indeed in a sorry state. Once powerful nations in Europe, Asia, and the Orient are flat on their backs, industries broken, economies shattered, and their once happy people on starvation doles. A large part of the world is cold, hungry, and desperate. Millions without the gospel are without hope. Europe today is in the midst of one of the greatest ideological conflicts in recorded human history—whether government exists for the individual or the individual for the government. We feel it only vaguely here, but it is real. To me the threat of Godless communism is a stern reality, not only in Europe but also in blessed America.

THE GOSPEL THE ONLY HOPE FOR THE WORLD

The outlook for the world is not encouraging, but we know what the answer is. There is only one answer, and that is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Peace must come from the heart. Men's hearts must change, and righteousness must rule in the lives of the people of the world before peace can come. May God hasten the day. May the message of the restored gospel go forward in great force, by increasing numbers, that God's children may escape the calamities which are impending. I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The brethren whose names we added to the list of the General Authorities by your vote today have not had an opportunity, perhaps, to get their breath, but we would be glad to have them tell us whether they are willing to serve, or not, and they may say anything else they have in their hearts. We shall ask Brother Henry D. Moyle to come to the stand.

---

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," Hymn Book No. 152, L.D.S. Hymns No. 298.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

It goes without saying that we do in this Church what we are told. I have never understood that it was my privilege as a member of this Church, holding the priesthood, to say no. I have never had a desire in my heart to do anything other than that which the brethren direct. While I may feel as if some of the things that they have most recently asked me to do are beyond my power, nevertheless so far as my Heavenly Father will give me the power to act I shall do so, and all that I have and am belongs to my Heavenly Father. I had a grandfather who met with a very great disaster. All that he had was swept away by fire. His thoughts and his actions at the moment he was told of his loss have been on my mind for the past several minutes, and I must say I feel rather as he then felt:

... the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. (Job 1:21.)

I know that the Lord can take that away which he giveth, if we give him cause so to do; that we may be the recipients of his blessings today but to continue to be such recipients, we must be obedient to his laws and his commandments.

OBEDIENCE TO PRESENT-DAY LEADERS REQUIRED

Brethren and sisters, my faith in this gospel is such that I do not confine my obedience alone to that which I find in the scriptures, but I believe that our obedience should be pledged, that of every one of us, to every word that comes from the mouths of the prophets and the representatives of our Heavenly Father here upon this earth. To me that which the Presidency of this Church have said and say now, is as much the law and the gospel as anything that has ever been said or written before for our guidance.

It is not the wisdom of the world as Paul says that is important to us; it is the power and the strength of the gospel: That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. (I Cor. 2:5.) If there is anything else in life that we can better afford to dedicate that which we have and are than to the work of the Lord, I do not know what that would be. Certainly it is not to be found in the world. I have had an exceptional opportunity, as I have told many of you in your quarterly conferences in our welfare work, to examine the minds and understand the reasoning and the philosophy and the weaknesses of the world in its counsels, and by comparison to see the strength and the certainty and the wisdom and the knowledge that come to the leaders and the councils of our Church from our Heavenly Father on high.

And so, with my heart full of gratitude and humility for this further opportunity to serve the people, I hope and pray that I may be blessed in my ministry with the wisdom that comes from above, and never be tempted to rely upon that which comes from the world.

THE WISDOM OF THE WORLD INSUFFICIENT

I know that after eleven long years in this welfare work that if we had depended upon the wisdom of the world, and had let our people go as the world goes, the time is rapidly approaching when they would have no security. They would have no welfare, because the philosophies of men by which many of our people have been led astray will fail, whereas that which comes from the Lord will remain with us eternally.

I want to bear you my testimony that I know that this Church and this people are capable of taking care of their own; that there is no need for any of us to go beyond the confines of our own combined resources, to garner into the bishops' storehouses of this Church all that we need for ourselves, all that we need for our brethren and sisters in Europe, and I will go one step farther and say, all that we need for our neighbors, if we will but keep in close communion with the spirit of obedience and act under the direction of the leaders of Israel, here upon this earth and here upon this stand today.

A FERVENT TESTIMONY

I know that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. I know that this group of men, before me in this audience, are in reality the representatives of the only group of men in the world made up, as they are, of all professions and coming from all walks of life, that is to say the priesthood of this Church, who can bear this same testimony—that they know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ. You cannot go anywhere else in the world and find such a group of men able, ready, and willing so to testify. I have never in my life met a doctor or a lawyer or a business man of any other church or of any other denomination that had a testimony to bear concerning this most important knowledge of all, our knowledge as Latter-day Saints of the fulness of our gospel.

There has never been a question of a doubt in my mind that our Heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ appeared to Joseph Smith in the Sacred Grove. I have stood on that spot. I have heard the testimonies of the leaders of this Church borne there. I have felt with all the feeling there was within my being, that that was the Sacred Grove, and that that was where the gospel of Jesus Christ was again restored to mankind in this day and age. It shall be my hope and my desire that I shall ever be worthy in the sight of my Heavenly Father to retain the good will and the confidence and the love of these my brethren who have called me into their quorum and that I may be an honor and a credit to my family and my people and be able to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ and to bear this testimony throughout the world. I pray for this further blessing with the assistance of my Heavenly Father, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITHPatriarch to the ChurchA TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH

I have been active all my life, and I don't think that there has been a time when I haven't had a testimony of the gospel. I know that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am the sixth generation in this Church in this dispensation. If all my forefathers could be active members in the Church, as they were, I don't know why I should be one to find fault with it, or to question their testimonies as well as the testimony which bears within me. I know that this is the true gospel of Jesus Christ. However, I think that there are probably thousands of men in the Church who, if called by the proper authority, could come and fulfill any position in the Church, and the position to which I have been called is no exception. I believe and have always taught that the Lord's way is the best way and that he is guiding this Church. This is the Lord's Church, and he is directing it, and those who are called to positions are truly called of the Lord, and they are directing this Church as he wants it done, in spite of the fact that we all have our free agency.

ADVICE OF MISSION PRESIDENT RECALLED

While I was in the mission field in Germany, President Hugh J. Cannon said to us one time in a missionary testimony meeting, where only the missionaries were present:

The Lord uses the weak things in this life to accomplish his purposes. If you don't believe me just look around at yourselves, and the first chance you get, take a good look in a mirror.

That is still true, and I think I am just as weak today as I was then, and I am sure I am going to need the help of the Lord to fulfil this office to which I have been called. President Cannon also said to us at one time, "How much time do you waste in prayer?" If we are wasting our time, we are not praying. My appeal to you as the membership of this church is that you do not waste your time, and when you pray, pray! Remember the Authorities of the Church in that prayer, and include me with them, because I am going to need it.

May the Lord bless us all and help us all in our righteous endeavors and in all of our callings, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am sure the Lord has been good to us in these days of conference. It has been a happy experience. The brethren who have spoken to us have expressed themselves under the influence of the Spirit of our Heavenly Father. We have been entertained with the most delightful music that could have been heard anywhere. The Tabernacle Choir today has rendered anthems and hymns that I am sure have uplifted our souls.

GROWTH OF CHURCH

As I have sat here and looked into the faces of the men and women present, I have seen those from many parts of the country, and I have shaken hands with people from nearly every section of the United States and from other parts of the world. Ours is no longer a Church of small number and limited boundary. Its membership may be found in almost all parts of the civilized world.

I am sure we are grateful to those who have sung for us and prayed for us, and to those who have given to us their testimonies. We who are here today are just a little handful of the membership of this great Church. I think we hardly realize the real power of this organization.

FIRST MEETING IN SALT LAKE VALLEY

We have said much about the coming of the pioneers. They were men and women of courage and fidelity. It is a strange thing: I have been thinking of them for the last few moments. Three of us who have talked to you in this audience today are descendants, grandsons as a matter of fact, of three of the men who talked in the first meeting ever held in this valley by the Latter-day Saints. I refer to Brother Benson, Brother Kimball and myself. Our grandfathers delivered the first addresses that were listened to in this valley following the arrival of the Pioneers. It may be of interest to you to know that President Young in speaking to the group, criticized one of those men because he planted some potatoes on the Sabbath day before he came to church.

There was a purpose in the coming of the pioneers. It was no small responsibility that President Young undertook when he led the people across the plains and into the valleys of these mountains. The Lord had opened the way and prepared the time, and the result was that they came and planted their crops, which matured sufficiently to be used for seed. But for the coming of the Donner-Reed Party the year before, they would probably have been weeks longer arriving in this valley, and it would have been too late for planting. Truly "God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform."

Later when the pioneers were desperate because of the destruction of their crops by the crickets, they went to the Lord as their only hope. Then the sea gulls came and devoured the crickets and saved the crops.

All these stories are not new or strange to you people. Most of you here have heard them before. I recall that a hundred years ago now our people were camped on the banks of the Missouri River in an Indian country, expatriated from their own homes, deprived of that which they had earned and accumulated, and willing to come into this western land and leave everything behind rather than surrender their faith. I wonder if we were put to the test whether or not we would be as courageous as they were.

PROGRAM OF CONSERVATION

Reference has been made to the necessity of increasing our holdings of food, clothing, bedding, etc. We, the group that dwells here in the tops of these mountains, will not need the increase very much, unless something happens that we do not know of now, but it was the advice of those early pioneers under President Young to keep a year's foodstuffs on hand, so that if anybody did lose his crops, he could carry over until the next season.

It was a very severe test of faith, I am sure, to some of our people, when the President of the United States and those associated with him decreed that we should destroy our food, and that we should kill our animals, and then to have the Church leadership say: "We will build granaries; we will grow more food; we will increase our herds and our flocks; we will not destroy what this world will soon need so much."

The result was that when the war was finished, we had plenty. Not only did we have plenty in our granaries, but we had also given the surplus to bless the needy. In our root cellars and on our farms and ranges, we had sufficient that from that time until the present, carload after carload has been sent off to our brothers and sisters in other lands, and we have not missed one bushel of wheat, one pound of meat. Nor have we missed one quart of fruit or vegetables that has been canned and sent over there. I want to say that as we have given to the poor, we have but lent to the Lord. And so we ourselves today are in greater comfort than many people in different parts of the United States and other parts of the world who have not given to help those who are in distress.

I am sure the Lord loves those humble, faithful souls who are willing to reach out and touch those who are in need whether it be with food or clothing or bedding or kindness because that is a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

LATTER-DAY SAINTS KNOWN FOR GOOD

Today people of all the world know of the Latter-day Saints. They know the record we have made, and they know the truth about us now as they never have before. The result is that our neighbors and friends of other faiths who come to see us look from a different viewpoint, see what we are accomplishing, and go away to become missionaries for the cause of the Master. I wish you could see several letters that have come to me in the last few days from people not members of the Church, and telegrams from some of the most prominent men in our nation, men of affairs, wishing me well as President of the Church, wishing the Church well for what we are doing to bless our kind, and encouraging us to go forward.

We have over three thousand missionaries in the world and many of them will be led to homes which before were closed but will now be open to hear their testimonies. It is our responsibility to carry the message of the gospel not only to the civilized world but also to those who are not considered to be so civilized. All this has been made possible because the Lord in his wisdom saw the necessity of giving us a nation in which we could thrive. In no other nation under heaven could the Church have been organized and gone forward as we have in this nation. The founding of the United States was not an accident. The giving to us of the Constitution of the United States was not an accident. Our Heavenly Father knew what would be needed, and so he paved the way to give us the Constitution. It came under the influence of prayer, and he guided those who framed that wonderful document.

BLESSINGS OF DEMOCRACY

I hope that the membership of this Church will not be deceived into thinking that other plans, other forms of government, other systems of direction whatsoever, are desirable. I want to say to you without any hesitation that no form of government in the world can be compared favorably with the government God gave to us. This is his plan. Then after giving us our civil government, preparing the way for governing ourselves, if you will, he organized the Church and gave it the name of his Beloved Son, and then directed that we share that information with all his children. What a commission, a divine commission!

The Lord says that he is a slothful servant who waits to be commanded in all things. (See D. & C. 58: 26.) When we see all around us the need for living as well as teaching the gospel, it is our duty to set the example. We ought not to be waiting for other people to take the initiative; it should be our responsibility to go forward. Everything that is praiseworthy, everything in civil life, or in religious life that is necessary to make the people happy will come to us as a part of the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord. This is his Church; we are his people if we are faithful. I want to say that this Church will continue to grow and expand, and instead of approximately a million souls as we have now, if we shall do our duty, the membership of this Church will continue to increase, and the good men and women, those who are seeking God, will get the inspiration and accept the truth as some of your forebears did.

STORY OF AUSTIN FAMILY

I would like to tell you the story of the family of a man sitting in this audience today, that of the Austin family. They wanted to come to Zion, but they did not have the means. The father was not sure they could make it. He was working in the coal mines in England. However, the mother received the inspiration and said: "We must get ready to go to Zion." When the husband indicated that he did not think it was possible, she paid no attention. She secured boxes and began to make and repair the children's clothing which she put in the boxes. The husband saw the preparations, and yet he could not see how there was any chance for them to go. They had only food enough and barely enough clothing to keep them comfortable.

One day, about two weeks, as I remember it, before a boat was to sail, a good woman came into the home of this family and said, "Sister Austin, we have been preparing to go with this boat. We have our reservations; we have our money, but sickness has come into our family, and it is necessary for us to stay. Would you like to use this money and take your family to America? Then you can send the money back after you get over there."

Talk about a miracle, with money as scarce as it was in those days! The result was that the Austin family came to this country, and it has been a blessing to the Church that they came. God opened the way.

IMPORTANCE OF TRAINING CHILDREN

There are dozens and dozens of such instances, hundreds of them if we had time to check on them and repeat them. What a wonderful thing it is to know that we can, if we will, hold our Heavenly Father's hand and be guided by him. No other people in the world have the assurance that this group of people has. If we do our duty, even our children may have that faith, as a result of the training in our homes that prepares them for the struggle of life. We may desire the wealth of the world, but the most important treasures that we have are the sons and daughters that God sends to our homes. I want to say to the Latter-day Saints one of the responsibilities of every married couple is to rear a family to the honor and glory of God. Those who follow the customs and habits of the world in preference to that blessing will some day find that all the things they have struggled for are wasted away like ashes, while those who have reared their families to honor God and keep his commandments will find their treasures not altogether here upon earth in mortality, but they will have their treasures when the celestial kingdom shall be organized on this earth, and those treasures will be their sons and daughters and descendants to the latest generation. That is what the Lord says. Fathers and mothers, teach your sons and your daughters the necessity of virtue. Do not leave it to somebody else. Do not take it for granted that they understand, but in their tender years explain to them the purpose of life and guide them that they may feel that it is a blessing from the Lord to be members of the Church and to be sons and daughters of the Living God.

APPALLING DIVORCE RATE

The divorce rate of our country is appalling, and many of those, who, within the last few years, have hastened into marriage are dissolving those ties. They are sowing the seeds of sorrow that will continue with them a long time. They have not been willing to work it out in patience and take their chances that all will be well.

HARD TIMES

I remember what one sister in Idaho said a number of years ago when people were complaining about hard times. I had asked if there was anybody in attendance at the meeting eighty years of age and was told, "Yes, there is one woman here that is over eighty."

I said, "Call her to the stand, and let us hear her testimony."

She said: "You make me sick, talking about hard times. Why you have more food and everything else than you need here; a few families possess more than we had in this whole valley when I first came. When we came in, we had a span of horses and a wagon and a cow and the only encumbrances I had were my baby and my husband. (She meant companions.)

Of course that provoked a great deal of merriment in that group. She was not taking much stock in her husband if she meant what she said. Then she continued, "We worked; we did teamwork. We worked outdoors and indoors. We did everything we could to conserve our energies and conserve our means, and see what this valley has produced now. Talk about hard times!"

It was interesting to hear that dear old soul scold that great congregation of people who thought they were having a hard time.

We may have hard times, brothers, and sisters, but we can be prepared for them, if we think of the seven years of plenty and the seven years of famine in the days of Pharaoh and plan as they did. Such conditions may come again. We do not know, but we do know that in the early days of the Church the Presidency and leadership of the Church advised the people to store sufficient food to meet an emergency. The result has been that since the people got thoroughly settled here and farms began producing, and herds and flocks increasing, there has been no real necessity for anybody to suffer for food.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP TO BE PRIZED

This is God's work. This is the Church of the Lamb of God. He has offered us eternal membership in it, and O my brethren and sisters, I plead with everyone of you to prize that membership and retain it by reason of righteousness, and that there will never come a time when you will find yourselves in the dark and groping your way, uncertain as to what it all means. I would like to say to you before closing that this work is a joyous work. It will bring peace and happiness that nothing else can bring if we will do our part. We will be loved by our neighbors and our friends, many of them not associated with us, if they see our virtues, and if we will develop those virtues as the Lord intends we should.

Think today of this great organ and Tabernacle Choir singing to the world all during the war, and giving their time, day by day, week in and week out, to sing for us and for our neighbors and friends everywhere. How the Lord has magnified them and held them up to the admiration of mankind!

This is the Lord's work. You cannot find anything else like it. The city we live in was a desert a hundred years ago. Today it is the one city in all the world whose streets originally were made wide enough to be useful for the automobile. I think that those who came in that early day never dreamed of an automobile, but when they laid the city out, they laid it out wide enough so that if people will be careful, there is plenty of room to drive four cars abreast in our streets, do our parking, and get along without any difficulty.

This desert has been made to blossom as a great forest. I have taken people up on the hills and had them look over the valley, and they have said, "We heard this was a desert country. Why, you cannot see the houses for the trees." It is a beautiful valley. The Lord sends us the early storms and the late storms and stores our mountains with snow so that we are sure, year by year, of the blessing of moisture that we so much need to mature our crops and enjoy this once desert land.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

There are so many things that we might talk about if there were time. I want to say to you that every blessing we enjoy is the result of keeping the commandments of God. Every blessing we desire we must obtain on those same terms. So today I witness to you that we have a Heavenly Father—I know that he lives. I know that Jesus was the Christ, his Beloved Son, who gave his mortal life that we might have eternal life. He came to this country twice, once to the Nephites, and later in the days of Joseph Smith. The Father and the Son came in that latter instance to see that the way was opened for the dissemination of his gospel. He has called us to bear the priesthood and carry the gospel message as missionaries to the various parts of the world, and in return for that he has promised us eternal life in his celestial kingdom. Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith gave their lives as a testimony to the world of the truthfulness of this work.

You have voted today for two men in this audience who are the descendants of Hyrum Smith, the martyr. God has blessed that family all down through the years, and if they will be faithful, he will continue to bless them, and nobody but themselves can take their blessings from them. You do not have to belong to that family, but each of you has the same promise if you will seek first, not last, the kingdom of God and his righteousness. He has promised everything else. What more do you want? But all is conditioned on our willingness to honor him and keep his commandments.

TESTIMONY

Joseph was a prophet who gave his life for the cause. Hyrum was a patriarch who gave his life, and many others have given their lives also for the gospel of Jesus Christ. This is the Lord's work; his authority is deposited with this Church, and nowhere else in, all the world except with the Church. Knowing that, I am happy to be here with you. I am delighted to be able to worship with you in this house that is sacred to us all. I pray that when we go from here, each of us will return to our homes with a renewed determination that we will be worthy of him who gives us all our blessings, that we will be worthy of one another as we live together in our homes, sanctified by the righteousness of our lives.

This is God's work, and I bear you my witness of it, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir: "Hosannah," by Jones.

Elder Willard C. Stolworthy, President of the Young Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned.

President George Albert Smith:

I have been asked to read this notice: "Please announce the meeting of The Message of the Ages pageant choir which was scheduled for the Assembly Hall at 4:30 p.m. today will be held in the 17th Ward at that hour. [That means a block and a half north and a block and a half west from where we are now.] This is to make way for the Scandinavian Conference in the Assembly Hall."

I want to tell you that if any people should have a place in which to hold their meetings in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it is the Scandinavians. They have been the salt of the earth and the substance that has built this country, in very large measure.

In conclusion, the Tabernacle Choir will sing "Hosannah" and the closing prayer will be offered by President Willard C. Stolworthy of the Young Stake.

DANIEL HANMER WELLS

AND EVENTS OF HIS TIME

By Bryant S. Hinckley

As the polished facets of a diamond flash back brilliantly the rainbow of colors from the light which plays upon them so do certain historic characters reflect the light and color of their times.

Daniel Hamner Wells was one of these.

Bryant S. Hinckley, always illuminating and inspirational, turns the spot light of appraisal and appreciation upon a distinctive character in the great drama of Mormon history.

This book is in fact a new approach to the study of Church History. It offers the events of the history of Mormonism as one of the principal actors saw them happen and as he acted in, and was acted upon by them.

The book is a biography and more, a tribute of appreciation and more—it is a history throbbing with the pulse beats of great personalities as they struggle through one crisis after another.

His life ran the long span which included actively within it labors of love for and loyalty to every man who has been president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells saw it all happen: The rise of the Church in the Middle West; the story of Nauvoo; the catastrophe of the martyrdom; the pain, travail, and power of pioneering; the building of the West; the crises of pre-statehood days; and the long, hard pull which finally established the Mormon people on the heights where they are now building.

Published privately by President Heber J. Grant, as a tribute to the loyal friend of his youth, it will stand as a welcome addition to the faith-promoting literature of the Church.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The opening session of the Conference was held Friday morning, October 3, at 10 o'clock, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the meeting.

The building, auditorium and galleries, was fully occupied, every available seat being taken.

President George Albert Smith:

We are happy to see you all here this morning and hope that you are comfortable in your seats and that everybody can obtain seats. It is a glorious morning to begin our conference, and I am sure we have everything to be grateful for in this wonderful world.

This is the opening session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young, President of the New England Mission.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the services this afternoon beginning at 2:00 p.m.; likewise the services tomorrow at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.; likewise the services on Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. By arrangement with KSL these same sessions will be broadcast over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, and KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The Choir singing during today's sessions will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Central Utah Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the conductor; Elder Frank W. Asper, the organist.

The first song will be:

"The Heavens Resound"—(Beethoven).

The opening prayer will be offered by President Israel Hoyt Chamberlain of the Kanab Stake, Kanab, Utah.

(Singing by the Singing Mothers—"The Heavens Resound.")

The opening prayer was offered by President Israel Hoyt Chamberlain, Kanab Stake.

Selection by the Singing Mothers, "O Savior Hear Me"—(Gluck).

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am very grateful this morning to be able to be here at this session of the conference. It seems incredible that there could be so much quiet and peace and comfort, yes, luxury, in this part of the world today, while in many other parts of the world people are suffering for the necessities of life, and there appears to be no hope of peace in those sections, in fact, in any section, for a long time.

We are met this morning in worship. I see in the audience, to-day, prominent officials of the state, our educational institutions, missionary representatives, and people from all parts of the Church. I think I should mention this morning that we have here with us the grandson of a great friend of the Church in early days, Colonel Thomas L. Kane, who offered his life that he might preserve the people in this valley, and the Lord preserved him to do his work, and he returned home safely. Today we feel grateful that his grandson is here. We hope that he will enjoy being with the people for whom his grandfather sacrificed so much.

It was eighty-nine years ago that Colonel Kane visited here, but one hundred years ago the first general conference was held in this valley. I think you would like to know just about what happened.

EVENTS OF 100 YEARS AGO

The conference meetings began on Sunday, October 3, and continued until Friday, October 8. During that period the weather in Salt Lake City was warm. Brigham Young was sustained as President of the whole Church. The Twelve Apostles were sustained with the exception of Lyman Wight, who was left until he came in person, which he did not do. An epistle from the Twelve was read by Parley P. Pratt and accepted by the Saints. Charles C. Rich and John Young were elected counselors to President John Smith; Father John Smith, who was my great-grandfather, was sustained as president of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion, and as patriarch to the Church.

It does not seem possible that we are talking about a hundred years ago. At that time Henry G. Sherwood, Thomas Grover, Levi

Friday, October 3

First Day

Jackman, John Murdock, Daniel Spencer, Lewis Abbott, Ira Eldredge, Edson Whipple, Shadrach Roundy, John Vance, Willard Snow, and Abram O. Smoot were elected members of the high council. Charles C. Rich was also elected chief military commander. Albert Carrington was elected clerk, historian and deputy postmaster for the city. John Van Cott was elected marshall of the city—all this was one hundred years ago!

Several companies of emigrating Saints arrived in Salt Lake City on Monday, October 4. The presidency of the stake and the high council met in Great Salt Lake City for the first time at 7 p.m., at which meeting they considered the advisability of building mills on City Creek and on Mill Creek.

On Tuesday the presidency of the stake and the high council met at 9 a.m. and appointed a committee to lay out farming land. The city had been surveyed, and they were now getting ready to move out a little farther. Other companies of pioneers arrived in Salt Lake City on this date.

The presidency of the stake and high council met on October 6, and appointed a committee to see that the fort had proper gates made for it. Also Henry G. Sherwood was continuing his survey.

Nancy Rich, mother of Charles C. Rich, was buried beside the grave of Caroline Grant, a short distance southeast of the Fort, which was out in the southwest part of the city.

The last families of emigrating Saints arrived in Salt Lake City on Friday, October 8. There were about two thousand people in the valley at this time.

I thought that this might bring to your minds some things that would be of interest to you. It is wonderful to think that this marvelous land we live in, then desert, now is as the garden of the Lord, and to realize that our Heavenly Father preserved the people and opened the way for them to multiply and increase until today we have here in this valley every comfort, every convenience, almost every blessing that you can think of which is enjoyed in any part of the world.

WALKING STICK OF THOMAS L. KANE

In view of the visit here of the Honorable E. Kent Kane, the grandson of Colonel Thomas L. Kane, I brought with me this walking stick which I hold in my hand. It was given to my great-grandfather, John Smith, by Colonel Kane as a result of their friendship. They were great friends before either came to Salt Lake Valley, having become acquainted during the exodus of our people from Nauvoo. This walking stick was handed down from John Smith, to George A. Smith, my grandfather, then to John Henry Smith, my father, and then it came to me and has been passed down to my son, George Albert Smith, IV.

I thought it might be of interest to go back into that history, particularly in view of the fact that we are honored by the presence of the grandson of the man who gave this cane. It came from the hickory grove at the Old Hermitage near Nashville. It was given by Andrew Jackson, the man who became president of the United States, and who owned the Hermitage and lived there, to Thomas L. Kane, and he passed it to John Smith who became the first president of the stake in this valley.

Today, instead of having only two thousand members of the Church in this valley, we have more than four thousand missionaries of the Church in the world who are sharing the gospel of Jesus Christ with the children of men—the largest number that have ever been in the world at any one time.

TEMPLE SQUARE

Hundreds of incidents could be narrated here, if there were time, that would be of interest to this particular audience. Today we are met in the great Tabernacle that is known the world over because from this building each week for more than seventeen years has gone a broadcast by the Tabernacle Choir and the great organ which has been carried to nearly all parts of the civilized world. This Tabernacle, of course, a hundred years ago had not been thought of. Since that time on this block we have the Tabernacle which holds 10,000 people and is one of the most delightful places in the world to meet in; we have the great temple; we have the Bureau of Information; we have the little old log cabin that used to be over on First North Street, and the Assembly Hall, all in this ten acre square. And I call your attention to the fact that the square is adorned, not only by these buildings, but by monuments and markers in honor of those who have passed on, and is beautified by gardens of flowers, and shrubs, and trees. It is one of the most attractive squares in all the world.

RELIEF FOR EUROPEAN SAINTS

Word comes from our people in Europe. In many cases they are still having difficult times, but they are faithful, in the main, to God and the Church, and the messages that they send us from time to time in expressing gratitude for food, clothing, and bedding we have sent them warm our hearts.

It may be of interest to you to know that since World War II closed, more than seventy-five major carloads of food and clothing and bedding have been shipped across the sea to those needy people over there, without any expense to them whatsoever.

VISIT TO PRESIDENT TRUMAN

When the war was over, I went representing the Church, to see the president of the United States. When I called on him, he received me very graciously—I had met him before—and I said: "I have just come to ascertain from you, Mr. President, what your attitude will be if the Latter-day Saints are prepared to ship food and clothing and bedding to Europe."

He smiled and looked at me, and said: "Well, what do you want to ship it over there for? Their money isn't any good."

Friday, October 3

I said: "We don't want their money." He looked at me and asked: "You don't mean you are going to give it to them?"

I said: "Of course, we would give it to them. They are our brothers and sisters and are in distress. God has blessed us with a surplus, and we will be glad to send it if we can have the co-operation of the government."

He said: "You are on the right track," and added, "we will be glad to help you in any way we can."

I have thought of that a good many times. After we had sat there a moment or two, he said again: "How long will it take you to get this ready?"

I said: "It's all ready."

The government you remember had been destroying food and refusing to plant grain during the war, so I said to him:

"Mr. President, while the administration at Washington were advising the destroying of food, we were building elevators and filling them with grain, and increasing our flocks and our herds, and now what we need is the cars and the ships in order to send considerable food, clothing and bedding to the people of Europe who are in distress. We have an organization in the Church that has over two thousand homemade quilts ready."

The group that sang for you this morning, the Singing Mothers of the Relief Society, represent that organization. They had two thousand quilts made by their own hands ready to ship. The result was that many people received warm clothing and bedding and food without any delay. Just as fast as we could get cars and ships, we had what was necessary to send to Europe.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE LAST CENTURY

Now, we couldn't have done that a hundred years ago. We were seeking food ourselves. Our people in this valley then were digging thistle and sego roots for food, and they were utilizing every means possible to get food to keep the soul and body together. In a hundred years the desert has been made to blossom as the rose. In a hundred years the gospel has been preached to almost all nations of the earth where it would be received. In a hundred years the people have been gathered from the various nations and have come here to Zion, and have settled and made homes. In Utah and Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Colorado, Arizona, Montana, California, and Oregon, the state of Washington and western Canada we have congregations as large as this that can be gathered together—members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints who have reason to thank God for the gospel of Jesus Christ revealed in this latter-day, for without it there could have been no such a settlement, no such a gathering as has been made by the people in this great western land.

So this morning, brothers and sisters, we have much to be grateful for. Thanksgiving should fill our hearts. Here we are in this house that has been utilized now many, many years. I was in it myself in 1875; I was a little child then and used to play around here on the great stones that were piled on this block when the temple was being built. Now they all have been finished and laid in place. The great organ was constructed and there have been hundreds of thousands of people worship God in this building under the influence of the spirit of our Heavenly Father.

THE HANDCART PIONEERS

Just north of this building a monument is being completed this morning to the emigrants who came into Salt Lake Valley, bringing all their earthly possessions in handcarts which were pushed and pulled by members of the family. They walked approximately one thousand five hundred miles, coming from Iowa City, Iowa, to this place, and they suffered untold hardships along the way. More than two hundred of them died on the way due to hunger, cold, and exhaustion, but their associates continued to arrive here eventually to make their homes.

Now, think what has happened. That same trip can be made from Iowa City into the valley of the Great Salt Lake in comfort, having your meals en route prepared for you as you come flying through the air overlooking the country, and in seven hours the trip is completed. When the handcart people came, it took weary months of time as it did with the ox team. Now we have the railways with their fast trains; we have the automobile; we have the airplane, and in addition to that we have that wonderful device, the radio, over which the Tabernacle choir and organ have been singing to the world from this building each Sabbath day for seventeen years, and by means of which people all over the country are listening in to this service today, hearing it probably just as plain in their own homes and in their churches as if they were present with us. Surely, a marvelous work and a wonder has been brought into the world.

The scripture has been fulfilled, and today we humble members of the Church, men and women who enjoy almost every comfort that can be desired, all the necessities at any rate, assemble in the house of the Lord this morning. Here in quiet we commune together; we listen to the strains of music; we offer prayers of thanksgiving and gratitude to our Heavenly Father; we listen to sermons that are delivered by men who have had experience in the world—everyone of them has been a missionary in some form or another.

THE INSPIRATION IN WORSHIP

That reminds me of an incident that happened a long time ago. A Holland brother by the name of Folkers was living with his wife at my place, and they could not speak or understand the English language. He used to go to the fast meetings, and when the other people talked, he could not understand what they said. When they finished, he would get up and talk, and we could not understand him. One day I asked him, "Why do you go to the English-speaking services? You cannot understand." It took me sometime to make him understand what I wanted to know. Finally he smiled and said: "It is not what you hear that makes you happy; nor what you see that makes you happy; it is what you feel, and I can feel just as well as anybody." And that is the thing I wanted to impress upon you this morning. In this house, dedicated to the worship of our Heavenly Father, we not only can hear and see, but we can also feel the inspiration of the hour and have our faith increased and our spiritual strength renewed, not as a great group of strangers but as real brothers and sisters, children of the Living God. We can be here together and surely have thanksgiving in our hearts to our Heavenly Father for the many, many blessings extended to us and the opportunities and privileges that are ours.

First Day

THANKSGIVING FOR BLESSINGS

Now, brothers and sisters, you have come here to wait upon the Lord, forget the problems on the outside as far as you can and

Count your many blessings, name them one by one,
And it will surprise you, what the Lord has done.

We who are here as the descendants of those who came a hundred years ago to this valley can see the hand of the Lord has been over the people. He has blessed us as few people in the world have ever been blessed, and surely there will be in our hearts a feeling of gratitude and thanksgiving to him who is the Author of our being for all the blessings he has bestowed upon us.

I am so happy this morning to see Aunt Augusta Grant here. She has been coming to these conferences ever since she was able, and here in her later years she sits in our midst representing a great family and bringing to our minds the fact that her husband not very long ago stood where I am standing, delivering the message that the Lord had for us through him. Then when his work was completed, he was permitted to go to paradise.

May the Lord add his blessings. I pray that his Spirit may be in our hearts and in our homes, that we may have love for our fellow men wherever they may be, that we may sincerely desire to share the only message that will bring peace to the world, the gospel of Jesus Christ, with our Father's other children, with the hope that enough of them will understand it and make it their own that war may be at least withheld for some time and that we may go on happily serving our Heavenly Father.

I bear you my testimony this morning that I know that God lives; I know that Jesus is the Christ; I know that Joseph Smith was his prophet, and I pray that all of us may have that assurance and so adjust our lives that when the time comes for us to go hence we shall find our reward is that of an inheritance in the celestial kingdom in the companionship of those we love, to be with them forever, and I pray that it may be so, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I trust that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord.

BOY SCOUT JAMBOREE

On July 15 of this year, at the request of the national organization of the Boy Scouts of America, and with the co-operation of the First Presidency of the Church, I was invited to go with a representation of the youth of America to the Old World. This was my seventh opportunity to go to Europe; five of these trips have been with the Boy Scouts of America. This time there were boys from every state in the Union and from Alaska. It was truly a great occasion. I trust that I may enjoy the blessing of memory and of the spirit of the occasion so that for these few moments I may interpret to you one or two of the highlights of this great event.

This Church has ever been deeply interested in youth. In its beginning God put full trust in a boy, and he became the leader of this dispensation. It was young men, largely, who fought their way into the beginnings of this great western land. We must be deeply concerned with youth. Our hope lies here. The after years of life set us so fast in habits. If but one generation would truly devote itself to the oncoming generation and give of itself to the youth of the land, what great things might be wrought!

IMPRESSIVE SIGHTS OF OLD WORLD

The government of the United States was deeply interested in this adventure. They chartered one of our transport ships for our use, for both going and coming. When we arrived in the Old World, the lads had been built in morale and spirit for a great occasion. At Camp Kilmer, New Jersey, we rallied before departing on a great open field, and there the Catholic father, the Jewish rabbi, the Lutheran minister, the Presbyterian minister, the Methodist minister, the Mormon elder united. We prayed for God to be with us to help us and bless us. We didn't want to go boastfully; we wanted to go humbly; we wanted to help and be friendly. We started our journey, and after a few days were in the midst of interesting experiences. One morning I heard boys about the ship at four o'clock; they were seeing for the first time the white cliffs of Dover. We sailed on up the channel passing Dunkirk. We were deeply impressed to note when the word Dunkirk was spoken, these thousand lads fell into silence. They had read the papers; they had read the magazines; they had heard the radio. Great hulks of ships still are protruding from the waters. This told the story of Great Britain on her knees, the onrush of the foe, the inspiration of that great Britisher, Churchill, who gave the people so much faith and so much hope.

Then we went on through Holland and Belgium, deeply impressed by every step we took. In Antwerp the mayor spoke to our boys in grateful appreciation. He said:

Friday, October 3First Day

There would have been no Antwerp if your fathers and your brothers had not come.

We went on through France. And overnight a city arose on a great old French estate; thirty-two thousand boys, in a drizzling rain pitched their tents! They were from thirty-eight different nations.

WELCOME IN FRANCE

Early in the morning we heard the singing of the "Jamboree" sung for the first time by a lovely chorus of French lads. It was inspiring. All through the trees and across the old French meadow, it came to us by radio. We knew we were now in France. Soon we heard the voice of a nation through its youth saying to us,

We're happy you're here, all you fellows—black, red, brown, yellow, white, from all over the world with all your different languages—we're glad you've come.

Men of France were saying in their hearts,

Here is our hope. We've been fought and destroyed. Here lies our one hope—the youth of France must be saved.

They made a tremendous effort to have us come. They did everything they could for us and then more, to have the youth of the world come when they felt so sick at heart. This was deeply appreciated.

Many men in France have lost faith. They are bewildered. They are confused. Mothers were standing in doorways with small, poorly-fed children clinging to them as we went by. They wonder what tomorrow will bring, while men talk and argue about their destiny.

REASONS FOR ATTENDING JAMBOREE

At the jamboree I went about among our men and asked them this question: "What was it that impelled you to come over here?" There were eighty-nine American men. We sat down on the old logs, we sat in tents, we talked intimately and thoughtfully with each other.

I want to read the answers to you, for as soon as I had the opportunity I wrote the answers they gave. I will read a number of them. They deeply impressed me. They challenge our thinking. Here is what the American men said:

1. I want the United States to be better understood. Some of the people over here in Europe are saying all that the Americans want is gold.

2. I am an assistant scoutmaster. I belong to the league of frightened men. I was at Bikini. I know what the atomic bomb can do. Our hope lies in the youth of the world. Scouting is not talk but action for peace.

3. There were 300,000 United States men killed in World War II. Among them was my brother. I don't want him to have died in vain. I believe I can help through scouting. Other programs seem so complex. This is simple and effective.

4. I came to America, a poor Russian-Jewish boy. I have received so much. I want to tell my friends here in Europe the truth about America. That's one reason why I came.

Toward the end of the jamboree I asked one of our successful leaders, "And why are you here?" He answered:

5. Oscar, I've seen scouting change the lives of boys for good. I have been inspired by it. I'm here to get more inspiration and help. We have some real problems in our country. On my way to the ship in America I saw from the train window the sign, "We Do Not Serve Colored Trade." I've broken bread with colored boys and men here from different countries. They are fine fellows. I have been deeply impressed.

In Belgium I saw a group of American-Jewish boys standing at a grave with bowed heads while the rabbi said a prayer. It made me feel humble, yet proud. I must work more, have greater faith in men and boys.

6. The world is spiritually ill. Religion is ill. The world is breaking down. Scouting has an answer, I believe, and I want to find out how it is influencing the boys of other countries.

7. I brought my boy with me. I am a G.I. I flew many times over Europe. I helped to wreck the world. I told my son on shipboard he must help to build it back again. We are talking it over. My son is very hopeful.

8. I am a minister and a scoutmaster of thirty-two of these Scouts. I want to know whether scouting helps build a Christian life. The sincere love of our American boys for the boys of other nations and their personal devotions greatly impress me.

Finally one of my intimate friends said:

9. When I received the last letter from my boy, he was fighting from the ruins of a French home. "It is hell here, Dad," he wrote. "The next few hours may decide everything!" I am going to see his grave. I want to be as near as possible to him again. I want him to know I am working for the ideals for which he gave his life.

Brethren and sisters, scouting is not a cure-all, but it is as its great founder said: "We want to make boys healthy, happy, and helpful." The gospel of Jesus Christ, the plan of God unto salvation is the answer. May we humbly live it; may we help youth to its great future.

The world will adjust itself when the Lord's plans are duly unfolded. God help us and bless us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of the Seventy has just spoken to us. I may say that he was Morale Officer for the United States in this last world Scout Jamboree as well as all the others that have been held since Scouting began.

The Relief Society Mothers and the congregation sang the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

PRESIDENT LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

This large group of people assembled to worship our Lord and to give thanks for our blessings is a beautiful lesson of the meaning of life. You come up to this house of God obedient to the call. It is obedience that leads us to the knowledge and love of God, and we conceive God's decrees as eternal truths. It gives us renewed faith and, says Sholem Asch:

It is faith and not wisdom which carrieth the key to the kingdom of heaven.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PEACE

Among the many questions that we have been asked to answer at the State Capitol through the Utah State Historical Society is one that I know will impress you, and one, too, we have tried to answer properly, though briefly. It is a question of great importance. It is:

What contribution has the Latter-day Saint Church made to this darkened world, with the other Christian churches to bring peace to the world?

As we listen to the Singing Mothers of the Relief Society we recall something that has come down to us from ancient days. In an old rabbinic code recently discovered is a description of the duties of women as taught in the synagogue. They were to:

Feed the hungry and give the thirsty to drink.
Clothe the naked, and shelter the homeless.
Visit the sick, bury the dead and comfort the mourner.
Support the widow and instruct the fatherless.
Ransom the captive.
Make garments for the orphan and provide for the betrothed maiden.

When we stop to think that this code is many hundreds of years old and was taught in the ancient synagogues of Jerusalem, it indicates what a high calling the women of God have always had.

UNCERTAINTY IN CHRISTIAN WORLD

The modern Christian world is confronted with two conditions which seem to be little realized. The first is the inner uncertainty of Christianity itself which does not seem to know its own basic beliefs. The Christian world is confused as to just what Jesus of Nazareth taught.

Then there is the upsurge of communism, a power that has come into our own midst greater than we realize.

No movement in history has achieved so sudden an actualization as a world movement. Systems only grow as they appeal to people. Communism will continue to grow until the people are confronted with and taught the fundamentals of Christianity which are creatively worked out in human society.

We know that the gospel of Jesus Christ is comprehensive and all-embracing, including all the values of religion as they reveal themselves in human experience. It is purifying and refining, correcting the excesses and rejecting the abuses, which have corrupted the nature and obstructed the pathway of religion throughout its history. The gospel of Jesus Christ is distinctively and definitely revelatory, fulfilling the largest meaning and possibility of revelation. It makes due place for all the human interests that constitute the spiritual life of man. It is quite true that the Christian world has lost the path. And the reason for this is that it has not the inner vigor to command a place of commanding power. The religion of Jesus Christ requires revelation—revelation to chosen prophets, who teach the principles of the redemption of mankind. Within the Christian doctrine is the principle and potency of redemption.

HIGHEST CONCEPTS OF FREEDOM

The faith we have in our government of the United States is of the highest concept, for to us, it is a sacred institution because of the directive power of God that brought it into existence. The government of the United States is an outgrowth of the highest concepts of freedom for mankind that the world has learned in history. Reverting to the simple beginnings of the founders of America, we know them to have been of the finest blood of England, and other countries of Europe. They brought hither in their little ships, not money, not merchandise, no array of armed force, but they came freighted with religion, learning, and law. They stepped forth upon these shores and a howling wilderness received them. Strong in their faith in God and their own heroic patience, they began their combat with danger and hardship. Sickness at times smote them, but they fainted not; famine overtook them, but they feasted on roots with a patient spirit. They began to build a house for God, and then for themselves. They established education and the observance of a stern and august morality, then legislated for the smaller purposes of wealth and convenience. They gave their sons to God, and through virtue to the state. So they laid their foundations. Villages grew, churches and colleges were built, and farther into the depths of the wilderness industry multiplied her hands. Civic life and order completed themselves and swelled into the majesty of states. Herein is a resume of our own state's history. Utah was founded in sublime hopes and the ideals of a pure morality. And the higher life was combined with agriculture and all industry—making the soil bring forth food for man. Combined with all this was a taste for learning. This state was grounded in religion, for religion was incorporated in the principles and feelings of the people. This is what gave us our morals and true public enthusiasms, and our inspired ways of living.

OBEDIENCE TO LAW IS LIBERTY

There is a principle that is often misunderstood, and that is what we call obedience. It is a principle that makes life happy and creates within us faith in truth and the results of doing what is right. On the old library of Worcester, Massachusetts, are these words:

Obedience to Law is Liberty.

Obedying laws which we impose upon ourselves, that is, just and righteous laws, laws that are the expressions of right principles, such as discipline of the intellect, the shame of committing a wrong, respect for those in authority, consideration for the poor and needy; veneration for the good; sympathy for the weak: this is true self-discipline. Then one knows what liberty means. Obedience to the laws that express right principles is what makes it a religious duty. It leads to faith in the commandments of God.

For forty years, Moses had not been alone. The care and burden of all the people, the weight of their woe and guilt and death had been upon him continually. He felt at times that the Lord had forsaken him and he had prayed that he might be slain, that God might not see his wretchedness. And then when the march to the Promised Land was over, he heard the voice of the Lord:

Get thee up into this mountain. . . . (Deut. 32:49.)

In his old age the long journey was about to end, and he should see the land that had been his dream. Moses died. But he had come to know the perfect law of liberty through obedience.

MISSIONARY CALLING OF SEVENTIES

Every generation writes its own history. It is not that the past alters, but that we change, and our changed present opens new perspectives, and raises new questions. The gospel as revealed to the servants of God will always remain the same and constant. You seventies who are the missionaries of the Church, are called to go forth to teach the world as your forebears were called years ago. The gospel has a worldwide mission. Like Paul, the Church cannot do other than exclaim:

. . . woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel! (I Cor 9:16.)

I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. (Romans 1:14.)

You are to give freely that which you have freely received. You have fine ideals; you have trained yourselves to think and act as your Redeemer would have you think and act. Remember you are members of a quorum of the priesthood of God, and your organization is a pure democracy. For this reason alone, you understand the meaning of good government.

IDEALS OF SERMON ON THE MOUNT

When Jesus called the Twelve and the Seventy to go forth to preach the gospel, he had the disciples assemble on the shores of the Lake of Galilee, and listen to his "Sermon on the Mount," which was the Master's ordination sermon. Think of what was expected of the disciples of Jesus, for the same ideals are expected of us. Standing as missionaries today, can we not in our imagination hear the Master?

Missionaries go forth with the deep knowledge of the precepts of God, and it is by following the precepts that belief in God is shown. If we believe in him, we shall keep his commandments; and the great commandment is that we shall love one another. How simple are all the doctrines, simple because all great truths are simple. It was the Prophet Isaiah who wrote:

Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. (Isaiah 1:16, 17.)

The precepts of the Sermon on the Mount with the words of Isaiah that we should cease to do evil and learn to do well, not to our brethren and fellow-citizens only, but to all mankind will ever be a guide to our lives.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I humbly ask for an interest in your faith and prayers this morning as I stand before you on this rare and delightful occasion. It is truly an inspiration to see the priesthood sitting before us with other members of the Church in this great and historic building.

INDIAN GROUPS VISITED

Since the last conference it has been my privilege to visit many of the tribes of Indians and spend some time down in Mexico among others of the Lamanites. In Mexico I found many pureblood Indians who are living the gospel of Jesus Christ. They are in organized branches. There was the Aztec group down south of Popocatepetl Volcano. I found them dancing the Gold and Green Ball, though generally they go barefooted. I found them in Mutual activities of all kinds, singing temple anthems, dancing, dramatizing, and doing many of the things which we do here at home. And it became my hope that such might be the privilege of all of the Indians or Lamanites, everywhere in the world, and that the Church blessings might be brought to them.

RESPONSIBILITY TO PREACH GOSPEL TO LAMANITES

I realize that the responsibility is ours to bring the gospel with all its progress and culture to the Indian. No other people in the world have the program to give to them, and so it is up to us to do this. As we realize this, our great responsibility, we remember the scripture which says,

First Day

. . . I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father to them. . . . (II Nephi 10:18.)

One of the very first revelations to the Church in this last dispensation came through the Prophet Joseph Smith to Oliver Cowdery, and he said:

. . . behold, I say unto you that you shall go unto the Lamanites and preach my gospel unto them; and inasmuch as they receive thy teachings thou shalt cause my church to be established among them, . . . (D. & C. 28:8.)

We have now, a stake in Hawaii, the membership of which is largely Lehtes. We have branches of the Church in Spanish-America and in the islands of the sea in great numbers. We now have an Indian branch in South Carolina. We have Indian wards in the Malad Stake and in the Maricopa Stake. But our responsibility has not yet been met, for we have some sixty million people in these Americas who have some of the blood of Israel in their veins and who must hear the gospel.

DESTINY OF THE CHURCH

The Prophet Joseph Smith is quoted by President Wilford Woodruff in referring to this important matter. May I quote his words. The Prophet was talking to a group of the priesthood, and he said:

Brethren . . . you know no more concerning the destinies of this church and kingdom than a babe upon its mother's lap. You don't comprehend it. . . .

It is only a handful of priesthood you see here tonight, but this church will fill North and South America—it will fill the world.

It will fill the Rocky Mountains. There will be tens of thousands of Latter-day Saints who will be gathered in the Rocky Mountains, and there they will open the door for the establishing of the gospel among the Lamanites, who will receive the gospel and their endowments and the blessings of God. (Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, pp. 38, 39.)

Then in Second Nephi we have this:

And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers. (II Nephi 30:5.)

I am sure that the consummation of the work of the kingdom of God in this dispensation cannot be realized without this important feature of the restitution of all things.

In Third Nephi the Lord has inspired his prophet to say this:

And then shall the work of the Father commence at that day, even when this gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people. Verily I say unto you, at that day shall the work of the Father commence among all the dispersed of my people, yea, even the tribes which have been lost, . . . (III Nephi 21:26.)

HISTORY OF INDIAN CONVERSIONS

It has been said that the gospel would be preached and that nations would be "born in a day." There was a period back in 1875-6 when there were great numbers of Indians who came into the Church. There was Chief Poko-Tel-Lo from the Snake River, who, with his entire band, was baptized into the Church, and they left Salt Lake City going back to their homes determined to refrain from all evil practices. The old chief said that the other Indians were interested, and there would be many who would be baptized. There were fifty from the north who came down. Chief Alma with twenty-two of his people from the Salmon River country came down and were baptized into the Church. The chief made the prediction that there would be hundreds and thousands of the Indians come into the Church. Orson Pratt baptized fifty-two and blessed nine papooses down at Mount Pleasant in June of that year. In July there were eighty-five of Kanosh's band who were baptized into the Church, and the following year there were forty-one men and thirty-nine women, Indians, baptized down at Kanab. It seems that there were a great many baptisms also up in the Malad country. I quote from The Deseret News of July 22, 1875:

. . . Yesterday we met with Brother G. W. Hill, who has charge of a colony of several hundred Indians, mostly of the Shoshone, Bannock, and Pah Ute tribes. They are Indians who have come forward and demanded to be baptized. The location is in Malad Valley, Idaho Territory. . . . They declare their intention to wander about no more, but to lead industrious lives, at peace with all their fellow creatures, refraining from stealing and from all manner of bad practices, and abide by the conditions of their baptism, which are that they shall cease every species of wrongdoing. Elder Hill has baptized about three hundred since last spring.

And then it was stated that these Indians had already shown their good faith. They were all blessing their food; they were having their family prayers; and they were attending their regular Sabbath meetings.

MISSIONS SERVING THE LAMANITES

In 1943 the Church organized the Navajo-Zuni Mission to look after the Indians in that area. This year the mission has been enlarged to include all of the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico and in the little strip in the southern part of Utah and Colorado. It is a full-time mission now. We are buying a mission home in Gallup, New Mexico, which will be the headquarters. And now young missionaries, elders and lady missionaries, are being called to this mission as the other missions in the Church.

This year the Uruguayan Mission has been opened, and today with that mission and Brazil and Argentina, we have in South America 169 missionaries working among the Lamanites. This, of course, is in fulfilment of the dreams of the brethren and particularly the promise and prayer of Elder Melvin J. Ballard when on the 25th of December in 1925 he stood on the banks of El Rio de La Plata at Buenos Aires, and under the weeping willow trees there, blessed South America. He said this, among other things:

Friday, October 3

. . . I turn the key, unlock, and open the door for the preaching of the gospel in all these South American nations, and rebuke, and command to be stayed, every power that would oppose the preaching of the gospel in these lands. And we do bless and dedicate these nations, and this land for the preaching of the gospel. . . . (The Improvement Era, April, 1926, pp. 575, 576.)

And in the last three months two new fields have been opened. Mexican missionaries from the Mexican Mission have been sent into Guatemala and Costa Rica, and the work is going forward with the approval and hearty response, it seems, of the leading authorities of those nations.

We have the Mexican Mission, the Spanish-American Mission and the Navajo-Zuni Mission here in the United States and Mexico, in addition to all the program in the isles of the sea. The work in the stakes is going forward. There are Indians in many of the stakes here in the West, and the stake presidents are looking after the proselyting of these Indians within their boundaries, especially in the Blackfoot, Roosevelt, Sevier, Parowan, and other stakes.

We are glad of the work that has been renewed in the missions of the Church, especially here in North America. In Canada some very splendid work is being done in the Six-Nations Reservation over near Brantford, Ontario, and in central Canada there are two large reservations, the "Carry the Kettle" Reservation and the Piapot, where President Ivins recently visited, and between 175 and 200 Indians came and attended his meetings. Those were the largest meetings, I understand, in his entire mission visit in western Canada.

We have the Ponca and the Sioux Indians who are showing interest in Nebraska, and the Shoshones and the Arapahoes in Wyoming. We are doing work in the Rogue River, the Tule Rivers, and the Rancho Rio reservations in northern California, and the Menominee Reservation in the Northern States Mission. We have the Iroquois and the Catteraugas in New York, and it will be remembered that in 1830 when Oliver Cowdery began his missionary service among the Lamanites, that those were the first Indians to be visited in this dispensation. Today young elders are on motor bikes going out into the scattered areas and visiting the Indians, and are receiving a very warm welcome. The Cherokees in the East Central States Mission are interested. Their chief, Armichain, has indicated a great deal of helpfulness.

I would like to quote just a paragraph from a letter from one who has indicated intense interest and been most helpful.

. . . I drove . . . with one of my Indian friends, Charles Crow, to Asheville, and met the lady missionaries and the elders there . . . he was much impressed by them. . . . We administered to one of the elders who was ill, Charles Crow witnessing the ordinance. . . . He later told me that [that] was taught in the Bible, and we were the first people he ever knew of that used it. When I had my prayers that evening I knelt beside him. . . . Before I had finished he put his arm on my shoulder and said, Elder Stokes, pray that I some day may also have such a testimony and a prayer in my heart.

It was my privilege at Malad Stake recently to see a large number of our Indian members of the Church. One of the sisters bore a wonderful testimony in the conference, and one of the old men dismissed the conference. He was one of those original three hundred baptized way back in 1875 by Brother Hill. He was deaf, but he offered a very fine prayer.

INTEREST IN LAMANITES INCREASING

I believe that the interest generally is spreading and increasing and that we are on the dawn of a great day for the Lamanite people. Visiting the Mexican Mission in May I found of the seventy-one missionaries, fifteen of them were Lamanites, and I also found the young American missionaries were vying with each other to see who could be the companions of these Mexican and Indian missionaries because they were so efficient.

There have been baptisms by the hundreds. Some of the most recent ones were twenty baptisms in the Roosevelt Stake within the past few weeks. There were four at Sand Hills, Arizona. There were forty-one baptized in Mexico City in one day while I was there, and I witnessed their baptism. And then there were hundreds, many hundreds who have come back into fellowship in the Church in Mexico through the good graces of President George Albert Smith, President Arwell L. Pierce, and others who made contributions toward that great accomplishment.

We have had schools in Mexico, in Hawaii, Tonga, and New Zealand. And so we are looking forward to a new day in schooling where our Lamanites may receive many of the advantages that our own children have.

A year ago we established down in Blanding, Utah, a small school, somewhat as an experiment. It has been very successful. With an outlay of only $1,500 total, we have built and equipped a two-room schoolhouse there under the direction of Brother Albert R. Lyman, who has done a glorious work. There have been many donations of all kinds, in materials, in food, in clothing. For the first year they fed these little Indian children, twenty-seven of them, a warm midday meal, clothed them, and taught them not only the three R's but the gospel. It has been very successful, and we are delighted with the prospects that are ahead of us for the second year now which is beginning. I visited this school last year when it was in session. I noticed that three of the Indian women came, one of whom had five children, four in the school and one in the cradle upon her back. She sat at the sewing machine all day long in one corner of the larger schoolroom, and frequently we would see her going over to one of the little desks, kneeling down beside it to help her children to learn, and to impress upon them the importance of taking advantage of this unusual opportunity which many thousands of little boys and girls should, but do not have.

The 1946 report of the missions discloses the fact, that among the Lamanites there are six times as many converts for each missionary, as in all the other missions of the world, and there are twenty times as many converts for each missionary in the Lamanite missions as in some of the missions in Canada and the United States.

STORY OF POLACCA FAMILY

I had a letter the other day from a Tewa Indian in the Sand Hills of Arizona. His name is Vinton Polacca. He is the son of one Tom Polacca, who was baptized many years ago by Jacob Hamblin or his contemporaries. And then it seemed that there were many decades when there were no missionaries in the area to give them help and courage. But Tom Polacca went on with his work, and he taught his children the Book of Mormon stories, and promised them that though it would be slow, the Church would come back again to them. Vinton and his wife, Fanny, were baptized a few years ago at Snowflake, Arizona. They spoke in the meeting-house. They were entertained in the homes of the whites, and they were feted and banqueted as brothers and sisters. The story of the conversion of this man is most interesting.

He was walking through the little community one day near the store out near the Second Mesa in that sparsely inhabited area in northern Arizona. He heard a missionary talking to some Indians near his car. He listened a moment. It sounded like the things his father had told him those many, many years before, and when the missionary entered his car to go off some little distance to eat his lunch, this man who had started out to get his horse, and had his bridle on his arm, climbed on the side of the car, and they went some little distance and found a place to sit down. Neither the horse was caught nor the lunch eaten because this man became so involved in his learning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And so he and his wife were baptized some little time later.

Let me quote from his letter a few paragraphs of which I believe will interest you. Brother Vinton is a young man in his forties with a splendid Indian family, part of whom we baptized recently. We held a testimony meeting with them in their own little home, away out in the sand hills, and I think it was the first testimony meeting they had attended and the first sacrament they had ever received. He was a priest, and I helped him to administer to the sacrament. His letter reads in part as follows:

... We are here at Keams Canyon School now. I am back to work in the bakery again. I sure like to be with so many little children . . . and I always wonder if all these young souls could only know the true gospel, it will be a great help to our tribe. Yes. We always talk about your nice visit to us at Sand Hills. There isn't very much to see up there, but I think that my father has been led by a great spirit, to find a spring and a good home, and have more freedom to pray to his true God. I could see him when I shut my eyes, kneeling down on top of those sand hills and praying to our Great Father in heaven. . . . I surely would like to talk and tell the people all about my father's conversion, how he fine the true gospel. . . .

My father was telling me a story at the sheep camp by a fireplace in the winter as we were setting by a fireplace, while he was sewing my sheepskin over shoes, he said, "My beloved Son, you are the youngest son of mine. I'll tell you a story about my life and other people. You must remember this and try to live up to it. But remember, Son, this is not for yourself. As I have said before, there are other people who cannot see and hear. If you live right and pray you might lead them and tell them about it. Give them a drink when they ask for it. Yes, Son, I have travel a lots of time out in the country. Far off to the other tribe to trade our goods. Many times I have gone alone out in the wilderness, where there is no roads or where to fine the spring and food when I need it. Oh my Son you must listen good. Our great spirit Father in heaven is guiding me. I pray when I am thirsty, I pray when I am lost and when I need food I pray. All are answer when you believe in him. You don't know yet Son, what I am talking about. But you must remember and pray for it, you'll fine it. The right one will come to you and you'll know it, my Son.

"There will be lots of white people. They will all look alike when you see them, all white. But, my Son, there heart is not alike, so you must be very careful in finding the right one. I have fine the true gospel so you must try and fine the same one my Son, the Mormons. They got the true record of our people. But they are coming slow. But they will be here. You'll see them and hear them when they come. You'll know them by name (Mormon) so my Son, wait for the Mormons. They got the true gospel of our great spirit Father in heaven. Pray for it so you'll fine the right one."

At his death bed I was setting beside his bed and he hold out his hands and said, "My Son, I am leaving you. Remember what I have told you. Wait for the Mormon. Look, Son, there is the man coming down to take me home. Look. There is the cross above me. Be a good boy, Son, be brave and be true to our true living God. Good-bye," And he is gone.

Oh yes, he told me that he first meet the missionaries around Tuba City and later on he said they went up to Salt Lake City to buy a horse with his brother, and thats the time he said he was been baptized. He did not said where he was been baptized. Only name that I remember was Jacob.

And then Vinton tells his own little story, briefly:

When I was about eight years old I start to heard sheep, and from that time on I have learned lots about God's work. I was a lonely boy. My brothers and sisters were big. When my father died in 1911 I was left alone with my mother, and she also encourage me to remember my father's last words—told me to live right and pray morning and evening so I keep it up. But sometimes I think of myself if I was worth to God, then with a humble heart I look toward east where Sun rises. I would then think of the day that would come for me to meet the right true gospel. In 1913 I was able to read and write. I went to Baptizes [Baptist] Church. I got hold of the Holy Bible and I sure did study it. But still it was not enough of the story that my father had told me. In my mind (the Mormons) so in 1915 I went to Santa Fe to school and there I found out about the Catlices [Catholics] I sure want to go to there church so I did and I have found that it was not the kind that my father had told me about it, so that Sunday night I ask our God what to do. I though [thought] that I was lost. The next week Sunday they told me to go to church, but I stand alone there in the hole [whole] crowd. I don't know which way to go, so I did not go to church for about a month. The school boy use to call me divil [devil] because I didn't want to go to church. . . .

Friday, October 3

I have waited about 20 years before I have found the true gospel. . . . Well, brother, I'll try and tell you . . . all about my father's life . . . and also my own hard traveling and looking for the true gospel which at last I have fine, and now I am feeling very happy. . . .

I wish I would be up there with you during the general conference. Well, we all send our love to our brothers and sisters. We remain as true to gospel.

From Polacca family
Vinton L. Polacca.

LAMANITES TO BE "WHITE AND DELIGHTSOME"

Brothers and sisters, in conclusion may I say that we owe a great debt to these people, which we can only pay by giving to them the gospel and the many advantages and opportunities which we enjoy. They are a warmhearted and devoted people. They believe without skepticism. They have a simple, childlike faith which admits of no cheap rationalization.

The Lamanites must rise in majesty and power. We must look forward to the day when they will be "white and delightsome," sharing the freedoms and blessings which we enjoy; when they shall have economic security, culture, refinement, and education; when they shall be operating farms and businesses and industries and shall be occupied in the professions and in teaching; when they shall be organized into wards and stakes of Zion, furnishing much of their own leadership; when they shall build and occupy and fill the temples, and serve in them as the natives are now serving in the Hawaiian Temple where I found last year the entire service conducted by them and done perfectly. And in the day when their prophet shall come, one shall rise

. . . mighty among them . . . being an instrument in the hands of God, with exceeding faith, to work mighty wonders. . . . (II Nephi 3:24.)

Brothers and sisters, the florescence of the Lamanites is in our hands. May we not fail them, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I pray for the inspiration of our Heavenly Father during the few moments that I shall occupy this morning.

As I have looked into the faces of this great congregation and contemplated the other thousands to whom the message of this conference has been directed, I have had this question in my mind: From what kind of homes have we come this morning? How many of us knelt in family prayer before leaving to come to conference or to go to our various fields of endeavor? Do we come from homes where there is a spirit of love and unity—where there is the spirit of the gospel? Do we come from true Latter-day Saint homes?

THE HOME A DIVINE INSTITUTION

The Lord has implanted in every breast a desire for mating and home-building. The intimate associations of husband and wife, parents and children are among the sweetest and most soul-satisfying experienced in this life. The desire for home and family is a strong and natural impulse. What sweet memories surge up in our hearts at the mere mention of mother, father, brothers and sisters, home and family! The Lord has designed it so. The family is a divine institution established by our Heavenly Father. It is basic to civilization and particularly to Christian civilization. The establishment of a home is not only a privilege, but marriage and the bearing, rearing, and proper training of children is a duty of the highest order.

To Latter-day Saints the first and great commandment is a stern reality, second to none in importance. No one capable of performing this sacred duty is exempt, no matter what his station in life. Marriage, home, and family are established by God as part of his divine plan for the blessing of his children. The richest blessings and deepest joys of this life and the life to come are tied up with the performance of these sacred duties. In fact, our very exaltation in the celestial kingdom is directly related to the family and the eternity of the marriage covenant.

THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN

There are many people today in the Christian world, and possibly even among Latter-day Saints, who feel that they have done their duty when they have provided food, shelter, clothing, secular education, and accumulated wealth which their children will inherit later. However, this is not enough. According to the revelations which the Lord has given, it is not sufficient to provide all of these and even to send our children to Sunday School, to Primary, and to the Mutual Improvement Associations. There is still much to be done.

OBLIGATION OF PARENTS

The Church had only been organized a very short time when the Lord spoke regarding the important obligation of parents in the training of their children. May I read a few words from the Doctrine and Covenants, oftentimes quoted:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents. (D. & C. 68:25.)

The obligation to teach the principles of the gospel to the youth of Zion rests squarely upon the parents of the Church. Not only is there an obligation to teach these principles, but the Lord says further in this same revelation:

And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands. (Ibid., 68:27.)

It is an obligation of parents to see that these sacred ordinances are performed after the children have been properly taught. It is not the prerogative of parents to permit their children to grow up and choose for themselves. It is their duty and obligation to train them when they are yet young, and to see that these important ordinances are performed in their behalf.

In this same revelation the Lord indicates that it is the responsibility of parents to teach their children to pray. This does not mean secret prayers only. I am sure it means to teach by example through family prayers. We need the sanctifying influence which comes from devotion in the home—prayer as a family. The Lord indicates further that they should keep the Sabbath day holy, that they should remember their labors, that there should be no idleness, and he speaks very clearly regarding the matter of children growing up in idleness, for he says:

Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness. These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them; . . . (Ibid., 68:31, 32.)

This revelation given in Ohio something over a year after the Church was organized was also carried by Oliver Cowdery to the Saints in Zion by command of the Lord.

NO PARENT EXEMPT FROM RESPONSIBILITIES

We find also in the revelations that the Lord makes it very clear that no one is exempt from this obligation of properly training his children. I wish, my brethren and sisters, that as parents, we could merit the commendation which the Lord directed to Father Abraham in these words:

For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, . . . (Genesis 18:19.)

If we could only merit that word of approval as husbands and fathers and as wives and mothers in Zion, what a glorious thing it would be!

The Lord also makes it clear, in one of the other revelations, that he expects men in positions of leadership to discharge this sacred obligation, and that when men are called to be bishops, presidents of stakes, or members of the General Authorities, this obligation does not cease. No matter how heavy the burden we are called upon to bear, no matter how great the activity, this obligation continues. In the Doctrine and Covenants, he tells of the contrast between the two powers that are at work in the universe, the power of evil and the power of truth and light.

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth. Light and truth forsake that evil one. (D. & C. 93: 36, 37.)

And then he points out, that the . . . wicked one cometh and taketh away light and truth, through disobedience, from the children of men. . . . But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth. (Ibid., 93:39, 40.)

Then he refers to some of the leaders of the Church. He calls them his friends, and he chastizes them in the spirit of friendliness and love. He refers first to Frederick G. Williams who had recently been called into the highest council in the Church:

But verily I say unto you, my servant Frederick G. Williams, you have continued under this condemnation; You have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments; . . . And now a commandment I give unto you—if you will be delivered you shall set in order your own house, for there are many things that are not right in your house. (Ibid., 93:41-43.)

And of Sidney Rigdon in similar vein:

. . . that in some things he hath not kept the commandments concerning his children; therefore, first set in order thy house. (Ibid., 93:44.)

And then even to the Prophet Joseph:

And now, verily I say unto Joseph Smith, Jun.—You have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord; Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place. (Ibid., 93:47, 48.)

Then the Lord also comments regarding Newel K. Whitney, a bishop in the Church, and adds this as though to include us all:

What I say unto one I say unto all. . . . (Ibid., 93:49.)

GENERAL CONFERENCE

HOME EVENING INAUGURATED

This is a serious obligation, my brethren and sisters. Down through the years the First Presidency of the Church and other leaders have counseled and have admonished us regarding the sacred obligation of parenthood and the teaching of children in the home. It was during the ministry of President Joseph F. Smith that a new project was organized and announced in the Church, and a letter directed to presidents of stakes, bishops of wards, and parents in Zion from which I quote the following:

. . . we advise and urge the inauguration of a "Home Evening" throughout the Church, at which time fathers and mothers may gather their boys and girls about them in the home and teach them the word of the Lord. . . . (The Improvement Era, June 1915, p. 733.)

And then the First Presidency made, in that same letter, one of the greatest promises that has ever been made to parents in Israel, as follows:

If the Saints obey this counsel, we promise that great blessings will result. Love at home and obedience to parents will increase. Faith will be developed in the hearts of the youth of Israel, and they will gain power to combat the evil influences and temptations which beset them. (Ibid., p. 734.)

Shortly thereafter the Mutual Improvement Associations, with the approval of the First Presidency, used as their slogan, "We stand for a weekly home evening."

Subsequently, President Heber J. Grant reaffirmed the instructions previously given and officially endorsed the holding of a family hour in the home as an effective means through which the gospel might be taught to our children and the bonds of love and affection strengthened between parents and children. And then on January 4, 1936, the First Presidency said further:

As an aid to parents in discharging this most sacred obligation and duty there has been established . . . a "Home Evening" at which time parents and children gather around the family hearth in social and religious communion. In this day when socials, parties, dinners, business interests, etc., all tend to lead away from home associations the adoption of a Home Evening is highly advisable. It furnishes an opportunity for the parents to become better acquainted with their children and for children to know and appreciate their parents. . . .

We commend the wards and the stakes that are making special efforts to make home life what it should be—a haven of peace, in which faith in God, respect and deference for one another and loyalty for truth and righteousness are pervading virtues. (Claude Richards, Home Evening Handbook, pp. 2, 3.)

REVIVAL OF HOME EVENING

During the past few months, the Council of the Twelve, under the direction of the First Presidency, has given further consideration to the powerful influences which tend to destroy the home and weaken the relationship between parents and children. As a result, a letter has been directed by President George F. Richards to presidents of stakes and bishops of wards recommending a revival and further motivation of this project inaugurated under the leadership of President Joseph F. Smith many years ago. The Council has called to its aid the Presiding Bishopric, heads of the Church auxiliaries and of course the local priesthood in the stakes and the wards. A major responsibility has been delegated to the Relief Society, and through this great organization of women—mothers in Israel—those who play such an important part in the training of our children—has been given the responsibility for the preparation of certain materials, as helps to parents. This material will be carried into the homes by the Relief Society teachers and the ward teachers. There will be talks and demonstrations as a means of stimulating interest in this worthwhile project.

And so, my brethren and sisters, this morning may I appeal to you to give attention to this project as it is inaugurated and sponsored by these agencies mentioned.

There can be no genuine happiness separate and apart from the home. The sweetest influences and associations of life are there. We cannot be successful no matter what goals we attain in the material world, no matter what honors of men come to us; we will not be successful in our lives if we fail as fathers and as mothers. May we have no regrets. May we heed the counsel that has been given us. May we realize that even in this great land of America, endowed so richly as President Smith mentioned this morning, there can be no enduring prosperity and happiness in non-religious homes. The integrity of the home must be maintained. The spiritual foundation of our homes must be strengthened. Our homes must receive more attention; otherwise the outcome will be disappointing to all of us. More recreation and more devotion in the home will result in greater family solidarity. This is a great obligation. Our happiness here and hereafter is tied up with our successful discharge of this great responsibility. It merits, my brethren and sisters, our prayerful planning and attention, and I am confident in my own heart that great dividends will result, that great joy and satisfaction will come if we heed this as all other counsels given to us by the Presidency of the Church. And I promise you, as your humble servant this morning, that if you will obey this counsel as parents in Zion, love at home and obedience to parents will increase; faith will be developed in the hearts of the youth of Israel, and they will gain power and strength to combat the evil influences and temptations which beset them, which I pray for on behalf of the homes of Israel, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing "Praise the Lord, Ye Heavens Adore Him"—(Handel).

The closing prayer will be offered by President Oscar J. Harline of the Grant Stake, Salt Lake City, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The afternoon session will be broadcast as indicated this morning. The audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before two o'clock this afternoon.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang "Praise The Lord, Ye Heavens Adore Him."

President Oscar J. Harline of the Grant Stake offered the closing prayer, after which the Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

FIRST DAY*AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2 o'clock p.m.

President George Albert Smith presided and at his request President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

President George Albert Smith:

President Clark will conduct the services this afternoon.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr:

This is the second session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young of the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and, by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, and KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The Choir singing of this session will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Central Utah Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen will conduct their singing; Elder Frank W. Asper will be at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Relief Society Singing Mothers rendering "The Lord Is My Light"—(Allitsen).

The opening prayer will be offered by President Joseph I. Williams of the Woodruff Stake, Evanston, Wyoming.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

During the few minutes allotted to me in this conference, I desire to give brief consideration to a problem that is arousing more and more attention among those thinking people of America who are deeply concerned with their moral and spiritual welfare. I refer to the liquor problem—one of the most challenging and difficult of all unsolved internal problems that face the country today, a problem of major importance. Of course the point of view from which I shall look at this problem is that given me by the moral teachings and standards of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Yet I hasten to say that in respect to the liquor problem the teachings and standards of multitudes of people in other churches and organizations are similar to our own. Some of them recognize as clearly and keenly as we do that drinking is an evil that all good, right-thinking people should unite to eliminate.

USE OF ALCOHOL DESTRUCTIVE

I use the word "drinking," as meaning the imbibing of a liquid containing alcohol, which is a definite chemical compound, once described by the Journal of the American Medical Association as ... a poison inherently, absolutely, essentially; in a drop or in a gallon, in all quantities and in every quantity. Plainly its quantity cannot affect its chemical constitution.

And when drunk, what does alcohol do? In the language of the late Robert G. Ingersoll:

... alcohol burns up men, consumes women, destroys life, curses God, and despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, defiles the jury box, and stains the judicial ermine. It bribes voters, corrupts elections, endangers the government, degrades the citizen, debases the legislature, dishonors the statesman. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness. It destroys peace and ruins morals; it murders the soul; it is the father of all crime, the mother of all abominations, the devil's best friend.

In the language of the First Presidency of the Church:

Drink brings cruelty into the home; it walks arm in arm with poverty; its companions are disease and plague; it puts chastity to flight; it knows neither honor nor fair dealing; it is a total stranger to truth; it drowns conscience; it is the bodyguard of evil; it curses all who touch it. Drink has brought more woe and misery, broken more hearts, wrecked more homes, committed more crimes, filled more coffins than all the wars the world has suffered.

It is involved in more traffic accidents and fatalities, and sends more patients to mental hospitals than any other single factor.

BILLIONS OF DOLLARS WASTED

Yet notwithstanding these facts, which warrant a bitter arraignment of alcohol, there are an estimated one hundred million Americans over fifteen years of age, fifty million of whom drink more or less regularly. According to the United States Department of Commerce these people spent for alcoholic beverages during 1946 nearly nine billion dollars ($8,770,000,000). This is more than was spent during the same period for all types of public and private schools including school and university libraries, and for state and federal government services in the fields of health, welfare, old age assistance, etc.

Of the fifty million drinkers, it is estimated that three million drink excessively, that is, are alcoholics—people who have measurably lost control of their drinking. They have acquired the disease of alcoholism, as it is termed by the experts. One who suffered from this disease—Mrs. Marty Mann, now executive director of the National Committee for Education on Alcoholism—said in her Columbia Broadcasting System broadcast last December:

These were the most painful years of my life. I suffered constantly, not just one kind of pain, but all kinds of pain. I suffered physically, mentally, emotionally, financially, and socially—in every department of my life. I tell you, honestly, and on behalf of those three million human beings, that alcoholism is the most painful disease known to man.

LECTURES ON "YOU AND ALCOHOL"

Some of you may remember that several months ago the Columbia Broadcasting System carried over its network thirteen lectures entitled "You and Alcohol," described as

A series of broadcasts examining the problem of alcoholic consumption in the United States and its effect upon our people and our institutions, delivered on Tuesday nights, beginning November 12, 1946.

The preface to these lectures said:

Since alcohol touches the lives of large numbers of people, it seemed logical to Columbia to consider it a problem in which radio's special and unique functions could be usefully employed to translate the problem into plain, arresting terms and to bring it directly to the attention of millions of listeners.

Each of the thirteen speakers was considered an expert on the phase of the subject of which he spoke. I have just quoted one of the speakers. Nine of the others were doctors in various fields of research—medicine, neurology, psychology, sociology, psychiatry. Seemingly they all agreed with Mrs. Mann—as do medical experts generally—that alcoholism is a disease, as certainly as pneumonia, tuberculosis, and cancer are diseases, and should be treated as such. One of these speakers, Dr. Lyman C. Duryea, wrote:

As a physician, I am concerned about those people who drink to excess and cannot control their drinking [alcoholics]. These people need medical care. . . . They are sick people.

ALCOHOLISM A DISEASE

The alcoholic (compulsive drinker, Dr. Duryea calls him) finds it absolutely impossible to drink in moderation. This means all alcoholic beverages, as well as medicines, or anything else containing alcohol. Complete abstinence is his only salvation. The person with an alcohol problem must remember that he is a sick person and that never again can he take a drink "of anything that contains alcohol." So, let us admit that alcoholism is a disease. However, there is one peculiarity about the disease—it is never acquired by anyone who does not take his first drink. This is a fact. Let everyone remember it.

As just stated, according to accepted figures, fifty million Americans drink. Of this number, three million, one in sixteen—six percent acquire the disease of alcoholism, become sick and in need of treatment. This is more than twice the number afflicted with tuberculosis, we are told. These figures indicate the magnitude of the problem. (I divert to express the opinion that the most certain and by all odds the least expensive treatment for alcoholism is that given by Alcoholics Anonymous, groups of which exist all over America.) I stated that no one ever becomes an alcoholic who does not take his first glass.

But something more can be said. According to the experts on alcohol, no one who begins to drink—be he rich or poor, master or servant, learned or ignorant, can ever know until it is too late, if he continues to drink, whether or not he will get the alcoholic disease. No medical examination can determine this. The change from controlled to uncontrolled drinking occurs suddenly and without warning, so the experts tell us. Thus there are two things to be remembered about this disease of alcoholism: It costs nothing to avoid getting it, and nothing to avoid its recurrence, if once rid of it. Total abstinence is the certain remedy both before and after.

BILL TO PROTECT ADVERTISING OF LIQUOR

And now let us go to another phase of the alcohol problem—that of advertising. On May 12 and 13 of this year (1947) the committee on interstate and foreign commerce of the United States Senate gave a public hearing in Washington, D. C., on Senate Bill 265, by Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, which would prohibit all types of advertising of any kind of alcoholic beverage. The proponents of the bill were able and well prepared and backed by many resolutions of church and other organizations, as well as by thousands of petitions, numerous signed. In supporting the bill Senator Capper said:

The growth and extent of the liquor habit in the United States in the last few years alarms me. We were told preceding repeal, by the advocates of repeal, that the manufacturers and dealers of alcoholic beverages would discourage excessive drinking. Yet in 1946 the national drink bill was nearly nine billion dollars, eighty-nine dollars for every person in the United States over eighteen years old—about one-fourth of the federal budget for the coming year. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the tremendous amount of advertising seeking to whet the appetite for drinking, seeking to create new customers, especially among women and children, has much to do with the greatly increased amount of alcoholic consumption during recent years.

Bishop Wilbur E. Hammaker, of the Methodist Temperance Board, in his testimony said:

Our judges all the way up through the Supreme Court have decided again and again that the liquor business is hurtful to life, is an enemy of the well-being of society and lives only by sufferance. It has no inherent or inalienable rights. . . . Tragedy stalks the liquor business; it is constantly violating the very laws that permit its presence in our midst. Its history is sordid, shameful, slimy, scrofulous, rather than glad, noble, and fine as its ads try to tell us.

In his statement before the committee, Mr. O. G. Christgau, superintendent of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League, among other things, related that Mr. P. S. Dupont, president of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, wrote two years prior to repeal the following:

Advertising is one of the most fruitful means of increasing business and of promoting sales. As it is the policy of this country to reduce sales of liquor, no advertising of any kind should be permitted manufacturers or sellers.

President Roosevelt in proclaiming the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment declared:

The objective we seek through the national policy is the education of every citizen toward a greater temperance throughout the nation.

Compare these statements with the fact that during 1946 more than one hundred million dollars was spent in advertising alcoholic beverages.

Dr. Glen Cunningham, internationally famous some years ago as an athlete and now a university professor, was a witness before the committee. Among his statements were these:

In my work with thousands of young people during the past fifteen years, I have noticed an alarming increase in the number who use alcoholic beverages. Every person, conscious of the startling increase in delinquency among youths, in deaths and injuries from accidents, in murder and rape, in impoverished and broken homes, and in the number of mental diseases, realizes the urgent need for the passage by Congress of Senator Capper's bill. The cost in human misery, maimed bodies and minds, the lost lives, makes it inestimably more important that the advertising of alcoholic beverages which contribute so heavily to these great tragedies, be brought under control.

SUPPORT OF CAPPER BILL URGED

In view of the results that follow the consumption of beverage alcohol, why do the American people tolerate it? I leave the answer to them. In any case, the vast sums spent for widespread, alluring, deceptive advertising have had much to do with it and with greatly increased consumption, especially among women and teen-agers. But may I ask you, the Mormon people, why do you tolerate it? You accept and teach the Word of Wisdom as a divine revelation in which alcoholic drinks are proscribed. Thus it logically follows that Latter-day Saints, if true to their faith, cannot conscientiously indulge in drinking; the informal world knows this. Church members cannot indulge without displeasing God and without losing more or less the respect of their non-Mormon friends, many of whom look upon Mormon drinkers as weaklings or hypocrites.

But may we not with perfect propriety and expectation of favorable response ask all Church and non-Church members who love their fellow men and will work for their best good to do whatever in their power is feasible to reduce the consumption of alcoholic beverages to the smallest attainable limits? As one means to this end let us actively support the Capper Bill and pray that it will become law, thus going far to eliminate every type of beverage alcohol advertising. But this bill will not become law except over the strenuous opposition of the financially powerful liquor industry—an industry that has spent hundreds of millions of dollars and continues to spend vast sums in advertising.

Representative Joseph R. Bryson said at the Senate committee hearing the following:

Advertising shapes our lives and molds the rising generation. We eat, drink, dress, and think according to advertising. Immature youths are particularly impressionable. This advertising comes to us, mainly by press and radio. If the artificially stimulated demand for intoxicants is to be checked, the advertising of liquor must stop. Liquor advertising negates the educational efforts of the home, the school and the church on the dangers of alcohol. How foolish it is to teach youth the dangers of liquor while allowing the stuff to be advertised in the most alluring of terms.

CHURCH FOR TOTAL ABSTINENCE

Again I ask: Why do the Mormon people tolerate the drinking of alcoholic beverages by their members? They all know the Church stands irrevocably for total abstinence. Many answers are given, but perhaps one of the most frequent and basic is that no one may be denied his "free agency"—his right to drink. But I ask, may one be permitted to indulge his free agency when to do so endangers the safety, peace, good, and happiness of others? The answer of our civil laws is no.

Satan the devil, a personal being, is abroad in the land with a multitude of helpers. Back to him stems the source of all sins, crimes, wickedness, and troubles of the human family. Satan's ambition is to handicap the Lord's work. This he tries to do by leading away and using the Father's children in any and every way that brings misery, distress, and destruction to them. Let us resolve to resist him wherever his influence is manifested, as it certainly is in all phases of the liquor problem.

LIQUOR ADVERTISING UNMORAL

In the light of all that can be truthfully said of the effects of consumed alcohol are we not amply justified in declaring that liquor advertising is unmoral and wrong? To encourage and induce human beings, particularly the youth and immature, to destroy themselves is wicked in the sight of God and criminal in the sight of man. As I see it nothing more mild can in truth be said of the vast alcoholic beverage promotion business. Back of it all may be found some of the keenest and ablest minds working, planning, and scheming how to get more and more people to drinking.

Behold, verily, thus saith the Lord unto you: In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation. (D. & C. 89:4.)

Surely Satan is working through these men to the injury and destruction of our fellow men.

Of course many of these people move in respectable and so-called high grade society. But this does not change the fact that their business is damnable and should not be advertised. Traffic in morphine, marijuana, stealing, gambling, prostitution, and many other evils, is not permitted to be advertised. Yet in its evil results does not the liquor traffic outrank any one of these wicked businesses? In justice to youth, the unwary, and people generally, is not the elimination of every variety of liquor advertising the very least we can do in this matter. Let us sincerely and wholeheartedly support the Capper Bill S265.

Brethren and sisters of this Church, by promise and covenant we are obligated to serve God and work for the good of our fellow men. May we be faithful to our obligations, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters, I come before you with deep appreciation and gratitude for my association with you and for my fellowship in the Church. I stand before you in humility, praying that the spirit of the Holy Ghost will guide me while I speak, for I am a great convert to the statement of Nephi that when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost, the power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men. In all my ministry in the Church, I want to speak and act under the influence of that spirit. Without it I think we are less than nothing in this service.

PEACE IN THE MIDST OF TURMOIL

I am very grateful for the peace and quiet that prevail here in this meeting. It seems to me that we are sitting right in the center of a hurricane, as it were. You will remember the report that when the hurricane passed over New Orleans, it spread great havoc for a time, and then of a sudden a calm fell over the scene; the wind and the rain ceased; and the warm sunshine broke through the clearing clouds. For a few moments the city was in the "eye" of the hurricane.

In the world today there is strife and uncertainty all about. But here we enjoy peace. I thought this morning when President Smith was speaking, what a glorious thing it is to enjoy peace in the midst of the turmoil that the world now suffers. One of the reasons why we enjoy this great peace is a result of the attitude in which we come to conference. We did not come here to negotiate and maneuver for position, nor out of our own wisdom to evolve action policies of expediency. We came here to hear eternal principles of truth expounded by men whom God has endowed to expound them.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES OF TRUTH

I am grateful that I know that in the gospel of Jesus Christ there are principles of eternal truth. They are the guide of my living, as I know they are the guide to your living. I am very grateful that the Lord saw fit to give us these principles. I recall, too, that the Lord gave to this great nation some principles which if followed would spare us from much of the confusion in our national councils and our international councils. Those great principles are set forth in two short documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

In the Constitution the Lord set out wise principles for the governing of this great nation. He stated in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith that he brought forth the Constitution of the United States through men whom he raised up for that very purpose.

Under it, a great representative form of government was set up, a republican form of government. If the principles set out in the Constitution of the United States were followed by all men who exercise authority in governments, we would have peace in the earth. This is true because by the inspiration of heaven that Constitution made provision for the best form of political government ever devised for the use of man.

GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH

Now the Lord has set up a form of government in the Church, too. I would like to tell you a little of what I understand that form of government to be. The Lord says that it is a "kingdom." I think he says in one of the revelations that we should pray that the kingdom of God might go forth upon the earth, that the inhabitants thereof may receive it and be prepared to meet the kingdom of heaven when it shall come with the Master at its head. The government of the Church in its operation is quite different from the government of the United States.

In the Church is a democratic principle known as the law of common consent. It was revealed before the Church was organized. I have here an excerpt from the first volume of the Documentary History of the Church, which was written by the Prophet Joseph Smith. He says that in 1829 in the home of Father Whitmer, which was in Seneca County, as you will remember,

... the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ; and that he also should ordain me to the same office; and then to ordain others, as it should be made known unto us from time to time. We were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers or not. (Documentary History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 60, 61.)

PRINCIPLE OF COMMON CONSENT

The Church was not very old before the Lord gave the direction in a revelation that

No person is to be ordained to any office in this church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that church. (D. & C. 20:65.)

In the body of the Church there lies great power. No man can preside over any organized division of the Church without the consent of those over whom he is to preside. That is a power which God has vested in the membership of this Church. Sometimes I think when we raise our hands to sustain the General Authorities, we are not actively alive to that great principle. No one of us, I feel, has a right to raise our hand to sustain any man or woman in a position in the Church if we know that that man or woman is unworthy of the position for which he or she is named.

But the Church membership, however, does not have the power to nominate men and women for office in the Church. That is a distinguishing feature between the civil government, its functioning, and the government of the Church. The authority and the power to propose men and women for office in the Church resides in the presiding authority. The power of approval resides in the membership of the Church.

God, our Eternal Father, appointed the Prophet Joseph Smith to be his prophet, and he was accountable to God, our Eternal Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and not to men. But even so, the membership of the Church could have rejected the Prophet Joseph Smith as the President of the Church. Had they done so, he could not have presided over them. They would, of course, have been apostate had they rejected him, because he never lost the approval of the Lord.

When a member of the Council of the Twelve is to be appointed, as I understand it, the power of nomination resides in the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The people have the right to sustain. That is the way it is, all down through the Church. When a stake is to be organized, the Presidency of this Church sends members of the General Authorities to select and propose to the people the man that is to be sustained, and the people can receive him or reject him by their own vote. That takes politics out of our Church. You never hear of a prospective stake president promising the people that if they will sustain him, he will make a certain man the bishop of a certain ward and another man the bishop of another ward, and this woman the president of Relief Society, and that one the president of the Mutual, and so forth.

LEADERSHIP INSPIRED

The Lord has set up a perfectly safe procedure in placing the power of nomination in the presiding officers, because back of the government of the Church in the earth is the Lord Jesus Christ himself. I believe that when the Presidency of this Church nominates a person for an office, it is not a personal nomination. I have that confidence in the Presidency and that testimony of the divinity of this Church. I believe that the Lord Jesus Christ reveals to them through the spirit of the Holy Ghost the men they should name to office, and I believe that same spirit will inspire and direct the presidents of stakes and the bishops of wards and the heads of other organizations in this Church, if they will live for such inspiration, so that when they name people for office they will name them under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

In addition to the inspiration of the Lord which every person is entitled to, according to his calling, we have revealed and written down in the Doctrine and Covenants and the other Church works, eternal principles of truth to guide us through the world. I think we ought to remember that we have these principles, for this is a day when the doctrine of opportunism is abroad in the world, and when men and women generally act on the principle of expediency. So acting, they move further and further into confusion. In the Church, on the other hand, so long as we follow the principles of the gospel and the proper Church organization procedure, we move into peace, prosperity, and happiness.

I feel that we ought to study these eternal principles. I know that the Lord said we should study all things. We should become learned in the things of this world, study about nations, histories, sciences, and all other things; but the eternal principles of truth by which we are to guide our lives, we are not to learn by the study of things taught by men without the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Remember what the Lord said to the missionaries when he sent them out. He said he did not send them out to be taught; he sent them out to teach the children of men the things which he had put into their hands by the power of his spirit. They were to learn of those things from on high.

MAN RESPONSIBLE FOR HIS ACTS

Now, I think sometimes we get away from these eternal principles of truth. The other day I was in a conference where a man presented in a priesthood meeting the doctrine that the evils of adultery were to be measured by their effect upon the whole group, and that the individual adulterer should not bear the burden of his own act. Some time before that, I heard the doctrine presented that one who lives the Word of Wisdom should not look for an individual blessing according to the promise the Lord gave that "all saints who remember to keep and to do these sayings, . . . shall receive health in their navel" and so forth, but that the probability that the individual would receive such blessings would be increased because of his membership in a group whose standards were higher. Now, I believe that every man will be judged on his own record, and that the adulterer will have to bear personally the judgment for his act, and he will be rewarded according to his act, and I believe as the Lord promised in the first verse of the 93rd section of the Doctrine and Covenants, "that every soul who forsaketh his sins and cometh unto me [God], and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face and know that I am."

I would like to find, when I read the lessons that are to be presented in the classes of the organizations of this Church, an assurance that what is in them was written against the background of the knowledge and understanding of the eternal principles of the gospel, unaffected by the learning and philosophies of men. I think we cannot explain the teachings of Jesus, as they are recorded in the New Testament, in the absence of the light of what the Redeemer himself has said about those teachings in the modern revelations, and I think we need to hold close to these eternal principles. We must learn what they are. If we would spend just a portion of the time we spend reading uninspired writings of men in studying the gospel of Jesus Christ as it is written in the revelations, we would not be deceived as we sometimes are.

God bless us that we may understand who we are and that we have in the gospel eternal principles of truth. May he give us courage and strength to live by them, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, it is with humility that I stand before you to occupy a few moments of your valuable time. At this season of the year and in the year such as we now enjoy, we might very well look back upon our immediate past and ask ourselves the question whether or not the counsel and advice that was given from this stand eleven and a half years ago has yet become a cardinal principle of our lives and of our activities. Have we, all of us, in our homes today a year's supply of the necessities of life? Have we all up-to-date accounted to the Lord for our tithing? Have we fasted during the year and accounted to the bishop for the savings thus effected? Have we contributed as liberally as we might to the fulfilment of the 1947 welfare budget? These are important questions in our lives today, as important, and maybe more so than ever before, and if we have not done this, then we certainly lack the faith and the courage to do what our great leaders have suggested.

TESTIMONY OF WELFARE PROGRAM

I've often had occasion to say as I traveled through the Church in the welfare work that President Grant, when he called me to the general welfare committee, did not ask me if I was converted to this great principle of the Church taking care of its own; he simply told me that I had been called to this work and was expected to go forth and do those things which were necessary to build up this plan among our people. I felt very much impressed this morning with what President Smith said to us about what we see and hear. That is not the important thing. The important thing to you and to me is the thing that we feel, and I am here to tell you today, brethren and sisters, in all humility that there has never been a moment in my life since President Grant called me to this welfare work that I haven't felt well in it and felt that I was doing something that the Lord desired should be done. And so governed by the standards that our prophet has set us here today, it gives me pleasure to bear my testimony to you that there is still great need in the world today and in this Church for this great welfare program.

OPPOSITION OF ADVERSARY

In reading The Life of Brigham Young the other day I came across this passage:

It was revealed to me in the commencement of this Church that the Church would spread, prosper, grow and expand, and that in proportion to the spread of the gospel among the nations of the earth so would the power of Satan rise.

And I have a conviction within me that we have had the power of the adversary made manifest against us in endeavoring to promulgate this welfare program among our people, and I believe that the adversary has used some of his strongest workers to keep you and me from following the advice and the counsel of our leaders as we should have done, and we have not been as diligent in performing these duties that devolve upon us in this welfare plan as we should have been.

If we had maintained the standards of the Church in connection with our welfare work in the last eleven and a half years, we could have blessed the people of Europe many times more than we already have because we would have had many times more than the eighty-three cars that have gone over there to alleviate their suffering. As far as I have been able to determine in our lives, brethren and sisters, if we consider this matter seriously, we have not been imposed upon; we have not suffered. This welfare program has been no burden to us. I want to tell you that those people in this Church who have taken the advice and the counsel of our brethren literally have been blessed.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH DAY

There is another thing that is close to my heart today, and I seem impelled to speak upon it, and that is that the bounties of this earth have been promised to the Latter-day Saints and to all the children of our Heavenly Father if we keep the Sabbath day holy. We certainly have plenty of reason to give this matter consideration in connection with our welfare work. One of the earliest commandments that were given to man was that we should remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy:

Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work:

But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it. (Exodus 20:9-11.)

Brigham Young said on this subject:

Now remember, my brethren, those who go skating, buggy riding or on excursions on the Sabbath day—and there is a great deal of this practised—are weak in the faith. Generally, little by little, the spirit of their religion leaks out of their hearts and their affections, and by and by they begin to see fault in their brethren, faults in the doctrines of the Church, faults in the organization, and at last they leave the Kingdom of God and go to destruction. . . . The Lord has directed his people to rest one-seventh part of the time, and we take the first day of the week, and call it our Sabbath. This is according to the order of the Christians. We should observe this for our own temporal good and spiritual welfare. When we see a farmer in a hurry, that he has to attend to his harvest, and to haying, fence-making, or to gathering his cattle on the Sabbath day, as far as I am concerned, I count him weak in the faith. He has lost the spirit of his religion, more or less. Six days are enough for us to work, and if we wish to play, play within the six days; if we wish to go on excursions, take one of those six days, but on the seventh day, come to the place of worship, attend to the Sacrament, confess your faults one to another and to our God, and pay attention to the ordinances of the house of God. (Discourses of Brigham Young, p. 165.)

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

And there is one other matter on this subject that I would like to read while I am on the subject generally, and that is in the Doctrine and Covenants we are promised that by keeping the Sabbath day holy the fulness of the earth shall be ours, and so I repeat again, that there is a pretty simple formula if we have faith in the work of the Lord. If the fulness of the earth is ours, we'll never have any trouble meeting our welfare budget; we'll never have any trouble taking care of those people who need assistance at our hands. The trouble with us is that we lack the courage to rely implicitly upon the work of God and to do as he has advised us to do.

We are much richer in this Church today than we give ourselves credit for being. There isn't a people upon the earth today who are as rich as we are. Just think of the blessings that are ours, and in what rich abundance we enjoy them. We have faith; we have truth; we have virtue; we have charity; we have humility; we have thrift, industry, ambition, enthusiasm; and, as a result of all of these virtues, my brethren and sisters, we have the necessities of life in the midst of the people in this Church in rich abundance. Now, if we are rich, and I am sure we are, then we should take to heart the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith, revealed to him by our Heavenly Father because he was not speaking as man to man, but he spoke when he uttered these words as the mouthpiece of our Heavenly Father. He said:

Wo unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved!

Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with your own hands!

But blessed are the pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs. (D. & C. 56:16-18.)

Here is another promise of all that we need to accomplish all of God's purposes here upon the earth, temporally as well as spiritually:

For behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice; . . . (Ibid., 19.)

THE SPIRIT OF SERVICE

We have the spirit of contribution, and I am sure that spirit of contribution goes hand in hand, my brethren and sisters, with the spirit of missionary work which we are doing in this Church. Think of it, four thousand missionaries in the field preaching the gospel! I say that this spirit of contribution is with us because what are we doing in our missionary work? We are contributing the knowledge to those to whom we send our missionaries, that we have the gospel of Jesus Christ. It's a spirit of sacrifice; it's a spirit of service; and along with the teachings of the spiritual doctrines that we have been given in this day and age through our prophets go the temporal needs and salvation of our people. And that is what our great welfare program does.

HONOR TO PARENTS

You know there is one other thing that our program does that is certainly praiseworthy. The Apostle Paul when he was speaking to the Ephesians said:

Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

Honour thy father and mother; (which is the first commandment with promise;)

That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth. And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. . . . Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. (Ephesians 6:1-3; 11.)

This great welfare program of ours is calculated to bring father and son, and son and father into that close relationship and communion that Paul would have had exist in the Church his day. And it is just as essential to us today that we should do it. I want to say that tied in with that great principle is the great eternal principle of free agency that all of us prize so highly. We had to have our free agency in the councils in heaven, and through the use of that free agency we chose to come here to work out our temporal salvation and through our obedience to the laws and commandments of God to become literally his sons and his daughters.

VALUE OF FREE AGENCY

Are we going to lose that free agency today while we are here in this mortal existence earning that eternal salvation for which we were placed here upon this earth? Are we going to sacrifice our chances to retain our own free agency for anything that the world has to offer? All we have to do is just to examine any movement that may be brought into our midst whether it be social or political or what not, and if it has the earmarks of an attempt to deprive us in the slightest respect of our free agency, we should avoid it as we would avoid immorality or anything else that is vicious. I am sure that free agency is as necessary for our eternal salvation as is our virtue. And just as we guard our virtue with our lives, so should we guard our free agency.

It has been my experience, my brethren and sisters, to the extent that I have had experience in this mortal sphere, that wherever I permit anyone to perform any of the functions which the Lord expected I should perform for myself, that to the extent I do this, I become that other man's slave. And I tell you if we were ever to get in this Church in the position where we were relying upon some outside source for our finances, for our sustenance, just so sure would that outside force undertake to dictate to us what we should do. Those of us who can read only need to read what has passed in history. Whenever there has been any influence or any powers which have undertaken to control the welfare of mankind to the extent that they have contributed to their support, they dominated them in their lives. There isn't a social order on earth today but what if we were to follow it long enough and far enough would rob us of our free agency, and I tell you I am grateful to my Heavenly Father today for the knowledge and the conviction that I have within me that there is only one source in this Church from which you and I as faithful Latter-day Saints should receive any assistance in time of need, and that's the way the Lord has revealed.

Let us look carefully into every movement on the face of the earth today that undertakes to bind the hands of men; that undertakes to deprive them of their own free agency in life and prevents them from deciding every moment of their life whether they'll go to the right or to the left.

SUPPORT OF WELFARE PROGRAM

This great welfare program of ours is something that we should love and we should cherish, because bound up with that is a principle which will establish ourselves upon the face of this earth so that we will be free men and free women as long as we follow the dictates of our conscience and the counsel and advice that come from our Heavenly Father through his servants. And I hope and pray, my brethren and sisters, that we will not let eleven and a half years go by again without taking more seriously the counsel and advice that come constantly from our leaders to put our houses in order and let our sons and daughters take care of their mothers and fathers. Let us bring into the families of which Brother Benson so beautifully spoke this morning, that love and affection and that devotion which will not permit outside interests to come in and perform any of the family functions, whether they be temporal or spiritual. And there isn't a son or daughter in Israel who will not be blessed with the abundance of which we have spoken here this afternoon if he will but contribute of that which the Lord has given him to the maintenance of less fortunate members of his family. And I promise you that there wouldn't be a family in this Church, if we would live up to this principle, but what in and of itself without assistance from any outside source, would be self-sustaining.

May the Lord help us to become such, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

This is the first privilege I have had for many years to attend all the sessions of a general conference. I believe about the last time I was able to attend all the sessions was when I sat on the stairway which used to lead from this stand down to the lower rooms. It has been a long time since that stairway existed. However, I appreciate the privilege of attending this conference and hope the faith and prayers of you people will be in my behalf while I hold this position.

REASON FOR PROGRESS

I am reminded—and it has already been mentioned today—that this is our centennial year, and we have been looking back over the past and had called to our attention in many ways the growth and development and achievements over the years. Wherever the Church has been, there has been outstanding progress. Surely this Church has been blessed with something above all others. What blessing could it be? What is the motivating power behind the success of this people? What is it that carried the pioneers through all their hardships, their trials and persecutions, their loss of all which the world holds dear? What gave them the courage to follow their leaders across a vast and dangerous wilderness and settle in the most barren place of all? What made them sacrifice the little they had to build temples and this tabernacle in which we worship God? What made the men go out as missionaries and leave their families in dire straits? What made the women willing to send their men and assume the great burden of bearing, rearing, and supporting their families alone? What is this great power?

THE POWER OF TESTIMONY

There is no blessing on the earth to be more desired than a testimony that God lives, that Jesus Christ is his Son, and that this gospel is the divine plan of life and salvation. With this sure knowledge in our hearts it gives a meaning and a purpose to our lives which guide even our smallest actions and give us courage to endure all things in the hope for the future. This great power and blessing is a true and living testimony which is worth any sacrifice to keep the commandments of God, and God has promised to bless those who do his will.

Brigham Young said:

If all the talent, fact, wisdom, and refinements of the world had been sent to me with the Book of Mormon and had declared in the most exalted earthly eloquence the truth of it, undertaking to prove it by learning and worldly wisdom, they would have been to me like the smoke that rises only to vanish away. But when I saw a man without eloquence, or talents for public speaking who could only say, "I know by the power of the Holy Ghost, that the Book of Mormon is true, that Joseph Smith is a Prophet of the Lord," the Holy Ghost proceeding from that individual illuminated my understanding, and light, glory and immortality were before me. I was encircled by them, filled with them, and I knew for myself that the testimony was true. (Golden Nuggets of Thought, Ezra Marler, p. 35.)

That is the kind of testimony that members of this Church have. That is the kind of testimony that gives us the power and the courage to go forward and accomplish the things which have been done in the past and which helps us today, a gift from God through the Holy Ghost, a burning knowledge within. I thank God for those testimonies which have brought us many blessings and privileges. I thank God for the testimonies of the great souls, living and dead, who have succeeded these early members. All down through Church history we have the lives and the examples of our leaders to inspire us to greater effort.

And so it is today. A nobler group of men cannot be found on earth because they have the priesthood of God and a testimony to guide them. Nor is this blessing confined to the leaders of the Church. I am constantly inspired by the beautiful spirit, the fervent testimony, the great desire to accomplish God's will in those whom I meet from day to day. They truly have a testimony as great as the pioneers.

I feel very humble and very grateful when I think of all the splendid people working for God throughout this Church. We cannot help but progress if we keep these testimonies, and I thank all you good people for your faith and prayers in my behalf, and I pray that I may always be remembered in your prayers, for I cannot do the work assigned to me without the blessings of the Lord and your faith and prayers in my behalf.

I thank God for the testimony which burns within my soul, that I know this is the true gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God, and the others who have succeeded him to our present prophet and President, George Albert Smith, are called of God. I bear you this testimony and by virtue of my office and calling pronounce the blessings of God upon you, his people, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

This morning President Smith sketched for us a little of the history of our people over a hundred years. He could but sketch it, of course, but in the outline he drew, he was able to stimulate thinking within us that induced each one of us to fill in the outline from his own store of knowledge. The thought stimulated in me as I listened was in the form of a question. What started it all? What were the beginnings of it?

THE BEGINNINGS

He called our attention to a monument that is building in these grounds in honor of the handcart companies who started out from Iowa City on their journey to Salt Lake. I remember that my father, then a youth of nineteen, put all his earthly possessions on one of those little carts and pulled it or pushed it all the way to this city.

But Iowa City was not the beginning. From Wales he had come there. And the beginning was not in Wales. The beginning was not in Nauvoo where the people began their march across this continent. Behind that was an event in the state of New York where a boy knelt down to pray and where, in answer to that prayer, the God of heaven came bringing with him one whom he introduced as his Son, and whom he bade the praying boy to hear.

Neither was that the beginning. We should have to go back centuries to find that, eighteen of them at least, to the day when the star which guided the wise men stood over the manger, and the heavenly chorus sang, "Glory to God in the highest." That had antecedents, too, but I shall have no time to go back into them. I choose, rather, to begin with that event. That was the earthly beginning, if I may use that phrase, of the migration of our forebears to this land. That was when the Word was made flesh and came to dwell among men, and out of that circumstance derives the power and authority, the teaching, the inspiration that have moved all else to this hour.

MISSION OF THE SAVIOR

The Babe of Bethlehem entered upon his great mission alone. He went alone to be baptized of John. Alone he went from there into the wilderness where he fought his great spiritual battle and emerged triumphant over all blandishing allurements to pride, ambition, self-glorification, and worldly renown, and devoted himself to the mission to which the Father had consecrated him. Alone he retraced his steps, and going singly to one, and yet another, he bade each to follow him, until he had chosen twelve—humble men, all! And these he took under his tuition and taught them and trained them so that they might be able to carry on when he himself should be gone. He recognized that his message was a universal message, that it was a permanent message, not designed for the time of his earthly existence only, but something to be carried on after he himself should be gone. And these men he trained to be his ambassadors. With them alone he set out to transform the world, and, miracle of miracles, he did it—the most astounding miracle that ever was performed.

He made no revolutionary conquest. That was not the way of his procedure. He recognized that great principle of which Elder [Henry D.] Moyle has so eloquently spoken, the right of each person to make free choice and decide for himself, the only principle upon which man can ever unfold his powers and grow into the image of God. He was not popular: he was maligned, misrepresented, his motives misstated, and finally, betrayed and put to death. But the ideal he had loosed upon the world did not die. And here these disciples whom he had chosen, trained, and taught, men of human frailty, had to pick up and carry on. These disciples of his, humble and weak though they were and full of mortal imperfections, carried on triumphantly.

They were not any more popular than he had been. The doctrines coming from them were no more palatable than they had been coming from the Master himself, but he had given them one of the most sobering assignments ever given to man. He had already triumphed over death. And his last visit with them, just before his taking his final earthly leave of his disciples, he declared:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. (Matt. 28:18.)

COMMISSION TO DISCIPLES

That is a pronouncement which for boldness and assurance has never been equaled, I believe in all the world's history. It was a fitting preface to the great calling then delivered over to them. He commissioned them,

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. (Ibid., 19, 20.)

And he authorized them to make an equally great promise.

He that believeth . . . shall be saved. (Mark 16:16.)

It is true that certain other things were required to be done, but they were incidents of belief. Everybody who believed, really and truly believed, with conviction in his soul, would do those other things. As the root of the whole matter was the injunction to believe.

MIRACULOUS GROWTH OF EARLY CHURCH

It was not a sudden happening. It required about three hundred years, a period three times as long as that which has elapsed since the coming of our pioneers to this city, but by the end of that time, the great Roman Empire which had been the persecutor of the disciples, which had thrown them to the beasts in the Roman circus, with a determination to stamp them out, and to destroy them and all their followers—by the end of that period of three hundred years—the majority of the people of that same empire were professed worshippers of the Son of God.

Talk about miracles! No greater miracle has ever been performed, and no greater triumph of fidelity is recorded in history.

Suppose those disciples had been recreant to their trust. Suppose they had failed. Then the message could not have been perpetuated, and this world might have been denied the inestimable blessings that flow from the teachings of the Savior of men. If you want to know how much we should have missed if that teaching had not been preserved through the fidelity of these men, just try to picture to yourselves what we should have to blot out from our lives if we took away all the teachings of the Master.

INFLUENCE OF CHRISTIAN NATIONS

And those disciples had to start out from the bottom. They had to get the people to accept Jesus. There was no use trying to ask people to accept his doctrines or to admonish them to live them unless first they could convert the people to believe in him. Their first job was to persuade men to accept Jesus as the Christ. And, as I said a moment ago, with the lapse of three hundred years, the majority of the people of the Roman Empire itself had accepted the word, and that nation, or that empire, together with all the nations that sprang out of its breaking up, and the nations of the occidental world that have grown up since then, have delighted to call themselves Christian nations in honor of the name of the crucified Son of God. The gauge of progress among those nations has been that degree in which they have fostered and preserved the principles of freedom, the rights of the individual man: Those nations, the Christian nations of the world, have, since their forming, stood out as the commanding nations among all the peoples of this earth. There have been no other nations with comparable progress and power and influence to that wielded by the Christian nations. There has never been in all history any domination of nations and their history comparable to that domination of the Christian nations which Jesus of Nazareth, though crucified, exercised over them. In all the annals of this world there is no parallel to that power and influence over the lives of nations and of men.

BREAKDOWN OF CHRISTIAN STANDARDS

That being the case, we might naturally have supposed or assumed—with the great unmeasured blessings that have come to those nations—that they would have been true to their heritage, that they would have continued in reverent regard of the name of him from whom the activating teachings came. Unhappily, that seems to be a presumption that we are not permitted to indulge. There has come over this earth now a disheartening breakdown of all the Christian standards. Skepticism, self-sufficiency, atheism, a denial of the divinity of Jesus the Christ, have supplanted belief, and lapses from the moral standards are but the natural result of the breaking down of that faith.

There is one thing of which we may be sure and that is that the teachings of the gospel, the gospel of the twentieth century, if you please, are the same as the teaching which was given in the first century. The gospel does not change, though its manner of presentation and technique may. Fundamentally, its basic principles do not alter. If the world had been true, if the Christian nations had remained firm in their faith, we could not have had the two last great wars which broke out right in the heart of Christendom. It comes from a teaching that there is no divinity whom one must revere; that all creeds are alike, as is now taught, and that to be cosmopolitan we have to accept them all and put all of them on the same plane of merit.

SUGGESTION OF LEARNED DOCTOR

I have here in my hand a clipping which I took recently from the daily press in which a learned doctor, addressing a professedly Christian body of worshipers, and speaking obviously in a manner congenial to their spirits, accused Christianity of spiritual arrogance and suggested that it abandon its claim to a monopoly of the way to salvation. Here are some of his exact words as quoted:

Christianity has been guilty of spiritual arrogance on a worldwide scale, labeling all other religions false and asserting that only when all mankind accepts the one true religion will there be any hope for worldwide co-operation and peace. That amounts to spiritual imperialism and is as out-of-date in our world today as any form of imperialism.

He said:

Only by recognizing the basic human equality of all religions is it possible to reach a world fellowship of faith inspiring man in his efforts to create a decent kind of world society.

The worthy doctor agrees with neither Jesus nor history.

RELIGION IS GOD-REVEALED

What becomes of God and Christ in a religion like that? That kind of declaration brings us face to face with this question. What is religion anyhow? Is it something that man makes for his own convenience, subject to change with all the alterations in the moods of the times, or is it something God-revealed, something that stands eternally true, a basis for conduct and a guide to our lives?

When you put God out, then atheism, skepticism, cynicism, all flock in; and when they flock in, their natural incidentals, the breaking down of standards by which men have lived enter in, and we have the turmoil and confusion and degradation that characterize this world today.

The ideal of the perfect life is no chimerical mirage because Jesus came and exemplified the perfect life. Through observance of the principles by which his life was ordered, man, too, may grow to perfection. There is no higher call to duty today than that the Church should teach faith in him and preserve it in the hearts of men. Without arrogance or boasting but in toleration and humility it must be true to its trust by teaching what Jesus taught: that there is one faith, one Lord and one baptism and that Jesus is the Christ.

May God give us the power for the need, I pray in his name. Amen.

President J. Reuben J. Clark, Jr:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing to close: "Praise Ye The Father"—(Gounod).

The closing prayer will be offered by President Twayne Austin of the West Pocatello Stake, Pocatello, Idaho, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until ten o'clock tomorrow morning, Saturday, October 4. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over the same stations that are broadcasting today.

The Choir music for this session and the morning session, as has been repeatedly announced, was by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Central Utah Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen has conducted the Choir. Elder Frank W. Asper has been the organist.

We should like to extend to Sister Madsen and the Choir our deep appreciation and our sincere thanks for the excellence of the music which they have rendered to us. I think Sister Madsen is entitled to particular reference. She has trained, as I understand it, two great choirs extending over a period of many weeks, and the result of her efforts is shown by the splendid singing we have had today and which was incident to the Relief Society Conference and their concert. We thank you Relief Society Singing Mothers, Sister Madsen and Brother Asper for your services.

Tomorrow morning the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the time of beginning.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers: "Praise Ye The Father."

President Twayne Austin of the West Pocatello Stake offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until Saturday, October 4, at 10:00 a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning, October 4, at 10:00 a.m.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. At the President's request, President David O. McKay, second Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services of this session.

President George Albert Smith:

It is worth a trip from some other part of the world to come into a house and see as many people smiling as there are this morning. Everybody looks happy. It is wonderful to be in the house of the Lord again today. Outside are glorious sunshine and flowers and inside are the influences that come from our Heavenly Father.

President McKay will conduct the services this morning.

President David O. McKay:

This is the third session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne, who is presiding over the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young, presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, and KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The Choir singing during today's sessions will be by members of the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall. Elder Alexander Schreiner is at the organ.

We will begin the morning services by the Choir singing:

"I Think When I Read That Sweet Story of Old"—(Parks)

The opening prayer will be offered by President Dale H. Peterson of the North Sevier Stake, Salina, Utah.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir, "I Think When I Read That Sweet Story Of Old."

Elder Dale H. Peterson, President of the North Sevier Stake, offered the invocation.

The Choir sang "In My Father's House Are Many Mansions."

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren, sisters, and friends. I feel this a tremendous responsibility, undertaking to lead in intelligent, profitable thought, a congregation of thousands of intelligent people, present and on the air, members and non-members of the Church, and I sincerely hope that what I shall say will be of some interest and profit.

I suppose that most persons born into this world and living to reach maturity, at some time in their lives, entertain some such thoughts as these: where did I come from, why am I here, where am I going when I leave this sphere of action, and what effect will my life's actions here, have upon my future life?

GOSPEL ANSWERS IMPORTANT QUESTIONS

The gospel of Jesus Christ, as we have received it by divine revelation, makes satisfactory answer to these and many other important questions which arise in the mind from time to time. A like statement cannot be made in truth of any other religious organization. It teaches us that we lived as intelligent beings in the spirit before coming to this earth, that we are the spirit-born sons and daughters of God, brothers and sisters of the Lord Jesus Christ, he being the first-born in the spirit, and the only begotten of the Father in the flesh. Coming to this earth is an important part of the plan instituted in the councils of heaven for man's eternal progression toward the goal of our existence, which is an exaltation in the kingdom and presence of the Father and the Son forever.

It is here we are to make every preparation necessary for the life to come. There are certain prescribed conditions that must be complied with. There are principles to be accepted, ordinances to be received, commandments to be kept, laws to be obeyed, sacrifices to be made, service to be rendered, family relationships to be formed, and we are to live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. We are to love the Lord, our God, with all our hearts and our neighbors as ourselves. We are even to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us and pray for them which despitefully use us, and persecute us, following the example of Jesus who, when being persecuted to the death, prayed to the Father to forgive his persecutors. This represents the true spirit of Christ which should motivate all our life's actions. We should strive to be in the image of God in principle and in conduct as well as in form. We should be orthodox in our thinking, our understanding, our teachings, and in our living.

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things. (Thirteenth Article of Faith.)

OBEDIENCE BRINGS ORDER AND BEAUTY

The laws of the gospel are the laws of God and are as perfect in their sphere as are the laws governing the universe and all nature. They originated from the same source, and when obeyed by man, they produce order and beauty. Man only of all of God's creations is disobedient to his laws.

The gospel law is that by which our Savior lived, and which made him what he was in life, and what he now is, enthroned in glory at the right hand of God, the Father, in his celestial kingdom.

The same gospel laws are intended to make us like the Savior and to save us with him in our Father's kingdom. He has given us our agency and power to overcome and live the law.

James Allen, author of the book As A Man Thinketh expresses therein this religious thought:

As a being of power, intelligence, and love, and the Lord of his own thoughts, man holds the key to every situation, and contains within himself that transforming, regenerating agency, by which he may make himself what he wills.

THE INFLUENCE OF RELIGION

My religious education has been and is such, that if I do the things that I know I should do, and leave undone the things I know I should not do, my salvation, the goal of my existence, will be secure. My religion encourages me in my efforts so to do. It has both a stimulating and a restraining influence upon my life, encouraging and stimulating me to good deeds, and restraining me from wrongdoing.

I am a better and happier man because of my religion and its influence upon my life. I would have been a better and happier man than I am, had I lived more in accord with the precepts of my religion, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Someone has said that experience is a dear school but that fools will learn in no other.

This suggests that a wise person will learn and profit by the experience of others.

PUNISHMENT OF THE WICKED

We have many object lessons given us in the scriptures from which to profit. In the council in heaven, before the world was, two courses were placed before us; that proposed by the Firstborn, and the other by Lucifer; the one leading unto everlasting life, the other to everlasting disappointment. We had definitely decided before coming to earth which course to follow.

The Negro race have been forbidden the priesthood, and the higher temple blessings, presumably because of their not having been valiant while in the spirit. It does not pay to be anything but valiant.

Through John the Revelator, the Lord said to the Laodiceans:

I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. (Rev. 3:15, 16.)

It is not profitable that we be even lukewarm.

We know the curse which befell Laman and Lemuel and their descendants, the Lamanites, as a result of their disobedience, rebelliousness, and wickedness.

We know the curse that befell the Jews because they rejected their Lord, the Savior. They have been a hiss and a byword among all nations, and that tells but a small part of their unfortunate condition.

The history of the antediluvians furnishes us with an impressive example of the serious consequences of sin and rejecting the gospel.

Noah preached to that people 120 years. They rejected the prophet and his message and became a very wicked people and morally corrupt.

The penalty inflicted upon them was, in part, that of drowning by a flood that covered the whole earth. The death penalty tells but a small part of the story of what befell them on account of their wickedness. They were confined in a spirit prison for, according to the Bible chronology, more than 2,300 years. The nature of this imprisonment is explained by the Prophet Alma as follows:

Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked, yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful looking for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection. (Alma 40:14.)

GOSPEL PREACHED TO SPIRITS IN PRISON

This period of 2,300 years is between the time of the flood and the death of the Savior, when he went and visited them.

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. (1 Peter 3:18-20.)

How much longer they were imprisoned after Christ's visitation and resurrection we do not know. But it is revealed to us that should they accept the gospel or the testimony of Jesus, when preached to them, in the spirit, they could attain only to the terrestrial kingdom.

And again, we saw the terrestrial world, and behold and lo, these are they who are of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the church of the Firstborn who have received the fulness of the Father, even as that of the moon differs from the sun in the firmament. Behold, these are they who died without law; also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh; Who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it. (D. & C. 76:71-74. Italics author's.)

The cities of the plains, Sodom and Gomorrah, with their inhabitants, were destroyed by fire from heaven, because of their wickedness. They also would be shut up in a spirit prison and be denied the blessings of the celestial kingdom, even though they should accept the testimony of Jesus in the spirit.

It is reasonable to believe that other equally disobedient, wicked people, though they may escape the death penalty, would be confined in a spirit prison after their death and be rejected from the celestial kingdom, those of this day, as well as those of former days.

The kingdom of God has been established again on the earth, and the gospel in its fulness has been restored, in fulfilment of ancient prophecies, but people of today are not prepared, in large numbers, to receive it, although the gospel and the kingdom of this dispensation have all the earmarks of the original.

SECOND COMING OF THE SAVIOR

The coming event of great importance, toward which the attention of the world is directed by the preaching of the gospel, is the second and glorious coming of our Lord and Savior, for whose coming all good Christians are anxiously awaiting, for at that day the righteous dead shall come forth, and the righteous living shall be changed or quickened, and together they will be caught up to meet the Savior and his holy angels in the clouds of heaven. Satan will be bound for one thousand years, and peace shall prevail in the earth.

Signs of the Lord's coming are seen in the wars and rumors of wars, famine, pestilence, the seas heaving themselves beyond their bounds, infidelity, apostasy, and wickedness of every conceivable character.

They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant, and sin and wickedness prevail throughout the earth.

There are two great unseen powers operating upon the minds and hearts of the children of men, today, the power of God and the power of Lucifer, or Satan, each striving for the souls of men;

the one to save, and the other to destroy. In the language of the scripture: Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. Lest we be taken off guard, and be found unwittingly serving the wrong master, let us be reminded that

. . . all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil; . . . (Moroni 7:12.)

TESTIMONY

I bear unto you, my brethren, sisters, and friends, a faithful and sincere testimony that I do know that this, the work in which we as Latter-day Saints are engaged, is the work of God, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, which had its inception in the councils of heaven before the world was. In it is the power of God unto salvation and eternal life.

We invite all men to come unto God and be saved with him in his kingdom, by obedience unto the laws and ordinances of the gospel, made effective for man's salvation through the atonement wrought out by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. May his blessings attend you all, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

This Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is literally the kingdom of God on earth. I believe that every man who has presided over it as a prophet-president has been the Lord's anointed and has held the keys of the kingdom, and that these keys are the keys of salvation for all people. And I believe that the Lord has decreed for this dispensation that the gospel is here to remain until Christ comes, and of course from then forever after. This is a day when the kingdom will never be given to another people, but when it will remain with the Saints; and everyone who will come to Christ and live his laws will receive peace and joy and comfort in this life and a certain hope of eternal life in the world to come.

VISION GIVEN TO JOSEPH SMITH

When Joseph Smith went into the Sacred Grove to pray in the spring of 1820, having been exercised by religious anxiety and turmoil, it was to ask which of all the churches was right and which one he should join. There then appeared to him two glorified, exalted, resurrected beings—God the Eternal Father and Jesus Christ his Son—who, in answer to Joseph's question, told him that he should join none of them, for they were all wrong; that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; that;

... they draw near unto me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof. (Pearl of Great Price, Writings of Joseph Smith, 2:19.)

KINGDOM ORGANIZED

Thereafter, pursuant to commandment and revelation the Prophet and others organized this kingdom, and after it was organized, the Lord by revelation, referred to it as the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth, with which he said he was well pleased, speaking unto the Church collectively and not individually.

I think that the ancient prophets and the latter-day prophets have had revealed to them, by the revelations of the Holy Ghost, that this kingdom is to remain. Enoch saw this day and said that a people would be prepared for the coming of the Lord, and that a latter-day Zion would be built up to be joined with the Zion that he had established. Daniel saw this day. He revealed and interpreted the dream that Nebuchadnezzar had received, told him that he had seen a stone cut out of the mountain without hands, and that in the days of certain kings would the God of heaven set up a kingdom which would never be destroyed and which would never be given to another people, but which should stand forever.

In this day the Lord harked back to that figure which Daniel had used and said to Joseph Smith:

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth; and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth. (D. & C. 65:2.)

VALIANCE TO THE TRUTH

Every person in this Church is entitled to know and is expected to know by the revelations of the Holy Ghost to his soul that these things are true; and if he knows them, then, in my judgment, he should have no desire in his heart to do anything in this world except hearken to the counsel of the living oracles and put his house in order and prepare himself for the glory and honor and salvation of which President George F. Richards has just spoken.

I should like to read you a statement made by President John Taylor, the third man to preside over this kingdom. He said:

It has been asked by Brother Brigham whether this kingdom will fail. I tell you in the name of Israel's God it will not fail. I tell you in the name of Israel's God it will roll forth, and that the things spoken of by the holy prophets in relation to it will receive their fulfillment. But in connection with this I will tell you another thing: A great many of the Latter-day Saints will fail, a great many of them are not now and never have been living up to their privileges, and magnifying their callings and their priesthood, and God will have a reckoning with such people, unless they speedily repent. (The Gospel Kingdom, p. 137.)

One other sentence from President Taylor:

There is one thing very certain, very certain indeed, and that is, whatever men may think, and however they may plot and contrive, that this kingdom will never be given into the hands of another people. It will grow and spread and increase, and no man living can stop its progress. (Ibid., p. 214.)

It seems to me that if this is the kingdom of God on earth, and if it is destined to stay here and not be given to another people, then we are entitled to conclude that as a people, as a Church, we will never be led astray; and, that as individuals, we will never go out of the course of righteousness that the Lord expects us to be in as long as we hearken to the counsel of the Presidency and the Twelve who head the kingdom.

KEYS OF THE KINGDOM

Wilford Woodruff said this:

When the Lord gave the keys of the kingdom of God, the keys of the Melchizedek Priesthood, of the apostleship, and sealed them upon the head of Joseph Smith, he sealed them upon his head to stay here upon the earth until the coming of the Son of Man. Well might Brigham Young say, "The keys of the kingdom of God are here." They were with him to the day of his death. They then rested upon the head of another man—President John Taylor. He held those keys to the hour of his death. They then fell by turn, or in the providence of God, upon Wilford Woodruff.

I say to the Latter-day Saints, the keys of the kingdom of God are here, and they are going to stay here, too, until the coming of the Son of Man. Let all Israel understand that. They may not rest upon my head but a short time, but they will then rest on the head of another apostle, and another after him, and so continue until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven to "reward every man according to the deeds done in the body." . . . .

I say to all Israel at this day, I say to the whole world, that the God of Israel, who organized this Church and kingdom, never ordained any President or Presidency to lead it astray. Hear it, ye Israel, no man who has ever breathed the breath of life can hold these keys of the kingdom of God and lead the people astray. (The Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, pp. 73, 74.)

CHURCH LED BY REVELATION

To my way of thinking there has never been a day from the time that Joseph Smith organized this Church up to the present moment when it has not been led by revelation, led by inspiration, when the living oracles have not given the people the counsel and the instruction and the commandments that the Lord wanted the people to have. He told his early elders that whatever they spoke when moved upon by the Holy Ghost was scripture, that it was the mind of the Lord, the will of the Lord, the word of the Lord, the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. There will never be a time when the canon of scripture will be full. Just as long as there are elders in this kingdom to bear inspired witness of Christ, there will be more scripture. There has been more scripture given from this pulpit during the course of this conference, and it is as much the mind and will of the Lord as any recorded in the standard works. When the Church establishes, as it did a little over eleven years ago, a welfare plan, a plan announced by the First Presidency of the Church, then, knowing what we know, we are entitled to accept it as a revelation, to receive it as the mind and will of the Lord to the Latter-day Saints.

HARMONY WITH THE SCRIPTURES

There is nothing about the Church, there is no doctrine, no procedure or no ordinance, no law or principle, that is not in complete harmony with the scriptures and with reason. We can establish that everything we have is reasonable and scriptural and that we are in whole accord with the identical Church of Christ that was set up two thousand years ago. But after we have done that, and after we have put our houses in order and have harmonized our lives with the doctrines that have been revealed, then we are entitled to know that this is the Lord's kingdom and to know it as a matter of faith and testimony, as a matter of feeling and revelation. Once we get that in our hearts we enter into the rest of the Lord and are not driven about by every wind of doctrine or by the cunning craftiness of men. Because our testimonies are secure, we rest from all anxiety and turmoil of spirit, and if we continue in diligence and valiance in the kingdom, we will eventually rest with our Father in heaven in the eternal worlds, "which rest is the fulness of his glory." (D. & C. 84:24.)

I think there is no occasion for any person in this Church to fear for the destiny of the kingdom. We do not need to steady the ark, but we do need to have in our hearts a fear that we may not make ourselves worthy, that we may not hew to the line of righteousness and keep the commandments of God with that degree of valiance which will give us our exaltation in the eternal worlds.

I would like to bear you my witness, as one elder in this kingdom, that I know this is the work of the Lord; that God has spoken in this day; that Joseph Smith was the prophet and instrument in his hands of giving us the laws and ordinances of salvation; and that just as surely as we will live in harmony with them, we will have glory and honor added upon our heads forever, and our calling and elections will be sure. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Some weeks ago I had an interview with a young man who is just making a remarkable recovery from very serious wounds that he received on the European battlefield. In an explosion of a land mine this young man had suffered a severe spinal injury that had almost completely paralyzed him, and when the rescue squad came and was carrying him off the field, the enemy turned loose a burst of machine gun fire from which he suffered six bullet wounds in his chest. He was taken to the hospital in what was thought to be a dying condition. As he lay there on his cot after having been treated by the surgeons, a chaplain came to him wearing an insignia of a sectarian church. He asked this young man what his religion was. On being told that he was a Latter-day Saint, the chaplain said: "Well, then, perhaps you would rather I would not pray for you."

PRAYER OF CHAPLAIN

"Oh, yes," said the young man, "I would like to have you pray for me if you feel inclined to."

Then the chaplain with great deference said: "Well, I will remove the insignia of my church and kneel down here at your cot. The two of us will then just pray together as two men of God."

The young man said the chaplain prayed for about twenty minutes. The burden of his prayer and the chief thing that he could remember of what the chaplain said was this, that sustained him and put into him the feeling that he wanted to live:

O God, help us that in our living we are not afraid to die and that in our dying we are not afraid to live.

I have thought about that prayer many times since, and I have asked myself the question: How many thousands are there among us today who are living such lives that would make them, unless they repent, afraid to die, and that in their dying they might be afraid to live hereafter?

The purpose of the gospel of Jesus Christ is to teach men to live so that when they die, in the words of the immortal "Thanatopsis":

Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust. . . .

GOSPEL "PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY"

The Apostle Paul defined the gospel as the "power of God unto salvation," and to the Apostle James the gospel was the "perfect law of liberty."

The Master enlarged upon that latter definition in his statement to those who listened to his words when he said:

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed: And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. (John 8:31-32.)

The nature of this liberty and this freedom of which the Master spoke he further explained in a revelation given to us in our day, speaking of Adam and all his posterity which are represented in all of humankind. Said the Lord:

Wherefore, I, the Lord God, caused that he [meaning Adam] should be cast out of the Garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression, wherein he became spiritually dead, which is the first death, even that same death which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked at the last day when I shall say: Depart, ye cursed. But, behold, I say unto you that I, the Lord God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption, through faith on the name of mine Only Begotten Son. And thus did I, the Lord God, appoint unto man the days of his probation—that by his natural death he might be raised in immortality unto eternal life, even as many as would believe; And they that believe not unto eternal damnation; for they cannot be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not; . . . (D. & C. 29:41-44.)

"YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN"

That revelation given to us in our day makes more understandable the answer the Master made to Nicodemus who came to him asking what he must do to be saved. In answer the Master replied, "Ye must be born again,"—born of the water and of the spirit, or he could not see nor enter the kingdom of heaven.

Baptism by immersion symbolizes the death and burial of the man of sin; and the coming forth out of the water, the resurrection to a newness of spiritual life. After baptism, hands are laid upon the head of the baptized believer, and he is blessed to receive the Holy Ghost. Thus does the one baptized receive the promise or gift of the Holy Ghost or the privilege of being brought back into the presence of one of the Godhead, by obedience to whom and through his faithfulness one so blessed might receive the guidance and direction of the Holy Ghost in his daily walks and talks, even as Adam walked and talked in the Garden of Eden with God, his Heavenly Father. To receive such guidance and such direction from the Holy Ghost is to be spiritually reborn.

PARABLE OF THE SOWER

Unfortunately, there are many of those who are blessed to receive the Holy Ghost and that companionship of one of the Godhead in their mortal lives who fail of their blessings. This was taught plainly by the Master in the parable of the sower who was represented as the teachers of the gospel. He classified those to whom the gospel was taught into four different groups! Of one group he said, in effect: "These are those who received the seed by the wayside, and the birds came quickly and caught it up and stole it away," suggesting those who heard the word but lacked understanding and the devil was quick to take the word away from their hearts lest they would receive it and would believe to their salvation.

Another class he compared to those who received the seed on stony ground, and it began to take root, but when the sun came out, it was scorched and withered away because it had not much root, suggesting those who received the seed and for a time had joy in that understanding, but then when persecution and affliction come because of the word, they become offended and dwindle in their belief.

Another group of those who hear the gospel are the ones who receive it as among thorns, and the thorns after a time choked out the seed. These, he said, were like those who let the cares of the world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the pleasures and the lusts of the world, destroy their activity in the Church that might have brought them safely into eternal life.

Fortunately, there were some who received the gospel in good ground, and these brought forth some a hundred-fold, some sixty-fold and some thirty-fold. And that is just about the way the active membership of the Church seems to be grouped among us today, some giving full hundred percent service and some, unfortunately, only thirty-fold.

FAILURE TO REALIZE BLESSINGS

Again, in this day the Lord gave us a revelation that suggested clearly the reasons why some men fail of their blessings. He said:

Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men, that they do not learn this one lesson—That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man. Behold, ere he is aware, he is left unto himself, to kick against the pricks, to persecute the saints, and to fight against God. (D. & C. 121:35-38.)

That it seems to me, as we have experienced it, is about the progressive way that men begin to fall away. They first begin to "kick against the pricks." I have wondered what that means. These no doubt are the pricks of the gospel. I wonder, perhaps, if they are not those things referred to in President Clark's remarkable article some years ago in The Improvement Era, that he called "restraints," the restraints of the Word of Wisdom, the restraints imposed in keeping the Sabbath day holy, injunctions against card playing, the restraints imposed by following out the welfare program. And so we might go on. These are the restraints against which some people seem to rebel and are kicking constantly against—the "pricks" of the gospel.

I remember in this connection what somebody said in classifying humankind. He said there were only three kinds of people in the world—"Saints, Ain'ts, and Complaints," and perhaps the "Complaints" would represent those who seem to be kicking against the pricks. These are the ones who next begin to "persecute the Saints" and, finally, "to fight against God."

APOSTATES IN DARKNESS

Speaking of those who would persecute the Saints, I am reminded of what the Prophet Joseph said while he was upon the earth. He said:

From apostates the faithful have received the severest persecutions. Judas was rebuked and immediately betrayed his Lord into the hands of his enemies because Satan entered into him. There is a superior intelligence bestowed upon such as obey the gospel with full purpose of heart, which, if sinned against, the apostate is left naked and destitute of the Spirit of God, and he is, in truth, nigh unto cursing, and his end is to be burned. When once that light which was in them is taken from them, they become as much darkened as they were previously enlightened, and then, no marvel, if all their powers should be enlisted against the truth and they, Judas like, seek the destruction of those who were their greatest benefactors. (Joseph Fielding Smith, Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 67.)

Yes, persecution seems to be the part of those who would teach the truth. You remember what the Master said:

Blessed are ye, when man shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, . . . for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you. (Matt. 5:11, 12.)

I remember a few years ago, upon assignment from the Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, I interviewed a man who, because of his sinning, had fallen away and had been excommunicated from the Church. He said to me: "I want to bear you this testimony that the last few years have been a pretty rugged road. When I received the pronouncement of the court that excommunicated me from the Church, it was just as though someone had turned off the light to my soul. I was left in complete darkness from that time forward."

PURE IN HEART SEE GOD

In the Master's Sermon on the Mount, he made another very expressive declaration when he said:

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. (Ibid., 8.)

You will remember that in his lifetime there were some who saw him only as the son of the carpenter. There were some who said that because of his words he was drunken with strong wine—that he was a winebibber. There were some who even thought him to be possessed of devils. Only those who were the pure in heart saw him as the Son of God.

So it is today. There are some who look upon the leaders of this Church and God's anointed as men who are possessed of selfish motives. By them the words of our leaders are always twisted to try to bring a snare to the work of the Lord. Mark well those who speak evil of the Lord's anointed for they speak from impure hearts. Only the "pure in heart" see the "God" or the divine in man and accept our leaders and accept them as prophets of the Living God.

The testimonies of our leaders, in this connection, have been very significant to me. I remember hearing President Grant on several occasions say:

Whenever certain individuals who are not living good lives, begin to compliment me and to speak well of me, I say to myself, "Heber J. Grant, what's the matter with you; you must not be doing your duty, or this kind of person wouldn't feel so kindly toward you."

I remember the prophetic pronouncement that was made from this stand by President George Albert Smith eighteen months ago when he said:

Many have belittled Joseph Smith, and those who have will be forgotten in the remains of mother earth and the odor of their infamy will be ever with them, but honor, majesty, and fidelity to God attached to Joseph Smith's name and exemplified by him will never die.

I wish that statement could be heard to all the ends of the earth.

CRITICS SPIRITUALLY SICK

I want to bear you my testimony that the experience I have had has taught me that those who criticize the leaders of this Church are showing signs of a spiritual sickness which, unless curbed, will bring about eventually spiritual death. I want to bear my testimony as well that those who in public seek by their criticism, to belittle our leaders or bring them into disrepute, will bring upon themselves more hurt than upon those whom they seek thus to malign. I have watched over the years, and I have read of the history of many of those who fell away from this Church, and I want to bear testimony that no apostate who ever left this Church ever prospered as an influence in his community thereafter.

It is well that we remember today that statement of the prophet of old which was sung so beautifully as the words of the Master by the choir today. It was the Prophet Isaiah who said:

... Peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him. But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. (Isaiah 57:19-21.)

Brothers and sisters, my prayer is for all of us, that we may so live, that when our time comes, we may not be afraid to die, and that when we die, we may look confidently forward to a life, an eternal life, in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ in the celestial kingdom, and I pray it humbly, in his name. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "O Ye Mountains High."

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As I stand here this morning, my brethren and sisters, it is with a heart full of gratitude for the privilege of attending this conference. There is something stimulating in meeting with the Latter-day Saints. There isn't any place in all the world where one may be built up in his faith as in the service of our Heavenly Father.

PHILOSOPHIES OF MEN

There are many philosophies and concepts that have been advanced to bring comfort and cheer in this sorrowing world. They all have their place, and much good has come therefrom. Someone was kind enough to hand me a few lines, the lines of a bit of philosophy that I think are attributed to Plato, which runs something like this:

God is love, but God is eternal, therefore love is eternal. But unless there is something to love, there can be no love; therefore, that which we love must be eternal because of the first proposition that God and love are eternal. Therefore we are eternal.

These lines, doubtless prompted the lines of Wordsworth wherein he wrote:

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar;

Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home.

(Wordsworth, "Intimations of Immortality.")

All of these, beautiful in very deed!

STRENGTH AND POWER OF GOSPEL MESSAGE

But, after all, my brethren and sisters, there is nothing that equals in power and in strength the message of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a simple thing. God sent his Only Begotten Son as a Savior for the children of men, that he might give to them the gospel whereby they might so live that it would permit them to come back into his presence. Jesus came upon the earth; he taught his message; he lived it; he showed his disciples how to live it; he brought them in very deed glad tidings of great joy. He lived among his disciples for only a few short years, and then was taken by cruel men and crucified; and on the third day he arose from the tomb. Some of his disciples, anxious to complete the burial service, repaired to the tomb on that beautiful Sabbath morning, there to find, as they thought, that the Master had been taken away, later to learn that he was risen, that he had become the resurrected Lord. Many things in connection with his ministry transcend our power of understanding, but our lack of understanding does not change the fact that he did live and die and was resurrected.

Evidence was given to the disciples of this: He came among them, showed them the wounds in his hands, partook of food with them, and then after a short ministry ascended to heaven with the promise that in the due time of the Lord he would come again. There is not anything, my brethren and sisters, in all the world that equals faith in this divine truth. There is not any comfort that can come to the human heart that equals a conviction of the truth of the message of the Lord Jesus. And to think that we have been made partakers of that, for he has revealed himself again in this day, once more revealing to the world that he lives, that he is the Son of God, that the resurrection from the dead is a reality, that our lives do not end in death, but that we live and will continue to live as immortal spirits until the time shall come when God will call us forth from the grave just as he did Jesus. It is a glorious faith, and I am grateful to join with you this beautiful morning in thanking our Heavenly Father for the blessing of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

May we be worthy of these blessings and be able to order our lives that we may ultimately come back into his presence, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER FRITZ JOHANNESON

Former Acting President of the Swedish Mission

It is a very humble man who is now standing before you. My family and I just came from Sweden, and I cannot speak good English, but I trust in God that you can understand what I shall say.

When the world war was breaking out it was an experience of great importance in the history of the Church. In the Swedish Mission we had 70 missionaries, and, as you know, they were called home. The local brethren were asked to take charge of the missionary work, which they did with great willingness and humility; and I can say that the Lord was good to us and blessed us and the saints.

In Sweden we did not have to suffer from lack of foodstuffs. We could help the saints in Norway and Finland. Finland also had belonged to the Swedish Mission since it was organized, but now it is a separate mission with President Henry A. Matis as its first president. When President Matis arrived in Finland there were two newly organized branches, one in Helsinki and one in Oboe. I had the opportunity to be a missionary in Finland after I was released from my work as acting president in Sweden. When President Benson of the Quorum of the Twelve came to the Swedish and Finnish Missions it was a great event. All of this time Finland was being prepared for the preaching of the gospel, and I saw at that time how much better the work was going forward. The newspapers were very friendly, and they had fine articles on the front pages of their papers. Finland was the first land in the northern countries to which our message could be sent over the radio.

I am very thankful for the opportunity which I have to bear my testimony, which I do now, that I know that God lives; I know that Jesus Christ is His Son. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I know that President George Albert Smith is also a prophet of God. It is not very long ago that I was standing in Hamburg and a missionary was giving that message, and from that time I have read the scriptures. I recognized that the message that missionary gave was true, and the time came when I had to repent. I know that we cannot baptize a man or a woman who has not faith and who has not repented. We must always have repentance. I thank my Heavenly Father for the wonderful feeling that I have and for the beautiful messages we have heard at this conference and that we shall hear. I pray that we may accept of these things and so live that our Heavenly Father can accept of us. I do this in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

(At President McKay's request, Brother Johanneson then bore a brief testimony in the Swedish language.)

President David O. McKay:

We have just heard from Elder Fritz Johanneson, Acting President of the Swedish Mission during the war, who bore a word of greeting in his native tongue, Swedish.

As a matter of interest, how many present in this audience understood Elder Johanneson when he spoke in Swedish?

(Many hands were raised)

Thank you! A goodly number.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I feel grateful, brothers and sisters, for this occasion, and for the privilege of worshipping with you, as I do when I travel, week after week, through the stakes of Zion. You are the most wonderful people in the world, and I thank the Lord to be considered worthy to be numbered among you.

AARONIC PRIESTHOOD PAGEANT

During the past week or ten days, we presented in this tabernacle the Aaronic Priesthood pageant, Prepare Ye the Way. I would like to express, for the Presiding Bishopric of the Church, our appreciation to all those who made the pageant possible: to Sister Evelyn Wood for writing it, Brother Mitchell for preparing the music, Brother Palmer and Brother Lees for directing it, and all who took part therein.

Since witnessing the presentation of it three times, I have thought a great deal of the message that it conveyed. Several of the speakers in this conference have referred to our pre-existent state. I am sure that if the veil were rolled back and we understood today as we did then, the purpose of earth life, and the privileges that were to be ours, we would be a little more attentive to responsibilities which are ours.

In the pageant, when the spirits were about to come to this earth, Father Adam was asked if there would be anyone here at the crossroads to show them the way, and they were told there would be their parents and the priesthood of God. If these two should not fail there would not be much danger or much to worry about our young people, but if the parents fail and the priesthood fails in its duty, then we can hardly expect that these choice spirits of promise will return to the Father and receive the plaudit: "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Those of you who saw the pageant will remember that when some of the boys dropped out of the priesthood activity and gave their reasons for so doing, one little fellow said: "My father doesn't go to priesthood meeting, and I want to be like my father." Following our presentation of the pageant six years ago, a Relief Society in one of the wards in a testimony meeting was discussing the pageant, and one good sister said: "I took my husband to see the pageant and when that little fellow said: 'My father doesn't go to priesthood meeting, and I want to be like my father,' I felt my husband cringe just like he had been hit with an electric shock. The next Sunday morning when my boy was getting ready for priesthood meeting his father said, 'Wait a minute my boy, I am going with you.' The boy said: 'You don't mean it do you, Dad?' And I got his eye and told him not to say anything about the pageant, and his father went along with him to priesthood meeting."

We have been told as we travel throughout the Church that the greatest deterrent to the success of the Aaronic Priesthood and Latter-day Saint girls program of the Church is the indifference of the parents. It seems almost incredible to believe that such a thing is true.

PARENTS INFLUENCE CHILDREN

Brother Benson, in his beautiful address on the home, told us of the charge the Lord has laid upon the parents in Israel to teach their children faith in the Living God, repentance and baptism, and the laying on of hands, and teach them to pray and to walk up-rightly before the Lord in all things, with the statement that if they failed in so doing the sin would be upon the heads of the parents. I wish every father and mother in Israel realized what that meant and what it will mean when they give a reckoning for the stewardship that has been theirs to be privileged to be the parents of these chosen spirits who are permitted to come upon the earth in this day and time.

A short time ago one of the leaders in the Aaronic Priesthood in one of our stakes handed me a copy of an article that appeared in a magazine that was published by the Kiwanis Club. I want to read a few excerpts from it:

There is a general opinion that children are bright. In my opinion there is no greater fallacy. They are so dumb that it is a wonder we ever make really useful citizens out of them.

To illustrate, the article says,

I know a fellow, a Kiwanian by the way, who has two small boys. He is a well-educated, cultured gentleman, with a lovely wife and a nice home. Those two boys have been reared with every advantage. This man takes his golf clubs and hikes out to the golf course every Sunday morning of his life, and can you imagine it, those two boys are so dumb that they can't understand why they should be made to go to Sunday School? They think they should be permitted to go fishing or swimming Sunday morning instead of going to church! Nothing their father says to them seems to convince the dumb little creatures that they should spend two hours in church on Sunday morning.

To save time, I will relate one or two more of these comments. The next one is about the father and mother who always preface their meal with a cocktail. They have a son and a daughter in high school who went to a dinner-dance, and the father found out that the children each had a cocktail before dinner. Those two kids were so dumb that when they were called on the carpet by their dad, they couldn't understand why they shouldn't drink cocktails! "I tell you, kids are dumb."

A man who occupied a prominent position in his community, when he was out in the yard and would hit his finger with a hammer or run against a wire clothesline, would make the sky blue with his profanity, and yet when his six-year-old boy called the cat a "damned cat" because it ran across the table, the father promptly spanked him and washed his mouth out with soap, but he was never able to make that dumb kid understand that it was wrong to swear. And there was a mother who did not like to entertain company when she wasn't in the mood, and if someone would call and want to come over to visit her, she would immediately say she had house guests and couldn't receive them, or if they wanted to speak to her on the phone and she wasn't in the mood, she would turn to her little girl and say, "Tell them I am not home." Do you know that dumb little girl lies like Ananias. The mother has done all she can to break her of it, but the child is just a natural born liar!

Let me read another comment on parents:

'Twas a sheep not a lamb
That strayed away in the parable Jesus told,
A grown-up sheep that strayed away
From the ninety and nine in the fold.
And why for the sheep should we seek
And earnestly hope and pray?
Because there is danger when sheep go wrong:
They lead the lambs astray.
Lambs will follow the sheep, you know,
Wherever the sheep may stray.
When sheep go wrong,
It won't take long till the lambs are as wrong as they.
And so with the sheep we earnestly plead
For the sake of the lambs today,
For when the sheep are lost
What a terrible cost
The lambs will have to pay.

—The Echo, C. C. Miller

TEACH CHILDREN TO HONOR THE SABBATH

If the fathers and mothers in Israel understood the importance of this they would take their boys and girls with them to Church. No father would ever let a boy of his grow up dishonoring the Sabbath day, working on the Sabbath day when it is work that does not absolutely have to be done. Brigham Young's statement to the Saints when they first entered this valley was that if they worked on the Sabbath day they would lose more during the week than they gained by so doing. And we can't get away from the command of the Lord when he said that we should honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, and if you fathers think you can work on the Sabbath when you don't have to, you must not be surprised if your boys are just dumb enough to do the same thing when they grow to manhood.

On the other hand what a marvelous thing if we set out with the thought in our minds that no matter what the cost, we will say with the prophet of old:

. . . as for me and my house, we serve the Lord. (Joshua 24:15.)

WORK FOR YOUR CHILDREN'S WELFARE.

Contrasted to what I have just read, I want to tell you about a convert to the Church who came into my office just a few weeks ago. She and her husband came here for the gospel's sake. They had misfortune after they arrived; through sickness and hospital bills they were brought down to where they had to move into a section which was not desirable, and I know, as you do, like the story we used to hear as boys, of the one bad apple that spoils the whole bushel, sometimes something breaks loose that is very undesirable. So this sister came in and said, "Bishop, there are some wicked young people in the locality where I am, and unless something is done about it, they are going to destroy the virtue of my daughters. And I have come here to see if something can't be done." We have heard the Saints bear testimony that they would give their lives for the testimony that is theirs, and that is marvelous, but I wonder if they would be just as willing to live for the testimony that is theirs as to die for it, so when we find conditions that threaten the virtue and the honor and the integrity of our children we do something about it. This little mother did something about it. We got the bishop and the stake president on the job and she said: "Bishop Richards, if I have to do it, I will protect the virtue of my daughters if I have to purchase a tent and go up here on the foothills and live away from the rest of you." That is the kind of faith that will win and bring the parents out triumphant in watching over their children that have been entrusted to them.

I remember reading in The Improvement Era a statement about one of our good Latter-day Saint mothers over in Germany who, when the invading army came in, knowing how they ravished the women, took her two daughters up in the attic of a house almost destroyed by the bombs, and there exposed to the weather, she and the daughters remained for several days, and then when she thought it was safe she came down but left the daughters there for days to protect their virtue. God bless that mother and every mother like her in all the world, who is willing to do all in her power to protect her children against the wickedness of this world.

We have all heard the story about Sister Mary Fielding Smith, the mother of President Joseph F. Smith, who came in from Mill Creek with a load of produce and delivered it to the old tithing office on the block east of here. The good brother in charge, knowing she was a widow and how hard it was for her to get along, hardly had the courage to let her unload that wagon at the tithing office. He said, "Take it home. You need it as much as anyone in the Church." Sister Smith said, "I can't do it. My children must know that we pay our tithing." She knew that lesson must be taught to her children. Has she been rewarded? Her son grew up to become the prophet of the Lord to preside over this great Church.

FAITH OF WIDOW

When I was the bishop of a ward and we were building a meetinghouse, a little German widow came to me one day and said: "Bishop, I haven't received my allotment for the meetinghouse." I said, "No, Sister, and you aren't going to get one. If you will just care for those little children your husband left you with, we will build the meetinghouse." "Ah," she said, "Bishop, but I must be able to point to that meetinghouse and tell my children we have done our part." So I said, "God bless you, Sister, but you will have to say what your part is then," and she gave us a substantial contribution toward that meetinghouse. I have met her children as I have traveled about from place to place in this Church and have found them active, and I want to tell you she didn't cast her bread upon the water in vain, for as the prophet of old said, "For thou shalt find it after many days."

You remember what Alma did when his son, Alma, didn't walk in the ways of the Lord and went about trying to destroy the Church. He just did not give the Lord any rest about it; he took it to the Lord in mighty prayer until an angel of heaven appeared to his son, Alma, and the sons of Mosiah, and when the angel spake unto Alma and his brethren, he caused the earth to shake. They all engaged in the ministry and labored as missionaries unto the Lamanites, and one by one the sons of Mosiah refused to serve as king over the people, desiring rather that they might continue their ministry among the Lamanites.

And this is Alma's statement after his conversion:

O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people! Yea, I would declare unto every soul, as with the voice of thunder, repentance and the plan of redemption, that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth. (Alma 29:1, 2.)

The greatest sorrow upon the face of this earth is when men and women depart from the ways of the Lord, for truly the prophet hath said:

... the way of transgressors is hard. (Proverbs 13:15.)

PRAY FOR YOUR CHILDREN

Now I want to admonish you to pray for your children, to work for your children, to do all within your power to help save them. God may not always send an angel from heaven, as he did in answer to Alma's prayer, but I want to tell you there are men and women in this Church by the thousands and tens of thousands who are as angels of heaven in the hands of God in helping to show the youth of Zion the way to eternal life.

I want to tell you just how the Lord uses some of these. One of our good brethren, who was president of a high priests quorum, and has since passed away, told me this story himself. He was working for the city. He was driving up Main Street one night and saw a boy in uniform being accosted by a wicked woman. He said: "Something said to me, 'Stop and rescue that boy.' I pulled my car off to the side of the street and went over and took that boy by the arm and said: 'You come and go with me.' The woman said, 'Oh, no you don't, he belongs to me.' " This brother said: "I will turn you over to the police," and she looked down and saw a policeman on the corner and walked away. He took that boy, sobered him up and put him in a hotel. The boy said he had never lost his virtue and said, "I don't know why I found myself in this condition." He gave the boy his name, and the boy wrote to his mother back in Virginia, and after a few days this good brother received a letter from that boy's mother, reading something like this: "I don't know why you stopped your auto and rescued my boy, save that I prayed to God that night, for him, as I had never done before, and the Lord used you as an instrument to rescue my boy."

Now if there were time I could tell you how the Lord uses these bishops and these advisers in the Aaronic Priesthood and in the Latter-day Saint girls program and the teachers in the auxiliaries of this Church in order to help the parents. So, in the words of the pageant, there are the parents at the crossroads, and the great organization of the priesthood of this Church to show youth the way.

God help both to use all their power for the salvation of our boys and our girls, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

President Edgar B. Brossard of the Washington Stake has recently been over in Europe on official business and had an opportunity to visit some of our missions there. We should like to hear a few words from President Brossard.

ELDER EDGAR B. BROSSARD

President of the Washington Stake

Brothers and sisters, I am very pleased with this opportunity of attending conference. It is an inspiration to me as it is to all of us to be present in these sessions and to acknowledge the Spirit of our Father in Heaven which attends those who address us, and to listen to the sweet and inspiring music that comes from our choir.

In Europe this summer I was privileged to visit the place where I performed a mission and lived thirty-three years ago. I went to France and Paris and then to Geneva, from there to Berlin, across to London, to Belfast, Ireland and back to the United States. The work in Europe is going forward. The missionaries are there again. They are being well received in most places where they can get government consent to stay. The people are receiving them very well. They are listening to the gospel, and the gospel is performing wonders in the lives of the people.

Generally, the conditions in Europe are very unfavorable. People are confused. They are confounded. In some of the countries they walk and work and look as if they did not know where they were going nor how to get there. It is a very discouraging spectacle after one has been acquainted with European conditions in times past and seen the intelligent, active, interesting faces of people—the light that has been in them, and then see it almost go out, as one finds it generally over Europe today. I contrasted that with our meetings in Geneva, Paris, Lausanne, Neu Chatel, London, Berlin and the eastern branch under the Russian regime in Berlin where I visited the services of the Church. Our people have the gospel; and the encouragement, the purpose of life, the objectives in living that it gives to them are shown in their faces, in their activity and in the way they take hold of things to rebuild, to revive, to maintain life, to establish themselves again. I never was more pleased to be a member of the Church or more proud of my membership in the Church than I was this summer. We saw reactions of the members of the Church to these various divers and discouraging conditions under which they live, and they are trying to rebuild a civilization worth having again. The gospel means something to these people. It has helped them to get on their feet. It has helped them to want to live. It has helped them to go about and try to make conditions that are worth living in. It is the seeing of these conditions which we have been taught would be helpful in actual practice and experience that makes one thoroughly proud of his membership in the Church, humble as his position in it may be. The Lord works in mysterious ways, his wonders to perform. We do not know how, where or when our influence may be felt for good. I often think of the little branches from which many of the stalwarts of the Church come and then think of how they have been active in doing most everything in the Church. In Washington, D. C. some of the most active and most useful persons we have in the whole stake of Zion are people who come from the smallest branches of the Church, where they have had to do almost everything in the Church. And it is that doing of everything, that taking on of the several parts, that has made them grow, made them strong, helped them to understand the principles of the Church, and caused the ministrations that are available to us in the Church to become active in their lives.

I want to bear you my testimony while I stand here, brethren and sisters, that this is the work of the Lord. My testimony of it is sincere, and I am glad I have it and thank God for it, for I believe it is a gift of God; that this work is his work; that he still lives; that he still is at the helm, and his purposes in the earth will be achieved as we have been told here this afternoon. And the whole purpose of the Church will be accomplished in the earth. This is my testimony and my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

We have five minutes to hear Elder Eugene M. Cannon, one of the returned mission presidents from whom we have not had the opportunity to hear since his return. Brother Cannon returned from Tahiti in 1940, and this is our first opportunity to hear from him.

The speaker to whom you have just listened is President Edgar B. Brossard, President of the Washington Stake and a member of the U. S. Tariff Commission.

ELDER EUGENE M. CANNON

Former President of the Tahitian Mission

I hope that none of you good people are shivering like I am. This is a wonderful privilege that has come to me to stand before this vast concourse of people and look into your faces. It has been nearly seven years since I returned from my mission. You brethren who have not yet given your report do not get discouraged.

When I think of the missionary work that has been done by this Church, I can see that great things have been accomplished by the elders. As mentioned yesterday by Elder Spencer W. Kimball, a great missionary work has been done and can be done amongst the dark-skinned people—the Mexicans, the Indians, and the natives of the Pacific Islands. In the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith and when Brigham Young was president of the Quorum of the Twelve there came into the hearts of the brethren a desire to do missionary work among those peoples, and with that in view they selected four humble elders to go to the South Pacific, presumably to the Sandwich Islands. They engaged passage on a sailing vessel leaving New Bedford, Massachusetts in 1843. They proceeded on their way, and having run out of foodstuffs and water, they went ashore after six months of travel. And having rounded the Horn they came up into the Pacific and stopped at the little island of Tubuai in the Society group. The elders went ashore, and the natives were so glad and happy to have missionaries come amongst them that they received them with open arms. The elders built up branches of the Church on those islands and did a great work. It was not long after they had established these branches of the Church that persecution came upon them. The elders were finally banished from the midst of the people, but the natives continued their faithful duties, and I have often thought since then where could we go to any branch of the Church, to any stake of Zion, having been left for 40 years without white elders from Zion and find that they had continued their organizations of the Church. They continued holding their meetings, their quarterly conferences, their fast meetings, their advancements in the priesthood, all during this time of 40 years when there were no white elders from Zion to encourage them and to cause them to be active in the Church as they were in the days when the elders were there. Great credit is due them. They are a people that we can learn to love, whom we do love, wonderfully gifted in many ways. One's heart goes out to them when he visits with them and partakes of their hospitality.

May the blessings of our Heavenly Father continue with us in this conference. May we be impressed with the good works of these people. I bring to you, even at this late date, the expression of love and good feeling of those wonderful people and assure you that the sustaining power of our Heavenly Father is amongst them. May God bless them and us, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

You have just listened to President Eugene M. Cannon, formerly president of the Tahitian Mission.

The Choir will now sing "Still, Still With Thee"—(Shelley).

The closing prayer will be offered by President Lincoln F. Hanks of the Salt Lake Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over the radio stations already announced.

The singing for this session of the Conference has been by members of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

This afternoon the audience will be in their seats, please, not later than ten minutes before the hour of beginning.

After the singing by the Choir, the benediction will be offered by President Lincoln F. Hanks of the Salt Lake Stake.

---

The Choir sang "Still, Still With Thee"—(Shelley).

Elder Lincoln F. Hanks, President of the Salt Lake Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference commenced at 2 o'clock p.m., Saturday, October 4, 1947.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services of this session.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fourth session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne, who is presiding over the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young, presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, and KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The Choir singing for this session will be furnished by members of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the choir singing "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains"—(Harker).

The opening prayer will be offered by President J. Ephraim Wahlquist of the Cottonwood Stake, Murray, Utah.

Singing by the Choir: "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains"—(Harker).

The invocation was offered by President Ephraim Wahlquist of the Cottonwood Stake.

President George Albert Smith:

I can see about a hundred seats that are vacant in the body of the house and in the gallery, that is, they will be vacant if you will move over just a little closer and let a hundred of the people who are standing sit down. We suggest that the ushers assist in this matter.

Elder Jorgen Hyllsted will now sing "Now Heaven in Fullest Glory Shown"—(Haydn), after which Elder Matthew Cowley, of the Quorum of the Twelve, will speak to us.

Elder Jorgen Hyllsted sang a solo: "Now Heaven in Fullest Glory Shown"—(Haydn).

President George Albert Smith:

Our first speaker this afternoon will be Elder Matthew Cowley of the Quorum of the Twelve. Elder Cowley has recently returned from visiting the missions of the South Seas.

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, with all my heart I believe in the gospel of Jesus Christ as the power of God unto salvation, both spiritually and temporally. The testimonies I have heard in this conference have carried conviction into my heart that this gospel is true.

CHURCH BRINGS SALVATION

I know that had we lived in the days of the Master and had we observed him at work, we would have seen him placing in his organization apostles, prophets, teachers, evangelists, high priests, seventies, elders, priests, teachers and deacons. I know that had we heard his disciples bear their message we would have heard them all say that this organization set up by the Son of God is the organization through which the children of God would receive salvation. Had we lived a little longer, had our lives been extended for two or three centuries, we would have observed that this organization set up by the Master had practically disappeared as it had been set up, and yet we would have known, had we studied the words, that there would come a day and a dispensation when there would be a restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of the prophets, when the fulness of the gospel would be brought by one coming through the midst of heaven to the children of God upon the earth.

Now that we live in a dispensation known as the dispensation of the fulness of times, we are blessed and privileged to see an organization with apostles, prophets, teachers, evangelists, quorums of the priesthood, the same agency, the same organization in all of its departments as was set up by Christ our Lord, as his organization, and we are blessed in knowing that it bears his name, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

GRATITUDE FOR FAITH OF TEACHERS

I have been thrilled by the testimonies which have been borne here. I thank God, my brothers and sisters, for the testimonies of men like Brother Oscar Kirkham and Brother Levi Edgar Young. These men were my teachers when I was struggling for an education in high school and in the university. I thank God that they touched my life with their testimony of the gospel more than they did with the instructions they had to give me as teachers of an educational institution. And as I look into the faces of the great educators who sit before me, who have in their charge thousands of our young people at this time. I am glad to know that they are men who know that in any field of science there has not been discovered, and they know that there will never be discovered, anything that will replace religion as the savior of the human family.

It is regrettable that we have in our institutions of learning, my brothers and sisters, some who would try to destroy the simple faith of our children which they have acquired at the knees of their parents and in the auxiliary organizations of the Church. You know and I know that there is no power under heaven in this day which will bring peace to the human heart and peace to the nations of the earth outside and beyond this simple faith in God our Father and in the efficacy of the gospel of Jesus Christ to regenerate the children of God here upon the earth.

You men who are at the head of these great institutions, some of which do not permit the teaching of religion although they do permit the teaching of everything and anything that will destroy faith in God, you have a great responsibility. It is your responsibility to touch the lives of your many students outside of the classroom as my life has been touched by men such as these I have mentioned.

BLESSINGS OF TEMPLE WORK

As President Smith has said, I have recently returned from a visit to the islands of the sea. It does me good to get down there among those great people, simple people with a simple faith in God. And I am reminded as I stand here that beyond this building there stands a temple of God and that down in those islands of the sea, many of them thousands of miles away from these great temples, there are hundreds and thousands of people who are trying to come over to these temples and receive their blessings. You know the promise that the Master made as he hanged upon the cross, one of the most beautiful and considerate of all his promises, a promise made to a sinner when he said to him: "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise."

We know where that promise is today. Brothers and sisters, our people in the islands of the sea, our people in the missions of Europe, know where that promise is. "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise." And how they long to come to participate in the blessings of that promise, how they long to come to the Hawaiian Temple and go in there, as it were, into paradise, to reach back into their ancestry and say, "Today thou shalt be with me; today I will bring you into a knowledge and an appreciation of the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

I have vividly in my recollection the last party of Maoris to come from New Zealand to the Hawaiian Temple, back in 1938. I see them now as they gathered together. President Smith was there, I think, at that time. As they gathered together in Auckland ready to embark, they had their tickets, return tickets. They had no money in their pockets. They carried with them their boxes of food, and they carried their blankets so that they could be fed and warm when they arrived at the temple. Everything they owned was consecrated to the reception of that great blessing, and they went with joy in their hearts. They traveled steerage on the ship, but they were happy, and they returned with a testimony in their hearts that Christ meant what he said when he said to the thief: "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise."

SALVATION FOR THE DEAD

Where is that promise, brothers and sisters, outside of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? As I go about the islands of the sea, I learn that Christianity has only been among those natives a little more than a hundred years. Where is the salvation for the ancestors of those people, the children of Israel, Nephites, who lived prior to one hundred years ago in that vast expanse of ocean on those islands? Where, outside of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is there salvation for the Polynesians of the Pacific who lived prior to the year 1840 in those islands?

Someone has said a bridge has no use unless it reaches both banks. We have the bridge, brothers and sisters, extending from one bank over to the other. You who work in the temples of God cross over that bridge from day to day, and you know that there is no other organization on this earth which has a bridge extending from one bank over to the other so that they can walk across and reach back beyond the year 1840 or 1740, or whatever the year may be, and bring across that bridge those great and noble souls who are our ancestors, the children of God.

God grant that we may have in our hearts the spirit of reaching back into the years and bringing out our people from that place where they are now confined. God grant that we may go into Potter's Field and bring out those broken pieces of clay and join them together into beautiful lives, that they may join with us in the great plan of salvation and exaltation in the kingdom of God. We cannot be saved without our dead, and our dead cannot be saved without us.

Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. . . . I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. (John 5: 28-29; 14:6.)

GATHERING OF GENEALOGIES

That is God's will that all his children who have lived in every day and age and dispensation of time shall come to the Father by his Son; therefore, let us cross the bridge and take the gospel of the Son to our ancestors. Let us study our genealogy. Let us get the names together. Let us not neglect this great and important work, and I know it is important because when I see our people in the islands of the sea writing their names down, gathering their genealogy and trying to get those names over to the temple, trying to get there themselves, I know that within their hearts they know that they are the children of God; they know that their ancestors were the children of God; and no Polynesian islander would want to be saved without his great and noble ancestors.

God grant that we may turn some attention, brothers and sisters, to the work for those who live on, on the other side of the bridge. Let us cross the bridge over to them.

TESTIMONY CONCERNING BRETHREN

I know as I stand here that God lives, that he has not forgotten his children upon the earth. I only wish that you people could have your lives touched as intimately as I have had my life touched during these brief two years I have been associated in the councils of these great and good men. Do not anyone ever say that any man who belongs to the councils of this Church has ever come into the councils because he needs or he wants monetary remuneration or because he wants wealth. If there is any man who is opposed to the welfare plan and program of this Church, I would like to have an argument with him if he thinks the brethren who sit here on this stand are not living on the welfare program, are not giving up much of this world's goods, its luxuries and its wealth by accepting the call.

Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. (Matt. 4:19.)

God bless us all with the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ. God bless you men who are educators, you men who sit before me who stand at the heads of political organizations and occupy high government offices, that you may ever realize that there is no salvation outside of the plan of true religion, that there is nothing in political science or in physical science, or in any other science, that will replace the simple gospel of Jesus Christ as the power of God for the salvation of his children.

God bless us all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

My dear brothers and sisters, and I do regard you as my brothers and sisters, I feel very humble and very frightened in looking into the faces of this great congregation in this, the tabernacle of the Lord. I have sincerely prayed that the Lord would bless me while I occupy this position that I may say some words of meaning, of encouragement, that I may be directed by the Holy Spirit in whatever I say. I sincerely trust that the Lord will bless you that you may meditate during the conference, that you may worship and that you may feel his holy influence.

We come here to worship and to bear testimony and to partake of the Spirit of the Lord, so that we can discharge our duties more faithfully and so that we can live according to his plan. The choir today has touched our souls with beautiful music, and I am sure we are grateful to this organization.

TABERNACLE CHOIR

A year ago I had occasion to go to Mexico City with a businessman of the East. We discussed religion pro and con, and then I asked him what faith he belonged to, and he answered me humbly that he belonged to the religion of the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir. That was his religion. Well, I am sure they touch the hearts of men each week, and I am sure they mellow their souls. As you probably know, they leave this coming week for San Bernardino to participate in a centennial pageant there. They will broadcast next Sunday to the world from San Bernardino.

One cannot teach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ without the Spirit of the Lord. I am convinced of that. One cannot be taught the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ without the Spirit of the Lord. I am convinced of that. One cannot teach, nor one cannot be taught, without that sweet Spirit.

I am grateful for my membership in the Lord's Church. I have learned to love men as I did not think I ever knew how to love men.

These men that I have become associated with, and particularly the Presiding Bishopric and the other brethren, are the finest men in all the world. I humbly pray to God that he will bless me that I may measure up to the responsibility and the confidence of these men and of you, my brethren and sisters.

A TRIBUTE TO CHURCH OFFICIALS

As I go from stake conference to stake conference and meet new stake presidents every week, I meet equally fine men, men who are devoted to the Church, men who would give their all in the service of the Lord, if they were asked to. We come to you as strangers, and you take care of us, see that we are properly housed, and your wives are so good to feed us and look after us. You extend to us your kindness and your courtesies, and as we kneel down with you in your family prayers, our hearts are touched, and we are inspired by the great devotion of you men holding those responsible positions.

A VISIT TO THE SACRED GROVE

Brother [Albert E.] Bowen and others have referred to the Prophet Joseph as one of the most important influences in the lives of all of us. A week ago I had an opportunity to walk into the Sacred Grove, the place where that young man, Joseph, walked and prayed to the Lord to help him. One cannot walk into that grove without feeling that spirit of reverence, that spirit of sacredness, the only spot, if my memory serves me right, where God and his son Jesus Christ both appeared at the same time, at the same place, and they spoke to that boy. Oh, that is a fact! You cannot go into the grove but what you feel that influence. It is different from any other wooded grove in all the world, because it is a sacred place and a hallowed spot. That grove is right behind the house where his father and mother lived and where Joseph lived as a boy; and right down the road a little way—you who have not been there—is that other sacred spot, the Hill Cumorah, where the angel of the Lord appeared to that boy, not once, but in four consecutive years, before he delivered to him the golden plates, and from them came the Book of Mormon. That boy did not write that book. Then he sealed that testimony by giving his life. How much more evidence do we need? Surely the world must accept that as truth. And it would be well if we would stimulate that belief in the hearts and souls of our young people. If they can only feel that influence, that one feels when he is there, they would need never to doubt nor would they need ever to worry.

Before I left the grove, I asked those that were with me if I could remain a little while. Then I knelt down before my Father in heaven by that big tree, and I tried to pour out my heart to him as I had never tried before. I bear you my testimony that the influence of the Lord is there, that all of that is true. I did not intend to say that, but the Sacred Grove and the recent memory of it were fresh in my mind.

THE YOUTH OF THE CHURCH

I would like to say just a word more with reference to the young people of the Church. We your fathers and mothers and your elders, love you deeply. I do not know whether the young people of the Church can understand that we love them so much, or whether they will be able to understand it or not until they have children of their own, but at least we want them to know that our entire love goes out to them. We are concerned about them because we know some of the pitfalls of life, and we know some of the experiences of the social trends. We know some of the teachings that are contrary to the teachings of the Church. We know some of the articles that they read, and we know the speeded highway and the high-powered automobiles, and that is why we are worried about them, because we love our children so much. And I would say to the young people of the Church, stay close to your parents. You boys of the Church, if I could only touch your hearts to urge you to tell your dads everything that goes on in your lives. I feel sorry for a young man who cannot tell his dad everything. And I feel sorry for a young girl who cannot tell her mother everything. We know you will make mistakes, sometimes, but we will love you just the same, and we hope that we can instil confidence in you, that you will come and confide in us. If we expect to share your joys, we must expect to share your sorrows and your mistakes and your problems.

Recently there appeared an article in a popular magazine on the subject of Mormonism, and one of the references in that magazine was to the effect that the young people of the Church are sliding back or slipping away. That I do not believe. And in behalf of the young people of the Church, I feel that I can deny that statement. When I hear young people in the conferences bear their testimonies, they are brilliant; they are serious; and they want to live close to the Lord.

I heard a great man say a few years ago when he placed his hands upon the head of a bishop to bless him, that some of the choicest spirits that had ever been born into the world were the young people of the Church today. I am sure the writer of that article would not understand that we have four thousand choice young men and women out in the world today, paying their own expenses, gladly, to proclaim the gospel and share their testimony and their faith with those who are less fortunate. And if it need be and the Church would call upon volunteers from young men and women, it could possibly raise hundreds of thousands of missionaries to go into the world on twenty-four hours' notice.

Oh, we realize that the young people may make mistakes. Most of us have made mistakes in our lives. But may we also realize that those same young people, if they will only stay close to the Lord, the Lord will forgive his people for mistakes. I think if a father and a mother are so far away from their young people that their young people will not come to them and tell them about their problems, then there is something wrong between father and son and mother and daughter.

May the young people of this Church stay close to their Father in heaven and may time prove that the writer of that article, stating that the young people are sliding back, will be disproved without question.

STAY CLOSE TO THE LORD

I can bear testimony to the young people of the Church that the Lord will help you in all of your problems, in all of your mistakes, in all of your joys and satisfactions if you will only let him. May we humbly pray to the Lord and be so diligent that we may stay in close communion with the Spirit of the Lord and so live that the Lord can easily manifest himself unto us, so that he can feel our humility and so that we can feel his Spirit, then we can humbly say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

May that be our happy lot. May we truly love one another, realizing that there are thousands of men who are less fortunate than we, that we may give of ourselves and our means and our energy for those who are less fortunate. May God bless us that we may stay close to him under all conditions, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My beloved brethren and sisters, I need an interest in your faith and prayers if the few moments I occupy your time shall be spent to any profit, and I pray that the Spirit of God will direct the testimony which I may offer to you this afternoon, for I stand before you in firm belief and with the knowledge that we represent God our Heavenly Father; that we are carrying on his work in the hope that we who have this responsibility shall be a blessing and a comfort to his people.

PIONEER STANDARDS AND IDEALS

Since President Smith began the conference by referring to the fact that this is a centennial year, recounting some of the accomplishments of the Church during the century that has passed since we arrived in this valley, I have been thinking a little about that myself. I wonder how nearly we of this day live the ideals and the standards of our grandfathers and our grandmothers who came into this valley, some of whom moved on into other parts of this state and the adjoining states. Their ideals were high and lofty. They had noble purpose in coming here because they had the testimony that the gospel had been restored, and they believed that their life, though it should all be one in sacrifice, should be dedicated to the promulgation of that great truth, and the development of the Church which has the responsibility of carrying that into effect.

Both of my grandfathers came here at a very early date and from here both of them moved south to St. George. I have been reading a little lately about St. George and its development. Those people carried in their hearts the same ideals, and they undertook the same problems, acquitting themselves wonderfully well.

FOUNDING OF ST. GEORGE

I believe that St. George is one of the very few cities of the country which was founded deliberately with a specially selected group of men and women. Every family that was called to that settlement was headed by a man of some special attainment, and he was called for a very special purpose. Under the wise direction that they had, they made a wonderful development.

They arrived in St. George in December, and it was an inhospitable place. They were hardly located until they began to think about public buildings for their use. Before any of them had homes in which to live, they began to think of the education of their children and the erection of schoolhouses, and then the next thought was for a suitable place in which to worship God, so they proceeded to build a tabernacle. You can realize that going as they did in the dead of winter they had no opportunity to raise crops to sustain themselves, and some of them were hard put to carry on. But the Church realized that and came to their rescue in this way, that they fostered the development of these public buildings so that those capable men would have something to do to earn their way. Much of that work was done as outright donations to the cause, but some of it was done in the spirit of our present welfare work. It was an early illustration of the purpose and program that we are trying to carry out today, and it required sacrifice, sacrifice of a high quality.

GENEROSITY EXHIBITED

When I think of it, I think of the good old brother who lived in Washington, a few miles from St. George. When the time came to put the glass into the tabernacle, I believe it was, there was no money with which to buy it. It had to be procured in California. Men with their teams were ready to go and get it, but there was no money available, and this good brother had recently received from England a thousand dollars, and a thousand dollars in those days was a fortune. He slept on that a night or two and thought it over, then one morning he arose and walked the distance from Washington City to St. George and put that thousand dollars into the hands of the brethren. The teams went off to California and brought back the glass and other supplies that were necessary. Thus the building was completed.

I wonder how many of us today, if we were faced with that same problem, would have the courage, with an outlook such as he had, to do the thing he did. It was a noble gesture, a wonderful thing. And why do you think he did it? Do you think he had any idea that in making that contribution the brethren would look at him and maybe make him a bishop or something of that sort? Not in the world. It was sheer devotion to the work of the Lord that prompted him to do it. Can we do it today? That was one of the high and lofty ideals of those pioneer grandfathers of ours.

SPIRIT OF INDEPENDENCE

Then they had other desires and other ideals, and one of them was that every man among them should sustain himself by his own labor as long as he could and in that spirit all the work of the development of that very difficult section was done. Many times the river had to be conquered. It was conquered in that same spirit that men should provide for themselves the means of their support, and I believe today that most of them have that same ideal down there, the spirit of independence. I would that every man and woman in this Church should have deep in his heart the pride in accomplishment that would force him to sustain himself as long as he has the power within him to do it!

I grant you that unfortunate people must be taken care of by the rest of us who are more fortunate, but I still feel, as I have said before, that every able-bodied man, or a woman for that matter, who can sustain himself should do it as long as he has that power, that he may be useful in his community.

In those days when a man said, "I will do it," he did it. That was the genius of the Church, that a man's word was as good as his bond. In those days we had little cause for recourse to the courts of the land, because such disagreements as developed were settled between the brethren before the presiding officers of the Church.

MEASURING UP TO LOFTY IDEALS

Do we still have that high and lofty ideal of honesty, of integrity, that when we say, "We will," it is an accomplished fact? Some of us come to feel that unless the other man happens to get our signature to a written document we are not under obligation. But, brethren, a document with a signature on is just evidence, and our word is the thing that counts, and if we would honor our pioneer ancestors, we will live our obligations as they did. We will be honest; we will be true; and we will be devoted; we will be generous with what comes into our hands, realizing that anything that we may attain is through the grace and mercy of God. We will be humble, and we will realize that in our hearts there is no place for pride. The proud man, in my estimation, is always looking in the wrong direction. He is looking perhaps, behind him at unfortunate people, but if he looked before him at his ideals, or at people equally blessed or better, he would find that he is so far behind what he might do that he ought to be humble.

And if we follow our grandfathers we will be prayerful. That is a thing I think that we ought to bear in mind these days, for in our investigations we find that the percentage of our priesthood bearers who are willing to claim that they have regular family prayers in their households is altogether too small. If we could stimulate that thought as we come among you, as your servants, and bring you just a bit closer to God we would feel that our ministry was a success.

FAITH IN YOUTH

Now, like our brother [Thorpe B. Isaacson] who just preceded me, I want to express to you that I have faith also in the young people of today. I have said it to you before, and I have no reason for changing it. I interview many of your sons and daughters before they go into the mission field. I feel their pulse and their spirit and their hearts, and I testify to you that it is a gratifying thing indeed to become acquainted with them before they go into the mission field and then follow through afterwards and find them out there, far from home, in the adverse conditions under which their work must be carried on, still faithful and growing in power and influence under the Spirit of God. I have faith in them, and I believe if we put our trust in them, and if we teach them properly that they will realize the standards of our grandfathers, the ideals and ambitions that they had in coming to this far-off land, they will measure up to the expectancy that we have of them.

May God grant that we may realize these things and that every man and woman shall go from this conference with a determination in his heart that he will magnify his calling and his opportunities that he may be worthy of the heritage that has come to him from those pioneers, I pray, in Jesus' name. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

It may be interesting to some of you people to know that Brother Ivins who has just spoken to us has presided over the Mexican people on the north side of the Rio Grande, the Spanish-American Mission. He has also presided in Hawaii. I think it might have been interesting if I had told you where all the rest of these men had been, but it did not occur to me until just now.

The Choir and congregation will now sing:

"How Firm A Foundation"—

Elder J. Spencer Cornwall is conducting. After the singing, President Richard L. Evans, of the First Council of the Seventy, will speak to us. Richard L. Evans is probably better known—his voice is probably better known—than any man in this part of the world, as he talks to the world, at least a large portion of it, every Sunday from this Tabernacle.

Singing by the Choir and congregation: "How Firm a Foundation."

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I am always awed in the presence of this congregation. I am much more accustomed to seeing these seats empty or only partially filled. For eighteen years I have been in this building almost every week, usually a number of times each week.

I think I have been in this Tabernacle at every hour of the day and night, at one time or another. I love the spirit of it, and I have been well aware of the memory and the achievements and the spirit of those generations of stalwart men and women who have come and gone here. These walls speak great things of the past, and I am as firmly convinced that they speak great things of the future.

BRETHREN WHO HAVE PASSED ON

I have been thinking as I have been sitting here today of those of my brethren with whom I have occupied these seats who are not now with us. Many of them have passed away during my brief association here. Five of my own Council of seven men (including the one whose vacancy I was called to fill) have gone in these years, and a like number of the Quorum of the Twelve. The ranks of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric have also been touched by death during these brief years.

Of course, no one ever quite completely takes the place of anyone else. But able and good men come along and take their own places and make their own contributions in their own way in their own time and generation. I have no fear of a continuing leadership in this Church and a continuing faithful membership, and no fear of the faltering of the oncoming generations, those youth of ours who have been spoken of here already this afternoon.

President Smith did some reminiscing in his opening remarks of yesterday morning, and I would like to continue for a few moments of thinking back and thinking ahead with a few comparative figures.

GROWTH OF CHURCH

It is forty-four years ago, this conference, I believe, since President Smith first came to the Council of the Twelve Apostles. At that time the Church had fifty-one stakes; it now has one hundred sixty-eight. There were only three stakes then in Salt Lake County; there are now twenty-four in Salt Lake County.

Part of what this means is this: Whereas, then, forty-four years ago, there were two hundred and four stake conferences a year, there are now nearly seven hundred of these appointments to be filled by someone—672 to be exact, or 468 more stake conferences to be conducted each year than there were forty-four years ago.

There have been nineteen stakes come into existence since President Smith became President of the Church, these past two years and more. This means that seventy-six stake conferences have been added to the annual schedule of this Church in the past two years, since President Smith's administration began.

There were twenty-one missions when President Smith became a member of the Council of the Twelve. There are forty-four missions today, I believe (unless more have been created in the last day or two.)

This is no longer a small Church. The latest religious census that I have seen, the one recently published in the Christian Herald, and in the Associated Press, and elsewhere, indicates that today there are only thirteen religious denominations in the United States larger than this one, out of some two hundred fifty. Only five, exclusive of the merging of two churches, had a greater increase of membership during the most recent period reported, and none of the larger denominations had a greater per capita increase of membership.

INCREASE OF RESPONSIBILITY

Now whatever else this may mean, it means certainly no less than this: that an increasing number of people are going to have to take increasing responsibility in the wards and stakes and missions of this Church.

And it isn't only membership and stake units that have increased, but all of the other problems and their perplexities. It isn't only ordinations and setting apart of officers, but so many, many administrative and personnel problems and all else that pertains to a worldwide operation. Life is not as simple as once it was.

I see the First Presidency in their offices at Church headquarters early and late. I see them there over weekends and on holidays when the building is supposedly closed. They and their associates, the Quorum of the Twelve, their Assistants, the First Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, and all the others who labor in this cause are worked to the limit, I can testify to you of my personal knowledge. When they are not in their offices they are traveling or filling other assignments and appointments. Few, indeed, are the days or hours that they have for themselves or for their families. I marvel at what they do; I wonder how they do it.

And I know that you in the wards and stakes are likewise crowded in your lives and are accomplishing beyond what men ordinarily are expected to accomplish. And it is only with the help of the Lord that such things are possible.

ACCEPTING RESPONSIBILITY IN THE CHURCH

The work wouldn't need to be so burdensome to anyone, or at least, not to the extent that it is, if we had a broader base of activity—if everyone who held membership in the Church were carrying his full share of the load.

I was thinking the other night as I witnessed the excellent Aaronic Priesthood pageant which was presented here, and which has been referred to previously in this conference, that some twenty percent of the total priesthood of this Church are members of the Aaronic Priesthood over twenty-one years of age. They are good and able men, and among them is a reservoir of leadership and of service almost as yet untapped.

There are many other sources of untapped leadership and service in this Church. And I plead with all of you, my brethren, who are in positions of responsibility and leadership, in the wards and stakes and the missions, to put your arms around these brethren and sisters who are nominally members but who are not in activity and bring them into service in this Church for their own sakes and for the good of the work. You will bring great blessings to their lives as well as great blessings to the Church if you do so.

Even if it takes longer sometimes to convince a man that he ought to labor in an assignment than it would take to do the assignment yourselves, it will ultimately bear richer fruit if you persuade someone who is relatively inactive to render some service. It is better to have three men do one job each than to have one man do three jobs. The secret of the strength of this Church (in addition to what we know to be its foundational strength, the power and authority and priesthood of God our Father), is the activity of the men and women who give their lives and their means and their devotion and their faith and works.

AVOID GIVING OFFENSE

Referring again to the pageant that was presented, I recall that one of the reasons given why some did not continue in activity was that they had been offended. This is a common cause of complaint, sometimes real and sometimes imagined, sometimes merely a statement of convenience. But whatever it is, I plead with you also, you who are in positions of leadership and who are dealing with other men, to avoid, if you can, giving cause for offense.

And I say to you who feel that you have been offended, this isn't sufficient reason for withdrawing yourself from activity in the Church and kingdom of God.

I know of no perfect men; I know of no man in whom others could not find fault if they were looking for it. But the imperfections of men don't change facts. It doesn't matter who makes a mistake, the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is still true. And any man who withdraws himself from activity because he has been offended or because he thinks he has (or because he is afraid he is going to be) is depriving himself of blessings which have nothing to do whatever with the acts and the imperfections of the men by whom he may think he has been offended.

And I say again, may we earnestly avoid giving offense. I have pleaded in a number of the stakes where I have been, and I plead with you here, that we be as considerate of the feelings of men when we release them from office as we are when we appoint them to office. We wait upon them, and we are solicitous and long-suffering when we are seeking someone to take a position. And then, I am afraid, some of us have sometimes been guilty of dropping men unceremoniously from office when it seemed that for some reason a change would be indicated for the good of the work or for the good of the man, or to give someone else opportunity.

I plead with you to be as considerate of your brethren when you are releasing them as you are when you are persuading them to accept an office, or an obligation. This is but one means of avoiding giving offense, which has been the real or alleged cause of many of our brethren and sisters withdrawing themselves from activity in the Church.

I see that the time is passing very rapidly. It often does so when one is speaking. I am not always so sure it does when one is listening. But I would like to close with just one other thought suggested by a proverb recently recalled by Carl Sandburg: "This old anvil laughs at many broken hammers."

CONFIDENCE IN CHURCH

We do live in a day of much confusion, of much purpose and counter-purpose, and of many theories that beat upon the anvil, of many schemes and organizations and all manner of confused ideas among men, in addition to the fears and forebodings which are so much a part of the daily lives of so many of the people of this world in this day. And it is comforting to know where the old anvil is, and that it is equal to all of the hammers that pound at it, and all of the blows that would break it.

I have no fear for the future of this Church; I have no fear for the future of anyone in this Church who lives as well as he knows how to live. And I pray my Father in heaven, with you, that he will help all of us not merely to be inheritors of the truth, nor possessors of it, but also to use it, to live it, to proclaim it, and to be worthy of the confidence of our children, to be worthy of the confidence of those who look to us for leadership, to be worthy of the blessings of our Father in heaven.

I testify to you of the conviction of my soul as to the truthfulness of those things which are proclaimed here, and have been, and which this Church represents, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is an awe-inspiring sight to stand here and look into the faces of this vast audience. It is in humility that I occupy this position today. I pray to our Father in heaven that his Spirit will attend me.

I desire to direct my remarks this afternoon to the youth of the Church. I, like the brethren who have spoken previously, have a strong faith and admiration and love for the youth of the Church. I know that they have a testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ and that they will carry on faithfully.

BLESSINGS PROVIDED FOR YOUTH

Youth of the Church, young men and young women, you are the richest people in the world. Some of you may say in your minds that you have no money. I care not whether you have ten cents or a million dollars. Money perishes; but the wealth that you have surpasses anything that you can gain here in this world which is of the world. You are members of the true Church of Jesus Christ and are recipients of the restored gospel of our Lord and Savior. You have the Holy Priesthood after the order of the Son of God. You have at your command all the blessings which come to those who love God and keep his commandments, even the promise of the blessing of eternal life which he says is the greatest gift that he has for man (D. & C. 14:7; 6:7) if you will but serve the Lord your God with all your heart, might, mind, and strength. (Ibid., 4:2; 50:5; 51:19.)

More than a hundred years ago God the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and opened up the last dispensation of the gospel. Following this great vision a number of heavenly beings appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and bestowed upon him all the gifts, blessings, powers, ordinances, and priesthood necessary for the salvation of the human family. It is this priesthood and these gifts and blessings which the youth of the Church today possess.

GOSPEL BRINGS JOY

The gospel of Jesus Christ was given to us in order that we might have joy. In fact,

Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. (II Nephi 2: 25.)

It is God's purpose and will that we might be happy today, tomorrow, next week, a hundred years from now—yes, a million years from now. You may say in your mind, "But we won't live that long." We will live that long. Life is eternal, and the thing that is important to remember is that the way we live today, and the way we live throughout mortality, will determine our happiness throughout eternity, will determine our status forever.

In order to illustrate what I have in mind, I would like to tell an old story. There was once an old dog that went to the meat market and secured a piece of meat. On the road home he had to cross over a bridge that spanned a stream of water. As he reached the middle of that bridge, he looked down into the sparkling water and saw another dog with a piece of meat in his mouth. He became covetous and decided that he would have the meat the other dog possessed. Thereupon he opened his mouth and grabbed after that meat, and as he did so, his meat dropped into the water and floated away. To his sorrow, the old dog found that he was grabbing after a shadow.

SHADOWS OF TRUE HAPPINESS

Youth of the Church, there are many shadows of true happiness that you will be tempted to grab after, and I promise you that if you grab after them, you will be like that old dog. You will find that you have lost the good things that you now possess—happiness, the gospel, and probably eternal life—and you will receive in return only a shadow of true happiness. The things that I have in mind we call sins, all of the sins that we may commit. Remember that Alma, the ancient Nephite prophet, warned us that “wickedness never was happiness.” (Alma 41:10; Helaman 13:38.)

TOBACCO HABIT

There are three or four shadows of true happiness that I would like to point out briefly today. The first one of them is the use of tobacco. Every young man in the Church, and I am sorry to say that today every young woman in the Church also, is tempted and will continue to be tempted to take up the habit of tobacco. In fact your friends may already have taken up this habit. They may say to you: “Come on, take a smoke. It’s smart to smoke. It’s being a good sport to smoke. All important people smoke. Have a good time while you are young, and you can repent when you get old.” In fact they not only make these remarks but also put forth all sorts of other arguments to induce you to use tobacco.

Young people, youth of the Church, it is the devil that is talking through your friends to try to induce you to adopt that evil habit. He wants you to be unhappy. He desires to tear down your spiritual, physical, and mental life and to destroy your chances for a fullness of joy. For these reasons he is putting forth his strongest efforts to try to induce you to take up the tobacco habit.

NICOTINE A DEADLY POISON

Tobacco, as we all know, is very poisonous. It kills the body. In order to illustrate how deadly the poison is in tobacco, I would like to tell a story that took place in my own family when I was just leaving my teens. I had a sister who was at that time thirty-seven years old. She was the mother of seven children. On this occasion her children had the whooping cough. She went one day with her husband down to the farm, about six or seven miles below town. Upon arriving there her husband found that he had to drive a cow home; and so he brought my sister up to a little store about four miles below town, left her there, and went back on his horse to the farm. When my sister went into the store, the lady back of the counter asked her how her children were getting along with the whooping cough. She replied, "Not very well." Then the lady picked up from the counter a bottle which was about half full of a black substance. The label on the bottle read, "Whooping Cough Medicine." The clerk said to my sister, "This is the best whooping cough medicine that I have ever seen. I don't have any in the store right now, but I can order some for you if you wish me to." Then she laid the bottle down and went to the telephone to call my sister's son for the purpose of having him come down to her store to drive the car and take his mother home.

My sister picked up the bottle, pulled out the cork, smelled the contents of the bottle and then took a taste. She said, "My this is nasty." Then she instantly fell over dead. The doctor was rushed to the scene. Upon examining the contents of the bottle, he declared it to be straight nicotine. He said that nicotine was one of the most deadly poisons that people could take and that the one swallow that my sister had taken had gone directly to her brain and had suddenly killed her.

Young people, that is the deadly poison that we take into our bodies when we smoke or chew tobacco.

Tobacco not only kills the body, but it kills the spirit—it kills spirituality. It is incompatible for a man holding the Holy Priesthood of God to use tobacco and to study the Bible or to use tobacco and to keep up his Church activities. Usually when he picks up the habit of tobacco he lays down the Holy Scriptures, he decreases his Church activities, and he becomes to a certain extent spiritually dead, which is the worst death that we can die.

God has given us the commandment that we should not kill. Youth of the Church, when we take poisons into our bodies knowingly we are to a certain extent breaking this great law.

THE DRINKING HABIT

Another shadow of true happiness which I would like to mention today is more damaging in its effects than is the habit of tobacco. It is the habit of drinking liquor. Elder Joseph F. Merrill has already graphically described the bad effects of alcohol and so I will be very brief on this subject.

It is my honest opinion that the devil has never discovered or invented a tool outside of liquor which is more destructive to the human soul. He has no other tool which can bring human beings down into misery, poverty, and degradation, which can cause corruption, and which can cause people to commit all other kinds of sins more than by having them use liquor. People when they get drunk are not in their right minds. In other words, they are crazy. While under the influence of liquor, the moral controls of men and women are relaxed, and they commit many sins that they would not otherwise do, such as adultery and murder. I know, youth of the Church, that the devil puts it into the hearts of wicked men to give our lovely girls liquor and get them drunk in order that they might rob them of their virtue.

In referring to alcohol, Robert G. Ingersoll said:

It murders the soul; it is the sum of all villainy, the father of all crime, the mother of all abominations, the devil's best friend, and God's worst enemy. (Editorial, Church Section, Deseret News, September 27, 1947.)

Today I call upon all the youth of the Church to make a resolution that you will never take a smoke. If you already have taken one, that you will never take another one. That you will never take a drop of liquor in any form. If you have already done so, that you will repent and resolve today that as long as you live you will never take another drop of liquor. I promise you that if you will make this resolution and never break it that you will be happy throughout this life and throughout eternity, because you have kept your bodies clean.

SEX IMMORALITY

A third shadow of true happiness I would like to point out is even worse than the other two. It is sex immorality. I firmly believe that there is no sin that human beings commit that causes a loss of happiness, that causes the people to be degraded more completely, that breaks up homes more thoroughly, that ruins love more permanently, that drives out the Spirit of God and causes apostasy from the true Church more definitely than does the sin of sex immorality.

All the way through history the prophets of God have taught the value of virtue. In fact, you and I can still hear the voice of God crying down from Mt. Sinai to Moses,

Thou shalt not commit adultery. (Exodus 20:14.)

Alma, the great Nephite prophet, told his son, Corianton, who had had an illicit association with the harlot Isabel, the following:

Know ye not, my son, that these things are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins save it be the shedding of innocent blood or denying the Holy Ghost? (Alma 39:5.)

The prophets in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Presidents of the Church from the beginning down to the present time, have declared that our virtue is as valuable to us as is our life, and we should guard our virtue with our life.

More than a hundred years ago the Lord revealed the following to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear.

Wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whore-monger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

Verily I say, that they shall not have part in the first resurrection. . . .

But unto him that keepeth my commandments I will give the mysteries of my kingdom, and the same shall be in him a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life. (D. & C. 63:16-18, 23.)

BODIES ARE TEMPLES OF GOD

Youth of the Church, again I call upon you to make a resolution that you will keep your bodies clean and pure in every respect. Obey all the words that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God, living all the principles of the gospel to the best of your ability in order that you might be happy. Do these things in order that you might have that joy which God wishes you to have. Remember at all times that your bodies are temples of God, as Paul, the ancient apostle, has said:

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (I Corinthians 3:16, 17.)

If we will do all these things as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, most of the youth of the Church in due time will have the privilege of going into the house of the Lord with the one of his or her choice and there be married not only for life but also for all eternity, and the children which are born under that covenant shall be theirs forever. These blessings, however, are predicated on a continuance of righteous living.

BLESSINGS PROMISED TO RIGHTEOUS

When the great judgment day comes, and when all men and women who have been true and faithful in all things stand before the judgment seat of God the Eternal Father and Jesus the Christ to give an account of their actions, words, and thoughts, while in mortality, it shall be said unto them,

Well done my beloved servants, enter ye into your exaltation. Receive your life eternal.

And at that day this great scripture which was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith shall be fulfilled:

. . . and they shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever. [And the Prophet Joseph Smith said that promise meant to have the power to beget spirit children.]

Then shall they be gods, because they have no end; therefore shall they be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue; then shall they be above all, because all things are subject unto them. Then shall they be gods, because they have all power, and the angels are subject unto them.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye abide my law ye cannot attain to this glory.

For strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto the exaltation and continuation of the lives, and few there be that find it, because ye receive me not in the world neither do ye know me. (D. & C. 132:19-22.)

This is life eternal, my brothers and sisters. This is the exaltation which the gospel of Jesus Christ promises those who love God and keep his commandments.

I humbly pray to our Father in heaven that he will bless the youth of the Church that they might live clean and pure in every way, walking righteously and undefiled before God, that they might receive this great exaltation of life eternal, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Lest I forget, I call your attention to the fact that there is a beautiful monument now placed on the north side of the Tabernacle, the monument portraying the coming of the Handcart companies.

When conference commenced I referred to the fact that we had a distinguished visitor with us who is a grandson of Thomas L. Kane. I stand here to say that I know of no one man who more willingly gave of himself and his means for the blessing and the preservation of the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints than did Colonel Thomas L. Kane. About ninety years ago when Johnston's army was on its way here for the avowed purpose of driving our people again, that great man, for he was a great man, without any encouragement, so far as I know, from the membership of the Church, made a long trip and came to this country and was the means of holding back the army until the falsehoods that had been circulated about the Church had been made known, and our people were not compelled again to take to the wilderness.

Brother Frank Evans, who for many years has been prominent among us in various capacities—the President of the Eastern States Mission at one time—I think is as familiar with the story of Thomas L. Kane as any of us, and after ninety years I felt it would be an appropriate thing to have portrayed before us by Brother Evans the life of that great and good man whose grandson is visiting with us at the present time. I hope he feels that he is more than welcome.

Brother Frank Evans.

ELDER FRANK EVANS

My brethren and sisters, I am very sure you appreciate the difficulty of speaking extemporaneously and without previous notice, on matters of history, and particularly so when they center about and reflect the personality of a man whose reputation we hold in the very highest esteem and toward whom we feel the deepest debt of gratitude. I am reassured, however, when I look at faces that I recognize, for I am sensitive to your kindness, good will, and your spirit of charity. I never stop to question the advisability of calling on people without previous notice. I have no criticism of it at all. I think it must be right because the brethren so often do it. I am very grateful for this opportunity and pray that I shall be true to the facts as far as I can recall them.

In the early years of the Church, in what was called the "Eastern Section," a young man who had had some contact with the heads of the Church and whose devotion to the Cause was well known, was given an assignment to go to Washington to discharge some important duties. It was the year 1846. He was not a man of great experience, but evidently a man of courage. He had gone to Washington, and during an interim in which he was waiting for the consummation of some appointments with Federal officials, he decided to magnify the time and go to Philadelphia where there was a Branch of the Church and quite a large number of Saints, and to hold meetings there.

At the same time, there was in that city a young man—24 years of age—a Philadelphian, a man the like of whom this missionary had, perhaps, never met. He was well educated. His background was unusual. His was a family of culture, of refinement, and of achievement. He had a brother, Elisha, who in later years won distinction by northern explorations. This young man had been graduated as a lawyer and was a member of the Bar. He was slight of build, frail of body, brilliant of mind. It is reported by relatives of these brothers that doctors had at times despaired of their ever reaching advanced age.

As this young Philadelphian approached a hall in which a Mormon meeting was being held, he heard a voice, and perhaps attracted by its very earnestness, he took a place in the congregation and listened to a sermon delivered by the missionary of whom I speak. I think it must have been an hour in length. At the close of the meeting the young man walked up and introduced himself as Thomas L. Kane. In response the missionary said, "I am Jesse C. Little." "Mr. Little," said he, "would you have an appointment with me this evening at my father's home?" His father was Judge John K. Kane of the Federal Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Of course the invitation was accepted, and it is related that their conversation extended over a long period. At its conclusion, another meeting was arranged and the discussion was continued.

It appears that the talk was mainly about the condition of the Church in Nauvoo at that time, for the Saints were just then being driven from their homes, and even those least informed, those who read the dispatches at all, knew of the indignities that were being heaped upon these people. These were the things that appealed to the compassionate nature of Thomas L. Kane. And, examining his background, his ancestry, we find that he was only responding as it was the custom of the Kanes to respond in times of need.

A few days passed and these two young men were in Washington. Mr. Kane was well acquainted there, partly through his father, partly on his own account. He introduced Jesse C. Little to members of the Cabinet and to the Vice-President, the messages were effectively delivered, and the assignment given to Little carried out, and within a short time the two were making their way toward the West.

Not long thereafter Thomas L. Kane looked upon the City of Nauvoo for the first time. In later years he described it as a most beautiful, an entrancing sight as he saw it from the Iowa side of the river. After noting the homes, his eyes wandered to the heights upon which the temple stood, and he described how the building with its spire of white and gold shown in the sunlight. He crossed the river, went into the city, looked into a blacksmith shop with the forge lately warm, but no one there; the carpenter shop with shavings upon the lathe, but no workman to be found; noticed the beautiful gardens in a perfect state of preservation, flowers, shrubs, but no one attending them. He made his way to the temple and was met by ruffians who challenged him and demanded to know what right he had there. Their suspicions allayed, they invited him to come into the temple and displayed to him how they had befouled it and dishonored it, and gloated over the fact. One can imagine how that sensitive, appreciative personality recoiled at these indignities.

Before long he was following the path that had been broken by the fleeing Saints towards the Missouri. Overtaking them, he found them suffering and ill. He gave them succor and put forth his utmost efforts to relieve their misery.

While Thomas L. Kane was with the Saints at the camp of Israel, he fell ill. He was nursed to health by the good women and men, and there he was given a blessing by Father John Smith, great-grandfather of President George Albert Smith. Just a phrase or two from that. Knowing as we now do the hazards that the chosen course of this young man would probably bring upon him, the assurances given him are significant: "Not an hair of thine head shall ever fall by the hand of an enemy." And another: "Thou art appointed to do a great work on the earth," and if you remain true to your course in behalf of this people (or words to that effect), "thy name shall be had in honorable remembrance among the Saints to all generations."

Let us go on now, just passing to say that during the intervening years until the event occurred of which I shall briefly speak, he gave constant attention evidently to the exclusion of everything else, to the welfare of this people. Nearly twelve years later, when all the evil forces seemed to concentrate against the Saints, it was learned that United States troops were moving toward this valley. When Thomas L. Kane learned of this impending threat, he was impelled to do something about it.

And, by the way, it was on the 24th of July, 1857, while the Saints were celebrating in the mountains to the east of us the tenth anniversary of the arrival of the Pioneers in Salt Lake Valley, that Brigham Young and his associates were advised, by three messengers, of this new danger. President Young very quietly withdrew, returned to the city, and then announced the situation to the people—that the United States Army was practically upon our borders.

But winter came on—a very cold and severe winter—and Thomas L. Kane, upon his own initiative but with an apparent conviction in his heart that he could do something about it, with no portfolio, but as a private citizen in the confidence of the administration, made his way to this valley. He knew of but one way to reach it in time and that was to cross Panama, sail up the Pacific upon an itinerant steamer, and then overland to Salt Lake City. At San Bernardino he met some Mormon friends who helped to outfit him there, and by traveling night and day, he soon reached the Valley.

He wrote from Las Vegas to Brigham Young: "The date of my letter will apprise you of my journey hither. That I have made it in six weeks from New York may persuade you that I am on no fool's errand"; and a few days later to Governor Young, "Your friend of old time is now within an hour of your dwelling where he asks for an interview which he has traveled so far to seek." Snow was falling heavily, so that from five to twenty-five feet lay in these canyons between this valley and the army.

Fatigued, he came into the presence of the First Presidency and their associates, and sank into a chair. The frail body had given out. Evidently he was under the impression that he might not survive for he asked for a private interview with President Young and they retired to a small room. They soon emerged but did not disclose what had been said. President Young said: "Friend Thomas, the Lord has sent you here and He will not let you die. No, you cannot die till your work is done. I want to have your name live with the Saints to all eternity. You have done a great work and you will do a greater work still."

He came on an errand of—I hardly know what to call it. I think of it as a perilous journey—I think of it as a response to a great "call." He came against the warnings of his friends in Washington. The President of the United States, who was his friend, expressed concern. He came against the forebodings of his beloved father. So you see the seriousness of it. Judge Kane gave him a farewell assurance that "the home welcome in all its cordiality awaits you, whether you fail or succeed. God bless you, dear Tom." And, sad to relate, his father passed away before his son had left this Valley.

The Colonel remained here a few days and then, practically alone, made his way to the army. Trails were sufficiently broken so that he could get through. He went at once to the civil authority, Governor Cumming. Therein was wisdom. He related his story to Governor Cumming who apparently received it with sympathy. Col. Kane then sent word to Col. Johnston that he had arrived in the camp. I hesitate to tell you the distressing things that happened right there because it is a note of so much distress that I will pass it by and simply say that after a very desperate situation had been cleared up, the two men came to an understanding to the effect that Col. Kane should come down Echo Canyon and into this valley accompanied by Governor Cumming (who was to succeed Governor Young) unattended. That was the point—no military escort. And by that time, through the efforts of Col. Kane, the policy of the government toward the whole question had focused upon this point: An order to the army to pass through this valley and disturb and interfere with no one, and to go at least forty miles distant, southwest, and there await further orders.

One writer has called this incident, the work of Col. Kane, the most brilliant episode in American history!

I shall hurry on. May I be pardoned if I take a few more minutes? While in the Eastern States Mission, I received a brief letter from President David O. McKay with a lengthy letter attached written by a man in Australia who had, many years before, served as a missionary in the Eastern States. He told a very interesting story concerning a manuscript in the possession of the Kane family in western Pennsylvania—descendants of Thomas L. Kane. I read his story with conviction. The letter of President McKay said, "Treat this as you see fit," and I felt at once that it was of importance and that I could secure the manuscript. I started the next morning for Erie, Pennsylvania, because I supposed that would be near the point of interest. In my search, I interviewed many of the Kane family, and finally I stopped at a house to inquire for a certain home to which I had been directed, and there stood in the open doorway a man dressed in outing clothes. He beckoned me in, and coming down the path to meet me, gave me such a warm welcome that I received the impression he must have known me. In fact, he soon had all the occupants of the car in his home, and there he pointed out to me a typed document on the table and told me that was the manuscript I was seeking.

This was Mr. E. Kent Kane, who is with us today, a man of very refined character, a man of distinction. He served in the Pennsylvania legislature six years. He is a man of large enterprises, and a man, I have come to believe, of deep religious convictions. It has been our great pleasure to have Mr. Kane with us,

He has attended every session of this conference. As indicating one phase of Mr. Kane's abilities and thought, I have a few lines here—I trust he will pardon me if I read them. He sat down and wrote this out in ten minutes when he was here on a previous visit. He makes reference to Brigham Young, appropriately, for we were close to the hundred year mark when he wrote it and the reference he makes to him is sort of an appeal which I am sure, from his comments, has been satisfied in his mind, because of the esteem in which he holds the successors of President Young:

LET PLENTY NOT BETRAY US, LORD

“Lord, behold our teeming thousands,
 Where once a few by Thee were led.
 Lord, behold all peace around us,
 Where once Thy people bled.
 Lord, behold our fertile farm land,
 Desert once, untouched by plough.
 Lest Thy bounty now confound us,
 Forget not, Lord, Thy people now.
 Lord, once Thou forged for us our leaders,
 Tempered them with trial and storm.
 Zion's Lebanon had cedars
 Shaped by Thee in Thine own form.
 Now we yield to wealth's temptation,
 Sell our all for golden fraud,
 'Twere better that we marched to exile
 Than forget that Thou art God.
 Lord, in each new generation,
 Give us men like those of old,
 Give Thy people another Brigham,
 Guide us, keep us, in Thy fold.
 When we part from those who lead us,
 When their last mission they fulfill,
 Thou who sent Thy Son to save,
 Lord, be with Thy people still.”

I give you what I have said as a very brief and very inadequate introduction to our friend who is visiting with us, Mr. E. Kent Kane. I should like to say more about him but I am sure that you will hear on other occasions more about this grandson of our early friend, Thomas L. Kane.

President George Albert Smith:

I know, brethren and sisters, that you have been edified by this very brief narration of experiences. I thought that inasmuch as so many of you have known of our appreciation of Colonel Kane and the work that he performed when we needed a friend, a few more words of explanation and information would make you that much happier. I am sure that we are delighted to have his grandson with us and to hear also that he was looking for a servant of the Lord when he was hunting for that record book in Pennsylvania. I hope that our brother will enjoy his visit with us here, and I hope that he will feel that he is in the home of his friends. Personally, I feel that he is just like one of the family, because of the affection that existed between his grandfather and my grandfather.

The members of the Tabernacle Choir will now sing "Fierce Was the Wild Billow"—(Noble).

The closing prayer will be offered by President Albert F. Anderson of the St. Johns Stake, St. Johns, Arizona.

After the closing of this session, we shall stand adjourned until seven o'clock this evening, when, in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held. Only the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. That session will not be broadcast. The session at ten o'clock tomorrow morning, Sunday, October 5, 1947, will be broadcast just the same as it has been today.

Because the Tabernacle broadcast comes now from 9:30 to 10:00 tomorrow morning, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats at 9:15 a.m. As the Choir may be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is necessary to request that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast.

The Church of the Air broadcast, on which Elder Mark E. Petersen, of the Quorum of the Twelve, will be the speaker, will begin at 8:00 a.m. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 7:45 a.m.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

The choir singing for this day's sessions of the Conference has been by members of the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

By the way, I think we all have reason to be grateful for this wonderful organization who are just in the "pink of condition" to go on a vacation within a few days to San Bernardino, California and celebrate with them the 100th Anniversary of the entrance into that country of the Mormon pioneers. The members of the Choir have done a fine piece of work today as always, and I hope and pray the blessings of the Lord will continue with them and while they are away that they will have one of the best experiences of their lives and return in safety glad that they belong to the Tabernacle Choir.

The Choir sang: "Fierce Was the Wild Billow."

President George Albert Smith:

Requests have come for us to remember people in the prayers of the Conference. It will not be possible to name them, but our brother who offers the prayer will include those who have asked to be prayed for. The closing prayer will now be offered by President Albert F. Anderson of the St. Johns Stake, St. Johns, Arizona.

Elder Albert F. Anderson, President of the St. Johns Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 10 o'clock Sunday morning, October 5, 1947.

THIRD DAY

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air program was presented Sunday morning, October 5, at 8:00 over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for the service. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The service commenced by the Choir singing the hymn, "For the Strength of the Hills We Bless Thee, our God, our Father's God," (Stephens).

Following the rendition of this hymn, the Choir sang: "I'm a Pilgrim" (Robertson).

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

In the midst of the continuing international crisis, there is an ever growing feeling that America must do all within her power to preserve herself. Our leading statesmen have publicly declared that we can hope to survive as a free people only if we keep ourselves strong. Generally the references to maintaining the strength of our country pertain only to her military might. But the strength of America cannot be measured by her armaments alone, nor by her industrial power which produces those armaments. The strength of our land must be measured principally in the integrity of our people.

An America with powerful armaments and an unstable citizenry could not be sure of protection. The might of the Maginot Line was no defense for a France which had descended into moral weakness. America, under similar circumstances, would fare no better. Not even the atom bomb will save this land if moral decay is allowed to do its work.

FREEDOM OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

We often speak of our freedoms. There is no freedom like the freedom of righteousness. The penalty of sin is slavery and death. He who is the victim of his own evil conduct is in reality much more a slave than the cowering subjects of the most dictatorial despot.

If America would remain mighty, she must have the strength of sobriety, of chastity and virtue, of honesty and integrity, and the power of true spirituality. If she would be strong, America must enjoy—in addition to her political freedoms, indeed one might say, as a condition to the perpetuation of her political freedoms—those other freedoms which are as essential to her welfare as any of the liberties listed in the Bill of Rights. Her people must strive for:

- Freedom from unclean practices and unwholesome influences
- Freedom from immorality
- Freedom from intoxication
- Freedom from the evils of divorce
- Freedom from dishonesty in all their relations with each other, including business and labor
- Freedom from delinquency, juvenile or adult, with its accompanying list of crime
- Freedom from selfishness
- Freedom from internal dissensions, subversive activities, rabble rousing, and class hatred
- Freedom from idleness, and doctrines which persuade people that the government owes them a living, or that they can get more and more by doing less and less
- And freedom from the ignorance that so often leads to regrettable practices

FACTORS WEAKENING AMERICA

How far have we gone in the preservation of these freedoms? To what extent have we jeopardized these factors which are so essential to a strong nation?

For one thing, as a people we are afflicted with an element of violence and dishonesty which is sapping our strength. Every five minutes, during 1946, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a serious crime was committed among us. There was one for every seventy-eight persons in the general population.

During that same year Americans spent twice as much money for alcoholic beverages as they did for education, and this year they will spend a comparable amount. Does this tend to national strength?

Also in 1946 there were twenty-seven divorces for every one hundred marriages in the United States. The disruption of so many homes in every state of the Union can have none other than a weakening effect upon our nation. If we may trust the statements of courts dealing with domestic relations, infidelity was a contributing factor in a disquieting number of these instances. Any tendency on the part of Americans to regard lightly their marriage vows is destructive of the moral stability of the nation. Indiscretions arising out of marital disloyalty lead to broken homes and broken hearts and in some cases to lives of shame and disgrace. Furthermore, they promote delinquency among children who thus become the victims of the sins of their own parents, being influenced by examples set before them by their elders who underestimate the great value and strength of virtue.

Among Latter-day Saint people, whom I have the honor to represent today, we teach a precept given through the Prophet Joseph Smith which reads:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else. (D. & C. 42:22.)

What a boon it would be to all humanity if every man were moved by the spirit of this injunction.

INFLUENCE OF HOME LIFE

The strength of the nation is measured in a large degree by the home life of the individual citizens. What makes a home strong? It is character, and good character mean integrity, honesty, morality, the spirit of fair play, self-reliance, and an abiding faith in God. As we speak of the great men in history, we frequently refer to their home life, with a fireside about which the family met, a saintly mother, a period of devotion, the reading of the Sacred Word, a family prayer. Out of such an atmosphere our great men acquired an attitude of self-reliance, an enterprising spirit, a willingness to work, with honesty and integrity as guiding stars, and a due regard for the teachings of the Almighty. Is each American family today contributing in this manner to our national greatness? Are we strengthening the sinews of our country with homes like this, or are we content to settle back into conditions which lead to disruption of these foundation stones of a strong democracy?

THE GOLDEN RULE

Selfishness on the part of certain groups has led to internal dissensions, rabble rousing, and class hatreds, breeding a kind of disunity which is dangerous in the extreme. This type of thing has more than political or economic implications. It presents a serious moral issue—a problem of right and wrong. It has to do with the fundamental character of each person involved, with his honesty, his desire to be fair in his dealings. Are we in America willing to do unto others as we would be done by? Does the Golden Rule mean anything to us when we apply it to our employment, or to our association with others in groups or organizations? The Golden Rule engenders strength; its violation breeds strife and weakness.

That we should work for what we get is a divine principle. When the Lord placed Adam, the first man in the earth, he commanded him to work for his living, to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. On Mount Sinai the Lord commanded men to labor. Philosophies which tend to cheapen the doctrine that men should work for their sustenance detract from the stability of the nation. They also have a moral effect upon the individual, robbing him of his self-respect, and undermining his character.

RELIGION THE SOURCE OF VIRTUES

Political freedom means little; in fact it cannot permanently endure, without the strength of morality and integrity. It was George Washington who said that morality is a necessary spring of popular government. Yet, as Washington also reminds us, national morality cannot prevail in the exclusion of the principles of religion.

To be strong, America must possess those fundamental virtues, but to acquire and hold them, she must turn to their source—religion.

In this hour of danger, can we afford to overlook our greatest Benefactor, who is truly the Author of freedom as well as of religious faith? Can we forget that freedom is one of the fruits of religion, and that if we give up our faith we must expect also to lose the fruits of faith? Let us remember too, that faith in God is inseparably connected with sincere repentance from sin, and that as a people, to enjoy the fruits of faith—including continued freedom—we must live in keeping with the principles of revealed religion.

With our political strength so dependent upon our moral power, and that in turn resting upon our religious devotion, will we exercise sufficient faith to abandon those practices which are destructive of good character, and which tend to weaken us as a nation?

To receive blessings from God, we must be sincere in our devotion, and consistent in our faithfulness. We must choose whom we will follow, keeping in mind that we cannot serve two masters at the same time and be loyal to both. There is no place for hypocrisy before the Lord.

AMERICA'S NEED FOR GOD

In this hour of peril, with devotion and sincere purpose, we as a people must turn to God, learn of his ways, and walk in his paths. Then shall we know that obedience to revealed religion can make us strong.

A truly religious person will not dissipate his strength in sin.

But moved by the Holy Spirit in a life of righteousness, he will know the strength of being clean.

He will know the strength of being honest.

He will know the strength of sober thought and action.

He will discover the great strength to be derived through honest, sincere prayer. He will grow in power through observance of the Sabbath day. He will find strength in reverence for the name of the Lord.

He will become acquainted with the moving power of faith—even that faith which can move mountains, or soften the hearts of men, and bring about peace and common understanding.

He will know the strength of being kind as he learns to love his neighbor as himself.

He will know the strength to be derived through work and will learn the divine truth that the idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer.

He will gain strength of character by giving value for value in every transaction, an honest day's work for an honest day's pay in his daily occupation; full weight and undisguised quality at the trading counter, and will do unto others as he would have others do unto him.

He will be strengthened by the assurance that God is a reality—that he lives, and that he protects and prospers those who worship him sincerely.

America needs both strength and a continuation of liberty, and she may have them if she will but serve the Lord. If, as a nation, we so live, every American may feel secure in spite of world chaos, and may say with confidence in the words of David,

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? (Psalm 27:1.)

Selection by the Choir: "Come Dearest Lord"—(Evan Stephens).

The Choir sang the hymn: "Abide With Me," (Monk).

TABERNACLE CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

The large Tabernacle was crowded to capacity long before time to begin the broadcast, people from all over the Church having assembled to listen to this radio program and the Conference service which was to follow. The Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle was also filled with people, and hundreds of others assembled on the Tabernacle grounds, amplifiers having been installed in the Assembly Hall and on the grounds, that those who were unable to find accommodation in the Tabernacle could listen to the proceedings.

This Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City and was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls as music and the spoken word are heard again from the Crossroads of the West.

Sunday, October 5Third Day

At this hour the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations continue the 19th year of this broadcast from Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

The Tabernacle choir is conducted by J. Spencer Cornwall, with Alexander Schreiner, Tabernacle organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

First is a song by Cyril Jenkins: "Out of the silence wake me a song—a hymn whose sounds are like shadows soft and dim."—"Out of the Silence."

(Choir sang "Out of the Silence"—Jenkins)

Announcer: Alexander Schreiner presents from Temple Square today a dramatic organ offering by Leon Boellman: "The Toccata in C Minor."

(Organ presented "Toccata in C Minor"—Boellman)

Announcer: We turn now on Temple Square to one of the glorious choruses from Mendelssohn's St. Paul. The text is taken from the 60th chapter of Isaiah: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come . . . behold now total darkness covereth the kingdoms and gross darkness the people, but . . . the glory of the Lord appeareth upon thee."—"Rise! Up! Arise!"

(Choir sang "Rise! Up! Arise!"—Mendelssohn)

Announcer: We turn now to the quiet thoughts of closing day recalled by a thoughtful theme: "Berceuse" by Arensky.

(Organ presented "Berceuse"—Arensky)

Announcer: There is an idea that has grown up among us, perhaps best expressed by the phrase: "Moderation in all things." "Moderation" is a very good word, and is associated with many virtues and much wisdom. Indeed, it is so good a word that we may be led to believe that "moderation" is always a virtue, that anything "in moderation" is good. Certainly moderation is always to be preferred to "excess." And, of course, we know that both "moderation" and "excess" are usually relative terms which vary according to people and circumstances. But in determining what is moderate and what is excessive we should always remember this: That there are many things which are excessive even "in moderation." There are some things in life which even to touch is an excess. For example: What about stealing in moderation? What about lying in moderation? What about immorality in moderation? What about cruelty in moderation? What about dishonor in moderation? What about murder in moderation? In another category: What about cancer in moderation? What about any vicious or malignant or undesirable thing or act or habit—even "in moderation"? You see, we could let words mislead us if we would. Giving limited consent to something which is wholly wrong in principle is a disastrous practice. Anything which in and of itself is not good, still isn't good, even in moderation. And if we don't want to face the problem of where to stop or how far to go, the answer is to keep away from what we should keep away from, and not to tamper with what we shouldn't tamper with, not even "in moderation." If we don't take the first step, we'll never take the second. If we never take the second, we'll never form a habit. And if we never form a bad habit, we'll never have to break one. But whenever we commit ourselves to a questionable course, the problem of where to stop is constantly with us—and will be until we do something about it. There is no magic in moderation that will change a vice into a virtue.

Selection by the Choir—"Though Deep'ning Trials"—Careless

Announcer: We have heard a hymn for which Eliza R. Snow wrote the words and George Careless the music: "Though Deep'ning Trials Throng Your Way."

And now our closing chorus from Temple Square is from Haydn's inspired oratorio, the Creation:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth . . . (and all that in them is) . . . and God created man in His own image; in the image of God created He him . . . and man became a living soul . . . And God saw everything that He had made: and, behold, it was good." (See Genesis Chaps. 1 and 2)

"The earth rolls upon her wings, and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night, and the stars also give their light . . . in their glory in the midst of the power of God . . . Behold, all these kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these hath seen God moving in His majesty and power." (Doctrine & Covenants 88:45, 47)

"Achieved is the glorious work. Our song let be the praise of God, glory to His name, forever."

(Choir sang "Achieved is the Glorious Work"—Haydn)

Announcer: As we leave you now within the shadows of the everlasting hills, again we wish for you peace, this day—and always.

This concludes the 949th presentation, continuing the 19th year of this broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

MORNING MEETING CONFERENCE SESSION

Immediately following the conclusion of the Choir and Organ broadcast, Conference reconvened in the Sunday morning session, which commenced at 10:00 a.m.

President Smith presided and at the President's request President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

President George Albert Smith:

We are on the air, brethren and sisters, and the morning session will be conducted by President Clark.

President Reuben J. Clark, Jr:

This is the sixth session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

There are present on the stand this morning, all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young, presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, and KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and with Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the morning session, and Elder Frank W. Asper for the afternoon session.

We will begin the morning services by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing "High On the Mountain Top"—(Beesley). Hymn Book 134, L.D.S. Hymns No. 194, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Victor J. Bird of the Utah Stake, Provo, Utah.

Singing by the Choir and congregation: "High On the Mountain Top."

President Victor J. Bird of the Utah Stake offered the invocation.

The Choir sang an anthem: "Come, Restful Peace"—(Bach).

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Acts 2:37-39.)

APPRECIATION OF UTAH CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Before commenting on the thought expressed in this scripture, may I take one moment, in behalf of the Utah Centennial Commission, and so far as I may, the governor and other state officials who have sustained the commission, to express to the people of Utah heartfelt commendation for their cooperation and united effort during this centennial year.

I wish to name especially the county committees, the public school teachers, President Olpin and the University of Utah, President McDonald and the Brigham Young University, President Harris and the Utah State Agricultural College, President Dixon and the Weber College, and the Utah State Teachers' Association—these must be added to the director and to the scores of committees heretofore publicly recognized, to whose united and devoted effort is due all credit for whatever success has been achieved during the 1947 celebration.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS

Meeting with you this morning in this great conference, I am deeply grateful for my knowledge of the existence of God, our loving Father, and of his Beloved Son, our Savior in very deed. I am grateful for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In the depths of my soul I know it is true.

I am happy in my love for my immediate associates, President George Albert Smith and President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and for these noble men of the Council of the Twelve, the Assistants to the Council of the Twelve, the Council of the Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, the Patriarch. I find it a joy to work with you loyal men who preside in stakes and wards and branches. It is a privilege to have the opportunity to labor with you, to recognize your unselfish devotion to the Church.

Life, though freighted with great responsibilities and a consciousness of my inability, and regrets for failures, is still wholesome and sweet.

The world is full of honorable men and women who, as those men who accosted Peter on the day of Pentecost, desire to know what to do—what to believe.

A man who has reached the four score mark in years hailed me yesterday morning with the comment: "The world is in a terrible condition, isn't it?"

I replied: "It certainly is and greatly in need of wise, steady guidance."

EPOCH-MAKING PERIOD

Brethren and sisters, we are living in what may be the most epoch-making period of all time. Scientific discoveries and inventions, the breaking down of heretofore approved social and moral standards, the uprooting of old religious moorings all give evidence that we are witnessing one of those tidal waves of human thought which periodically sweep over the world and change the destiny of the human race. I call attention to world conditions because the mission of the Church of Christ is worldwide. Its responsibility and commission is to ... teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. (Matt. 28:19, 20.)

SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS

Last September 23, Colonel James M. Gillespie, commander of the robot C54 Skymaster, made a flight of twenty-four hundred miles from Newfoundland to Brise, Norton Airfield, England, demonstrating that a pilotless plane can be sent three thousand miles from the United States and back again from one radio station.

Fourteen men crossed the ocean without touching a button or a wheel!

Imagine what could happen if, instead of fourteen passengers, that robot plane carried two thousand five hundred pounds of atom bombs. Then imagine not only one such plane, but fifty, all bent on destruction, and guided accurately by mechanical brains!

A more recent dispatch from Washington (September 30, Associated Press) says that "robot warfare between continents is definitely possible." It states further that "the methods and equipment needed to make missiles capable of carrying a five thousand-pound war head at six hundred miles an hour for four thousand miles are already well known in this country."

On August 11, 1947, William P. Odom, twenty-seven-year-old airplane pilot, completed a world record by flying around the globe in seventy-three hours, five minutes and eleven seconds, at a speed of 310 miles an hour.

On August 26, 1947, a navy plane, piloted by Major Marion E. Carl, thirty-one years of age, broke the air speed record by flying at the rate of 650 miles an hour.

What modern science is doing in other fields is even more astounding.

In a current magazine for this month, the thought is advanced as a possible accomplishment that man may succeed in turning night into day, not by candles, lanterns, or electric lights, but by "doing away with the earth's darkness entirely." One of the experiments now being carried on has to do with forms of electrons that "rush through ninety million miles of space between the sun and the earth and crash into the atmosphere."

When the electrons hit a molecule or atom of one of the atmospheric gases, the molecule or atom is ionized, and the gas glows just as it does in a fluorescent light bulb. There you have the germ of the idea that may prove to be one of the great scientific developments of our time.

RESPONSIBILITY TO CONTROL DISCOVERIES

I refer to these marvels, which are merely illustrative of many others, to emphasize the fact—if anything so obvious needs emphasis—that we are living in an age of scientific discovery and invention unequaled by any previous period in the world's history—discoveries latent with such potent powers either for the blessing or the destruction of human beings as to make man's responsibility in controlling them the most gigantic ever placed in human hands.

This responsibility and its possible results prompted one man (Hayden) to write:

Today, as seldom if ever before, human society is threatened with disintegration, if not complete chaos. All the ancient evils of human relationships, injustice, selfishness, abuse of strength, become sinister and terrible when reinforced by the vast increase of material power. The soul of man cowers, starved and fearful, in the midst of a civilization grown too complex for any mind to visualize or to control.

NEED FOR DIVINE GUIDANCE

Throughout the world generally today there is a spirit of unrest, a grasping for untried ideologies, (and our community is not an exception), and, what is worst of all, a tendency toward moral abandonment. It is all too apparent that "our spiritual culture lags far behind our material culture in its development."

Now is a time when peoples in all the world should pause and in all earnestness repeat the Pentecostal question propounded to Peter and other apostles:

Men and brethren, what shall we do?

Representatives of fifty nations are now assembled trying to find an answer. Communist nations, however, are clashing with Christian groups, and it looks as though the proverbial dove of peace if not killed might again be seriously crippled.

At the final plenary session of the United Nations Conference when the charter was about to be signed, five great leaders invoked the Lord's aid to the end that the cause of peace would not fail.

Said Mr. Edward Stettinius:

To the governments and peoples of the fifty nations here represented, this charter is now committed, and may Almighty God from this day on and in the months and years to come sustain us in the unalterable purpose that its promise may be fulfilled.

The Earl of Halifax, chairman of the delegation of the United Kingdom, said:

Let us also, mindful alike of the world's need and of our own weakness, pray that, under God's guidance, what we have done here in these last weeks will be found worthy of the faith which gave it birth, and of the human suffering which has been its price.

His Royal Highness, Amir Faisal Ibn Abdiel Aziz, chairman of the delegation of Saudi Arabia, stated:

As long as we are united together in a spirit of cooperation, the hands of Almighty God will lead us. We shall always have his aid so long as we help one another.

And Field Marshall Jan Christiaan Smuts of South Africa, said:

May heaven's blessings rest on it.

And the President of our own United States prayed that under God's guidance the cause would succeed.

Unless such appeals were mere empty phrases, these leaders indicate the only safe and sure way wars may be averted, and peace among nations established. Not through communistic theories, not by the manifestations of mistrust, suspicion, and hatred will the turbulence of national ills be quieted. Unless the spirit of Christianity permeate the deliberations of the United Nations, dire tragedies await humanity.

OPPORTUNITY FOR SCIENTIFIC ADVANCEMENT

On the other hand never since the beginning of history has there been such an opportunity for the nations to utilize inventions and scientific discoveries to the blessing and peace of human beings.

Dr. Charles A. Elwood truly says:

Our material culture has advanced by leaps and bounds until we find almost unlimited physical power in our hands; but our spiritual culture has lagged, and we find many of the traditions of barbarism still strong among us, especially the traditions of war and self-indulgence at the expense of others. These traditions, along with the ignorance and paganism of the masses of mankind, make our world, we must acknowledge, a veritable powder house at the present time. Almost any powerful group foolish enough to do so could explode it. If western civilization emerges from this situation safely, it will only be through a deeper appreciation of the social ethics of Jesus than it has yet shown.

O, shall we never learn
The truth all time has taught—
That without God as architect
Our building comes to naught?

The following remarks made by United States congressmen in the House of Representatives sound a true note of warning to the world:

The nations and peoples of the earth must go back to God the Father no matter how hard, how long, or how bloody the road. The conflict in which we are now and will be engaged during the coming years will determine the destiny and type of government for mankind for the next thousand years. By our courageous faith, by our patient sacrifice, and by our loyal obedience to God, we shall build a permanent, new-world social order, founded upon the enduring and eternal principles of Christian truth and justice. This will be the grand climax of mankind's age-long endeavor and imminent struggle to conquer the chaos of evil forces and achieve and establish the divine order of the ages—peace, plenty, and prosperity for all nations and all mankind.

REPENTANCE NEEDED

Infidelity and sexual immorality are two principal evils that threaten to weaken and to wreck present-day civilization. Unfortunately, the trends of modern life are tending to disintegrate the very foundation of the Christian home. Sexual laxity among young people, birth control, and intemperance are its insidious and vicious enemies. When family life disintegrates, the foundation and bulwark of human society is undermined.

Men and brethren, what shall we do?

The answer today is the same as it was two thousand years ago, the same as it will ever be throughout time.

All men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ, and worship the Father in his name and endure in faith on his name to the end or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God.

Said the Savior:

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light. (Matt. 11:29, 30.)

As the honest people of the world wonder in vain, and cry out in uncertainty, what shall we do? members of the Church of Christ who feel secure in the knowledge of the restored gospel should say, "Men and brethren, what can we do?"

PLAN OF ACTION SUGGESTED

Some specific things which the priesthood and their families can and should do are these:

First—We can set an example of uprightness; be honest in all our dealings; avoid vulgarity and profanity; demonstrate to our neighbors and to all whom we meet that we live clean, honorable lives.

Let your light so shine among men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 5:16.)

Sunday, October 5

Second—Let us strive for peace and harmony in the home. If we cannot keep quarreling, bickering, and selfishness out of our home, how can we even hope to banish these evils from society?

A true Mormon home is one in which if Christ should chance to enter, he would be pleased to linger and to rest.

Third—Having at least striven for a good character, having a home environment that is creditable, we may then consistently discharge our duty as authorized representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ to declare to the world that the conditions that will bring peace and comfort to the individual, to the family, and to the nation, are found in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ. These can be named and understood and as easily practised with resultant contentment and peace as are the evils and vices that bring tribulation.

Summarized these fundamentals are: An acceptance of Christ as Savior and Redeemer; a moving, soul-consciousness of the existence of God, and that he is our Father in Heaven; a daily life consistent with such a knowledge; a love for one's fellow men.

In other words, as the Savior summarized the law and the prophets:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. . . . and thy neighbor as thyself. (Mark 12:31, 32.)

WORLD NEEDS SPIRITUALITY

I realize, as I have said elsewhere, that skeptics, and pessimists say that these principles are too idealistic, that mankind is too near the beasts of creation, struggling to eke out an existence, even to attempt to apply them in daily life. In reply, I say men and women have practised them and have been happy, and have made the world better in so doing. Christ's disciples did it in Jesus' day, (as impressively stated yesterday by Elder Albert E. Bowen), and they have influenced millions of lives since. There have been thousands since their day, some heralded on the pages of history, and others of whom the world has never heard who, through love of God, truth, and of fellow men, have "never yielded to the pressure of circumstances," and who, though they faced persecution and even death, could say in their hearts as the Prophet Joseph Smith declared as he turned into the path that led to his martyrdom: "If my life is of no value to my friends, it is of no value to me."

The world needs millions more whose influence will counteract the evil spread by the multi-millions who grope in selfishness, sordidness, suspicion, hatred, and crimes of varying degree.

After all, the spiritual life is the true life of man. It is what distinguishes him from the beasts of the forests. It lifts him above the physical, yet he is still susceptible to all the natural contributions that life can give him that are needful for his happiness or contributive to his advancement. Though "in the world, he is not of the world."

Jesus taught that men and women fail to live truly, unless they have spirituality. In the Life and Teachings of Jesus, we read that the spiritual force underlies everything, and without it nothing worth while can be accomplished. "Spiritual needs can be met only by spiritual means. All government, laws, methods, and organizations are of no value unless men and women are filled with truth, righteousness, and mercy. Material things have no power to raise the sunken spirit. Gravitation, electricity, and steam are great forces, but they are all powerless to change the motives of men and women." Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

GOSPEL OFFERS SOLUTION

Men of the priesthood, we must continue to declare that the gospel, the Glad Tidings of Great Joy, is the true guide to mankind; and that men and women are happiest and most content who live nearest to its teachings.

The voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated. . . .

And the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days. (D. & C. 1:2, 4.)

What the sun in the heavenly blue is to the earth struggling to get free from winter's grip, so the gospel is to sorrowing souls yearning for something higher and better than mankind has yet found.

If men and nations will hold their belief in God, and accept the teachings of Jesus Christ, pilotless planes and other argosies of the air encircling the globe in a nightless world will carry not bombs of merciless destruction, but gifts and blessings to what is now a groping, benighted world.

All the world is in the Valley of Decision
And out of it there is but one sure road;
Eyes unsealed can still foresee the mighty vision
Of a world in travail turning unto God.

May heaven help all members of the Church of Christ to live and labor for the spreading throughout the world of the gospel of light and truth and peace, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

Facing this magnificent congregation of Latter-day Saints I deeply realize the great responsibility that rests upon me and hence I crave an interest in your faith and prayers.

The ancient writer of Proverbs declared:

Where no counsel is the people fall, but in the multitude of counselors there is safety. (Proverbs 11:14.)

He also declared:

Give instruction to a wise man and he will yet be wiser; teach a just man and he will increase in learning. (Proverbs 9:9.)

Centuries ago there lived upon this earth a generation of people so wicked and vile that the God of Israel turned his face away in shame and chagrin, but as a manifestation of his great love for these people, he sent them a great counselor and prophet. His name was Noah. Noah stood at the crossroads and admonished, pleaded with, and counseled the people to take the path of righteousness and virtue, but exercising their free agency, they chose the path of wickedness and debauchery. A great flood swept over the earth, and they were swept from the face of it, and the God of Israel looked down upon a cleansed earth.

A GUIDE AT THE CROSSROADS

Throughout all dispensations the God of Israel has placed at the crossroads a great counselor, a prophet, to teach the people the mind and the will of their Eternal Father, to the end that they might return to him and dwell with him throughout the eternities to come.

God so loved the world that he sent his Only Begotten Son, and he, too, stood at the crossroads. He admonished, he pleaded with the people, and endeavored to teach them the gospel of salvation, giving his life for the redemption of mankind. After his death and resurrection, the organization of the Church remained with apostles and prophets, counselors to the people, endeavoring to teach them the gospel of Jesus Christ. But again the people chose another path, and after a few centuries they chose to follow the doctrines and the teachings of men, and a great pall of apostasy was over the earth, and darkness remained upon the earth for many centuries.

A PROPHET RAISED UP

Once again, as the Lord had promised through his prophets, there would be a restitution of all things. A prophet was raised up, a young man who wished to know which of all the teachings of men might be the teachings of God. And in answer to that prayer the Father and the Son appeared to him. They told him that all of these doctrines were of men, that they drew nigh unto God with their lips but their hearts were far away from him.

So God gave another great counselor to the people, the Prophet Joseph Smith through whom the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was restored in its fulness, in its simplicity, and in addition thereto the priesthood was restored to earth, that power given to men where they may act as God's agents. The Church was set upon the earth with prophets, apostles, and all of the officers that existed in former days.

ACHIEVEMENTS FROM FOLLOWING COUNSEL

Evil men took the Latter-day prophet and murdered him in cold blood. Again the people who had accepted him as a prophet of God stood at the crossroads, but another great counselor was raised up—Brigham Young—upon whom rested the great responsibility of finding another home for the Latter-day Saints and also of finding a place where the roots of the kingdom should be sunk so deeply that they would never be torn up again. Following their divinely appointed leader, the people made the long trek over the plains and through the mighty defiles of these great mountains, and here in the valleys they built churches, homes, schools, buildings of various kinds, and a temple to their God.

I have wondered many times what it was that made them successful, that made it possible for them to achieve so highly. In contemplating some of the factors that contributed to their success and achievements, I have come to the conclusion that they were anxious and willing to follow counsel. They accepted Brigham Young without any reservations as the servant of God, God's mouthpiece through whom the Lord made his mind and will known to his children. And they followed that counsel so closely that they gave no consideration to themselves in a physical sense. All that mattered was whether or not the counsel of God as revealed to them through his chosen servant was being carried out fully.

Brigham Young made the following statement to them, and I am sure this statement came from God as did the statement made by the writer of Proverbs, which expresses the same thought:

The Latter-day Saints who hearken to the words of the Lord, given to them touching their political, social, and financial concerns, I say, and say it boldly, that they will have wisdom which is altogether superior to that of the wisdom of the children of darkness, or the children of the world. I know this by the revelations of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the results of my own actions. They who have hearkened to counsels given to them in temporal matters, have invariably bettered their conditions temporally and spiritually. (Discourses of Brigham Young, 219, 220. 1943 edition.)

And so counsel, in one sense, divides itself into two categories: That which has to do with materialistic things and that which has to do with spiritual things. God's prophet was given revelation from on high to the extent that he was enabled to counsel his people in temporal as well as spiritual things, and that had to be because this people came here impoverished. They had no money. All that they had was faith in God and their hands and minds with which to work, but yet God revealed to them the counsel that was necessary for their temporal success. That success is now represented in farms, industries, and in various forms of business which exist today.

FAITH OF A PIONEER

The pioneers did not think much of personal consequence, which is exemplified in a diary that I read some time ago of one of the Gardner brothers who accepted the gospel in Canada and after accepting it, he was most anxious to go to Nauvoo and shake the hand of the Prophet and visit with the Saints, but he arrived in Nauvoo too late. The Prophet had been murdered, but Brother Gardner visited with the General Authorities and with the Saints, and in his diary he wrote: "I know that these men are the Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, and I know the people that are following them are indeed Saints."

Returning to Canada he sold his property and made the long trek back to Nauvoo with his family, just in time to be driven out in the middle of winter. He spent the winter on the plains of Iowa. He finally made his way into Salt Lake Valley, where after ten years of struggle and almost starvation he wrote in his diary: "How grateful I am to the Lord, for now my family are sheltered under one roof. We have clothing, and we have food."

In the midst of this prosperity a messenger sent by the President of the Church requested him to come to his office at once. As he entered the office of President Young, he met one of the President's counselors coming out, and the counselor said to him: "Now, brother, don't blame me for what's going to happen."

In a moment this good brother stood before President Young and the President said to him: "Brother Gardner, we are calling you on a mission to go and help settle Dixie."

This good man said: "I scratched my head. I spit upon the floor, and mentally I concluded I had had enough, but another thought flashed through my mind. The servant of God was calling me to perform a duty." And he answered the President: "I'll be glad to go."

He sold his mill; he sold his farm; he sold most of his livestock and taking a few belongings and his family in a wagon made the long trek in the middle of winter to what is now St. George. And from that time on, according to his diary, he did not know very much about prosperity. He was on a mission to help build up another part of the kingdom and an interesting comment is that some of the wood that rests in the great Tabernacle organ came from trees cut by this brother in Pine Valley.

He suffered privation and many physical hardships, yet in his diary I did not find one word of complaint, rather I found the spirit of gratitude and thankfulness to God because he had found the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. He had a testimony that the great counselor who stood at the head of this Church was a servant of Almighty God.

WASTED FOOD NOW NEEDED

By following counsel closely the pioneers achieved, and I wonder now as we leave this great conference whether or not you and I are going to follow the counsel of God's servants who have admonished us in the spirit of the Lord as to what we should do in both spiritual and temporal matters. I think of the days in 1932-3-4-5 and 6, when the philosophy was advocated that we should destroy food, that we should cut down on our crop production, and in the midst of such advice a prophet of God stood at the crossroads, and admonished the people to continue to produce more and more and to save every pound. Oh, how I wish that the modern Pharaohs of today had listened to a modern Joseph, for had this country gone forth with its great potential strength in productivity of food, there would be enough food on hand to feed a starving world. You might ask the question: How is it possible to conserve food over a period of ten or twelve years? Well, through modern means of refrigeration and canning, and other devices, it is possible to conserve food for years. Out of our own experience in storing the Relief Society wheat we know that wheat can be kept sound for many years, based upon certain principles.

And so, had the counsel of God's servants in these days been followed there would have been no difficulty in providing enough food and other necessities of life to help a starving Europe and a suffering China. Accepting and following the counsel of God's selected and anointed should be to us the word of God in this day just exactly as was the word of God in the days of the pioneers.

OBEDIENCE TO COUNSEL REWARDED

I had related to me a rather interesting story of a humble man who lives in the state of Arizona; it is as follows: Dr. John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve had been visiting in the Snowflake Stake and among other counsel he gave to the brethren was this: "Why don't you drill wells that you might bring more of this arid land under cultivation?"

President Flake of the presidency pondered over the counsel given, and he came to the conclusion that a servant of God had spoken and that it would be wise to follow such counsel. Going to a neighboring town he endeavored to secure the services of a well driller. And the driller said, "Yes, I will drill you a well. I assume you want the usual size pipe, six or eight inches."

President Flake said: "No, I want a twelve-inch pipe."

The well driller replied: "Man, you are foolish. There isn't enough water in this country to fill a twelve-inch pipe, and furthermore, I wouldn't take your money to drill a well of that size because it would be a waste of money." And so he refused to drill the well.

But, undaunted, President Flake went to another well driller in a neighboring community. He told the man what he wanted. The man said: "Well, it seems foolish, but nevertheless if you want to spend the money, I will drill the hole and put a twelve-inch pipe in it."

A site was selected for the well on a piece of arid land adjacent to Snowflake, Arizona, and drilling operations were commenced. After the men had drilled for a few days, a government man came along, and he said: "Mr. Flake, I think you are foolish in drilling for water here. I am quite sure that you won't find any. It is my judgment had you gone over here a short distance the possibilities are that you might have found a little water."

But again, undaunted and believing implicitly in the counsel of one of God's servants, the drilling continued and after reaching a depth of two hundred feet, a flow of water was struck in sufficient amount to fill the twelve-inch pipe up within sixty feet of the surface. The ground was broken, cultivated, and crops were planted. A pump was placed on the well, and it delivered nine hundred gallons a minute. This year the crops grown on what was arid land two years ago will pay for the drilling of the well and the pumping equipment installed.

President Flake further indicated that the volume of water has been sufficient, not only to take care of this year's crop, but also will be sufficient to irrigate a total of 175 acres.

President Flake followed the counsel of one of Christ's apostles and received the blessing for obedience rendered, which brings us to the conclusion that we should hearken always to the voices of the prophets to the end that the windows of heaven will be open to us—spiritually and temporally.

OBLIGATION OF PRIESTHOOD

So much for temporal counsel, but what about spiritual counsel? We have had an abundance of it during this great conference. Think if you will of the admonitions that have come to us with reference to the home, the matter of family prayers, the matter of attending that most important meeting of the whole week, namely, the sacrament meeting. Will you think of your priesthood responsibilities as servants of God? I say that every man who holds the priesthood has a responsibility that is very great, and priesthood is of no value to an individual unless he uses it in the service of God. It does not come to you as an honorary office. It comes to you that you might serve God and assist him to consummate his plans. And, furthermore, the priesthood of God, that mantle of authority which rests upon your shoulders and mine, is not one which can be taken off on Sunday evening and left off during the week and then put on again the following Sunday morning. Your priesthood is with you wherever you may go, in the office or the field, and remember that priesthood demands of you lives that are wholly compatible with it in purity, in service, in hearkening to counsel and in keeping God's commandments.

A LIGHT TO THE WORLD

We have received admonitions with reference to virtue, the Word of Wisdom, temple work, and missionary work. I want to say if we will hearken unto all of this counsel we will become a blessed people, for Brigham Young declared again:

If we hearken to counsel, we shall be the best people in the world; we shall be as a bright light set upon a hill, that cannot be hid, or like a candle upon a candlestick. (Discourses of Brigham Young, p. 219.)

Brethren and sisters, never let us forget the admonition that:

. . . to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. (1 Sam. 15:22.)

Yes,

Give instructions to a wise man, and he will yet be wiser; teach a just man, and he will increase in learning. (Proverbs 9:9.)

I humbly pray that we can take the counsels of this great conference to heart and exemplify them in our lives, to the end that we will be a light to the world, for the Lord said to the Prophet Joseph:

. . . shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations. (D. & C. 115:5.)

That is our destiny, and we can achieve it if we will follow the admonitions and the counsels of these servants of the Lord Jesus Christ. I bear testimony to you that they have all of the same rights and authority to lead the people of the world in righteousness as did Noah, Isaiah, or any of the apostles of old. I bear testimony to you that the same God who dealt with the people in the days of Noah is your God and my God, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Redeemer of the world, and the humble man who was murdered in cold blood for his testimony in Carthage Jail, Joseph Smith, was God's servant, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. MCKAY

The inspiring music of our great choir and organ, both in the broadcast this morning and in this service, and also the timely, masterful address of President McKay, and the interesting talk of Bishop Wirthlin, have all tended, I am sure, to uplift us, to bring us nearer our Father in heaven, and others on the other side.

It is my earnest desire and prayer, my brethren and sisters, to say something useful, something that will be helpful to us, that will bring more happiness and joy into our daily lives. One of my favorite themes, already mentioned by one or two of the speakers, is,

Men are that they might have joy. (II Nephi 2:25.)

ACTIVITY BRINGS JOY

Work is a great blessing; activity brings joy. Last Sunday, I was in California, attending the Inglewood Stake conference. Some of you have already read in last week's issue of the Church Section of the News of some of the activities of this stake, especially of their building program. There was one achievement not referred to in the article, that I should like to mention. Last summer, in California they had some of their "unusual" weather, quite an extended hot spell, and the entire apricot crop ripened so rapidly that it became necessary to harvest it or it would be wasted. This was called to the attention of the southern California regional welfare officers. Through them, attention was called to the stakes in that region. I do not know what other stakes accomplished, but one day was set aside by the Inglewood Stake members for picking, and as a result they have now 25,777 cans of apricots in their stake storehouse and in their homes.

Just a month ago today I was in the Burley Stake conference in Idaho. At the conclusion of that conference the president arose and casually announced that the beet harvesting for this year had been set by the officials of the sugar factory to begin on a certain date. "We would like to harvest our welfare crops before we begin on our own." A time was decided on for that purpose. He said: "We would like to harvest the entire crop on these two days."

I had visited these projects, and had seen the extent of them, and so I arose and said: "If you accomplish this, will you kindly send me a telegram collect? If you don't you needn't say anything about it."

Last Sunday, while at the Inglewood Stake conference, just at the beginning of the ten-thirty session, this telegram was handed me.

Burley, Idaho

Thomas E. McKay
Care President Alfred E. Rohner

Brother McKay:

Members of Burley Stake harvested 40 acres of potatoes Friday, 26th; ten acres potatoes, 27 acres of beets, and cut five acres of corn Saturday the 27th. People present both days, approximately 900. Trucks, 50. Tractors, 25. Potato diggers, 18. Five beet diggers. Relief Society served lunch. Thanks for challenge you made at conference.

Sincerely,

Burley Stake Conference

Congratulations, members of Burley Stake!

There are now, 168 stakes in the Church, as we were told yesterday by President Richard L. Evans in his well-worded, I was going to say, musically-worded address on the growth of the Church. Seventy-eight of these are outside of Utah, all active and doing splendid work. As one investigator friend stated: "You all seem to know one another here—just like one large happy family."

It is a privilege to visit these stakes, and especially thrilling to find so many of our members active now and in prominent positions who were not so active in their home wards and stakes. As one of them told me: "At home I belonged to that group, that rather large group that you referred to as who treat their religion as a spare tire; they never use it except in times of emergency. Also," he continued, "we had time on our hands which we used in finding fault with the brethren and the Church, looking for the thorn on the rose, and the dirt on the lily, instead of for the flowers themselves."

STORY OF JAPANESE PHILOSOPHER

He was referring, as you know, to that story that I like to tell of the Japanese philosopher who was accustomed to going out into the hills and woods to study the laws of nature. After spending a day in such study, he would return to his village at night, where he would gather his people around him and instruct them in the lessons which he had learned. One day one of his friends came to him saying, "Will you please bring me a hawthorn twig when you come back, that I can study the lesson you gave last week from that tree?" "Yes," said the philosopher, "I will bring you the twig tonight," and a second one of his friends that morning said, "Will you bring me a rose, that I may study concerning the lecture you gave last evening?" "Yes, I'll bring you the rose." And just before the philosopher went through the gate of the town that morning, a third friend said, "Will you bring me a lily that I might study the lesson of purity you gave last evening?" The philosopher promised to bring the lily.

In the evening about sundown when the old philosopher returned to the village, the three friends were waiting at the gate to welcome him. To the first he gave the hawthorn twig; to the second he gave the rose; and to the third he gave the lily. Suddenly the man with the hawthorn twig cried, "Here is a dead leaf on the stem of my hawthorn twig!" The second said, "Here is a thorn on the stem of my rose!" and the third one cried, "Here is dirt on the roots of my lily!"

"Let me see," said the philosopher. From the first he took the hawthorn twig; from the second, he took the rose, and from the third he took the lily. He plucked the dead leaf from the hawthorn twig and gave it to the first friend. He plucked the thorn from the stem of the rose and gave it to the second. He took the dirt from the roots of the lily and put it into the hands of the third. Holding the hawthorn twig, the rose, and the lily, he said: "Now, each of you has what attracted you first. You looked for the dead leaf, and you found it. You looked for the thorn; it was there. You found the dirt of the lily because I left it on the roots. You may keep what attracted you first. I will keep the hawthorn twig, the lily, and the rose, for the beauty I see in them."

We find in this world just about what we are looking for. If we look for dirt and the sordid things, we can find them; or, if we look for mistakes in others we can find them also. If we look for the good and the beautiful, the good and the beautiful will return to us. There is no place for hate in the heart of a Latter-day Saint, or of any other true Christian.

. . . Love your enemies, bless those that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. (Matt. 5:44.)

That is the doctrine of the Savior.

Hate incapacitates anyone from doing one's best, no matter whether it is hate for a person or for a people.

Whom the gods destroy, they first make mad. (Euripides.)

Hate, envy, jealousy, ingratitude, intolerance are all weapons used by Satan to thwart the purposes of God.

THE LOVE OF MONEY

One of the main weapons, I think, not mentioned very often, one that creeps upon us very quietly, is the love of money. The love of money, we are told, is at the root of all evil. You may not agree with me, some of you, in what I am going to say now, but I believe that one of the main reasons why it is so difficult for some of our members to pay tithing is because Satan does not want us to pay tithing. He puts all kinds of excuses in our way, because he knows that a person or a people who will pay tithing will never worship gold instead of God. We are so bent, I was going to say hell-bent, on getting rich, making money, that we miss some of the sweetest things in life, brethren and sisters. We never have time to look up at the beautiful blue sky or enjoy our wonderful sunsets or see the beautiful flowers and the bluebird hopping from post to post or hear the song of the meadowlark as we speed along the highways. We have no time to go into these colorful canyons with our families and occasionally take a fishing trip, something unpardonable. No, we are too busy for these things. Yes, the love of money, the use of tobacco, liquor—Brother Merrill referred to in his splendid address yesterday—are weapons of Satan that he is using to thwart the purposes of God.

President Smith has advised us, and I like the way he puts it, to keep away from the devil's territory. This is rather a large order, at least according to Mark Twain who said:

I want to see the devil, just to set my eyes on that person who for untold centuries has been the spiritual head of four-fifths of the human race and the political head of all of it.

That statement may be a little exaggerated, but this part I do agree with, "he must surely have executive ability of the highest order." I think we would do well to follow President Smith's advice to keep away from his territory; and "enter ye in at the strait gate." (Matthew 7:13.) Overcome evil with good, resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

Our Father in heaven, brothers and sisters, is our Father. He loves us and because he loves us he has given us the gospel, every principle and commandment of which is for our happiness in this life. Honoring parents, keeping the Sabbath day holy, refraining from taking the name of the Lord in vain, attendance at our sacrament and priesthood meetings, remaining honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, keeping the Word of Wisdom, paying tithing and our fast offerings—all these are given to us that we might have joy in this life.

FAST OFFERING PLAN RECOMMENDED

When I mention fast offerings, my heart goes out to our brothers and sisters in Europe and to the starving millions in the war-torn countries. I wish we could do more to establish fast offerings in the world. I hope I am not speaking out of line, but I would like to see this great gathering endorse a resolution to the United Nations recommending as a means of helping the starving millions in the war-torn countries the adoption of the fast offering plan of the Church.

May we have a greater desire, greater faith, greater will power to live in accordance with the great gospel plan of life and salvation, as revealed in our day by the Prophet Joseph Smith, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "For the Strength of the Hills We Bless Thee"—(Stephens). L.D.S. Hymns No. 118.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

We gather periodically in the conferences of the Church, or listen over the radio to the proceedings as a part of our worship, in order that we may be refreshed in our faith and edified in our concepts and duties. I am sure that the sessions of the present conference have served us well in these respects. It is my earnest desire that I may contribute a little to the stimulation and encouragement we are receiving.

BEARERS OF THE GOSPEL MESSAGE

I know of few things more stirring to our faith and devotion in this noble cause with which we have the honor to be identified than a clear realization of its lofty purposes among the children of men. Perhaps it is not given to many of us to see the over-all picture in its perfection. We can only try with the equipment at our command to make the world understand the importance and vitality of the message we bear. After we have done our best in thought, word, and action, we can but pray that the Lord will add his blessing.

We want the world to understand the position of this Church. We are propagandists for its doctrines and principles. Unfortunately, that word has come to have a rather unsavory connotation, for, in its correct meaning, it describes us. We are converted bearers of a message which we are charged to give to the world. We cannot shrink from that obligation and be loyal to the cause. We bear this message to our fellow men, not only because we are commanded so to do but also because we have in our hearts a deep regard for the welfare of men and a Christian desire to help them. We are fully convinced that the message we have for them is the greatest boon which can come into their lives.

Now, what is this message which this Church carries to mankind? Naturally, within the limitations of these brief remarks, I cannot attempt to present more than aspects of it and that merely in outline. If I can do that in the common language we speak today with any measure of clarity, I shall be very grateful.

MESSAGE DEFINES RELIGION

This message defines religion. It interprets all phases of a man's existence in terms of religion. There is no part of living not influenced by it. Our thoughts, our environment, our education, our companionships and associations, our health, our concepts of wealth, government, and society in the scope of this message are all religious considerations. Religion therefore becomes not a philosophy apart from life to be held up for scrutiny, criticism, and debate. Rather, it is an integrated way of life, a system and program of individual and community living under eternal law which man did not make and cannot change.

Elder Albert E. Bowen the other day told us so impressively how it cannot be compromised. When a man comes to know and feel such an interpretation of religion, it completely dominates his appraisals, his choices, and his judgment. Many would characterize such a man as a fanatic, and he would be a fanatic if his religion were not true and the divine source of wisdom.

RELIGION A MOTIVATING FORCE

Have the critics of such an exact religion ever set out the merits of religion in moderation? I thank Brother Richard L. Evans for defining that word for me in his remarks of the broadcast this morning. Sunday religion, it is sometimes called, the kind men carry in their wives' names. How do they justify a partial acceptance of divine law and principle? Surely consistency would demand that if the source of religion is accredited, the application must be universal and unvaried. I can understand how many men have not accepted interpretations of divine law and religion, how many have rebelled against the practices of religionists, but if religion is accepted at all, I cannot see how logical, clear-thinking minds can take it for any less than what it really is—the motivating, all-controlling force in the life of man and the organization of the universe.

I wonder if we are able to appreciate what such an interpretation of religion if widely accepted would do for the world today? Here are a few of the things I feel it would accomplish. It would remove uncertainty and doubt as to the principles and standards which should be observed in reaching decisions on all matters, personal, social, national, and international. What a tremendous gain it would be if the answer to the age-old question, "What is right?" could be found by most men to be in the acceptance of the divine source of right. Here again appears the inconsistency and futility of the position of the so-called partial religionists. Pretty generally throughout the world recognition is given to the divine laws against killing, adultery, stealing, and lying, and little question is raised regarding the source and perpetuity of these regulations of human conduct. Where is the justification for discrimination against the other laws exacting worship and obedience to the God of the universe and proscribing idolatry, blasphemy, and desecration of the Lord's holy day? The laws commanding worship and reverence for our divine and earthly parents constitute one-half of the Decalogue, and remember they come first. In the interpretation of religion we give to the world they are first, in practice as well as in theology.

RELIGION NEEDED IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Do you think that if such an interpretation of religion were widespread, even among the Christian nations of the earth we could have any such spectacle of discord and intrigue as the nations of the world have recently presented to disgusted and discouraged people all over the earth? Have you ever heard of a voice being raised in any of the sessions of the United Nations since its inception more than two years ago protesting the infractions of God's laws or importuning his help in achieving the purposes of that organization? I think you have not, unless perhaps in some innocuous way, because I suspect that it is tacitly agreed that God and religion shall be shut out of the proceedings. Well, my friends, it is a part of the message that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints bears to the world that God and religion cannot be shut out from the consideration of world affairs without mortal hazard to the cause of goodness and peace.

INALIENABLE RIGHTS

I have read and heard a good many statements by eminent writers and speakers to the effect that our liberty of which we are justly proud is an achievement and not a gift. In the sense that it had to be worked for, fought for, and preserved with vigilance these statements are true. But let it never be forgotten that our concept of liberty is a gift. No human is the author of that concept. Many great men have so recognized it as did Thomas Jefferson when he wrote the Declaration of Independence and declared that "men are endowed with certain inalienable rights." Why are these rights inalienable? Because men did not create the right to liberty! In the exercise of his free agency he may surrender his privileges, and his property, and he may become the slave of others or of the state, but his free agency is as native to him as the air he breathes. It is part and parcel of his eternal constitution, and Jefferson was "righter than I think he himself knew when he declared it an endowment which cannot be alienated.

The message which we bear affirms that God is the Author of our inalienable liberty; that men, all men are of noble lineage, sons and daughters of the Eternal Father; and that liberty is their birth-right. I think that prior to the advent of the restored gospel a little over a century ago there was no such understanding of the precious gift of liberty as there is today. In his latter-day revelations the Lord has set forth much concerning it, but I thank God that before these revelations came, noble men were blessed with this lofty concept of man's inherent right to liberty and that they were prompted to incorporate these divine principles in the organic law and history of our favored land.

NEED FOR DIVINE AID

Now I know that there are many in Christian nations and many in prominent places who accede to this taboo on religion in the consideration of national and world affairs. They seem to think that they can fight aggressive, atheistic communism without uttering a word in defense and exposition of divinely-given concepts, and without even seeking divine aid in the preservation of divine principles for the race. I do not pretend to qualify or speak as an expert on international affairs, but I am sure that I voice the sentiment and feeling of millions of God-loving people over the world when I assert that the sooner the issues now confronting the nations are recognized as a moral conflict between right and wrong, between truth and error, between Christ and anti-Christ, the sooner will come the solution and peace. I know that this is and has always been the position of this Church. There are prophecies, ancient and modern, statements and declarations, and experience to support this position.

PROGRAM TO MEET WORLD CRISIS

I am aware of what some may say, even though they may not be unsympathetic with the views I have expressed. They ask: Even though the time has come for a "showdown" between the forces of good and the forces of evil, what justifies your Church with its relatively small numbers, short history, and inconspicuous place in the world of religions in assuming to prescribe a program of religious concepts and action to meet the world crisis today? Why not let the great religions of the earth take the burden of the battle and you trail along? Well, I hesitate a little to give my answer to that question. Not because I am not sure of the answer, but because I am fearful about hurting feelings. I give my answer in three parts:

FAILURE OF WORLD RELIGIONS

First, in the centuries during which the numerically great religious denominations of the world have dominated the religious concepts and actions of their peoples there has been failure, signal failure to uphold divine standards of righteousness, brotherly love, and peace. These great religions, however good the intentions, have proved impotent to forestall wars and to prevent barbarism, brutality, and atrocities such as the world has seldom known even in its darkest ages and this, too among peoples where substantially the whole populace professed one creed. Of course, it is idle to conjecture what the world might have been without these creeds. No one with historical knowledge will fail to acknowledge their contribution to the enlightenment and culture of the race, but as a source of motivation in the control of men's greeds and passions the known results are certainly not encouraging.

ANSWERS TO LIFE'S QUESTIONS

Second, the ever-growing quest for knowledge among the enlightened people of the earth demands answers, reliable information on questions vital to life and its meaning. In many cases science has accentuated the importance of these questions and has done much to clarify thinking about them, but science has seldom given the answers, especially in the fields of human behavior and relationships. It seems indelicate, I know, to many not of my faith for me to assert that we have the answers. I mean, of course, about the source, the meaning, and purpose of life and the government of man. We do not know and cannot say just why the Lord did not commit these answers which are the essence of the holy gospel to the keeping of many men in many nations, but we do know that he committed them to the custody of this Church through those whom he chose to initiate his work in the latter-days. For this conviction we have substantial proof, evidence, admissible and competent evidence, not gathered from the debatable sources of antiquity but from witnesses and experiences within recent generations of men, attested and recorded to meet all reasonable demands. Here is God's truth and his latest word for the direction of the human family. In application it has been successful and not a failure.

DIVINE COMMISSION TO ACT

Third, I think that nearly everyone will agree that to sustain effectively a cause one must have the authority to represent it. He must be a part of it, on the inside and not on the outside. He must be authorized to speak for it. I know that I broach a controversial question in speaking of the authority to represent God and Christ in the earth. Must we not discuss the great issues of the world because they are controversial, out of fear of treading on someone's sentimental toes? I believe that thinking, honest, inquisitive people the world over want the truth about authority, the divine commission to set up the Lord's work in the earth to administer the ordinances of the holy gospel and to interpret his word and will for the guidance of mankind. Now, there is much incontrovertible evidence that I might review here today in support of the claims to divine authority which this Church makes. I am not going to present this evidence; time will not permit; and many of you who listen know of it. I will confine my comment to one phase of this subject of authority of which I think our friends of the world have a very inadequate conception.

Is it not logical to assume that God, who is the Father of all men and who has endowed all men with liberty and equality of opportunity, does not "play favorites"? If it be regarded as a blessing and an honor to represent him, is there any good reason why that blessing and dignity should not be conferred on all of his sons who are worthy? Do you know of any warrant, scriptural or otherwise, for the creation and maintenance of special groups of spiritual experts to hold the authority of the Lord to the exclusion of other good men? What justification is there for differentiation among loyal and true sons of God by the clothes they wear? Does the apparel bring authority or is it essential to the recognition of a good life devoted to the Lord? And does it not seem reasonable that if the worthy sons of God are to enjoy his companionship in the world to come as a reward for their faithful labors here in this life that they should all bear a portion of his power and be endowed with a part of his spiritual intelligence which constitute the essence of divine authority and priesthood? What a boon it would be to the world if all men understood the nature and permanence of the Holy Priesthood and its indispensable part in the exaltation of a man and his family. Well, unfortunately, but few understand it, and the world goes along century after century following in the pattern of form and tradition, and influenced more by the display of pomp and pageantry than by a sound theology manifest in practical, living religion. That constitutes my answer to those who ask why we cannot trail along in the wake of the so-called great religions in defense of the Christ and his way of life in the crucial contest of the present day.

CHURCH TO TAKE THE LEAD

It then follows, as I see it, that we are to take the lead. There is no one to follow except him who is and always has been at our head. With his approval leaders have been selected for us. They hold no more or any different kind of priesthood from the humblest good man in the kingdom, but they have a special commission to guide and direct our efforts in establishing the kingdom and prosecuting its work in the world. And to one is given the keys of the kingdom. We will follow their leadership, and they will not lead us astray, for they are unselfishly devoted to our interests and their wisdom is inspired.

There is a hungry world about us, my dear brethren and sisters, a challenging, hungry world. People need food for the body, food for the soul. We haven't the millions necessary to build and clothe their bodies. If we had, I think we would do it so that no one would suffer. We do what we can. We do have in our possession, however, what stricken humanity needs to satisfy its hungry soul and revive hope and confidence for peace and security. The message we bear is one of enlightenment to the statesman as well as the pauper. It teaches that enduring happiness is to be found only in goodness and that the highest tribute to the Christ is the tribute of a good life. It teaches that strength, the strength of the nation as so well portrayed by Brother Mark E. Petersen in his Church of the Air address this morning, is the product of that goodness. This message defines God, not as an intangible principle in the universe, but a personality with such inexpressibly beautiful, admirable, and potent attributes as to claim the everlasting love, confidence, reverence, and adulation of every living soul who comes to know the truth about him. It sets forth a brotherhood which in spirit and application transcends any definition of that relationship the world has known, at least in modern times. It brings comfort to the sorrowing. It rebukes avarice and places the world of business on the high plane of stewardship and trusteeship in the acquisition and distribution of the wealth of the world. It brings contentment and peace of mind. It gives unfailing purpose to life. It accentuates personality in every man, woman, and child. Indeed, it makes all things—government and even the Church itself—subservient to the eternal welfare of man.

If I could have my wish today, it would be that everyone of God's children could hear this glorious message and earnestly give consideration to it. I am sure that thereby there would come into countless hearts through the whisperings of the spirit that joy and happiness which attend our own testimonies of the truth. Through our missionary system we have made a tremendous contribution to this end, but it is not enough. We must find new ways to inform and persuade the world, and if we are faithful and truly devoted, God will open the way. That is my conviction.

I know as I know that I live that this is his kingdom. He will never desert it. God help all of us never to desert him, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD E. FOLLAND

Former President of the South African Mission

When President Eugene Cannon was called up here a couple of days ago and said he had waited for seven years for this, I began to wonder if I were going to have to sit on the uneasy seat for another four years. I have dreamed of this occasion more than once, brothers and sisters; and although I have never really thought that I would enjoy standing in front of such a huge audience, I was anxious to have the privilege of bringing to the body of the Church here the greetings of those good Latter-day Saints in that far-off mission field.

I believe that it is probably the smallest, big mission field in the Church. We have about seventeen hundred members in the Union of South Africa and in the Rhodesias. Of course they are not all active members, but we have some that are mighty good members. Many of whom would give most anything to have the opportunity of coming here and sitting in an audience of this kind.

I might tell you what I think was an example of very good faith. One of our good members down there that used to very proudly boast of having been a member of the Church for over thirty years, had the misfortune to lose his wife. At the time that she was dying, he asked her if she wanted to be sealed to him. She said that she did. So this good brother began immediately to save his money in order to come here to Salt Lake City to go to the Temple of the Lord and have his wife sealed to him. This man was a Scotchman, but he was a very fine Scotchman; he paid his tithings (I mean that literally). He was frugal, but he paid his tithings and his offerings; and while he was saving his money to come here to go to this Temple—which it seems a lot of us just take for granted and don't put ourselves out too much to attend—one of my predecessors went to him and said, "Brother Wilson, we need some more missionaries. Can we have Tom?" Brother Wilson said: "If Tom is willing to go, you can have Tom."

Tom spent two years in the mission field in South Africa. Brother Wilson kept him on that mission. When his mission was finished, another of my predecessors asked him for John. So John fulfilled a two-year mission in South Africa. At the end of that time Brother Wilson had accumulated sufficient money to come these thirteen thousand miles to Salt Lake City.

I am telling you this because of the effect it had on us when he returned to South Africa. Brother Wilson came here to Salt Lake City and he wasn't looking for the "dirt on the lily"; he was looking for other things and he found them. When he returned to South Africa, after having visited some of the historic spots of Mormonism on his way out here and on his way back, Brother Wilson praised what he found here in more glowing terms than any of our missionaries dared to speak of our Mormon people.

He had been privileged to go through the Temple, and he had been privileged to meet the Authorities of the Church.

We had him go through the mission and tell his story. He was well respected in South Africa by many hundreds of people, and his story probably went further than some of our stories would.

I think that that is a very fine example of how careful we should be in living our religion. I have been particularly impressed by it since returning home and seeing so many strange people in our midst. I couldn't help but think of what a different story Brother Wilson might have come down with if he had found some of the "dirt on the lily." I even had to tell Brother Wilson when he read some of the stories in the newspaper that he wanted me to refute "Now, Brother Wilson, you have been in Salt Lake since I have, and I am glad that you found the fine things there; but I want you to remember that we also have some things that can and should be improved upon."

Now I would like to just tell you a word or two about our mission. We have about seventeen hundred members in the South African Mission. We have about two million white people to work with—or Europeans, as we call them down there. There are about eight million of the non-Europeans, or the colored races. So that it is quite a problem for some of our missionaries, and particularly for some of our converts.

It is a wonderful country, a grand country, with a wonderful climate and some glorious opportunities. It is also a country which has many, many problems yet to solve. I am happy to know that we now have more missionaries down there. We had the good fortune to be in South Africa with missionaries for a little more than two and a half years. Then we were almost four years without a single missionary. That is when we found out the importance of teaching and having our members assume the responsibilities that they should assume in the Church. It was quite a problem to us for a little while to get our local members, who had been accustomed, many of them, to letting the missionaries do all the work, to assume these responsibilities. Fortunately, we were able to get almost enough of our local people; and thanks to the Relief Society, we were able to carry on the remaining part of the time without missionaries and do, I thought, a fair job.

I understand that President Sharp is doing a splendid work and is happy with having more missionaries there now. The war did affect us, but not as badly as in parts of Europe. We had no combat in our area. We did have submarine warfare along on our coasts, and we saw a great many convoys of all the Allied Nations' soldiers. We were fortunate in being able to cooperate with other Americans in opening an American club after the United States got into the war, and greeting a large number of our boys. We were happy for that opportunity.

I see the time is passing. I cannot take more of it; but I want to bear my testimony, brothers and sisters, that I have had many things happen to me in the mission field, particularly, that have strengthened my testimony and made me feel thoroughly convinced that this is really the work of the Lord, and I pray to our Father in Heaven that our leaders may continue to receive inspiration and revelation, when necessary, to carry on the affairs of this great organization, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

We have here a message of greeting from President Scott Taggart of the Swiss-Austrian Mission.

"Austrian Saints assembled in conference in Vienna send greetings to Church Authorities and members and sincere thanks for much needed help through the Welfare Plan."—Scott Taggart

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing:

"Surely He Hath Borne Our Griefs"—(From the Messiah—Handel).

The prayer will be offered by H. Ray Hatch of the North Idaho Falls Stake, Idaho Falls, Idaho, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and the other stations that were read at the beginning of this meeting.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour for opening.

The Choir sang: "Surely He Hath Borne Our Griefs"—(From "Messiah" by Handel).

President H. Ray Hatch of the North Idaho Falls Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held at 2 o'clock p.m., Sunday, October 5.

Again the building was crowded to capacity, and as was the case at the morning meeting, the Assembly Hall was crowded, and a large number of people assembled on the Tabernacle grounds.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

President George Albert Smith:

I hope that everybody will crowd up as closely as possibly together and make seats for the hundreds of people who are standing. If you will crowd to the center of the benches, it will make quite a difference. The ushers will take care of the rest.

This is the closing session of the 118th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square at Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this afternoon, all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission, and President S. Dilworth Young who is in the New England Mission presiding there.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and the other stations that have already been announced.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper, at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy"—(Evan Stephens).

The opening prayer will be offered by President Cecil Broadbent of the North Carbon Stake, Helper, Utah.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy"—(Evan Stephens).

Elder Cecil Broadbent, President of the North Carbon Stake, offered the invocation.

Singing by the Choir: "Beautiful Savior"—(Arr. Christiansen).

President George Albert Smith:

President McKay will now present the General Authorities and general officers and general auxiliary officers of the Church for your sustaining vote.

President McKay: The voting in all cases, so far as I could see, has been unanimous in the affirmative.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just voted to sustain the General Authorities and general officers of the Church also the general auxiliary groups by raising our right hands. There was no contrary vote. I assume that that means that everybody here is willing not only to sustain them by raising their hands but by helping them in every way to make their work successful.

Brother Joseph Fielding Smith of the Quorum of the Twelve will now address us. Following him will be Elder John A. Widtsoe also of the Quorum of the Twelve.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have been edified by the remarks of my brethren during the several sessions of this conference. We have received instruction, admonition, warning; our attention has been called to our shortcomings; and I hope all will be remembered.

It is my desire, in the few minutes that I have, to add my little part by testimony, instruction, and counsel as the Lord may lead me to speak. I have had a number of topics in mind since the beginning of this conference, and somebody gets up and delivers these talks. So I thought perhaps I could think of something that someone else would not think of, and I want to talk to you this afternoon for a little while on the sin of ingratitude, which I consider to be the most prevalent of all sins, for we are all guilty of it; I am, you are, the people everywhere upon the face of the earth are guilty of this sin in some degree.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS

On one occasion, we read in the scriptures, a young lawyer came to the Savior with a question tempting him and saying:

Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment? And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. (Matt. 22:36-40.)

If we will observe this first law, the second naturally will follow, and in fact, as the Savior has pointed it out, we will not be guilty of a breach of the law and the prophets in anything else.

ETERNAL LIFE

Jesus Christ came into this world with a definite mission as the Savior of men and the Redeemer of the world. When Nicodemus came to the Savior, making inquiry, and he came by night because he was afraid of the Jews, but believing in Jesus Christ, he asked him some questions and the Savior gave him some definite instruction in regard to baptism by water and by the spirit, and in the course of the remarks, that which followed, the Savior said this:

And Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproofed. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God. (John 3:14-21.)

Then the Savior adds:

He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him. (John 3:36.)

ATONEMENT OF CHRIST

Now, may I spend a few minutes presenting before us what we all know to be the truth, that Jesus Christ came into this world to die. That was his mission, and by that death upon the cross and through the shedding of his blood, to bring redemption, twofold, first, to redeem men from Adam's transgression, to restore them again to life, to destroy death, gain the victory, which apparently Satan had won through the transgression of Adam. In some manner which I cannot fully explain and which you cannot fully explain, there was a necessity for an infinite atonement, a God dying for a fallen world, and that had to be by the shedding of blood, and his blood only could be shed to restore again that life which had been taken away, and bring back again to man the power to live forever. And through his death there comes to us universally, to every living creature, a resurrection of the dead. The Lord does not ask us whether we want to be redeemed from death or not. We were not responsible for it, and, therefore, it is not held against us; it is not to our charge. As Paul has said:

THE FREE GIFT OF GOD

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.
(I Cor. 15:22.)

That is the free gift of God the Eternal Father, through Jesus Christ, his Son, to every living soul, men, women, children, from the fall of Adam to the end of time.

Now that is a wonderful gift. It comes without our asking. It comes to the wicked as well as to the righteous. In the fifth chapter of John the Lord speaks to the people of the time coming, and he says it was already here, when the dead should hear the voice of the Son of God and they who heard should live. Yes, not only those who heard it, that is, received his truth, for he added this, when they marveled at what he had to say:

Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation. (John 5:28, 29.)

Here is the word of the Lord himself that he was going to carry the message to the dead; they would all hear; they who were willing to receive that message of truth and abide in it should have everlasting life, but they who would not receive it or who were not worthy to receive it should come forth just the same in the resurrection to receive condemnation, but the resurrection was to come to all universally.

Then again, the Savior died for all men upon the face of the earth, all creatures, that is, human creatures, who were willing to repent of their sins and keep his commandments. He has not redeemed any of us from our sins except it be through repentance and faithful adherence to the principles of the gospel and our endurance to the end.

When he stood before his disciples upon this continent, he said to them:

...no unclean thing can enter into his kingdom; therefore nothing entereth into his rest save it be those who have washed their garments in my blood, because of their faith, and the repentance of all their sins, and their faithfulness unto the end. (III Nephi 27:19.)

That is definite.

So, he redeemed mankind from death universally, and he has redeemed men from their own sins on conditions of their repentance, and they will not be redeemed from their sins unless they do repent and accept him and wash their garments white in his blood and endure in faith to the end. It is upon those terms that salvation comes.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS .

Now, when we stop to think that the Son of God created this world; all things, the scriptures say, were made by him, and when we think that he came to this world with that mission which he accepted before he was born in Bethlehem, and by the shedding of his blood gave us life that we might rise in the resurrection to live forever; and when he, by the shedding of his blood has offered unto us the remission of our sins and eternal life, through obedience to the gospel—do you not think that we owe him something in return? We owe him everything.

Paul says: "We were bought with a price." That price was the blood of Jesus Christ, and we are not our own. Oh, if we could only understand that by the shedding of his blood, he bought us. We belong to him. He has a right to tell us what to do and what not to do, and to command us to keep his commandments; however, we have our agency, and we act for ourselves.

We cannot comprehend the great suffering that the Lord had to take upon himself to bring to pass this redemption from death and from sin. He spent a few years upon the earth, and during that short sojourn he suffered the abuse of men. They stoned him; they spat upon him; they cursed him; they ridiculed him; they accused him of almost every crime they could think of, and finally they took him and crucified him upon a cross.

SUFFERING OF THE SAVIOR

We get into the habit of thinking, I suppose, that his great suffering was when he was nailed to the cross by his hands and his feet and was left there to suffer until he died. As excruciating as that pain was, that was not the greatest suffering that he had to undergo, for in some way which I cannot understand, but which I accept on faith, and which you must accept on faith, he carried on his back the burden of the sins of the whole world. It is hard enough for me to carry my own sins. How is it with you? And yet he had to carry the sins of the whole world, as our Savior and the Redeemer of a fallen world, and so great was his suffering before he ever went to the cross, we are informed, that blood oozed from the pores of his body, and he prayed to his Father that the cup might pass if it were possible, but not being possible he was willing to drink.

And here is what he has said to the Church:

For behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent; But if they would not repent they must suffer even as I; Which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit—and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink—Nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men. (D. & C. 19:16-19.)

Now, when he said that if we do not repent we will have to suffer even as he did, he had no reference to being nailed to a cross, but it was the torment of mind, of spirit, that he had reference to, before he ever got to the cross, and if men will not repent, they will have to suffer even as he suffered.

Now brethren, briefly, he did all this for us, the Son of God, and he did it, as I have read to you, because his Father commanded him and because his Father so loved the world that he wanted to save the world from its sins.

TRANSGRESSOR SHOWS INGRATITUDE

Now, he has asked us to keep his commandments. He says they are not grievous, and there are so many of us who are not willing to do it. I am speaking now generally of the people of the earth. We are not willing to do it. That certainly is ingratitude. We are ungrateful. Every member of this Church that violates the Sabbath day, that is not honest in the paying of his tithing, that will not keep the Word of Wisdom, that wilfully violates any of the other commandments the Lord has given us, is ungrateful to the Son of God and when ungrateful to the Son of God is ungrateful to the Father who sent him. If our Savior would do so much for us, how in the world is it that we are not willing to abide by his commandments which are not grievous, which do not cause us any suffering if we will only keep them? And yet, people break the Word of Wisdom; they refuse to attend to their duties as officers and members in the Church; many of them stay away from meetings the Lord has called upon them to support. They follow their own desires if they are in conflict with the commandments of the Lord.

If we understood our position and we loved the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our mind, or, as he has put it in the revelation given to us in these days:

Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (D. & C. 59:5, 6.)

then we would keep his commandments; when we will not do this, I tell you, my brethren and sisters, we show ingratitude to Jesus Christ. In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, this has been a glorious conference. I am tempted to say it is the best we have ever had, unless it be that the last is always the best.

I have enjoyed the remarks made by the brethren. I think every gospel principle of consequence, and they are all of consequence, has been discussed before us the last three days. I feel built up in my faith as a result of this conference, and feel indeed that the Spirit of God has been with us to help us and inspire us during these meetings.

My own contribution this afternoon must of necessity be a humble one since, like Brother Joseph Fielding Smith, I have had the experience of hearing my eloquent colleagues taking, one after the other, some of my sermons and delivering them splendidly to the congregation.

APPRECIATION FOR CENTENNIAL PROGRAM

Before saying, however, what is on my mind, I would like to call attention to a remark made by President David O. McKay in this morning's service. He took occasion to thank the people of the Church and the people of the state for the assistance they have given him and the governor and members of his commission in carrying out the centennial celebration. We are all grateful for that courteous remark, but I felt that we should reverse the matter; that we, as members of the Church, as citizens of Utah, should extend to these men with President McKay at their head, our thanks for the splendid program that was arranged and supervised by them. Throughout this state, and in the wards and stakes of Zion far beyond the boundaries of Utah, this program has been carried out to the great joy and refreshment of the people who belong to the Church, and of many others, not of our faith.

I would like to say the same thing about President George Albert Smith and his commission. They also had a difficult task, to get in readiness, after long planning, the great pioneer monument which now adorns the hill to the east, and to have it ready on time. On the 24th of July last, they were ready, and the dedicatory exercises were held and the responsibility accomplished.

To these two men and their commissions—I think I can speak freely and correctly in your behalf—when I extend to them your thanks and appreciation for work well done.

The monument on the hill is in honor of the Mormon Pioneers—that is its principal objective—but through the sculptor's skill it embodies a practically complete, pre-pioneer history of this region. If one will walk about the monument, study the figures, learn to understand their meanings, he will have a good conception of all that happened in these valleys from 1776, when Father Escalante entered what is now Utah, up to the coming of the Pioneers in 1847.

THE GLORY OF THE PIONEERS

On July 24, 1947, just before the great parade began, I stood near the group of surviving pioneers seated in front of the Church Administration Building. I looked at them, talked with them, looked into their faces and at their hands, and read a good part of their life's history as I moved among them. Their faces told a wonderful story, not only of toil, but of great aspirations, of great faith; their hands likewise. I don't know whether you all look at the hands of people, but hands are eloquent testators of life's journey, from the chubby little fist of the baby to the veined hands of age.

These men and women had endured much, they who were seated by the Administration Building on that occasion. They came here as children, mere children, but they shared in the pioneer building. Many of us here, like myself, have known personally scores and scores of those who as mature men and women came here in early pioneer days and made this state and this region what it is today. I was touched in my heart as I became acquainted with these old, may I say, men and women, and saw in them the glory of the story that we have been celebrating this last year.

When the next general conference of the Church comes, this year of memories which I know has been refreshing to all of us—it has to me—will be itself a memory, but a great and a glorious memory! And as I stood by these pioneers, the last survivors of those who came before the railroad, I observed that the great majority, on my side at least, were made up of women, women rich in years, not old—because of course no woman ever gets old—and I could read in their faces the story of their lives, how they had toiled, how they had labored, how they had built Zion, with their husbands and children.

WOMAN'S CONTRIBUTION

Woman's share in the building of the West is understood by all of us, but sometimes we forget to give her the praise which is her due. As the man went out to clear the sagebrush, she stayed home and finished the little pioneer building, inside at least. She cooked the simple food for her husband and her family; and usually somewhere in a corner outside she planted flower seeds to add a touch of beauty to life.

We cannot live without beauty. That has been said over and over here today, and yesterday, and the day before. Life is more than three meals a day. One must move into the spiritual realm which lies all about us to win full enjoyment in life.

I hope that we all, on this occasion, and in days to come, as I am sure has been done in days past, give proper tribute to pioneer women, our mothers, grandmothers, great-grandmothers, who did quite as much in their way as did the men. It was their opportunity to help build this great western empire, and they accepted the challenge, without fear.

FAITH OF PIONEER WOMEN

This pioneer woman did something which glorifies her memory. There were times when the man became discouraged. They had both come perhaps from easier climates. Perhaps she came with soft hands, rosy English cheeks. She had to meet the hardships of the West. Sometimes the man, unused to the toil, the clearing of sagebrush, the plowing of the land, and all these new things, became discouraged. Sometimes despair overtook him. Then it was that the woman came to the rescue. When he looked down, she looked up. When he half-doubted, she increased in faith.

The finest picture of that quality in woman's nature, within my knowledge, is on the south plaque of the Sea Gull Monument. If you have not seen it, take a look at it. The crickets had come; destruction to the crops seemed inevitable; the man has given up, but the woman stands with head raised looking towards heaven. She may not have known Browning's lines but she knew that:

God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world.

I think this Mahonri Young's finest piece of work, among the many fine ones executed in his long series of years—he is now getting to be an old man like the rest of us.

APPRECIATION FOR WORK OF WOMEN

In speaking of the pioneer woman, I come necessarily to women of every time. Not only the pioneer woman, but the woman of today and tomorrow, of the east and of the west, and of the north and of the south, wherever we go. We men have good reason to thank God for the women of our households. They are strong in faith, full of courage, able to do the work that the day brings.

I have brought with me quotations from two of the great Presidents of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Here is one from Heber J. Grant, whom we all knew and loved. He said:

Without the wonderful work of the women I realize that the Church would have been a failure.

A strong statement. I am not saying that, I am quoting from President Grant.

The mother in the family, far more than the father, is the one who instills in the hearts of the children a testimony and love for the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our fathers and mothers came here in the early days for the one and only thing—to serve the Lord, and to labor for the salvation of humanity, and wherever you find a woman who is devoted to this work, almost without exception you will find that her children are devoted to it.

Another President of the Church whom we loved greatly who really belongs to our day—most of us here knew him, a prince, a king among men—Joseph F. Smith, said on one occasion:

There are people who are fond of saying that women are the weaker sex. I don't believe it. Physically they may be, but spiritually, morally, religiously, and in faith what man can match a woman who is really convinced! They are always more willing to make sacrifices, and are the peer of men in stability, godliness, morality, and faith.

In the 1870's the distinguished grandfather of the distinguished grandson who is here today, Colonel Thomas L. Kane—we call him affectionately, Colonel Kane, for by that title we knew him best—came to Utah on his last trip. He and President Young traveled from Salt Lake to St. George together. Colonel Kane had his wife and two children with him, one of them possibly Mr. Kent Kane's father. I am not sure about that. We have here in the congregation, one of the two surviving daughters of Brigham Young, Mrs. Mabel Y. Sanborn who was on that trip, and played with those children, sang songs with them. Mrs. Kane took occasion to write to her family a series of letters, which the family published privately in a little book. I read it the other day in Washington, D. C., in the Library of Congress. I did not know then that we had a copy in the historian's library. I found the great and fervent testimony that that woman bore to the pioneer mothers of Utah, of the Mormon Church.

But, if all this be true, a great responsibility rests upon woman-kind, one that we cannot discuss here because time does not permit, a tremendous responsibility. If she has strength and has faith and has opportunity in this Church, what can she not do to build this kingdom as the Lord would have it be!

Sometimes we hear it said that this is a man's Church, not a woman's Church. That is a great mistake. It is not a man's Church; it is not a woman's Church; it is a Church of families, made up of fathers, mothers, and children. The blessings that descend upon the family are shared by all the members of the family, each one according to his or her calling, organized calling within the family.

THE EVIL OF DIVORCE

One more question remains in my mind, if President Smith will allow me to take two or three minutes more. In those early days we had practically no divorces, no marital upsets, no family troubles such as we have today. Today the divorce evil in America is becoming a national scandal, nothing short of it. The question is often asked, How did it happen that we had family integrity, peace, and harmony in those early days? The Church has never said that divorce should be forbidden, not be given nor taken. There may be conditions, under our frail mortal conditions, that justify divorce; but the Church has always looked askance upon it and always with sorrow.

The day journal of Brigham Young records that one day a sister came to him and said: "My husband is not good to me. I want a divorce." The journal goes on further to say that President Young talked with her about an hour, from ten to eleven in the morning. The journal gives the exact time. Then, when they had finished, he turned to the woman, and he said: "Sister, I have heard your story. I am not going to give you a divorce." As you know, Brigham Young was a friend to the cause of women. He felt that they had the first right of choice. "I will not give you a divorce," he said. "Go home and be good to you husband, and don't expect heaven on earth."

There is a tremendous lesson in that last phrase: "Don't expect heaven on earth."

A man marries a girl and expects her to be a perfect woman; she expects him to be a perfect man; both are imperfect. Their business in life is to help each other to move more nearly towards a state of perfection.

NEED FOR COMMON INTEREST IN KINGDOM OF GOD

But I think the real reason why we had so little marital unhappiness in those earlier days was something that we have forgotten in our day. Man and woman husband and wife, had a common interest, a high, worthy interest which they shared in common. There is danger in the household when a husband has one interest and the wife another. They are laying the foundation for all manner of discord, ultimate dissatisfaction with their problems, family problems. To be happy in life in a married condition, husband and wife must have a high, worthy, common interest, a common objective. That objective they had in those early days—we should have it now; I hope we do have it. They did not come out here in these valleys alone for food and clothing and shelter, to get a living. That was not the purpose of the trek across the plains, but they came to find a place of safety and to help build the kingdom of God as God would have it done. All that they did their plowing, their washing of dishes, their mending of clothes, their raising of homes, fences, and barns, was done primarily that they might better be able to further the interest of the kingdom of God upon earth.

If every family in Zion will set out with that objective in all their doings, in all their undertakings, if everything is considered with reference to the building and growth of the kingdom of God, there will not be much for the divorce attorney to do. We will then live in happiness together as families, and raise our children to be noble and useful citizens of the state and of the Church.

That lesson comes down to us from those early days, and connected with the place of woman in the society which we call the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I know and have known of the strength of women. I grew up a widow's son, from my earliest childhood. My father is but a dim shadow in my memory. She taught me, and she trained me, quite as well, I think, as a father could have done. The Lord helped her. The Lord does not limit his blessings according to sex, but according to our faith and devotion to him.

This has been a great conference. God bless us and be with us and make us mighty examples for good to the world, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Quorum of the Twelve has just spoken to us, he called our attention to the place in the Church of women. I think some of you may know that two living wives of former presidents of the Church, the wife of President Joseph F. Smith, Aunt Mary, and the wife of Heber J. Grant, Aunt Augusta, have been in attendance at this conference, even at their advanced years. We are happy to have them here, and we hope they have enjoyed the meetings as well as we have enjoyed having them with us.

The Choir and congregation will now sing:

"Come, Come Ye Saints"—(Clayton)

Singing by the Choir and congregation: "Come, Come Ye Saints."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren and sisters; I should like in the beginning to add my testimony to the many that we have heard during this conference—my testimony that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world the first fruits of the resurrection; that Joseph Smith was a prophet; that through him the gospel was restored and likewise the priesthood, the authority delegated to man on earth to represent Deity here among us; and that the Prophet has been followed down to and including our present President, George Albert Smith, by men who possessed the keys of the last dispensation as conferred upon Joseph Smith.

The matter that I shall give you today is very dear to my soul. Since I should like to say what I have to say in the best way I can say it, I have written it down and shall read it. I hope that what I shall say will be in harmony with the spirit of this great conference, I think the greatest I have attended in its high spiritual tone.

TRIBUTE TO PIONEERS

At the near close of this one hundredth year of the entering into these valleys of your fathers and your mothers, some of yours and mine, I wish to speak a few further words of humble tribute and thanksgiving to them, and especially to the meekest and lowliest of them, those great souls, majestic in the simplicity of their faith and in their living testimony of the truth of the restored gospel, to those souls in name unknown, unremembered, unhonored in the pages of history, but lovingly revered round the hearthstones of their children and their children's children who pass down from generation to generation the story of their faith and their mighty works, and the righteousness of their lives and living, those souls who worked and worked, and prayed and followed, and wrought so gloriously.

I would not take away one word of praise or gratitude, honor or reverence from the great men who led these humble ones of ours. They were mighty men in brain and brawn, in courage and valor, in honesty and in love of truth, living near the Lord—Brothers Brigham and Heber and Wilford and Willard and Charles, the two Orsons and Parley, and John and George and Erastus and Lorenzo and Daniel and Joseph and Jedediah, and a host of other giants, each and all richly blessed with the Lord's divine love and with that gift of the Holy Ghost that made them leaders truly like unto Moses of old. I yield, we yield, to no one in our gratitude for them and for their work of directing the conquest of the wilderness and of saving men's souls. Their names shine lustroously on those pages of history which record only the doings of the makers of epochs—those choice spirits, chosen before the foundation of the world, to be the leaders and builders of dispensations of God's dealings with men; and these leaders of ours to be the builders of that dispensation which of old was named the Dispensation of the Fulness of Time. Unnumbered eternities will remember and honor them.

But I should like now and here to say a few words about those who trod after where those giants led, some in the same companies that the Brethren piloted, some in later companies following that year and the years after, some in the fateful handcarts with their unexcelled devotion, heroism, and faith, all trickling forward in a never-failing, tiny stream, till they filled the valley they entered and then flowed out at the sides and ends, peopling this whole wilderness-waste which they fructified, making it to fulfil the ancient prophecy that the desert should blossom as the rose.

THEY OF THE LAST WAGON

I would like to say something about the last wagon in each of the long wagon trains that toiled slowly over the plains, up mountain defiles, down steep, narrow canyons, and out into the valley floor that was to be home—this last wagon: last, because the ox team that pulled it was the smallest and leanest and weakest, and had the tenderest feet of any in the train; it was slow starting, and slow moving; last, because worn and creaking, it took more time to fix and to grease, for young Jimmy generally had trouble in getting the wagon jack under the "ex"; last, because its wind-rent cover was old and patched and took hours to mend and tie up to keep out the storm; last, because the wife, heavy with child, must rest till the very moment of starting; last, because sickly little Bill, the last born, poorly nourished, must be washed and coaxed to eat the rough food, all they had; last, because with all his tasks—helping little Bill, cooking and cleaning up the breakfast,—Mother was not able to help much—Father took a little longer to yoke his cattle and to gird himself for the day's labor; last, because his morning prayers took a few more minutes than the others spent—he had so many blessings to thank the Lord for and some special blessings to ask the Lord to grant, blessings of health and strength, especially for his wife, and for little Bill, and for the rest, and then the blessings for himself that his own courage would not fail, but most of all for the blessing of faith, faith in God and in the Brethren who sometimes seemed so far away. For they were out in front where the air was clear and clean and where they had unbroken vision of the blue vault of heaven. The Brethren had really visioned the glory of the Lord, who walked near them, put his thoughts into their minds; his spirit guided and directed them, petitioned thereto by the thousands of Saints who were back in Winter Quarters, back in Iowa, back in the States, and beyond, even across the waters, for the faithful poured out their souls in fervent prayer to Almighty God that the Brethren should be inspired. The Saints bouyed up the Brethren out in front with encouragement, with praise, and sometimes even with adulation. Knowing the Brethren were prophets of God, the Saints gave them full confidence, daily, almost hourly, expressed. The Brethren lived in a world of commendation from friends and the tried and true Saints. Rarely was their word or their act questioned by the faithful Saints. This was as it should be and had to be to carry out the Lord's purposes.

But back in the last wagon, not always could they see the Brethren way out in front, and the blue heaven was often shut out from their sight by heavy, dense clouds of the dust of the earth. Yet day after day, they of the last wagon pressed forward, worn and tired, footsore, sometimes almost disheartened, borne up by their faith that God loved them, that the restored gospel was true and that the Lord led and directed the Brethren out in front. Sometimes, they in the last wagon glimpsed, for an instant, when faith surged strongest, the glories of a celestial world, but it seemed so far away, and the vision so quickly vanished, because want and weariness and heartache and sometimes discouragement were always pressing so near. When the vision faded, their hearts sank. But they prayed again and pushed on, with little praise, with not too much encouragement, and never with adulation. For there was nearly always something wrong with the last wagon or with its team—the off ox was a little lame in the right front shoulder; the hub of the left front wheel was often hot; the tire of the hind wheel on the same side was loose. So corrective counsel, sometimes strong reproof, was the rule, because the wagon must not delay the whole train. But yet in that last wagon there was devotion and loyalty and integrity, and above and beyond everything else, faith in the Brethren and in God's power and goodness. For had not the Lord said that "not even a sparrow falleth unnoticed by the Father, and were they not of more value than sparrows?" And then they had their testimony burning always like an eternal fire on a holy altar, that the restored gospel was true, and that Joseph was a prophet of God, and that Brigham was Joseph's chosen successor.

When the train moved forward in the early morning sun and the oxen with a swinging pull that almost broke the tongue got that last wagon on the move, the dust in the still morning air hung heavy over the road. Each wagon from the first stirred up its own cloud, till when the last wagon swung into line, that dust was dense and suffocating. It covered the last wagon and all that was in it; it clung to clothes; it blackened faces; it filled eyes already sore, and ears. The wife, soon to be a mother, could hardly catch her breath in the heavy, choking dust, for even in the pure air she breathed hard from her burden. Each jolt of the wagon, for those ahead had made wagon ruts almost "ex" deep, wrung from her clenched lips a half-groan she did her best to keep from the ears of the anxious, solicitous husband plodding slowly along, guiding and goading the poor dumb cattle, themselves weary from the long trek. So through the long day of jolting and discomfort and sometimes pain, sometimes panting for breath, the mother, anxious only that the unborn babe should not be injured, rode, for she could not walk; and the children walked, for the load was too heavy and big for them to ride; and the father walked sturdily alongside and prayed.

When in the evening the last wagon creaked slowly into its place in the circle corral, and the Brethren came to inquire how the day had gone with the mother, then joy leaped in their hearts, for had not the Brethren remembered them? New hope was born, weariness fled, fresh will to do was enkindled; gratitude to God was poured out for their knowledge of the truth, for their testimony that God lived, that Jesus was the Christ, that Joseph was a prophet, that Brigham was his ordained successor, and that for the righteous a crown of glory awaited that should be theirs during the eternities of the life to come. Then they would join in the songs and dancing in the camp, making the camp's gaiety their own, as much as Mother's condition would permit.

Then the morning came when from out that last wagon floated the la-la of the newborn babe, and mother love made a shrine, and Father bowed in reverence before it. But the train must move on. So out into the dust and dirt the last wagon moved again, swaying and jolting, while Mother eased as best she could each pain-giving jolt so no harm might be done her, that she might be strong to feed the little one, bone of her bone, flesh of her flesh. Who will dare to say that angels did not cluster round and guard her and ease her rude bed, for she had given another choice spirit its mortal body that it might work out its God-given destiny?

My mother was one of those babes so born in 1848, ninety-nine years ago.

Another morning came, when courageous little Bill, who, with a hero's heart, had trudged through long days of hot sun and through miles of soggy mud in the rain, his little body drenched, little Bill, weak and wan, must be crowded in to ride with Mother, for he was sick from a heavy cold. Months before, on that cold winter's night when they had fled Nauvoo for their lives to escape the fiendish wrath of a wild mob, Bill became dangerously ill with pneumonia, which left him with weak lungs. This old illness now returned. He grew worse and worse. The elders came and prayed he might get well. But the Lord wanted little Bill with him. So a few mornings later a weeping mother and a grief-stricken father and that last wagon swung into place in the line, leaving beside the road, under some scrub brush a little mound, unmarked save for heaped-up rocks to keep out the wolves, a mound that covered another martyr to the cause of truth.

So through dust and dirt, dirt and dust, during the long hours, the longer days—that grew into weeks and then into months, they crept along till, passing down through its portals, the valley welcomed them to rest and home. The cattle dropped to their sides, wearied almost to death; nor moved they without goading, for they too sensed they had come to the journey's end.

That evening was the last of the great trek, the mightiest trek that history records since Israel's flight from Egypt, and as the sun sank below the mountain peaks of the west and the eastern crags were bathed in an amethyst glow that was a living light, while the western mountainsides were clothed in shadows of the rich blue of the deep sea, they of the last wagon, and of the wagon before them, and of the one before that, and so to the very front wagon of the train, these all sank to their knees in the joy of their souls, thanking God that at last they were in Zion. "Zion, Zion, lovely Zion, beautiful Zion, Zion, City of our God." They knew there was a God, for only he could have brought them triumphant, militant, through all the scorn, the ridicule, the slander, the tarrings and featherings, the whippings, the burnings, the plunderings, the murderings, the ravishings of wives and daughters, that had been their lot, the lot of their people since Joseph visioned the Father and the Son.

But hundreds of these stalwart souls of undoubting faith and great prowess, were not yet at their journey's end.

Brother Brigham again called them to the colors of the kingdom of God, and sent them to settle the valleys, near and remote, in these vast mountains of refuge. So again they yoked their oxen and hitched up their teams, and putting their all in the covered wagon, this time willingly, unwhipped by the threat of mob cruelty and outrage, they wended their slow way to new valleys, again trusting with implicit faith in the wisdom and divine guidance of their Moses. The very elements obeyed their faith, faith close kin to that which made the world.

These tens of thousands who so moved and so built were the warp and the woof of Brother Brigham's great commonwealth. Without them Brother Brigham had failed his mission. These were the instruments—the shovelers, the plowers, and sowers and reapers, the machinists, the architects, the masons, the woodworkers, the organ builders, the artisans, the mathematicians, the men of letters, all gathered from the four corners of the earth, furnished by the Lord to Brother Brigham and the prophet leaders who came after, that he and they might direct the working out of His purposes. These wrought as God inspired Brother Brigham and the other prophets to plan, all to the glory of God and the up-building of his kingdom.

Upright men they were, and fearless, unmindful of what men thought or said of them, if they were in their line of duty. Calumny, slander, derision, scorn left them unmoved, if they were treading the straight and narrow way. Uncaring they were of men's blame and censure, if the Lord approved them. Unswayed they were by the praise of men, to wander from the path of truth. Endowed by the spirit of discernment, they knew when kind words were mere courtesy, and when they betokened honest interest. They moved neither to the right nor to the left from the path of truth to court the good favor of men.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF HUMBLE SOULS

So for a full hundred years, urged by the spirit of gathering and led by a burning testimony of the truth of the restored gospel, thousands upon tens of thousands of these humble souls, one from a city, two from a family, have bidden farewell to friends and homes and loved ones, and with sundered heartstrings, companioned with privation and with sacrifice even to life itself, these multitudes have made their way to Zion, to join those who were privileged to come earlier, that all might build up the kingdom of God on earth—all welded together by common hardship and suffering, never-ending work and deep privation, tragic woes and heart-eating griefs, abiding faith and exalting joy, firm testimony and living spiritual knowledge—a mighty people, missioned with the salvation, not only of the living, but of the dead also, saviors not worshipers of their ancestors, their hearts aglow with the divine fire of the spirit of Elijah, who turns the hearts of the fathers to the children and of the children to the fathers.

And thousands upon thousands of these tens of thousands, from the first till now, all the elect of God, measured to their humble calling and to their destiny as fully as Brother Brigham and the others measured to theirs, and God will so reward them. They were pioneers in word and thought and act and faith, even as were they of more exalted station. The building of this intermountain empire was not done in a corner by a select few but by this vast multitude flowing in from many nations, who came and labored and wrought, faithfully following their divinely called leaders.

WE MUST RISE BY OUR OWN LABOR

In living our lives let us never forget that the deeds of our fathers and mothers are theirs, not ours; that their works cannot be counted to our glory; that we can claim no excellence and no place, because of what they did, that we must rise by our own labor, and that labor failing we shall fail. We may claim no honor, no reward, no respect, nor special position or recognition, no credit because of what our fathers were or what they wrought. We stand upon our own feet in our own shoes. There is no aristocracy of birth in this Church; it belongs equally to the highest and the lowliest; for as Peter said to Cornelius, the Roman centurion, seeking him:

... Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. (Acts 10:34, 35.)

So to these humble but great souls, our fathers and mothers, the tools of the Lord, who have, for this great people, hewed the stones and laid the foundations of God's kingdom, solid as the granite mountains from which they carved the rocks for their temple, to these humble souls, great in faith, great in work, great in righteous living, great in fashioning our priceless heritage, I humbly render my love, my respect, my reverent homage. God keep their memories ever fresh among us, their children, to help us meet our duties even as they met theirs, that God's work may grow and prosper till the restored gospel of Jesus Christ rules all nations and all peoples, till peace, Christ's peace, shall fill the whole earth, till "righteousness shall cover the earth even as the waters cover the mighty deep." Let us here and now dedicate all that we have and all that we are to this divine work. May God help us so to do, I humbly pray in Jesus' name, his Son. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have as our guest here today a man who represents the best type of American manhood. He comes from a family that helped to make this country what it is. His grandfather, Colonel Thomas L. Kane, was one of the great Christian patriots of this world. About ninety years ago he was trying to get into this Valley in order that he might exercise his influence to prevent the army of the United States from coming into the Valley and destroying what the Saints had accumulated while they had been here. By the blessing of God he succeeded.

Today we are honored by having as our guest, and we hope he will enjoy being with us, and we would like to have him speak to us at this time, Honorable E. Kent Kane a grandson of the great Colonel Thomas L. Kane, Major General Kane.

MR. E. KENT KANE

President Smith and friends of the Church of Latter-day Saints, I am pleased to be here because I feel that there exists between your people and mine a deep and ancient friendship that as far as I am concerned at least will continue until the end of my life. I have never had the obligation nor the privilege to address a religious gathering before and I must confess that I am like the man who just said he had waited some years to address you; except that I would almost wait some years to get out of having to address you here now.

I suppose there are some of you here who may desire to hear what I have to say, but I dare say a lot more of you would just like to get a look at me and see what sort of a looking person I am. I am not much to look at. But I have a slight compensation for it, because as I look out over this audience I don't see so many Clark Gables out there, either.

I feel a little handicapped to come before you after so many distinguished speakers who have covered practically every conceivable subject upon which I might desire to remark—even, I think, the subject of my grandfather would be covered by Mr. Evans better than I could. If he should succeed in reconciling all the facts of that very unusual character, then he should be given the Utah prize for literary dexterity, and I hope some of the eminent educators I see down front will award it to him. It will be quite a job but I believe he is the man to do it and I will do what I can to help him.

Coming here before you I feel a good deal as they have described St. Paul as coming before the men of Athens. He said, "Ye men of Athens . . . etc., I perceive ye are very religious." I used to feel that the word "religious" was the only important one, but now I see that as the old lady said the emphasis was on the wrong syllable. I had the emphasis on the wrong syllable and it was the fact that it was the men of Athens who were very religious that impressed Paul.

It is impressive to look over this vast audience and to see to what extent the religion of your Church is a religion of men. I am afraid there are a lot of churches that would perish entirely if it were not for the fact that their religion reposes today almost entirely in the hands and hearts of the mothers. And yet I can't believe that the battles of the Lord are to be fought entirely by the distaffs but I think it takes the good strong arms of the men of any religion such as I see before me here to fight those battles with a good firm hold upon the sword of the spirit.

Your religion is strong, but yet it seems odd to you that though there are so many of you here and though I have always been friendly to the Mormons, that I was 35 years of age before I so much as set eyes on a Mormon. However, I started right, for the first Mormon I ever saw was President Frank Evans back in Pennsylvania and the very first one I saw in Utah was the President of the Church, my honored friend Heber J. Grant. I cannot give you a testimonial such as some of the men who have preceded me have given you here, but in one sense I can give you perhaps at last something as an outsider who has had the good fortune to come and observe with a friendly, if not an understanding heart.

I was trained in the law and one of the things that they taught us was that they should not take too seriously self-serving declarations made by persons in their own behalf, but that an admission by an outsider against his own interest was to be given great weight in the law. And I must say that I, an outsider, have been greatly impressed with the sincerity and achievement of the people of this Church that I have seen here.

Yours is a singing religion and I believe that words of religion dissolved in music soak into the human soul better than any other way. A good hymn is a good spiritual tonic to a sick or frightened soul. What singing I have seen here among the Mormons, you seem to need no books. It is as if when you open your mouths to sing the spirit entered in.

Yours is a joyous religion. I don't see very many sissies in your religion and there haven't been any since the time of the Prophet Joseph Smith. One of the gentlemen here this morning told me his father could remember when the prophet was the best wrestler in the whole group with which he traveled and would throw down all contenders just as George Washington, father of our country, was the champion boxer in Virginia in his day.

Yours seems to be a growing religion and that is a wonderful thing. You are not static. You are not frozen to one position. Once for a political speech I had occasion to see if I could find any of the original writings of Christ. After I looked I could only find one place that Christ ever wrote anything and then he stooped down and wrote with his finger on the ground and we don't have the record of what he wrote. But what he said was: "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone."

Now we know that Jesus Christ was a scholar because he disputed with the priests in the temple. We know that he could read and write. Therefore we must, as sensible people, if not lawyers, conclude that it would have been easy for him to put his entire doctrine in writing. When he did not do that we may assume it was because he did not do so deliberately. So that new situations might be met by new things and that churches such as yours may freely hold the belief that new revelations may be granted when new crises arise. For it would have been a simple thing for Jesus Christ to have written the entire text of his gospel and had it saved from destruction by the powers of heaven, which he could easily have done.

Yours is a family religion. I heard a gentleman say something about backsliders among the young. For three years in this last war I was a division officer in the Navy and I have a cousin with the same name who for five years was an artillery colonel. We were talking about it the other day and we both agreed that some of the very finest men that we had in our commands in the service were from the Mormon Church and that they were by all odds the cleanest. I don't know what they do elsewhere, but I do say that those I saw in the naval service were very creditable members of your congregation. And I want to add that it was not always as easy as it would have been in Salt Lake during conference week.

Your president has very kindly referred to my grandfather here and I feel in a sense that I could call your president my "cousin" because his great-grandfather called my grandfather his "brother" and he called him such in the opening words of a blessing which he as the patriarch of this Church, conferred upon my grandfather. I have that blessing at home. It was written in the handwriting of one Wilford Woodruff and it lay in a book with locks on, where my grandfather placed it, for nearly one hundred years. So there was no chance of it being tampered with because my father, to my knowledge never saw that blessing during his entire life time. I myself was the young vandal who broke open the locks when I inherited it and I am glad I did.

And again I give you an outside testimony that to my own knowledge that blessing conferred by his grandfather was carried out by events to the letter and in detail. Now as a lawyer I know you will say that it could have been a "coincidence." So it could. But it would have had to have been a whole series of "coincidences" and a whole series of "remarkable coincidences" and when you get that sort of thing built up you have established circumstantial evidence and as the great Thoreau once observed "circumstantial evidence can sometimes be very convincing as when you find a (brook) trout in the milk." I don't believe it was "circumstantial evidence" or a coincidence. I believe that that prophecy was literally fulfilled.

My mother never was as much to talk about religion as my father, but my mother had a couple of sayings she used to say often. She believed the Lord helped best those that tried to help themselves and she also used to say that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver. And when I came out here to Utah I saw how your people believed that the Lord was your shepherd. You have created your own green pastures where there were none and brought in your own running waters when you could find none to walk by. I read how the women of this Church had at one time prepared a table in the presence of your enemies from the food that their husbands had wrenched from these deserts. You tried to help yourselves and you were cheerful givers. I saw that the Lord had restored your souls. I could not help but observe that here in Utah I had beheld the works of the Lord made manifest.

Now Lord, thou who hast been our dwelling place in all generations before ever these mountains were made or earth received her form, we pray thee Lord to look down on these thy people. Stretch forth thine arm to the uttermost corners of the earth and the isles of the sea to protect and encourage the children of this Church who are out on missions and may they set a good example not only of what Christian members of this Church do but also of what good Americans can be when away from home.

(Aside to President Smith):

That ends what I have to say, and now may the Lord watch between me and thee while we are absent one from another.

President George Albert Smith:

I am sure we have all been delighted to hear from Mr. Kane. We are glad that he feels like he wants to belong to the family. I shall take him in (laughter). I think he will discover that he has a lot more relatives here who could call him brother, so he will have no difficulty in being at home with us. We are more than grateful for his grandfather, and we are glad that his grandson could come here and be with us today.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

We have been celebrating for nearly a year. It has been a time of pleasure and recreation, and I am satisfied that had our pioneer forebears been here they too would have gladly joined with us. The year is passing now, and the centuries are before us. The best tribute that we who are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints can pay to those who are on the other side will be to honor God and keep his commandments and by so doing honor those whose names we bear. In this way we will increase our own happiness and provide opportunity for joy for those who follow after us.

OUR GREAT RESPONSIBILITY

We will receive the blessings of the Lord if we will only remember that since we are the children of God, our responsibility is greater than any other people. No other church has the responsibility that is upon this Church because the Lord has given to us a commandment to go into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature so that

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. (Mark 16:16.)

So it is not merely a question of living our short lives in comfort; if we expect to enjoy eternal happiness in the celestial kingdom, we must earn it by doing our best to bring as many of our Father's children to live with him as we possibly can.

God has been good to us. No people in the world have more reason to be grateful than we. Here under the shelter of this roof we can well pour out our souls to him who is the Author of our being and remember with love those, who under his watchcare, made it possible for us to enjoy the things that we now have.

MANIFESTO ISSUED

On October 6, 1890, in this Tabernacle the people were assembled in conference. The Church had been harassed and abused, and property had been escheated by the government. Many had been imprisoned for what they believed. Upon that occasion the President of the Church, Wilford Woodruff, among other things, delivered this message to us here:

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the Church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

That is a part of the Manifesto.

After that had been read, Lorenzo Snow, the man who later succeeded Wilford Woodruff as President of the Church, said:

I move that, recognizing Wilford Woodruff as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the only man on the earth at the present time who holds the keys of the sealing ordinances, we consider him fully authorized by virtue of his position to issue the Manifesto which has been read in our hearing and which is dated September 24th, 1890, and that as a Church in General Conference assembled, we accept his declaration concerning plural marriages as authoritative and binding.

* * *

The vote to sustain the foregoing motion was unanimous.

PRACTICE OF PLURAL MARRIAGE DISCONTINUED

That was the action of the Church at that time. The practice of plural marriage ceased because the government of the United States forbade it. Our Heavenly Father has always directed that we sustain the constitutional law of the land, and the Supreme Court being the highest authority had declared the law forbidding plural marriage was constitutional.

From then until now, there has been little said by us, and now, after all these years, I would like to say that from that time on, approximately fifty years, there have been no plural marriages solemnized in violation of the laws of this land by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

MANIFESTO STILL BINDING

I mention this because, unfortunately, there are some people in the world who are still insisting that we no longer pay attention to the Manifesto, that it does not bind us now, and by that attitude some men and women are falling into adultery and committing a sin not only against the government of the United States, but also against the Church itself. And yet they say that because we are not talking about it, that we condone it.

As President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, I say we do not condone it. We desire our people to obey the law of the land in reference to marriage. If you hear anybody say that the leadership of the Church is not in harmony with the Manifesto of Wilford Woodruff as sustained by the Church, then you may know that he is mistaken.

I regret that it is necessary to refer to this matter, but there are those who are going among the people encouraging the violation of the moral law. That is what they are doing, and if the Church of Jesus Christ stands for anything, it stands for morality, and so today, in the conclusion of this conference, I call your attention to this matter.

A BLESSED PEOPLE

No people in the world are more greatly blessed than we. It is marvelous what our Heavenly Father has done for us. The Church grows, increases, and becomes stronger as the days come and go.

We are permitted twice a year to assemble in this great building in a general conference and meet as we have been during the last three days to be instructed by our brethren. Here under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord we are taught to observe the laws of the land and to keep the commandments of our Heavenly Father.

Now today I think we have reason to be grateful. There is trouble ahead. The world is sick and in a pitiable condition, and until the people repent of their sins and return to the true and living God, there will be no peace that will be worthy of the name. It is our duty to set the example; it is our duty to hold aloft the banner of truth. It is our duty to encourage our Father's other children to listen to his advice and counsel and so adjust things that wherever we are we will find the spirit of God burning in our souls and our influence will be for good.

I pray that we may continue faithful. I congratulate those of you who are able to attend the conference at this time. I feel to bless the choir which has rendered such splendid music and the Relief Society Singing Mothers and others who have sung for us. I am grateful to them, and I pray the Lord to bless them and bless us all that we may be worthy not only to be members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but also that we may be worthy to be called sons and daughters of the Living God, and seek to do his will and keep his commandments.

TESTIMONY

God lives. Jesus is the Christ. The land that we live upon, in all parts of this earth, belongs to him. We are only tenants here. He places us here with the opportunity to prepare ourselves for eternal happiness and promises us that in due time this world shall become a celestial kingdom. How wonderful it is for us to know that we have a chance to earn our place in that kingdom by following the advice and counsel that he gives us. If we continue to do that, happiness, satisfaction, and joy will be our reward.

I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Living God, and that the gospel of our Lord is upon the earth. The power and authority of the priesthood are here, and if we will observe the advice that has been given to us, if we will honor him, who is the Author of our being, not only we but our children and children's children will also be among those whom God will bless throughout eternity. That is my testimony, and I bear that witness to you this day in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have already passed the hour for closing but before doing so I call attention to the fact that tonight at seven o'clock in this building will be held a Sunday School Union Meeting. All are invited to attend. Also, the Dutch conference will be held at 4:15 p.m. in the Barratt Hall, just after this meeting; the Scandinavian meeting the same hour in the Assembly Hall.

The Tabernacle Choir will sing for us:

"Hallelujah"—(From "Messiah" by Handel)

Brethren, as one who loves you I desire to bless you and pray our Father in Heaven to bless you, that you may go from this conference with a renewed determination to be all that He desires us to be and that you will radiate sunshine and good-will, peace and hope among those with whom you associate, and I bless you that joy may be your portion as long as you seek to do the will of our Heavenly Father, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The choir music for this conference has been furnished, as you know, by the Tabernacle Choir and the Singing Mothers. The organists during the Conference have been Brother Asper and Brother Schreiner. Brother J. Spencer Cornwall has led the singing. I say again, we are grateful to them and to all that contributed to this conference that has been so delightful. Let us go to our homes with a renewed determination that we will be worthy of him in whose image we have been created. God bless you. Amen.

Singing by the Choir: "Hallelujah"—(From "Messiah" by Handel).

President Carl W. Buehner of the Granite Stake offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned, sine die.

---

The congregational singing was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor, of the Tabernacle Choir.

Sunday, October 5

Third Day

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Saturday and Sunday sessions and presented musical numbers at those meetings. J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, directed the singing of the Choir.

The choir singing during the Friday sessions was by Relief Society Singing Mothers from the Central Utah Region, Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, Conductor.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast Sunday morning 9:30 to 10:00 as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast Sunday morning 8:00 to 8:30, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Alexander Schreiner was at the organ and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper, and Roy M. Darley.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

The One Hundred Eighteenth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints

The One Hundred Eighteenth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, April 4, 5, and 6, 1948.

General sessions of the conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened Monday evening at 7:00.

A special Priesthood meeting was held in the Temple Wednesday morning at 9:00, to which the General Authorities of the Church, presidencies of stakes and missions and other designated officers were invited. A report of the special priesthood meeting is not included in this record.

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, April 4, at 8:30 over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System, a report of which broadcast is included in this pamphlet.

The Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, which was presented over KSL and, through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting Co.'s system, throughout the United States on Sunday morning at 9:30, is also made a part of this report.

Television equipment had been installed in the Assembly Hall, thus enabling those who gathered in that building to see as well as hear the speakers and those who had furnished music.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided at each of the sessions. He also conducted the services at each of the sessions, with the exception of the Monday morning meeting which was conducted by President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, and the Monday afternoon meeting, which was conducted by President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency.

Fisher, Western Canada; Arwell L. Pierce, Mexico; Lorin F. Jones, Spanish-American; S. Eugene Flake, Navajo-Zuni.

FIRST DAY

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, April 4, at 8:30 a.m. over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for the service. Dr. Frank W. Asper was at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The Choir sang the hymn, "Rejoice, the Lord is King."

Following the rendition of the aforementioned hymn, the Choir sang, "O Worship the King!"

Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve Apostles was the speaker, his subject being "Feed My Sheep."

***Elder Alma Sonne was absent, presiding over the European Mission.

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Easter is past. We have been reminded again of the life, death, and resurrection of Christ the Lord, the Redeemer of mankind. We are again reminded of his charge to the apostles of old when he appeared to them the third time after his resurrection, and speaking directly to Peter:

He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. (John 21:17.)

It is generally understood that the Lord here enjoined those engaged in his work to teach the gospel, to impart spiritual strength to those who may be spiritually weak. As those who profess to follow the Savior, none of us can escape that serious responsibility.

And yet, is there not another requirement in that injunction, which, though temporal in nature, may not be disregarded? Can we satisfy the concern of the resurrected Lord—"Feed my sheep"—when we leave his children as we find them, "an hungred," "thirsty," "a stranger," "naked," "sick," and "in prison," without satisfying their need?

CHRISTIAN ATTRIBUTE OF CHARITY

So important is the literal fulfilment of this sacred requirement made of all disciples of Christ that he taught this fundamental principle:

. . . Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matthew 25:40.)

Can our prayers ascend to the throne of mercy and be heard and answered, as we humbly desire, unless we practise charity in our lives? Must we not give of ourselves and of our means in helping others? Good intentions alone are not enough. Charity is not a virtue to expect in others only. It is the all-important Christian attribute to be found in ourselves.

The Apostle Paul placed it in its proper position when he wrote:

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity. (I Corinthians 13:13.)

In one way or another all sincere Christian people have recognized and have endeavored to put into effect this fundamental principle of the gospel. Miserable as the world is, it would be very much poorer without the efforts of those who have tried sincerely to follow this injunction of the Master.

And yet, have we not been remiss? Have we not been prone to think that we have done our full duty when we have given a few dollars to organized relief and felt satisfied that the hungry would be fed and the naked clothed?

Have we not lost sight of the timeless axiom that "the gift without the giver is bare"?

Have we not been guilty of preaching work and industry on the one hand, while destroying independence and promoting idleness on the other?

Have not many of us broken the law given ancient Israel—"Honor thy father and thy mother"—in passing to others the care of those who in our younger years cared for us?

CARE OF THE POOR

These matters are of the very essence of the gospel. We of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints so believe. We have accepted as divine pronouncements:

... ye must visit the poor and the needy and administer to their relief. (D. & C. 44:6.)

And again:

... thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken. (Ibid., 42:30.)

Under what we call our Church welfare program we have endeavored out of the consecrations of the people to meet our obligation as we have seen it. Because this is a problem common to all men of good will, I think you may be interested in a brief, general explanation of the principles on which we have sought to build.

ESTABLISHMENT OF WELFARE PROGRAM

When this program was established President Heber J. Grant then said its ... primary purpose was to set up insofar as it might be possible, a system under which the curse of idleness might be done away with, the evils of the dole abolished, and independence, industry, thrift, and self-respect established among our people. The aim of the Church is to help people to help themselves. Work ... (should become) the ruling principle of the lives of our Church membership.

We believe that it is the mandate of Almighty God, binding now as when given anciently, that

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. (Genesis 3:19.)

RESPONSIBILITY OF ABLE-BODIED

We also accept as the word of the Lord:

Thou shalt not be idle for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer. (D. & C. 42: 42.)

This great principle does not deny to the needy nor to the poor the assistance they should have. The wholly incapacitated, the aged, the sickly are cared for with all tenderness, but every able-bodied person is enjoined to do his utmost for himself to avoid dependence, if his own efforts can make such a course possible; to look upon adversity as temporary; to combine his faith in his own ability with honest toil; to rehabilitate himself and his family to a position of independence; in every case to minimize the need for help and to supplement any help given with his own best efforts.

We believe it is seldom when men of rigorous faith, genuine courage, and unfaltering determination, with the love of independence burning in their hearts, and pride in their own accomplishments, cannot surmount the obstacles that lie in their paths.

We know that through humble, prayerful, industrious, God-fearing lives, a faith can be developed within us by the strength of which we can call down the blessings of a kind and merciful Heavenly Father and literally see our handicaps vanish and our independence and freedom established and maintained.

Of course, those in unfortunate circumstances need help. They need food and clothing and warmth ministered by a friendly hand. And they also need opportunity and encouragement and direction.

NEEDS MET THROUGH CONSECRATED EFFORTS

Through the consecrated efforts of the membership of the Church both needs may effectively be met. The care of the needy is the concern of every member. Carefully planned programs of production and conservation are designed to meet the first need. It is a common sight among us to see men of various vocations and economic stations working together early of a morning or late of an evening in the field, or in the cannery without thought of material recompense.

The products of their labors are gathered into local bishops' storehouses, and there, under wise, inspired leadership, the best possible use is made of these supplies without the usual costs of distribution.

We seek constantly to be on hand, day in and day out, to meet promptly and efficiently any emergency among our people. We hope never to have on hand too little or be too late in its distribution.

The cardinal commandment is "Love thy neighbour as thyself." Our welfare work has been characterized by one of our leaders, as a "neighbor to neighbor plan." I quote his words:

All welfare work is carried out with fairness and justice, and without discrimination, fear, or favor. There are no politics, church or otherwise, in the administration of the Church plan. No one has anything to gain or lose in a material way by any relief which he may extend under the plan. Those carrying it out have neither friends to reward nor enemies to punish.

This puts into the relief a personal sympathy that is wholesome for all, and tends to prevent imposition and overreaching. There is an infinity of difference between the sack of flour that comes over the back fence from your next door neighbor and a sack that is sent to you from Washington. The one hallows the giver, and raises and inspires, with the human love and sympathy behind it, him who thankfully eats it; the other debauches the hand which doles out that which is not his, and embitters and enslaves him who with maledictions devours it. (President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., Estes Park Discussion.)

GUIDING PRINCIPLES IN WELFARE WORK

In all phases of the work we seek to give to those who receive assistance the opportunity to help, to manage, and to distribute among the needy that which is theirs. The crowning principle is that each man shall give to the Church that of which he is capable and in return be assured of the assistance that he needs.

The second need, that for encouragement and opportunity, and direction, poses another problem. But usually there is in each Church group, training, experience, and education sufficient to encourage and direct toward a more permanent solution than that afforded by supplying only food, clothing, and housing on an emergency basis.

We can never get away from the fundamental differences that exist in the dispositions and needs of people. And because all cases are handled by local ecclesiastical officers on a sympathetic basis, a permanent solution to the ills which caused the need can often be effected.

There is ordinarily a very fine margin between success and failure. Frequently a friendly hand, a kind suggestion, a charitable deed avoids the worst and produces the best. No one thus helped loses his self-respect or his desire to progress. He retains his ambition and is soon on the way to assist others, even as he was helped.

There is another important problem in this connection, a problem of deep religious significance. It can be truthfully said of both men and women in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that they do not do their full duty, so long as all means are not shared with mother or father, brother or sister, son or daughter in need.

CARE OF AGING PARENTS

Much could and should be said upon this subject in a day when it appears to be popular throughout the nation to do what can be done by sons and daughters to qualify aging parents for public relief. Some go to the extent of encouraging parents to deed to their children the property which they acquired in their productive years for protection and security in their old age—all to better prepare the parents to meet the requirements of law for maximum old age pensions and assistance.

Children are not always conscious that in this they have been guilty of a double error: first, in unjustly enriching themselves out of the lifetime savings of their parents; and secondly, in shirking a sacred obligation to care for their parents. The magnitude of the offense increases when the fact is appreciated that we have received from the Lord a divine command to take care of our own. Paul said:

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. (1 Timothy 5:8.)

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME

We believe that charity must begin at home. Can we hope to be charitable to the stranger if love does not abound in the family? A sure step in the direction of improvement and progress in our own lives comes when we share with mother or father in their dependence as they shared with us in their productive years.

Jesus, in his life, did not overlook this true principle. Practically his last act in mortal existence was to provide for his mother:

Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son!

Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home. (John 19:25-27.)

We cannot as children ignore our obligations to our parents by passing responsibility for their care to others. Inherent in the welfare program of the Church is this fundamental teaching. And through its facilities provision is made so that no child need ignore his or her sacred obligation, and no aged parent need be shunted or put on public assistance.

We seek to avoid the need for public charity for those whom we love, and to whom we are deeply obligated. We endeavor to refrain from indebtedness and obligations we cannot meet. We aim to meet fully every commitment made. Through consecration of our labors, through individual initiative and effort, through mutual consideration and helpfulness, motivated by the spirit of the Christ, we have sought to assist one another. The fruits have been faith, independence, self-reliance, pride in self-accomplishment, family solidarity, love, and appreciation one for another.

Surely there is need for this in the world today. Surely its necessity is enjoined in the Master's direction, "Feed my sheep." In no other way can we hope to bring to pass God's purposes here upon earth and to usher in a reign of peace and good will among men.

As a concluding number, the Choir sang the hymn, "God of Our Fathers."

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

This broadcast was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States. The broadcast, written and announced by Richard L. Evans, originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City and was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew," and then on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise the Sacred Strain," singing words to the end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls as music and the spoken word are heard again from the Crossroads of the West.

From Temple Square in Salt Lake City the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour the music of the Tabernacle choir and organ with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the choir, Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with an excerpt from Wagner's Tannhauser: "Hail Bright Abode, where song the heart rejoices; may lays of peace within thee never fail . . ."

(Choir sang "Hail Bright Abode"—Wagner)

Announcer: The choir continues from Temple Square with an anthem by I. W. Prosser, arranged from a theme by Gluck, "The Christian's Prayer of Praise."

(Choir sang "Christian's Prayer of Praise")

Announcer: Dr. Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle organist recalls the colorful phrases of the "Toccata in F," by Widor.

(Organ presented "Toccata in F")

Announcer: From the pen of B. Cecil Gates we hear now worshipful music that matches the reverent message of the Lord's Prayer: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us, not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory, for ever, Amen."

(Choir sang "The Lord's Prayer"—Gates)

"A LITTLE LEARNING"

By Richard L. Evans

It has often been observed that a little learning is a dangerous thing. But if a little learning is dangerous, surely a little ignorance is dangerous also. And then think how great must be the danger of a lot of ignorance? If we want some idea of how little we know of what there is to know, to begin with we need only look into a large library and see the almost endless shelves of books that no man in this life will ever have time to read. We sometimes marvel that all the men who ever lived, ever found time or reason to write them. In the Library of Congress there are about nine million books and pamphlets. Add to these all the other written works in all the other libraries of the world; add to these all the written works that have been lost or destroyed in all ages past—and we begin to have some inkling of an idea how little we know of what all men have known, or have thought they have known. But this isn't all: Add to this all there is to learn that isn't to be found in books; add to this a list of all the questions that no man can answer, all the things that no man can do, and we may begin to have some small idea of our inadequacy. "Man," remarked Montaigne, "is certainly stark mad; he cannot make a worm, and yet he will be making gods by the dozens." We marvel at the mind of man. But how much more should we marvel at the mind that made man, and that made so many things beyond man's comprehension. We are but the merest children scratching at the surface of truths so profound, so illimitable, so beyond our present understanding that conceit of learning ill becomes anyone. We may know some of the answers; we may think we know many more; but there is still so much that no man knows, so much that all of us together do not know—so much for which we must venture forth in faith. "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Announcer: And now, Mr. Cornwall and the choir continue with an earnest utterance of the hope and assurance of things to come, with words by Alexander Neibaur and music by A. C. Smyth: "Come, Thou Glorious Day of Promise."

(Choir sang "Come, Thou Glorious Day of Promise"—Smyth)

Announcer: We close now from Temple Square with a chorus from the "Creation," by Franz Joseph Haydn, in praise of the glorious handiwork of God who moved upon the face of the deep, who made man in his own image, and who fashioned a glorious world: "Awake the harp, and let your joyful song resound. Rejoice in the Lord, the mighty God, for he both heaven and earth has clothed in stately dress."

(Choir sang "Awake the Harp"—Haydn)

Announcer: As we leave you now within the shadows of the everlasting hills, again we wish for you peace this day—and always.

This concludes another presentation in the 19th year of this broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

FIRST GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

Sunday morning, April 4, 1948.

The First session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 10:00 a.m., immediately following the conclusion of the Choir and Organ broadcast.

Sunday, April 4First Day

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the meeting.

The Tabernacle was crowded to capacity. In addition, thousands who were unable to find accommodation in the Tabernacle assembled in the Assembly Hall, just south of the Tabernacle, and on the grounds.

The Tabernacle Choir furnished the music for this session.

President George Albert Smith:

I am thankful to see you all here this morning in the house of the Lord, and I would like to suggest to us all that we are here as guests this morning. This is his house, and I am sure that if we have all come with a desire in our hearts to worship he will bless us as he has always done in the past.

There is some information that you should have, and I shall now read it to you.

This is the opening session of the 118th annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Stephen L. Richards, who is touring the South American Missions; Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific Missions; Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Missions; also Brother Thomas E. McKay, who is convalescing at home.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the conference.

This full service will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the service this afternoon, beginning at 2:00 p.m.; likewise the services tomorrow, Monday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.; and also the two services on Tuesday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. By arrangement through KSL, these same sessions will be broadcast in whole or in part over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

Station KSL has set up for us a television installation which will enable those sitting in the Assembly Hall to see as well as to hear the speakers, and the choirs that sing for us. The television pictures will not be all that we hope they will become some day, but they will be sufficiently good to be a great help to those who are seated in the Assembly Hall.

For the beautiful calla lilies that you see here on the stand we are indebted to the good people of the Berkeley Stake in California, who have sent them to us with their compliments. These flowers add much to our pleasure and comfort on this occasion.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the morning session, and with Elder Alexander Schreiner for the afternoon session.

We will begin the morning services by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing "Come, Come Ye Saints" hymn book page 47, L.D.S. Hymns 194.

Elder J. Spencer Cornwall directing, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Casper H. Parker, of the Hillside Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

Elder Casper H. Parker, President of the Hillside Stake, offered the invocation.

Selection by the Tabernacle Choir, "Come, Restful Peace"—by Bach.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am sure that all present, this morning, have every reason to be grateful to the Lord for our blessings. Seated, as we are, in this comfortable Tabernacle, although the weather is inclement, we, here, and in the adjoining building, are comfortable and because of the intelligence of men, devices have been provided so that we can both see and hear even in separate buildings and some distance apart.

ORGANIZATION AND GROWTH OF CHURCH

A hundred eighteen years ago next Tuesday the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized under the direction of our Heavenly Father and his beloved Son, Jesus Christ. The Savior later directed, in a very positive way by revelation, that the Church should be called after his name—the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There were but a few people in the room when the Church was organized, and they were not very popular. The enemy of all righteousness had already begun to disturb those who believed that Joseph Smith had received the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. He was hounded from place to place from that time on, not for any wrong that he did but for the same reason that the prophets of old had to suffer for teaching the truth.

Organized as it was in the state of New York the first branches were there, and then, under pressure, members of the Church moved to Kirtland, Ohio, and there were made uncomfortable, not because of anything they had done to disturb their neighbors, but because they testified that God had spoken in this latter day and that, to many people, seemed sacrilegious.

The Church moved from place to place, continuing to grow, and I may say that every day, when the sun set, found the Church larger than it had been when the sun arose that morning. Eventually the people assembled in Jackson and other counties in Missouri, and then from there went to Commerce, Illinois, which later became the city of Nauvoo. Commerce was only a small place, with three or four houses; we would call them ranch houses these days, I think, but the Prophet of the Lord conceived the idea of building Zion in that particular part of the world.

The result was that the people who were driven from Missouri and other places and who were coming in from Europe began the building of the City Beautiful—Nauvoo—on one of the most picturesque sites for a city along the Mississippi River, and they drained the soil so that it would not be swampy and unhealthful for them.

They established homes, built a beautiful temple, raised their crops, and in less than seven years Nauvoo was the largest city in the state of Illinois. Chicago then had a population of approximately five thousand; Springfield, Illinois, a population of approximately twelve thousand. Nauvoo, in something over six years, became a city of approximately twenty thousand souls.

It has been marvelous how the Lord has brought into the hearts and minds of individuals a desire to pray and worship as he would have them to do.

WESTERN MOVEMENT

In the year 1846, the beautiful city of Nauvoo was destroyed by mobs of wicked men who were determined that the Latter-day Saints should not live there, and they drove the helpless people across the Mississippi River, from where began their pilgrimage to the Rocky Mountains. Of course we have an idea that the property that we possessed as a people was an inducement, but one of the principal reasons was they hated the people who believed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. They started west, being scattered from that part of the country, and the majority of them began the journey west with wagons drawn by such animals as they could obtain, and they eventually arrived in the valley of the Great Salt Lake.

The Prophet Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum had been martyred, although the Prophet had indicated in a sermon preached not very long before the people were driven out, in which he said to them that the persecution would continue and that eventually they would go to the tops of the Rocky Mountains, and become a mighty people in the midst thereof.

If he had never predicted anything else, that of itself indicated he was a prophet of God.

In 1847, the vanguard of those people arrived in this valley, and others followed, until most of the people who had lived in Nauvoo were located here. Later, approximately four thousand of the Saints who had come from the eastern part of the United States and from across the sea were assembled at Iowa City on the Mississippi River, and having no conveyances or animals to draw them they built hand-carts and started their pilgrimage across the plains to the valley we are now in. Many of them lost their lives by starvation and cold. Some of the bravest and most courageous people in all the world were with those groups that were willing to turn their backs on the so-called civilization to go into the wilderness and make their homes among the wild beasts and the still more savage red man.

ARRIVAL IN THE SALT LAKE VALLEY

One hundred years ago last July the first of those people arrived here; one hundred forty-three men, three women, and two children were in the first company. What did they find here? It may be illustrated by what was said by a stranger who some years later referred to this as a desert country. He was talking to my grandfather for whom I was named, and he said:

"Mr. Smith, why did your people leave that wonderful rich, fertile land in the east and come here into this God-forsaken country?"

And Grandfather's reply to him was typical of the man:

"Why," he said, "we came here willingly because we had to."

A hundred years have elapsed since that time, and today we are meeting in a house that was erected by those people. Among the first things they did after they came here was to take possession of the country in the name of the United States—it was then Mexican territory—and then they began building their little homes and houses of worship. The first place of worship was not very far from where I stand on this block, called the old Bowery.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH

The first Sunday after they arrived, they held religious services. The fact that they were uncomfortable; that they had no homes to shelter them, made no difference. They were in the service of the Lord. They were his children, and so they were called together as has been the custom ever since the beginning, on the Sabbath day, to worship our Father in heaven.

It may be of interest when we think of the desecration of the Sabbath day in our own land—I speak of the land of America—a day that has been set apart by many people for their vacations and for their pleasures, notwithstanding there thundered down from Sinai one of the Ten Commandments that we should honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy. One of the first sermons that were preached in this valley was by President Brigham Young, and he warned the people to honor the Sabbath day and to keep it holy, and no matter how difficult their circumstances they were not to go out and do manual labor on the Sabbath day. From that time on, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has encouraged its people to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy because it is pleasing to our Heavenly Father that we do so.

PROGRESS DURING LAST CENTURY

From that little group of people that came into this valley, they began to scatter. Today in Idaho there are over one hundred thousand members of the Church—in Wyoming large numbers; in Nevada large numbers; in Arizona, and California—it may be of interest to some of you to know that in the territory surrounding Los Angeles there are more members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints residing now than in any other section of the country outside of the Salt Lake Valley. The Church membership has continued to grow and spread. I haven't mentioned Colorado. I haven't mentioned some of the states in the north. I haven't mentioned western Canada.

In every part of the United States there are branches of the Church and wards and stakes, in many parts, the population of which is largely a membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. And here we are in this house today. Count your many blessings. Think of our opportunities. Think of our privileges. I wonder if we can be grateful enough for what the Lord has done for us.

In a hundred years, the name of a church that was held in derision by many of our Father's children, has become honored by the great and the good and the wise men and women of the world. Almost every day there comes to the Church offices at Salt Lake City correspondence from different parts of the world that praises the membership of this Church. Many of these letters are written by members of other churches or by people who belong to no church. Only last year you were visited here by the governors of all but five of the states and territories of the United States. They came here to hold a convention. They attended an evening meeting in this house, representatives from all these various states and territories. They had their wives and secretaries and associates. There were over four hundred of them as I remember now. They met in this Tabernacle, and some of those individuals who were here remarked after the meeting concluded, there was something different here from what they had found elsewhere.

COMMENT OF FORMER GOVERNOR MILLER

Last year the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, some of whom had not been here before, met in this city. They had a noon-day luncheon in the Hotel Utah and invited their friends in while they were here, and after the meal was over, the president announced that there was no program, but if anybody had anything to say he was at liberty to speak.

Former Governor Miller of New York, who was the counsel general of the United States Steel Corporation, said: "I would like to say a few words," and after that, referring to the fact that he had been in our canyons and seen the valleys and had visited Brigham Young University and the fine campus there and other things that he had observed that interested him very much he said:

These people here have something that we don't have. I don't know what it is, but they have it, and we do not. It may be spirituality or something else. You may call it what you will, but I am saying to you that they have something that we do not have where we live.

My brothers and sisters, that is what you feel this morning, the inspiration of the Lord. He has promised us that when two or three of us shall meet together in his name he will be there and that to bless them, and when congregations such as we have this morning assemble, I am sure that under those circumstances they are entitled to his blessings. I have no doubt we have in this audience this morning many people not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but they are his children, his sons and daughters, and in this house they will feel that influence and that spirit that inspires men and women to righteous living. We want them all to know that, crowded as we are, they are all welcome, and we hope they can be made comfortable.

MESSAGE OF THE MISSIONARIES

The Church continues to grow and develop. Why? Because it is the Lord's will. He has promised us if we would do our part that he will open our way, and he has done it in a marvelous manner, even since the great world war in those countries that were torn with strife. We have today more than four thousand missionaries traveling over the face of the earth, mostly men, some women, giving their time, offering what they can in the way of encouragement to a sick world, for we are a sick world, calling men and women to repentance, assuring them that unless they turn unto the Lord there will be no peace. These missionaries pay their own expenses or have their expenses paid by their loved ones, receive no compensation from the Church whatsoever, and the desire is that all men and women, wherever they may be in the world may have brought to them the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord, to the end that they will acknowledge God and his Son Jesus Christ, be willing to take the advice of the Father of us all and live in such a way that in the end we may have eternal life in the celestial kingdom. "Eternal life," think of it, in the celestial kingdom, and the Lord has promised that.

Now today we are here, representatives from many parts of the world. We come, I hope, with worship in our hearts, with love in our hearts for our fellow men.

The second great commandment which was equal to the first, the Master said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," is the key word to the Latter-day Saints, if I may use that term, to bring us near to the Lord, loving his other children as we love ourselves and so doing desirous of bringing to them the knowledge of the truth. Today in this house that was dedicated to him, builded during the poverty of the people, we are met in worship. The great temple to the east of us, one of the beautiful buildings of the world, was erected by the people when they lived under very poor conditions.

I call your attention to the fact that during the last one hundred years the Latter-day Saints have been contributing their means for homes and schools and houses of worship, and at the same time they have sent into the world seventy thousand missionaries who have spent their own money and contributed their time.

CONTRIBUTION TO PEOPLE IN DISTRESS

Since World War II these people, living in these valleys where the Church is organized and where we have our branches and wards and stakes, have sent one hundred carloads of bedding and food and clothing across the sea to help those poor people that are in such distress.

All these years you have been paying your tithing if you have been real Latter-day Saints. What has been done with it? It has been developing the country that we live in and disseminating the truth of God in the nations of the earth. Your tithing has not been squandered, and if you have paid an honest tithing, I may say to you without hesitation the other nine-tenths, has been a greater blessing to those who have paid than the one hundred percent has been to those who have not. It is the Lord's work.

FAVORABLE POSITION OF CHURCH MEMBERS

What is our situation? When the people came here, we were called ignorant. That was the word that went out. I had a man who was supposed to be a minister tell me one time: "Why," he said, "I understand you are the most ignorant people in all the world." That was the attitude. What is the record? After a hundred years, this state, the home of the largest community of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, outranks every state in the American Union for education. More high school students, more university students, more men and women of affairs, and more scientists have been born in this state in proportion to population, of course, than in any other state of the Union. You may go where you will and take communities such as we have, the people are not better housed, not better fed, not better educated, any other place in the world, than here in the tops of these everlasting hills that were so forbidding when our people came here.

Now, brethren and sisters, haven't we something to be grateful for? Isn't it wonderful, not only to be here with this great organization but to know that we are here by the will of the Lord? That we are here because he has made it possible for us to live here? And so today I welcome all of you from wherever you may have come into this great congregation and the adjoining congregations and say, to use the words of the man who discovered the telegraph, "See what God hath wrought." Men couldn't have done this. With all your generosity and all your giving, all your missionary work, with your care of the poor, with your development of the country, with all that you have been giving as ordinary people, I testify that what you have left brings to you more happiness, more peace, more comfort and more assurance of eternal life than any other people in the world enjoy today. I don't say that boastfully, but gratefully.

SEVENTY-EIGHTH BIRTHDAY

I am celebrating my birthday. Seventy-eight years ago today, right across the street, I was born. My life has been spent very largely in this community and traveling for the Church. I don't know of any man in all the world that has more reason to be grateful than I. People have been kind and helpful to me, members of the Church and non-members alike. Wherever I have gone, I have found noble men and women. Therefore on this my birthday, after having traveled approximately a million miles in the world in the interests of the gospel of Jesus Christ, one of the frailest of my mother's eleven children, I testify that the Lord has preserved my life, and I have had joy beyond expression, and I have enjoyed the results of loving my neighbor as myself, and all this brings happiness.

TESTIMONY

After all these years of travel in many parts of the world, associating with many of the great and good men and women of the world, I witness to you, I know today better than I ever knew before that God lives; that Jesus is the Christ; that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Living God; and that the Church that he organized under the direction of our Heavenly Father, the Church that received divine authority, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Church that was driven into the wilderness and with headquarters now in Salt Lake City, Utah, is still operating under the guidance of the same priesthood that was conferred by Peter, James, and John upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. I know that, as I know that I live, and I leave that testimony with you, and I pray that our Heavenly Father will continue to guide us and help us and inspire us and bless us, which he will if we are righteous. I am so thankful to be here with you this morning, and to look into your faces, hundreds of whom I have met in different parts of the country, and I take this occasion to thank you for your kindness to me as I have traveled among you.

May the Lord add his blessings. Thankful for the comforts that we have today, I pray that his peace and his love will abide with us forever, and that we may be the means under his guidance of bringing millions of his children to an understanding of his truths that they, too, may be blessed and are blessed this day. This is my testimony to you, that this is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the power of God unto salvation to all those who believe and obey it, and I bear that witness in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith has given us a brief history of the Church and the Latter-day Saints up to the present time. We are on the road toward perfection but we haven't reached that point yet. This house is filled to overflowing, many people standing for want of places to sit. The Assembly Hall, no doubt, is filled likewise as are other places where the Saints are gathered, and many thousands of the Latter-day Saints are listening in their own homes this morning. I am sure.

I feel greatly honored to be asked to speak at this meeting following the President. I feel that I have a message to deliver to the Latter-day Saints, those who shall hear my voice and others who may read later my discourse. If only the Latter-day Saints hearing what I have to suggest, the counsel and advice I may have to give, would respond to the same I would be one of the happiest men alive. It is more than I can expect, but some hearts, I hope, will be touched. What I have to say, the subject I intend to speak upon to me is a vital subject for Latter-day Saints.

A GOSPEL OF SACRIFICE

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16.)

In this we see the sacrifice made for us by the Father and the Son, the greatest ever made—a manifestation of love with which there can be no comparison.

The gospel we have received is a gospel of sacrifice and self denial from beginning to end.

The Lord has said:

Let no man be afraid to lay down his life for my sake; for whoso layeth down his life for my sake shall find it again.

And whoso is not willing to lay down his life for my sake is not my disciple. (D. & C. 103:27, 28.)

THE LAW OF THE TITHE

One of the greatest sacrifices that God has required of us as members of his Church is that contained in the law of the tithe.

On July 8, 1838, the Lord gave to the Church a revelation on the subject of tithing, in which he requires of the members of his Church that they pay one-tenth of all their interests annually. This is the revenue law of the Church. It is used in promoting its financial interests; in the Church educational system; in the building and maintaining of temples; in building houses of worship in wards, stakes, and missions; in caring for the poor; and in the missionary work of the Church.

Many thousands of Latter-day Saints comply faithfully and fully with this religious obligation and by so doing are assisting in the accomplishments for which the tithes of the Church are used; and they will in no wise lose their reward.

There are some members of the Church who might profit by the experience of Ananias and his wife, Sapphira, of the Primitive Church, and not withhold any of the Lord's portion.

When we are through with this life and go hence, we will have no means with which to balance our tithing account. Realizing then our dilemma, we may, like Dives of old, desire that someone be sent from the dead to warn those we love, that they may not make the same mistake; in which event we may be told:

16:29.) They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. (Luke 16:29.)

And behold, all things are written by the Father; therefore out of the books which shall be written shall the world be judged. (III Nephi 27:26.)

The records kept by the Father will be a correct and true record. They will show what we should have paid in tithing each year, and what we did pay. Any difference or balance will show our true standing on the observance of the law of tithing.

AN ACCOUNTING OF STEWARDSHIP

All that we possess of this world's goods has been given to us of the Lord, and we are to be regarded as but stewards over what we have received. We will have to give an accounting for our stewardship. In view of what the Lord has done for us, and given unto us, it is a small thing that he has asked of us in return, that we give to him one-tenth of what he has given to us. We have accepted the gospel as a gospel of sacrifice and self-abnegation. The Lord has said:

And whoso is not willing to lay down his life for my sake is not my disciple. (D. & C. 103:28.)

If we are not willing to lay down our lives for Christ's sake and his gospel's sake, we may not hope to receive the salvation which is God's greatest gift to man, and for which we have enlisted in his cause to obtain. The Lord knows the intents of the hearts of the children of men. He knows whether or not we are willing to lay down our lives for the cause of the Master. Is it possible that we are willing to lay down our lives for the gospel's sake, and that we are unwilling to give to the Lord and his cause, on direct command of the Lord, one-tenth of our interests annually as a tithe? Are we a consistent people with respect to the tithe?

Tithing is a just and equitable means of distribution of the financial responsibilities of the members of the Church, to poor and rich alike. In any organization instituted for the mutual benefit of its members, each member is expected to do his full share in maintaining the organization and assisting in its accomplishments. If he does not faithfully meet his obligations in that organization, he is justly regarded as not being a good member. We would not like to be regarded as being any thing other than a good member of the Church.

OUR INDEBTEDNESS TO GOD

There are many good reasons why members of the Church should pay their tithing, but all reasons that may be assigned do not have the same appeal to all members; however, the fact that God the Eternal Father, to whom we are indebted for all things, and on whom we depend for all things we hope to receive in this life and in the life to come, has asked it of us, and even commanded it of us, should have a strong appeal to all members.

If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. (D. & C. 42:29.)

He that receiveth my law and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it, and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you. (D. & C. 41:5.)

And there stood one among them that was like unto God, and he said unto those who were with him: We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell;

And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them. (Abraham 3:24-25.)

But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. (D. & C. 58:29.)

... be faithful, keep my commandments, and ye shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. (D. & C. 6:37.)

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor and needy, he shall, with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment. (D. & C. 104: 18.)

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF CHURCH

The Church is accomplishing wonders today with the tithes and offerings of its members. A more wonderful work could be accomplished, and the poor of the Church be better cared for, if the members were all to pay an honest tithe, hence our appeal at this time.

Religionists of other denominations are taking cognizance of the way the law of the tithe is being observed in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its beneficial effects to both the Church and the members who observe to keep the law.

The Deseret News, reporting the proceedings of the annual Baptist state convention, September 23, 1915, said:

A feature of today was an address by the Rev. Dr. L. S. Bowerman, pastor of the Immanuel Baptist Church of this city, on "Tithing, the Minimum Basis of Giving." He strongly advocated the ten percent tithing system, as it obtains in the Mormon Church, remarking, incidentally, "We ought to be as fully religious as the Mormons."

"Since the days of Abraham, a thousand years before Moses was born," said Dr. Bowerman, "the tithing system was inaugurated, and so took the precedence of the Mosaic Law." The speaker traced the history of the tithing system through the Old Testament and showed its endorsement in the New Testament, closing his address by showing the promises of God to the individual and the nation who paid tithing to his service, and for his cause, that they should prosper in the land, not only in the goods of this world, but as recipients of spiritual blessings. Dr. Bowerman's address was very well received and was considered one of the most scholarly addresses of the convention.

While the Methodist Church has not adopted the tithing system to raise funds for its support, the plan was sanctioned at the national convention of Methodists in Indianapolis, according to the Rev. A. M. Fisher of Pasadena, California. Mr. Fisher said that this system was right and successful inasmuch as the Church now employing it is in most satisfactory financial circumstances. It was, he states, the most representative gathering ever held in the interest of the Methodist Church.

Mormonism is having a reforming influence upon the religions of the world. The law of tithing is as old, as just, and as true, as any other law of the gospel.

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

The nature of the covenant entered into in the waters of baptism is that we will keep all the commandments of God, one of which is tithing.

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20-21.)

If tithing may be regarded as a temporal law, then the observance of the law of tithing should bring temporal blessings. We have promise of such blessings made to ancient Israel.

For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return?

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heavens, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. (Malachi 3:6-10.)

But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. (Acts 10:34-35.)

The promises of the Lord made to ancient Israel will apply alike to all nations and people who will obey his laws and commandments.

A WORTHY CAUSE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is destined to bless and reform the whole world. It is intended eventually to correct all the great evils of society, and lift mankind to a higher plane of living physically, morally, and spiritually. It is a worthy cause in which to be engaged, and for which to spend our talents, our time, and our means. It is the greatest reform movement of the age. It is bound to succeed, for it is founded upon true and correct principles, revealed anew from heaven.

Those who give aid to its establishment, its growth, and its accomplishment, will surely share in the honor and glory of such a noble cause.

We are all candidates for the blessings of eternal life and exaltation in the kingdom of God. The direct line to that goal is through the observance of the law of tithing and making every sacrifice the gospel entails upon us. May God help us to this end, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

My brothers and sisters, I can assure you that standing before you makes one very humble. This is a beautiful Sabbath morning, even though the weather is a little stormy outside. It would be impossible for me, I am sure, to say anything that would be worth while unless the Lord will bless me.

I happen to have a son who belongs to one of those four thousand missionaries who are in the mission field. I received a telephone call from New Brunswick yesterday where he is laboring, and he said: "Dad, I just wanted to say hello to you. I know it's general conference in Salt Lake this week, and I know you're worried. I can assure you that I am praying for you."

I will appreciate it if I can have an interest in your faith and prayers, also.

"TAKE MY YOKE UPON YOU"

May I refer to Matthew 11:29-30?

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.
For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

We will have rest unto our souls to the degree that we can serve our Father in heaven. Great changes have come into the souls of men as they draw near to their Father in heaven, but just as true, when men draw away from their Father in heaven, they have a restlessness that disturbs their peace of mind. That beautiful saying, "If you will seek after me, you shall surely find me," should give us comfort as members of the Church. The living of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is the way, the true way to happiness.

Says the Lord:

Pray always, and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessings. . . . (D. & C. 19:38.)

Latter-day Saints are staunch believers in the healing virtue of prayer and faith.

And the elders of the church, two or more shall be called, and shall pray for and lay hands upon them [the sick] in my name. . . . (D. & C. 42:44.)

Referring to James:

Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed . . . (James 5:16.)

Pray to the Lord in prosperity; pray to him in adversity.

STRENGTH IN UNSEEN POWER

There is an unseen power in every man's life and that power comes from on high. It is the power that will help man rise above his own natural ability. We have been told at times that man cannot rise above his own natural ability, and I am sure that if we do that, we've done pretty well, but with the power and help of the Lord, men often rise far beyond their own natural ability.

I quote from an article of President Clark's recently, wherein he stated: "God has placed in every man's heart a divine spark that never wholly goes out." That spark can be kindled, that spark can be developed and become beautiful with service.

There was recently an article that appeared in a very prominent Washington paper entitled, "There Must be a Way Out." "This was the theme for thought and prayer. There must be a way of convincing the Russians that we do not want war. Yes, but no one has found that way yet. None of the plans of men have worked." But there is a plan, and that plan is embodied in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ if only men could understand it and accept it.

It is always fatal for any person or any nation to make a break with the Living God.

THE WAY TO HAPPINESS

I want to bear you my testimony that great joy comes into the souls of those who try to live the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I want to repent of my wrongdoings before you this day and before my Maker. I want to tell you that I am grateful for the blessings of the Lord. I know that it will do our hearts good to try to live a little better today than we have in the past. That is our plan of improvement. The Lord has asked us to come unto him humbly and repent of our wrongdoings. Therein we can be made strong.

If I have wronged any man or woman, if they will let me know, I will do my best to right that wrong. I hold no malice in my heart toward any man, and I hope no man will hold any malice toward me. I appreciate the blessings that come in serving the Lord. I pray that he will help me to do my best to serve him and to keep his commandments.

It is a pleasure to know the brethren with whom I am associated. I can bear you my testimony that they are men of God, trying as hard as they can to live the true principles, working hard day and night in the service of their Father in heaven.

For a number of years, some of my friends have said that I was working too hard, and they cautioned me to take it a little easy, but now as I look back over the last fifteen years, the work I was doing was just play and fooling around compared with the work that I have to do in keeping up with my brethren of the General Authorities. I hope that you will pray for us as we pray for you.

GRATITUDE FOR MISSION PRESIDENTS

The other day in the temple, we listened to all the mission presidents bear their testimony and give a report of their work, and my heart was touched to see the great love that these mission presidents have for the young men and women laboring under their care as missionaries. Oh, as fathers and mothers, we should be ever grateful, indeed, that our sons and daughters can go into the mission field and labor with these fine mission presidents who love these missionaries as they would love their own sons and daughters.

May God bless us that we may serve him and keep his commandments, that we may follow the admonitions that the President of the Church gave us this morning. May we truly love each other and make life as pleasant as we can for those who are unfortunate.

May God bless us during the sessions of this conference, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is an awe-inspiring sight to stand here this morning on this beautiful Sabbath day and face this vast audience. I humbly pray that the Spirit of God will attend me and direct what I shall say. During the few moments that I occupy, it is my desire to give an interpretation of a prophet of God, with special emphasis upon the Prophet Joseph Smith. I am always thrilled to hear that beautiful song, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," that was sung a few moments ago, because I know that we have today prophets standing at the head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

DEFINITION OF A PROPHET

If I were to ask you the question, "What is a prophet of God?" it is probable that your immediate reply would be: "A prophet of God is an individual who through divine inspiration or revelation predicts future events." You may even quote the Apostle Peter, wherein he said:

For the prophecy came not in old times by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (II Peter 1:21.)

How does Joseph Smith compare with the great prophets of all ages as a predictor of future events? When we consider the fact that the Doctrine and Covenants is filled with revelations from the Lord to the Prophet and that many of them deal with future events which certainly could be regarded as prophecies; also, when we consider the fact that other scriptures were brought forth in this dispensation through Joseph and that they contain many prophecies; and in addition to this, that he uttered numerous other predictions, we are forced to conclude that few, if any, prophets who ever lived have made more prophecies than did Joseph Smith. I, therefore, would rate him among the greatest of all the prophets as a predictor of future events.

We should also keep in mind the fact that the prophecies of true prophets of God, uttered as a result of divine inspiration, or revelation, must and will all be fulfilled. In fact, in the holy scriptures we are told that the way to distinguish between true and false prophets is whether or not their predictions come to pass. To quote the words of Deuteronomy:

And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken?

When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously; thou shalt not be afraid of him. (Deuteronomy 18:21-22.)

JOSEPH SMITH A TRUE PROPHET

According to the word of the Lord, Joseph Smith was a true prophet because the prophecies and promises revealed to him "shall all be fulfilled." In this respect he compares very favorably with any or all of the holy prophets of old. God declared in his preface to the Doctrine and Covenants the following:

Search these commandments for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled. (D. & C. 1:37.)

Let us consider a few examples of prophecies made by Joseph Smith and their fulfilment. When but a boy slightly past fourteen years of age, Joseph returned to the house from the Sacred Grove on that memorable spring morning in 1820. He told the members of his family that he had seen the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son in a vision. During the course of that vision, he had been informed by the Savior that the true Church was not upon the earth (D.H.C. 1:2-6) and that if he lived a worthy life he was given

... a promise that the fullness of the gospel should at some future time be made known unto [him] me. ("The Wentworth Letter," cited in ibid., 4:536.)

Imagine a boy, untrained and unschooled as far as earthly schooling is concerned and at such a tender age, making such a prophecy. As all of you know, this prophecy was soon fulfilled. The gospel of Jesus Christ was revealed to him, and he did establish a Church—the Church which God declared to be ... the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually. (D. & C. 1:30.)

NAME KNOWN FOR GOOD AND EVIL

Three and one-half years later, at the time of the visitations of the angel Moroni to Joseph Smith, he made another prophecy which I believe was just as astounding in its nature as was the prediction that he should establish the "true and living Church." Joseph said that the heavenly messenger had told him that he would receive an ancient record, and that he would translate it and publish a book. Also, to quote Joseph's own words:

... that my name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues, or that it should be both good and evil spoken among all people. (D.H.C. 1:11-12; italics speaker's.)

Imagine an obscure frontier youth who had probably no more than a casual acquaintance with perhaps a few hundred people at the most, not only prophesying that he would translate and publish a book but that his name would be had for good and evil among all nations. Again, time has proved Joseph Smith to be a true prophet of God. He did publish that book under the title of the Book of Mormon; and, as all of you know, it has for more than a century baffled thousands of its avowed enemies.

Almost immediately after receiving his earliest visitation from heavenly beings, the Prophet Joseph Smith began to be persecuted for the claims that he had made. Throughout the entire course of his life many people hated him to the point of trying to bring about his death. This fact they finally accomplished by bringing him to a martyr's grave. As early as 1834 the first of almost an innumerable procession of books, written by evil people inspired by the devil for the purpose of destroying the Prophet, his influence, and the work of the Lord, came from the press. Each of these books has been short-lived; but the work of God and the honor and glory of his great Prophet will go on unhampered forever.

On the other hand, throughout Joseph's lifetime many other people loved him so dearly that they would have laid down their lives willingly for him if necessary. They maintained that the Holy Ghost had borne positive assurance to their souls of Joseph's divine appointment and of the restoration of the true gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus thousands of intelligent converts have allied themselves with the Prophet Joseph and have adhered to the cause of Mormonism in the face of persecution, poverty, loss of homes and property, and even threats of martyrdom. In fact, many of the Saints have sacrificed their lives for the cause of righteousness.

Joseph Smith's testimony has divided the world into two camps. Whenever he is being considered, there is no neutral ground upon which to stand. His claims are so vital that people either accept them in their entirety without reservations or flay reject them. There are individuals, however, who are completely indifferent to his claims, and ofttimes to religion in general. Those individuals must be classed with the group that reject Joseph's claims.

Thus throughout the entire course of more than one hundred years, this prediction uttered by the Prophet Joseph Smith, that is, that his name should be known "for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues," has been continuously fulfilled.

REVELATION GIVEN IN MISSOURI JAIL

In the spring of 1839, after the Prophet had spent several months lying in a dungeon in a Missouri jail, the voice of God came unto him saying:

My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment;

And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes.

And they who do charge thee with transgression, their hope shall be blasted, and their prospects shall melt away as the hoar frost melteth before the burning rays of the rising sun;

Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord . . . (D. & C. 121:7, 8, 11, 16.)

The ends of the earth shall inquire after thy name, and fools shall have thee in derision, and hell shall rage against thee;

While the pure in heart, and the wise, and the noble, and the virtuous, shall seek counsel, and blessings constantly from under thy hand.

And thy people shall never be turned against thee by the testimony of traitors.

. . . Thy days are known, and thy years shall not be numbered less; therefore, fear not what men can do, for God shall be with you forever and ever. (Ibid., 122:1-3,9.)

PREDICTIONS FULFILLED

Such predictions as the Civil War prophecy, the Stephen A. Douglas prophecy, the Rocky Mountain prophecy referred to by the

Sunday, April 4First Day

President of the Church this morning, and numerous other predictions and their fulfilment could be cited to show that Joseph Smith was truly a great prophet of God. Evidence impels us to rank this man of God as one of the greatest prophets that have ever lived. In fact, in the Doctrine and Covenants we read:

Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer of the Lord, has done more, save Jesus only, for the salvation of men in this world, than any other man that ever lived in it. (Ibid., 135:3.)

THE CALLING OF PROPHETS

Another distinctive characteristic of a prophet of God is that he is chosen, appointed, and called by the Lord. He draws his knowledge from the divine fountain of truth; therefore, he speaks in the name of the Lord and as one having authority. Let us give a few examples. The Prophet Amos, in his masterful discourse at Bethel, prefaced each of his predictions by "Thus saith the Lord." (Amos 1:3, 6, 9, 11, 13; 2:1, 4, 6.) Isaiah relates his call to be a prophet as follows:

... I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here I am; send me.

And he said, Go, and tell this people. (Isaiah 6:1, 8-9.)

The call of Jeremiah to be a prophet illustrates beautifully the fact that prophets are chosen, appointed, and called by the Lord. To use Jeremiah's own words:

Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak for I am a child.

But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. (Jeremiah 1:4-7, 9.)

In the book of Moses we read about Enoch's call to be a prophet as follows:

And it came to pass that Enoch journeyed in the land, among the people; and as he journeyed ...

... he heard a voice from heaven, saying: Enoch, my son, prophesy unto this people. (Moses 6:26-27.)

In addition to being called of the Lord, true prophets teach the people what the Lord commands them. Jesus Christ, the greatest of all the prophets, declared:

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I Speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak. (John 12:49-50.)

Throughout history many of the great prophets have been visited by holy angels and some of them have seen God and have conversed with him as one man converses with another. For example, we read in the Pearl of Great Price:

And I, the Lord God, said unto Adam, (Moses 4:17.)

Again we read:

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, (Ibid., 4:1.)

And he saw God face to face, and he talked with him, and the glory of God was upon Moses; therefore Moses could endure his presence. (Ibid., 1:2.)

Abraham wrote:

Thus I, Abraham, talked with the Lord, face to face, as one man talketh with another. (Abraham 3:11.)

Referring to the Prophet Alma, Amulek said:

As I was journeying to see a very near kindred, behold an angel of the Lord appeared unto me and said: Amulek, return to thine own house, for thou shalt feed a prophet of the Lord; yea, a holy man, who is chosen man of God. (Alma 10:7.)

"THUS SAITH THE LORD"

After the death of the Savior and his apostles, the heavens were closed, and for many centuries God ceased to appoint holy prophets among men. Finally, as I have already stated, a living oracle was sent to earth again in the person of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Eternal Father, his Only Begotten Son, and numerous holy angels talked with Joseph face to face, even as they had done with the prophets of old. Thus the word, the will, and the commandments of God came from heaven to mortals again in exactly the same manner as they had come in past ages. At the beginning of the majority of the revelations received by the Prophet Joseph, such statements as the following appear:

Hearken unto the voice of the Lord your God, while I speak unto you. (D. & C. 25:1.)

And again:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Lord, your God and your Redeemer. (Ibid., 27:1; see also 29:1.)

Also:

Thus saith the Lord God, the Mighty One of Israel. (Ibid., 36:1.)

As an example of the numerous visions of heavenly beings that Joseph beheld, I quote the following:

And we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fulness;

And saw the holy angels, and them who are sanctified before his throne, worshipping God, and the Lamb, who worship him forever and ever. (Ibid., 76:20-21.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith, like all the holy prophets who preceded him, always prefaced his teachings with the divine dictum of "Thus saith the Lord." Truly of him it can be said as it was said of the Man of Galilee, "... Never man spake like this man." (John 7:46.) Since Joseph Smith received what he gave to the people directly from Jesus Christ, such should be the case.

The Lord declared in modern revelation that the words spoken by prophets when they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost should be considered as scripture. To quote:

And whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. (D. & C. 68:4.)

LIVING ORACLES

I wish to emphasize the fact that this revelation is not limited to Joseph Smith and the other great prophets who preceded him. We have standing at the head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints today living oracles through whom God reveals his will. Certainly the words of this revelation apply to President George Albert Smith, to his Counselors, to the Twelve Apostles, and to the Patriarch to the Church just as much as they did to Joseph Smith, or to Isaiah, Jeremiah, Moses, Nephi, Alma, Peter, Paul, or to all of the other ancient prophets of God.

A TEACHER OF DIVINE TRUTHS

The greatest job that a prophet has to accomplish is to be a teacher of the divine truths revealed to him from on high. He is to be God's mouthpiece here on earth—God's spokesman, the revelator of the plan of salvation. Through the keys and power of the priesthood which he holds, the kingdom of God is established upon earth and all the ordinances requisite for the salvation and exaltation of the human family are performed. It is in their capacity of teacher and dispenser of the mind and will of God that the holy prophets in all ages have made their greatest contributions. During his three short years of missionary service, Jesus Christ did more to affect the destiny of the human family than have all the kings that ever sat upon thrones or all the armies that ever marched. Moses' great contribution was in giving Israel the law. Nephi, Paul, Alma, and the other prophets perpetuated the true Church in their times. And Joseph Smith was the prophet of God who was called and foreordained to usher in the last dispensation of the gospel, the greatest of the dispensations. (II Nephi, chapter 3.)

When we consider the three volumes of scripture given to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith, and when we consider that all the knowledge, powers, keys, doctrines, and ordinances that had ever been given to the prophets from the time of Adam to the present day were restored to him, then we can fully realize that Joseph certainly was one of the greatest prophets that ever lived. I make the claim that he was the greatest of the prophets except Jesus Christ.

LOVE OF FELLOWMEN

Finally, a prophet of God loves his fellow men intensely, even to the point of giving his life willingly for them if necessary. Before the death of the Savior, he had full knowledge that the Jews had rejected him and that they would bring about his crucifixion. Yet, as he sat upon a hill overlooking Jerusalem a few days prior to his death, he prophesied to his apostles regarding the destruction of the holy city and the scattering of his people because they had rejected their Lord and Savior. So intense was his love for those who had become his enemies that "Jesus wept." He had taught the people:

... Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you. (Matt. 5:44.)

While hanging on the cross he put those teachings into effect. He looked down upon the jeering mob standing at the foot of the cross and then, casting his eyes toward heaven, prayed:

... Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. (Luke 23:34.)

So it was with the Prophet Joseph Smith. When he, Hyrum and others were making plans to flee to the Rocky Mountains for safety, Emma sent word for Joseph to return because the Saints were accusing him of being a coward. Knowing full well that they would be killed if they should return, he turned to his brother Hyrum and said: "If my life is of no value to my friends it is of none to myself," (D.H.C. 6:549) and so they returned to Nauvoo. It was his deep love for the Saints that impelled him to return and voluntarily to give his life as a sacrifice for them. The following day while on their way from Nauvoo to Carthage, Joseph made this memorable statement:

I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am as calm as a summer's morning. I have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward all men. If they take my life I shall die an innocent man, and my blood shall cry from the ground for vengeance, and it shall be said of me, "He was murdered in cold blood!" (Ibid., 555.)

TESTIMONY SEALED WITH BLOOD

Three days later the assassins' bullets found lodgment in the body of the Prophet of God. As he fell from the windows of Carthage jail, he died with the words on his lips, "O Lord, my God!"

He began his career as a prophet with the glorious vision of the Father and the Son and ended his earthly career with the name of Deity on his lips. As did the Savior of the world, he sealed his testimony with his blood. Regarding Joseph's death, God revealed to Brigham Young the following:

Many have marveled because of his death; but it was needful that he should seal his testimony with his blood, that he might be honored and the wicked might be condemned. (D. & C. 136:39.)

And like all of the great and holy prophets of old, the Prophet Joseph, being dead, yet lives on forever. Today a million people sing:

Hail to the Prophet, ascended to heaven!
Traitors and tyrants now fight him in vain;
Mingling with Gods, he can plan for his brethren;
Death cannot conquer the hero again.

From the bottom of my heart I want to bear my testimony that I know that Joseph Smith was one of the greatest prophets that ever lived upon this earth. May the Spirit of God be with you and me that we might live according to the teachings that he gave us, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President Milton R. Hunter of the First Council of Seventy has just addressed us. It may be interesting to some of you, because of the fact that he has spoken of the Prophet, to know that one of the Prophet's descendants, a great granddaughter, is visiting here today. Her home is in the East. We are glad to have her with us.

The next speaker will be Elder Graham H. Doxey, former president of the East Central States Mission.

ELDER GRAHAM H. DOXEY

Former President of the East Central States Mission

My brethren and sisters, I very sincerely hope that you can't hear by heart beat but that you can hear my words, for I do want to affirm to you my testimony of this gospel.

When the Presidency called Sister Doxey and me to the office to be interviewed regarding the mission and we were told that we were called to preside over the East Central States Mission, I didn't know where that was. So it may be interesting to you to know the East Central States Mission includes the very wonderful states of Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia, or it did include those states. I have the unique experience of reporting on the East Central States Mission and yet actually reporting upon two missions, for recently that mission has been divided and now is the East Central States Mission and the Central Atlantic States Mission.

One of the great blessings that came to us as missionaries was the privilege of getting out of the world of competition, the business world, and getting close to the Lord, feeling the spirit and inspiration of his direction in the work we did. It was a great blessing to associate with the missionaries and though we didn't have many young elders during the war years, we had a number of young ladies who took their places and did a wonderful work. We have been told many times that it seems rather futile to go out and spend two years attempting to convert someone to the Church, or bring the message of the gospel to them, and yet see no results of your labors. Because of the war and the fact that we had many older men come back to the mission who had served in that area, forty or fifty years before, we had opportunity to discover that the Church is growing and growing solidly. In that fine section of this great land one elder told me that fifty years ago he traveled over the whole state of Virginia and there was not a branch of the Church in it. Today we have probably twenty or twenty-five organized branches of the Church there with many chapels, and the same applies to the other states, so that the vitality of this Church is evident in the testimony of the people who were converted by these early missionaries and those who followed them.

We held a conference in one of the little branches of the Church in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia and the members came from the nearby hills, and villages, and from their farms to attend the conference. The importance of being enthusiastically engaged in the work contained in the Lord's challenge to us in the fifty-eighth section of the Doctrine and Covenants was pointedly brought to my mind. At that conference we had about seventy-five members of the Church and when I asked those who were kinsfolk of Granny Rowland, converted forty years ago, to stand up, fifty-seven of that seventy-five were her kinsfolk and besides that fifty-seven, there are other members who came to the West, and there are members in New York State and in other parts of Virginia who didn't attend the Conference. This shows the importance of being enthusiastically engaged in the work of the Lord. The elder who was instrumental in bringing the message of the restoration of the gospel to this good lady forty years ago little realized that that message would be vital enough to bring about a membership sufficiently large in a generation, to make a branch of the Church.

We were very pointedly aware of the change in the attitude of the people in regard to the missionary work and in regard to the Church. President Smith has done so very much to bring friends to the Church. We met men with whom he had acquaintance, important and influential men who were friendly to us and invited us into their homes and into their offices and always spoke highly and very enthusiastically about the Church and its membership.

We were surprised, one time, to receive an invitation from the minister in charge of St. John's Episcopal Church in Richmond, Virginia, where the great principle of freedom was announced for all time by Patrick Henry when he said, "Give me liberty or give me death." The minister of that church invited our branch in Richmond, Virginia, to come to his church and take over a meeting, preach the gospel, our gospel, and sing our songs to his congregation or to whomever would come to his church that evening. We did, and our little branch choir sang the songs of the Church and the message of the gospel was given. After we finished this minister stood up and said: "Will you sing 'Come Come Ye Saints'? I heard that sung in the west, one time, and it impressed me very much." That is only indicative and suggestive of the attitude of many important and influential people regarding our Church and its work.

Those southern people are hospitable people. They are generous; they are humble, and certainly they are prayerful. It is not an uncommon sight Sunday mornings to see men and women with their sons and daughters walking to Church with a Bible under their arms. It impressed me and brings to me the feeling that in those states where the people are prayerful and humble this Church will have not only great branches and missions but also stakes of Zion and they are already being organized.

One of the most wonderful privileges of a mission president's life is to come into the hearts of the members of the Church, whose vital testimony of the gospel and whose great humility bring to you the strength and the promotion of your faith, and along with this to have the opportunity of loving and fathering the missionaries who come out into the mission.

We had a strange experience. One elder who was coming back for the second time, seventy-two years old, said that fifty years before, his father had been a missionary in that section of North Carolina, that he preached the gospel to a man who, as a young boy, was in a home when a cottage meeting was being held. Then over fifty years later the son had come back as a short-term missionary, just two or three years ago, and had met this man in his tracting, had been invited in and after a short time this man said, "I knew the gospel was true when your father preached it over fifty years ago, and I want to be baptized into the Church." That power of the gospel was a great blessing to us. One interesting thing to me was that when the elder was telling about this in a conference he announced that although he was in his seventies Sister Doxey and I seemed to him like his real father and mother, and so we really felt the blessing and advantage of getting into the hearts of the young people as well as the old people who were still young in heart.

My brethren and sisters, I do want you to know that this has been a great and rich spiritual experience for us. I could ask and wish for no greater blessing to come to any man and his good wife and children than to have the privilege of going into the mission field together. The Lord blessed us and I believe the work developed and is developing and prospering and going forward.

The report last night in the missionary reunion of the many chapels that have now been contracted for and will soon be erected in that mission is indicative of the strength and the power and vitality of the Church in that section.

I have a testimony that this is the Lord's work and these good men, whose kindly attitude and expressions of love and desire to serve so warm us and strengthen us, are a power and blessing to mankind. To you, my brethren and sisters, your work and your strength and your sincerity are a blessing to me and to those with whom you come in contact. May we all remember that it is important to live this gospel for its example is vital.

I received a letter not long before I left, from a woman in Tennessee who said, "I want you to take my name from the records of the Church. I recently made a trip to Utah and the attitude of the people with whom I came in contact assured me that it was not the Church of Jesus Christ." Now, that is a challenge to us, my brethren and sisters, that within our lives and within our daily walks, without actually preaching the gospel, we have an opportunity to be a blessing by our example to these people coming in our midst, or on the other hand to destroy their faith. I pray that we may all be strong in our testimonies and bless the Lord for the great things we have had in this day, and I ask it humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We are drawing to a close of this meeting. The Tabernacle Choir will sing: "Achieved is the Glorious Work"—from "The Creation," by Haydn.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Adiel F. Stewart of the Temple View Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour for commencing the meeting.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

---

Singing by the Choir: "Achieved is the Glorious Work."

President Adiel F. Stewart, of the Temple View Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, April 4th.

Again the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, the Assembly Hall was filled with people, who listened to the services by means of amplifying equipment and could see the speakers and the singers by television. Hundreds of others assembled on the grounds and listened by means of amplifiers.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the second session of the 118th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square at Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all of the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Stephen L Richards, who is touring the South American missions, Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific missions, Elder Thomas E. McKay, who is convalescing from a slight illness, and Elder Alma Sonne who is in Europe in charge of the European missions.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangements through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin this afternoon's services by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "How Beautiful Are the Feet of Them That Bringeth Glad Tidings," from "The Messiah," by Handel.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Henry D. Taylor, of the Sharon Stake, Orem, Utah.

The Choir sang: "How Beautiful are the Feet of Them that Bringeth Glad Tidings."

President Henry D. Taylor, of the Sharon Stake, offered the opening prayer.

President George Albert Smith:

There are hundreds of people standing. If those who are fairly comfortable would like to be more comfortable, if they will move closer together and make room for about a hundred to sit down, I am sure we will all be happy.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang: "Sound An Alarm," —from "Judas Maccabaeus," by Handel.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

This is a very overwhelming sight, my brethren and sisters, and is a position that I dread very much. I sincerely trust that I may have an interest in your faith and prayers the few moments that I stand before you this afternoon.

THE UPLIFT OF WORSHIP

I want to express my appreciation for the privilege of being here in this great assembly. It is certainly a Sabbath day feast to come and attend these three days of general conference. It does something for our souls. You know in our agricultural pursuits Brother Widtsoe will tell us of the need of fallowing our land, permitting it to rest, that it might be recharged and revitalized. We come together for that purpose in these conference sessions, that we too might be revitalized and recharged, and verily these conference sessions give us the rest and peace of a Sabbath day.

The Lord has told us that we should go to his holy house on his day and there worship before him, offer our oblations to him that we might be built up and strengthened. It isn't that the Lord wants us to honor him, but like all of his laws, they are for our benefit and blessing. His injunctions are that we might be happy, that we might grow and become spiritually strong, that we might ultimately be as he is, that we might take upon ourselves great power. We are here in this life for that purpose, that we might understand life and, as the scriptures say, that we might have life more abundantly.

AGE OF SCIENTIFIC MARVELS

President Smith referred this morning to the fact that these services were not only being broadcast but also that the Saints who are assembled in the Assembly Hall are permitted to see just what is being done, to see the Tabernacle Choir in its singing and to see those who are called to the stand to speak. It is verily a marvelous age. Reference was made by Bishop Isaacson to the fact that he talked to his son by long-distance telephone last night. You and I may talk to our sons even in Europe. We may not only talk to them but we may also see them. What a source of comfort it will be for a parent to pick up the telephone and talk to his son in a foreign country and at the same time see him visually, to know that he is well.

Twenty-five years ago, had anyone said anything about television, we would have wondered whether or not he was sound in his thinking, and yet today we have these marvelous things right at our door.

One of our brethren was down in our locality a few weeks ago to talk to one of our service clubs, Brother Alvin Pack, a son of Dr. Fred J. Pack who formerly was connected with the University of Utah, and has now passed to the other side, a lovely character, a man in all of his scientific work stimulating faith. We were informed of some of the present-day marvelous achievements. He told us that as he came around the point of the mountain in his car a little flash on his dashboard indicated that he was wanted on the telephone and on picking up the receiver he was informed that he was wanted in New York on long distance. With only a flip of a button he was able, as he was traveling fifty or sixty miles an hour, to make that connection and talk to New York. Certainly this is a marvelous age. It is an age for youth, an age of opportunity, and as I thought of these things and thought of this achievement of television I wondered in my own heart if perhaps the time will not come when we can see our loved ones on the other side. That is not beyond the pale of possibility. To us now, of course, it seems impossible. Television was impossible for us not so long ago.

WE MUST WALK BY FAITH

Is it not within the range of possibility that we may at some future day be able not only to commune with those dear to us on the other side, but to see them? What an assurance this would be. God in his mercy has seen fit not to grant to us this great blessing and privilege now, because he recognizes we must walk by faith. We must live by faith. Human experience has taught that when we walk by pure knowledge, we forget the place of God in our lives. I think it was William Dean Howells who made this observation on one occasion, that he wondered if one of the reasons why the other side was shut out from our view was because if we positively knew, we would be less kind, we would be less sympathetic in the positive knowledge that would come to us, we would delay the day of making right wrongs that beset us; but the fact that we walk by faith, the fact that sometimes there is some uncertainty in our walking leads us to be more careful. Certainly the Lord in his great wisdom has withheld from us some of the things that we would all love to know and see; and yet, as we contemplate the marvelous experiences of life from day to day, we are conscious of the fact that in his great providence we will eventually be able to surmount all of the physical things that beset us. Then we will be ushered into the eternal things, and we will know as God knows. We will have power as he has power. Jesus had that power. He said in effect, "No man taketh this life from me, but I have power of myself to lay this body down and by the same power I shall take it up. This I have received from my Father." (See John 10:18.) Even so will we, his children, be given these great powers, but all of them predicated upon our subscribing to his divine laws and living in accordance with his holy will.

PARENTAL GUIDANCE NEEDED

I said a minute ago this is a great day for youth. Our boys and girls are having opportunities the like of which we never had in our generation. It certainly is a thrilling time to live and yet, my brethren and sisters, I have wondered many times if in this great field of physical progress we are keeping pace spiritually. I am led to this conclusion because of some of the experiences that our boys and girls are having and some of the things that are coming to light of their experiences. One of our boys recently came home from Japan, and when I interviewed him for a mission, he said frankly, "Brother Young, I find it much harder here to withstand temptation than I found it over in Tokyo." In interviewing some of these boys we find that they are lacking some of the parental care that they should have and doubtless did have a generation ago. I am wondering whether we as parents are frank enough with our boys and girls, if we take them into our confidence, if we are not relying too much on this mechanical age, for which we are truly grateful, for their spiritual strength, for the parental counsel that they need. It seems to me that this is one field of our activity that we need to emphasize more strongly than ever before. Our boys and girls need our help. They need our guidance; they need to know some of the pitfalls that may confront them in their experiences; and they need to be talked to very frankly about some of their sex problems, my brethren and sisters, the field that we seem to avoid. We need parents to sit down with their boys and girls and to warn them of dangers that are on every hand. There is no change, in all this progress, in all the present-day opportunities, in some of the fundamental concepts. It is just as wrong today to steal as it was four thousand years ago when the Lord gave his great commandment. It is just as wrong today to commit adultery as it was then. It is just as wrong today to violate the Sabbath day as it was then. It is just as important today that we should honor God, honor his holy name, not profane it, keep his holy day as it was four thousand years ago. These things never change. It is just as right and proper that we should honor virtue, that we should honor womanhood as we were taught centuries ago. These things never change.

GLORIOUS AGE FOR YOUTH

And so, I repeat, my brethren and sisters, with all of the great opportunities we have before us, the opportunities that our boys and girls have, it is a glorious age in which to live, one that brings happiness, if we keep the commandments, one that thrills us because of the great opportunities, and yet, with it all we must also keep pace spiritually and not forget some of these fundamental concepts that are always true and will never change. So I repeat again, we need to go back to some of the old customs of fathers and mothers sitting down with their children and talking through some of the problems that confront our youth. Our boys and girls need our help. I am not one that would say to a boy or a girl, "You're not worthy to go to the temple," but I would say, "You're not quite prepared. Let us sit down together and see if we cannot help you to become prepared." It may take six months or it may take a year, but the fact that our boys and girls may not be prepared does not relieve us of the responsibility of doing the thing we should do of helping our youth to become prepared for the problems of life and for the great spiritual opportunities that are theirs in this great Church to which we belong.

May God help us that we may have wisdom in the direction of our youth, in helping them in their problems and above all of having a sympathetic understanding of them and what they have to face, and may he sanctify to our spiritual growth the great opportunities with which we are surrounded, these glorious physical opportunities, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

The pleasant thing about standing before you, brethren and sisters, is to have the opportunity to look at you and recognize among you many of our friends. If you love me as dearly as I love you, then I am happy. I would like to serve you since the Lord has said that inasmuch as we serve the least of his children, we serve him. That is our purpose, and that has always been my purpose, to serve God to the best of my ability. I am sure that he lives, and I am grateful for all that he has done in my behalf.

THE ATONEMENT OF CHRIST

Last Sunday we celebrated Easter, the day on which we recognize the resurrection of Christ, our Lord. It is a wonderful thing to contemplate what he did for us. I am not so happy to think of what might have been our lot if it had not been for him. But when we realize the wonderful gift which he gave us through his atonement, it should give us great joy and happiness and a new determination to serve him, to serve him to the very best of our ability. He gave us an opportunity to go back into the presence of our Father in heaven, from whom we came. He promised, too, that if we would repent of the things which we do which are not right, and repent honestly and sincerely and come through the waters of baptism into the body of the Church, and there serve him well and faithfully to the end, that he would forgive us of those transgressions, that when we should appear before him he would hold us guiltless before the Father, that he would carry the burdens of our sins. He tells us, in the Book of Mormon, that that is his gospel and that he came into this world to give his life for the world; that whosoever should repent and endure in righteousness to the end, would be saved, the sins of those people being blotted out from the Book of Remembrance; the dearest consolation of all, perhaps, that I find in reading the scriptures.

He did for us, as has already been said, the thing which no one else could have done, having power over life and death: he gave his life for us. God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son for us. The Only Begotten Son so loved the world that he gave his life for us. We should learn to appreciate it and to honor him and to help in the realization of his worthy purposes.

"MY PEACE I GIVE UNTO YOU"

It was said, on one occasion, that he was not bringing peace to the world, but the sword. And then, again, he said, "... my peace I give unto you" (John 14:27,) not the peace of the world, but his peace, the peace that passeth understanding, the peace that one can feel in one's heart in the midst of trial and turmoil and persecution. And if we could get that peace, especially in this time of uncertainty, what a wonderful thing it would be for us. The peace that passeth understanding—how are we going to go about getting it?

He told us on one occasion, too, that the first commandment was to love God with all our hearts and with all our might and with all our strength, and that there is another commandment like it, which is to love our neighbor as we love ourselves. If we will do that, we will serve our neighbors as we would hope that those neighbors would help and serve us. If we could bring ourselves to that wholehearted service of men, I am sure that we would be on the highway of the realization of that supreme peace. In this day when everybody is struggling with everybody to get gain, it is hard to find time to serve one another wholeheartedly. But, before we ever realize that peace, we will have this to do; we must eradicate from our hearts, from our feelings, and from our program, all selfishness. If we could do that now, we would be happier. If we could impress our neighbors with the fact that they should do it now, they would be happier. If we could impress the governments of the nations of the earth with the fact that they should be unselfish, there would be peace, not only a peace that the world could enjoy, but an opportunity for man, himself, to realize in his heart that wonderful peace.

CONSCIENCE FREE OF OFFENSE

Today at the dinner table I asked my guests, "What is it that you worry over most, the offenses of other people made toward you, or the things you do to other people which are offensive?" I have come to believe that you will never have that peace so long as you are constantly doing things to other people that you know you should not do. If we ever get to a state where our minds are free of offense toward other people, then I believe that peace will begin to creep into our hearts and that we will love them and love them so that we can bring them to our embrace and serve them. Until that time comes, perhaps, we will never know that peace. I believe that it is possible, in the midst of the turmoil of today, to get that peace, the peace of God. I believe that during the conflict that we recently terminated—and which some people fear is imminent again—there were many of our boys who went through the struggles of warfare with that peace in their hearts, a conscience free of offense to other people and knowing that if they could give their lives for us they were not fearful to meet their God and give account of their services. It might be possible for us to enjoy that same spirit in our business relationships with each other if no man should ever take advantage of another. It ought to be possible for us to enjoy that same feeling of peace in our social relationships with each other, that no man should ever say offensive things about another to hurt his feelings.

PEACE COMES FROM RIGHTEOUS LIVING

If you will permit a personal reference, I believe that I feel worse over the thoughtless things I do and say to other people than I do over the things they say and do to me, and I would like to enjoy the Spirit of God to such an extent that I never would say or do a thing that would be detrimental to another. Then, perhaps, I might enjoy that wonderful peace of Christ. He said in effect, "I leave it with you," and that implies that it is possible of attainment, but we must admit that the struggle of attainment is great, that none of us is perfect, that failure seems to be the lot of most of us in most things that we attempt to do to approach perfection. But we must strive for it, nevertheless. It was held out as a goal to us, and the nearer we approach perfection in that respect the greater will be our joy and our happiness.

I have been thinking of that lately a good deal, how can we approach the peace that Christ would leave with us? And I have come to the conclusion that if and when we enjoy it, it will be because we repent of our sins and purify our lives. There is no progress without repentance. We cannot enjoy the Spirit of God in sinful living. And inasmuch as I feel that that peace is the most desirable thing in the world, then I feel that my duty and yours is to repent and purify our lives that we may have claim upon God, our Heavenly Father, for his Spirit. Once we get it, we will have that peace. And regardless of the uncertainties of our lives, we will not worry over them, but we will have the peace that comes from the realization that we are the children of God and that if our lives are holy in his sight, our exaltation and election will be sure, and that eternity is so much more important than mortality. This life is not a goal, it is just a means of preparation for eternity, that we may go back, eventually, into the presence of our Heavenly Father and there enjoy whatever blessings he may have to bestow upon us. "My peace I leave with you." God bless you. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation sang the hymn, "O Say, What is Truth," by Jaques.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

My brothers and sisters, I appreciate the privilege of worshiping with you in this conference. It is a marvelous thing to be associated together in the work that is so dear to the hearts of all of us.

TESTIMONY OF THE SPIRIT

Last Sunday night, as I returned from attending conference in the northern part of Idaho, I listened to President Clark over the radio deliver such a beautiful sermon on Easter and conclude by bearing his testimony of the divinity of the Christ and his resurrection, which testimony, he indicated, was given to him by the Spirit. I wondered if, in the Church as a whole, we realize the value of the testimony of the Spirit. It was Moroni who said that by the Holy Ghost we might know the truth of all things. In our Church we are rich with knowledge and testimony through the Holy Ghost.

Jesus said to his disciples:

... It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you. (John 16:7.)

And he said:

... I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. (John 14:16-17.)

Then we are told that he shall teach us all things, and by the Holy Ghost we might know the truth of all things.

Nine years after my grandfather, Franklin D. Richards, had been baptized a member of the Church, during which time he had filled five missions in the United States, had come up through the grades of the priesthood to the office of high priest and was then serving as a member of the presidency of the European Mission, he records in his journal the following: "Most of all things, this day, I desire the Holy Spirit, which giveth life, yea life, more abundantly to both body and spirit." This is the power by which this kingdom grows.

You will remember how Peter denied the Christ thrice before he received the Holy Ghost, but after he received the Holy Ghost, when he was commanded that he should no more preach Christ, and him crucified, in the streets of Jerusalem, Peter replied, "Whom shall men obey? God or man?" And he considered himself not worthy to be crucified as was his Lord. This is the testimony of the Spirit and the power by which this kingdom is growing in the earth.

DEVELOPMENT OF GIFT OF THE SPIRIT

You will recall the admonition of the Apostle Paul to his brother, Timothy, when he put him in remembrance that he should stir up the gift of God which he had received by the laying on of his, Paul's, hands. Was this idle talk, or do we receive the Spirit of God by the laying on of hands of his servants? If so, should we not all seek to stir up the gift of the Spirit that he might guide and direct us?

I cannot conceive that any Latter-day Saint can be without a testimony of the divinity of this work if he will but consider what has been accomplished in the Church because of the gift of the Spirit of God which is in it.

It is said that during the twenties, when the elders were being persecuted in Great Britain, the government sent an officer here to investigate the "Mormon problem" and see what it was that made them so determined to carry their message to other nations. When he returned his report was that the "black secret" of Mormonism was the individual testimony of its members. And surely, brothers and sisters, this is the "black secret" of Mormonism. You can travel throughout the wards and stakes of Zion and the missions of the Church or go where you will, and wherever you find Latter-day Saints who have received the gift of the Spirit by the laying on of hands, this spirit is evidenced through their activities in the Church. A power is there that cannot be found anywhere else in all the world.

LETTER FROM CONVERT

We received a letter at the Presiding Bishop's office a few days ago from a young convert to the Church through meeting our boys in the armed forces. He sent in a substantial amount of tithing. Then he bore his testimony in his letter, and I would like to read a portion of that testimony to you today. He wrote:

Before closing I would like to mention that I have gained a very strong testimony of very many great, wonderful, and glorious things, since being baptized. I could not make this letter long enough to bear my testimony, but I would like to say that I know, with a sincerity, that I have God's blessing upon enclosing this money. It is a glorious inspiration when you see the road of life, the direction of God's path, and the beam of his eternal goodness. These things I have; these things I shall never forsake. With these, I have eternal happiness. Although this money which I am sending is termed in the thought of "coins," I know, we know, that actually it is a symbolic but compact measurement of one-tenth of what the Lord has given and provided me as a blessing in life. Although this measurement is earthly, it has a spiritual meaning, the same as all of God's ordinances. This ordinance I feel pleased, humble, and privileged to offer and perform.

The Lord said that he had never given a temporal commandment unto his children, that all of his commandments are spiritual, and this new convert to the Church feels the power and the spirit of it; and I thought of this when my father, President George F. Richards, was talking on the law of tithing this morning.

THE LAW OF TITHING

I read in the last "Kiplinger Letter" that contributions to the churches were falling off because of financial conditions in the nations. But, as the Presiding Bishop of the Church, I can say to you that the contributions in this Church are not falling off. They are increasing because there is spiritual power and meaning in the Church.

I remember while in the mission field, Sister Richards and I were invited by a member of another church to attend a lecture by an itinerant preacher who was going through the land explaining to the churches how they could get out of debt. His program was that they should turn to the Lord's way of paying their tithes and their offerings, and if they would just do it for ten months, their churches could all get out of debt. After the meeting I had the privilege of being introduced to him, and I told him I would like to bear testimony that he was getting near the truth, that we had been preaching the law all our lives. Then I added, "But what I cannot understand, Reverend, is that if tithing is the Lord's law of blessing his people, why you do not ask them to pay their tithing all their lives, so that they can have the blessing of the Lord, instead of for only ten months." He replied, "Mr. Richards, we cannot go quite that far, yet." Now this is the difference between a man-made system and one where the Lord puts into it the breath of life, the Spirit of God, the Spirit by which we know the truth of all things. We do not send out any collectors in this Church for tithing. We do for fast offerings and for donations to build meetinghouses, as you know; but if you could be in our office, you would see the number of men who come in years after their tithing is due to make settlement, because the Lord continues to speak to their souls through the power of the spirit of the Lord until they cannot find peace. We have gone back—not ten years—but twenty and more years to give credit to the brethren on their tithing record. The spirit of the Lord is a better collector than anyone in the world. We have ministers come in our office to inquire how we run the tithing system in our Church, and when we tell them that all the wards and branches send in all the money they receive to us, and we send back what their allowance is, they shake their heads and say, "They wouldn't do that in our church. The local organizations would take out what they need, first; and if there were any left they might send it to headquarters."

THE POWER OF A TESTIMONY

Well, that same spirit carries through in all the activities of the Church. The testimony of the Spirit of God is the most marvelous thing I know of in this world, and I would rather see that testimony planted in the hearts of my children than anything I know of today.

Brother Ballard used to tell about the colonizer in the northwest who had learned what a marvelous work we had done in colonizing, and came down here to write a treatise on it, to see if he could make it work. After trying it he said, "Mr. Ballard, you tell us what is wrong with it. You read it over. I have tried it, but it just will not work for me." Brother Ballard read it and said, "You have here a perfect corpse. If someone would just breathe into it the breath of life, it would work." Now you know what the breath of life is.

We were in the temple on Wednesday for seven hours and twenty minutes with the mission presidents. One of them told of his father in Canada who was sent up there to colonize when he was a mere lad, by the President of the Church. He has wanted to return for years, and his son asked him why he did not come back. He said, "I cannot return until the President of the Church gives me my release." And I have met many others all up and down these valleys who have had similar experiences. When they came here in the early days, they would have gladly remained in Salt Lake with the body of the Church and the brothers and sisters they had known, save for one thing and that is the testimony of the Spirit of God. When they were called by his servants to settle other localities, they were true to their call. This is the spirit by which the Church has accomplished so much.

FAITH OF MISSIONARIES

While I was in Idaho recently, a stake president told me of a trip he and his wife had just made to Texas. They wrote their missionary boy that they would pick him up—of course, they would make arrangements with the mission president—and take him up to Chicago on a trip with them. But when they got there, the boy said, "No, Father, I could not be a quitter. I could not leave my mission. I cannot go on the trip with you. You and Mother go on and have a good time and leave me here in my missionary work."

Some of you have heard Bishop Isaacson tell a similar story about his boy. When he went east to make arrangements with his company so he could come into the Presiding Bishopric, he wrote his boy in Boston that he and the boy's mother were coming up to visit him, and the boy wrote back and said, "Well, Father, I would surely like to see you and Mother, but just remember I will not have much time to spend with you. I cannot spare it from my missionary work."

President Smith, this morning, referred to the seventy odd thousand missionaries who have gone out for this Church. I dare say that out of that seventy thousand you could not have found a half dozen who would have deserted their missionary call for all the money in this world or for any position that might have been offered to them. Is there any power in the world that can plant such feelings in the hearts of the children of men? Do you think Joseph Smith could have done it, that Brigham Young could have done it, that President Smith could do it? No, that is the power of the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Some of my Dutch friends, a man and his wife, came into the office the other day, and they said, "Brother Richards, we have filled one mission together, but we would surely like to go on another." Then he said, "If we sell our home and our automobile, we can finance ourselves." Is there any other cause in this world for which men would ask for the privilege of selling all they have—even to their homes—other than that they might bear witness to the truth of this great Latter-day work? Much more could be said about sacrifices for missionary work.

LOYALTY TO CHURCH LEADERS

Some of you will remember hearing President Anthony W. Ivins in a priesthood meeting here in this Tabernacle, tell how many times he had sold all he had that he might answer the call of his Church, and move on, even down into the colonies of Mexico, that great leader who could have been such a political leader here. Why did he go? Would he have chosen or elected to go of himself? No, he went because of a testimony of the Spirit of God that burned in his soul, and that is the power by which the kingdom is growing.

You have heard President Grant tell how he was offered a salary of forty thousand dollars to affiliate himself with an insurance company in the East, when he was but a young man. But he was called of God to be an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, and he could not accept the insurance company's offer. I want to tell you that some of our leaders today have given up positions that were worth just about ten times as much as the allowance they are getting from the Church to live on. They did not ask for the privilege to serve thus, and they did not ask what they were going to receive. They were called by the voice of the Lord's anointed and that is all that mattered, because in their soul was a testimony of the Spirit of God.

May God help us so to live and labor and teach that this testimony may ever live in the hearts of our boys and our girls, the youth of Zion, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

This is a glorious privilege—to speak in a session of the general conference of the Church. I am grateful for it.

I know that the work you and I are engaged in is true. Bishop Richards has spoken of getting a testimony of this work by revelation from the Holy Ghost. I, for one, as an elder in this kingdom, know that the work is true. I know just as well as I know anything in this world, that Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God; that Joseph Smith, a choice seer, was the instrument in his hands in our day, of giving us the laws and ordinances of salvation; and that the keys of salvation have remained with the Church from the days of Joseph Smith to the present moment.

SALVATION FOR THE DEAD

One of the doctrines of this kingdom, in which there is great comfort for the Saints, is that of salvation for the dead. We know that in the mercy of God our worthy ancestors may become joint heirs with us of the riches of eternity—and this because our God is no respecter of persons. Joseph Smith said that the greatest responsibility in this world that God has laid upon us—speaking to the Latter-day Saints of their individual responsibility—to seek after our dead. We know that we, without them, cannot be made perfect; neither can they, without us.

But at the same time, in this glorious doctrine of salvation for the dead, there is a warning to the Latter-day Saints. This warning arises because the doctrine is limited to those who die without a knowledge of the gospel. It has no application to us. As far as I am concerned, as far as you are concerned, as far as all the people are concerned who have a knowledge of the gospel, now is the time and the day of our salvation.

No people in all the world have been blessed as we have been blessed. We have living oracles at the head; we have prophets and apostles to guide us, to give us the mind and will of the Lord. We have the opportunity to walk in the light of latter-day revelation. And, accordingly, we have the responsibility to accept that light and walk as God would have us walk if we would reap the glories and honors of eternity.

PROPHET'S VISION OF CELESTIAL KINGDOM

Shortly before the dedication of the Kirtland Temple in 1836, there was a period when the Holy Ghost was poured out upon the people in great abundance, particularly upon the leaders. On the twenty-first of January 1836, Joseph Smith and many of the leading brethren were assembled in the Kirtland Temple. In the Prophet's language, this took place:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof, whether in the body or out I cannot tell. I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold. I saw Fathers Adam and Abraham and my father and mother, my brother, Alvin, that has long since slept, and marvelled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in that kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set His hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins. (D. H. C. 2:380.)

Alvin had died on November 19, 1824, five and one-half years before the Lord had organized, through the Prophet, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He had not been baptized. Baptism is the gate to the celestial kingdom of God. It is impossible to enter that kingdom unless one is born of water and of the spirit.

At the time this vision was given, the Prophet's father, among others, was with him in the Kirtland Temple. Thus it is a vision of what was to be in the future. Joseph continues to write:

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me, saying—

All who have died without a knowledge of this Gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desire of their hearts. (D.H.C. 2:380; Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, 107.)

There is no promise—that I know anything about—that those who reject the gospel in this life will be heirs of the celestial kingdom in the world to come.

When the Prophet wrote his epistle on the subject of baptism for the dead, he said that it was

... for the salvation of the dead who should die without a knowledge of the gospel. (D. & C. 128:5.)

NOW IS THE DAY OF OUR SALVATION

To me, and to you, and to everyone who has a fair and a just and an equitable opportunity to accept the truth in this life, the law, in my judgment, is that given by Amulek. He said:

... now is the time and day of your salvation; and therefore, if ye will repent and harden not your hearts, ... immediately shall the great plan of redemption be brought about unto you.

For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; yea, behold, the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors.

... do not procrastinate the day of your repentance until the end; for after this day of life, which is given us to prepare for eternity, behold, if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed. (Alma 34:31-33.)

The Prophet Mormon, speaking as he was moved upon by the Holy Ghost, pronounced this curse upon those who, having opportunity to accept the laws of salvation in this life, reject them:

... we be unto him that will not hearken unto the words of Jesus, and also to them whom he hath chosen and sent among them; for whoso receiveth not the words of Jesus and the words of those whom he hath sent receiveth not him; and therefore he will not receive them at the last day;

And it would be better for them if they had not been born. (III Nephi 28: 34-35.)

Jacob, the brother of Nephi, adds this testimony:

... wo unto him that has the law given, yea, that has all the commandments of God, like unto us, and that transgresseth them, and that wasteth the days of his probation, for awful is his state! (II Nephi 9:27.)

These revealed principles are but specific applications of the eternal law that:

... of him unto whom much is given much is required; and he who sins against the greater light shall receive the greater condemnation. (D. & C. 82: 3.)

When the Resurrected Lord appeared to the Nephites, he preached to them, in purity and in perfection, his everlasting gospel. He gave them, among other things, the Sermon on the Mount, substantially the same as he had given it to the Jews, as is recorded in the New Testament. But one of the additions he made was this:

... come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. (III Nephi 12: 20.)

THE HEIRS OF SALVATION

These revelations divide the heirs of salvation into two classes: first, those who have opportunity to accept and live the gospel in this life—this means all of the Latter-day Saints and all others who have a sufficient witness of Christ borne to them—all of them are under obligation to accept the truth here and now, to hearken to the counsels of the living oracles, and to live according to the best light and knowledge that God gives them. If they do this they work out their salvation.

The other class of people who will be heirs of the celestial kingdom are those who would have accepted the gospel with all their hearts, had they had opportunity to accept it here. For them, the ordinances of salvation will be performed and they will be heirs of the kingdom, and with the righteous and faithful of this life, will go into our Father's kingdom and have eternal rest.

We can get, here and now, in this life, that peace of Christ—the peace which passeth understanding of which President Ivins has spoken—by obeying the laws and ordinances of the gospel. Then if we press forward and continue throughout life to keep the commandments, we can have that same peace and that same rest in eternity.

THE TERRESTRIAL WORLD

Now the question naturally arises, in the light of these principles and doctrines, "What happens to those who have an opportunity to accept the truth in this life, but who fail or neglect to do it, and who hereafter accept it in the spirit world?" The Lord has given us answer by revelation. Speaking of the terrestrial world, he said: These are:

. . . they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh;

Who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it. (D. & C. 76:73-74.)

Well, to me and to you, and to those to whom our missionaries go, this is a great warning. It is a warning that now is the time for us to keep the commandments of God. I do not know any reason for believing that a man who has belonged to this Church, and has then rebelled against the truth, who has forsaken it and gone his own wilful way, will have another chance to be an heir to that kingdom. Christ's law, as it fell from his own lips, is that,

. . . No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God. (Luke 9:62.)

I do not sit in judgment. Judgment is the Lord's and he will repay. But at the same time since these doctrines have come to us in such great plainness in this day, we are bound to know them, to live in accordance with them—and failing such, we will merit the penalty which a just God has decreed for our disobedience, for our sinning against the light.

IMPORTANCE OF MORTALITY

We lived in the pre-existent world. We walked by sight. We gained knowledge and intelligence, and we obeyed in a greater or less degree. Then the Lord put us down here in mortality, drew a curtain over our remembrance of pre-existence, and ordained that while here we should be tried and tested, that we would undergo a final examination for all the life we had lived in that pre-mortal world. He ordained, at the same time, that this mortal probation would be an entrance examination into the kingdoms and glories and worlds that are prepared in eternity.

As far as you and I are concerned, at this time, this life is the most important part of all eternity. We have the light and knowledge and revelations of heaven. This life is the time for us to prepare to meet God, to keep the commandments of God, to hearken to the counsels of the living oracles and to press forward in righteousness.

The plan of salvation is to find the truth; and the Latter-day

Saints have found it. It is to accept the truth; and we have accepted it in the waters of baptism by covenant, a covenant that we will keep the commandments of God. The remaining step is to endure to the end, in righteousness and in faithfulness. Nephi said that repentance and baptism are the gate to salvation, and that having entered in by the gate, men are then in the straight and narrow path which leads to eternal life. We Latter-day Saints have entered in by the gate. We are now on the path. It remains for us to press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. It remains for us to press forward, feasting upon the words of Christ, and endure to the end, which if we do, we will gain eternal life.

LOVE LIGHTENS OUR COURSE

I do not know that there is anyone among us, unless he has sinned away the opportunity of repentance, who is not capable of starting from this point and going forward in righteousness and truth and gaining the celestial kingdom of heaven. The gospel course is either hard or easy, depending upon whether we love the Lord. If we do not love the Lord it may seem hard and the course may seem rugged. If we love the Lord and desire to keep his commandments, then his yoke is easy, and his burden is light. We can have peace and joy and satisfaction and solace and rest here and now in this life. We can have the guidance of the Holy Ghost, we can make our calling and election sure for eternity on the one premise of keeping the commandments of God.

Now

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. (Ecc. 12:13.)

In the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Today as always, on these occasions, I seek interest in your silent prayers and for the sustaining power of my Heavenly Father.

PIONEER HERITAGE

Several weeks ago there appeared in our local newspaper, an account of an interview with an elderly statesman who seems to wield great influence today in American politics. This elderly statesman, in explaining the reason for his determination and zeal told of an interview, or rather a statement his own father—now long since dead—had made to his four sons just before he died. This is what the father said:

America, with its government and constitution, is the greatest institution invented by the mind of man. If you let them touch a stick or stone of it, I will come back and haunt you.

As I thought of that statement, my mind went back to our ancestors who pioneered in this dispensation even a greater constitution than that of this American nation, even the constitution of the kingdom of God, which might be said to be another definition of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

During the centennial year, the year just passed, we were reminded in pageant, in sermon, and in song, of our pioneers who came here and settled in these western valleys. We were reminded of their virtues, their accomplishments, and of the underlying principles that made them willing to leave all that they possessed, and even willing to sacrifice their lives, if need be to uphold and to maintain. As I remembered that and thought of the statement of this aged American patriot, I wondered if we might not say:

The Lord help us to keep in memory our ancestors that we might be willing to uphold and sustain by our lives and all that we possess, that for which they gave so much.

THE PRINCIPLE OF GATHERING

If we thought deeply about the events of the centennial year, perhaps we were stirred by the realization that we were but commemorating the operation of a principle that is as old as the human family, a principle which has been invoked by the command of the Lord in every gospel dispensation. I refer to the principle of gathering.

The first reference we have, in the revelations, to gatherings of the Lord's faithful people was that spoken of when Adam gathered together his seven righteous sons, from Seth to Methuselah and all of their posterity, in the valley of Adam-ondi-ahman, and there he gave them his last blessing and prepared them for the appearance of the Lord which they received at that time.

I have thought it more than mere coincidence that one of the first martyrs in this dispensation, David W. Patten, a member of the Twelve Apostles, lost his life near the valley of Adam-ondi-ahman, that same valley in which Adam had gathered his posterity, which the Lord had revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith was near Wight's Ferry, at a place called Spring Hill, Daviess County, Missouri. To me it has also been significant that this martyrdom resulted directly from the obedience of the Latter-day Saints to the commands that had been given to them to gather in certain places as members of the newly restored Church.

It was the lament of the Master, just before his crucifixion:

O, Jerusalem. Jerusalem thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! (Matt. 23: 37.)

Apparently the Master was referring to the repeated revelations he had given to the prophets from Adam down to his time, in which he had told of not only the scattering of the children of Israel, but also of a subsequent gathering. To Jeremiah he had promised,

... I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you unto Zion:

And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. (Jeremiah 3:14-15.)

To Ezekiel he said:

And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out.

And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. (Ezek. 20: 34, 35.)

To the prophets Isaiah and Micah, he told of the time when,

... the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. (Isaiah 2:2; see also Micah 4:1.)

An apt description of those who would be gathered thus, by command of the Lord, is given in the parable of the Master, when he said that:

... the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind.

Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. (Matthew 13:47-48.)

THE GATHERING IN THIS DISPENSATION

The first command to gather, in this dispensation, was within six months after the Church was organized. The Prophet Joseph Smith, in announcing this revelation, made this significant declaration as recorded in the History of the Church:

... We soon found that Satan had been lying in wait to deceive, and seeking whom he might devour. (D.H.C. 1:109.)

The meaning of that revelation and the purpose of it all was explained in these words:

and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect; for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts;

Wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts and to be prepared in all things against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked.

For the hour is nigh and the day soon at hand when the earth is ripe; and all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth. (D. & C. 29:7-9.)

Three years later the Lord again spoke upon this subject:

... It is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together, and stand in holy places. (Ibid., 101:22.)

Thus, the Lord has said plainly to his Saints that the gathering was to prepare their hearts "according to the everlasting gospel," and to be prepared in all things "by standing in holy places."

Six years after the Church was organized, the keys of gathering were committed to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery in the Kirtland Temple. The record of that marvelous restoration is given in these words:

After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us; and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. (Ibid., 110:11.)

The spirit of gathering has been with the Church from the days of that restoration. Those who are of the blood of Israel, have a righteous desire after they are baptized, to gather together with the body of the Saints at the designated place. This, we have come to recognize, is but the breath of God upon those who are converted turning them to the promises made to their fathers.

PLACES OF GATHERING

But the designation of gathering places is qualified in another revelation by the Lord to which I would desire to call your attention. After designating certain places in that day where the Saints were to gather, the Lord said this:

Until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them. (Ibid., 101:21.)

Thus, clearly, the Lord has placed the responsibility for directing the work of gathering in the hands of the leaders of the Church to whom he will reveal his will where and when such gatherings would take place in the future. It would be well—before the frightening events concerning the fulfillment of all God's promises and predictions are upon us, that the Saints in every land prepare themselves and look forward to the instruction that shall come to them from the First Presidency of this Church as to where they shall be gathered and not be disturbed in their feelings until such instruction is given to them as it is revealed by the Lord to the proper authority.

REFUGE FROM THE STORM

Again, in 1838, the Lord gave a further reason for the gathering:

Verily I say unto you all: Arise and shine forth, that thy light may be a standard for the nations;

And that the gathering together upon the land of Zion, and upon her stakes, may be for defense, and for a refuge from the storm, and from wrath when it shall be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth. (Ibid., 115:5-6.)

Why was this to be called a "place of refuge" and a "place of safety"?
Said the Lord in another revelation,

... the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord also shall be there, inasmuch that the wicked will not come unto it, and it shall be called Zion. (Ibid., 45:67.)

The time when these things shall be would be as the Lord said when:

... the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man;

And the saints also shall hardly escape; nevertheless, I, the Lord, am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. (Ibid., 63:33-34.)

Another and further reason for the gathering is given us with this revelation:

Wherefore, seeing that I, the Lord, have decreed all these things upon the face of the earth, I will that my saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion;

And that every man should take righteousness in his hands and faithfulness upon his loins, and lift a warning voice unto the inhabitants of the earth; and declare both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked. (Ibid., 63: 36-37.)

As we sit here today, we should be mindful of the fact that we are those of whom these revelations have spoken. We are those who have been gathered from out of spiritual Babylon, or perhaps we represent the second or third or even the fourth or fifth generation of those who heeded the call and felt the spirit of gathering. Just as was the case in the days of the Prophet Joseph Smith, so in our day the leaders of the Church have told us that "Satan has been lying in wait to deceive, and seeking whom he might devour."

WARNING OF DANGERS

As I have thought about these things, I have been sobered by the realization that during my lifetime three presidents of this Church have spoken upon those dangers which are within the Church which are seeking to destroy us and to defeat the purpose of our gathering.

It was President Joseph F. Smith who said:

There are at least three dangers that threaten the Church within, and the authorities need to awaken to the fact that the people should be warned unceasingly against them. As I see these, they are flattery of prominent men in the world, false educational ideas, and sexual impurity.

But the third subject mentioned, personal purity, is perhaps of greater importance than either of the other two. We believe in one standard of morality for men and women. If purity of life is neglected, all other dangers set in upon us like the rivers of waters when the flood gates are opened. (Gospel Doctrine, 1939 ed. 312-313.)

It was President Grant during his declining years, who repeatedly—in all our conferences and in all his addresses—urged upon the Latter-day Saints to keep God's commandments, time and again impressing upon us that there was no greater mission for him to perform, as the President of the Church, than to so warn the Latter-day Saints. By divine inspiration, he directed a movement to build brotherhood in this day, designed to foster the greatest security possible in this material world. Much has been done to bring about the full purposes of the Church welfare program, before it is too late, in order to provide that "defense" and that ... refuge from the storm, and from wrath when it will be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth. (D. & C. 115:6.)

President George Albert Smith, who presides over us today, has repeatedly counseled the Authorities of the Church and in his public addresses has spoken of the dangers that are confronting the homes of our people today—the carelessness of marriage out of the Church and out of the temple, the lack of the sanctity of marriage, and a lack of an understanding of the sanctity of the marriage covenant; the increase of divorce among us, the failure to hold sacred the covenants we have made in the House of the Lord. Well might we remember the warning of the Lord to John, the Revelator, when he said:

Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. (Rev. 16:15.)

As I think of the counsel of these, our leaders, that has been given us from time to time, I have been reminded of a story told of a president of one of our great universities in Nova Scotia who called his representatives to him and sent them out to teach a great principle to the humble fishermen of that land. His parting counsel to them was:

"If you want to educate a man, you have to let him see a ghost."

DEFENSE AGAINST EVILS

May the Latter-day Saints be haunted, if it need be, by the memory of those who pioneered the work of gathering in this dispensation, and be haunted by the memory of the teachings and work of Adam and Moses; of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young and others of the prophets and the purposes for which the gospel has been restored, which the Lord told us in his preface to the revelations was because he knew the calamities which were about to come forth upon the children of men.

May we, as a people, see the "ghost" of our possibilities and that which we might be able to accomplish by our own strength and ability to stir us up to deeds of righteousness and to build a greater brotherhood to provide that defense against the evils which threaten to destroy our homes today.

May we do all this in preparation for the coming of the Son of Man which, I pray God, may not be long delayed. God speed us in that preparation while it is yet day and increase within us the testimony of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. And as we may live in the day when the terrors and trials and struggles, all foretold by the prophets, come to pass when "fear shall be upon every man" and when it shall seem that there is no place safe upon the earth, may the Latter-day Saints who are living the commandments of God be comforted again by those words with which the Master has comforted those who have lived before us in similar times. "Be humble, and the Lord will take you by the hand, as it were, and give you answer to your prayers." "Be still, and know that I am God." For I bear you solemn witness that I know these things told by the prophets are true. I know that those who have counseled us in our day of the dangers that are before us have spoken as the prophets of the Living God and I bear you this testimony humbly, in the name of the Lord, Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS C. ROMNEY

Former President of the Central States Mission

I have occasion, my brothers and sisters, to be thankful for the radio, and I should make an acknowledgment at the beginning of my talk. I felt somewhat indisposed this morning, and knowing that the building here would be very crowded I felt that I would do well to remain home and listen to the addresses and singing over the radio. While sitting there I heard President Smith call the names of one or two of the mission presidents who had presided, asking them to come to the stand. I thought it was about time I was getting up to the Tabernacle. I appreciate very much the opportunity I had of laboring in the mission field and particularly in the Central States Mission, one of the most historic spots in the world to Latter-day Saints. I had filled a mission in the Southern states for three years and enjoyed my labors there immensely, and had filled another short-term mission. I want to say this last experience was one of the sweetest in my life, notwithstanding there came a sorrow into my life such as I have never before experienced. I would like to pay tribute to my beloved companion who died in the service of her fellow men, and I want to thank these kind brethren who did so much to comfort me in the hour of affliction. Sister Romney was loved by everybody in the mission for her sweetness of character, her humility and her fine administrative ability. She was brought here for burial, and at the depot we were met by President Smith and a number of the Twelve and other leading brethren. We were fortunate to have President Smith, President McKay, Apostle Widtsoe, and other prominent men speak at the funeral service.

My brethren and sisters, I want to say a few words about this mission, the spirit that prevails throughout the Central States, and compare that spirit, the changed conditions there, with what obtained when our people first went there in the early history of the Church. You all know, I am sure, that the Central States Mission comprises the four central states of the Union, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Kansas. Soon after the Church was organized, just a few months, four brethren were called by the prophet, by the spirit of revelation, to go down on the borders of the Lamanites and preach to them the gospel. You will recall that Parley P. Pratt, and Oliver Cowdery were two of these men who were thus chosen. On their journey up to Ohio they were successful in baptizing several hundred into the Church, which resulted in the removal of the Church from Fayette, Seneca County, N. Y. to Kirtland, Ohio. These brethren endured a great many hardships on their journey of one thousand miles from Ohio to Independence. They tell us that they waded through snow at times waist deep. Now Independence at that time was on the western frontiers of America. It was a great outpost. Caravans that made their way down to the Southwest and also the Pacific coast were outfitted there. Independence at that time was only three years old, being established in 1827. These brethren were not successful among the Indians because of prejudice against them which was engendered in the hearts of these red men by the Indian agents, but their mission there resulted in a revelation coming to the Prophet in which he was told that Independence should become the center of Zion. It wasn't long until he and a number of other brethren came down to Independence, and they were followed by a great many of the Latter-day Saints who engaged in building up and beautifying that place. They established a paper there, The Evening and the Morning Star, and Gilbert and Whitney established a mercantile establishment there. But the enemy came up against them, and our people to the number of twelve hundred who had gathered in Jackson County were driven from their homes in the dead of winter. Along the Blue River we are told that something like a hundred twenty-five houses were burned by the mob. In one settlement there, where there were about a hundred ninety odd people, composed almost altogether of women and children, these Latter-day Saints were driven down toward the Missouri River and one writer, not a member of the Church, declared you could trace them by the blood that flowed from their feet. I would like to read to you a statement made by Parley P. Pratt with reference to this expulsion:

"The shore of the Missouri began to be lined on both sides of the ferry with men, women and children, goods, wagons, boxes, provisions, etc. while the ferry was constantly employed. When night again closed upon us the cottonwood bottom had much the appearance of a camp meeting. Hundreds of people were seen in every direction, some in tents and some in the open air around their fires while the rain descended in torrents. Husbands were inquiring for their wives, wives for their husbands, parents for children, and children for parents. Some had the good fortune to escape with their families, household goods and some provisions while others knew not the fate of their friends and had lost all their goods. The scene was indescribable and I am sure, would have melted the hearts of any people on the earth except their blind oppressors and a blind and ignorant community. People were expelled in a body from Jackson County, Missouri, into Clay County to the north and into other countries farther north, to the northeast. You remember that our people built up another city to take the place of Independence as their headquarters, known as Far West. There another temple site was dedicated to the building of a house of the Lord. These Latter-day Saints were not long to enjoy the comforts they had gathered around them at Far West, but under the cruel edict of Governor Boggs, they were driven out of the country. You will remember the Prophet Joseph Smith and a number of the brethren were incarcerated in Richmond Jail. You remember the event when the drunken guards were boasting of the indignities they had heaped upon the Latter-day Saints and were saying what they were going to do with them in the future. You remember the Prophet Joseph Smith, with chains still clinging to him, arose and rebuked them in the name of the Lord and they quailed at his feet. He and his brethren, a number of them, were taken to Liberty Jail and there they were treated very inhumanly. You remember upon two or three different occasions they were fed poison, and on another occasion they were offered human flesh to eat and in agony the Prophet Joseph Smith cried out thus: 'Oh God, where art thou, and where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding place? How long shall thy hand be stayed and thine eye, yea thy pure eye behold from the eternal heavens the wrongs of thy people and of thy servants and thine ear be penetrated with their cries. Yes, yea, oh Lord, how long shall they suffer these wrongs and unlawful oppressions before thine heart shall be softened toward them and thy bowels be moved with compassion toward them. Oh, Lord, God Almighty, Maker of heaven, earth and seas and of all things that in them are, and who controllest and subjectest the devil and the dark dominion of Sheol! Stretch forth thy hand, let thine eyes pierce, let thy pavilion be taken up, let thy hiding place be no longer covered. Let thine ear be inclined, let thine heart be softened and thy bowels move with compassion toward us. Let thine anger be kindled against our enemies and in the fury of thine heart with thy sword avenge us of our wrongs. Remember thy suffering saints, oh our God and thy servants will rejoice in thy name forever.' Then the voice of the Lord came to him thus: 'My son, peace be unto thy soul. Thine adversity and thine affliction shall be but a small moment. Then if thou endureth well God shall exalt thee on high. Thou shalt triumph over all thy foes. Thy friends do stand by thee and they shall hail thee again with warm hearts and friendly hand.'"

My brethren and sisters there is a great change among the people of Missouri and the other states in the central part of the United States. I want to say that there is no mission in the world, in my opinion, where the president of the mission is given greater consideration than in the City of Independence. My predecessor, Brother John F. Bowman, was honored by presiding over the Chamber of Commerce for two sessions. These presidents, for a number of years, have been members not only of the Chamber of Commerce, but of the Kiwanis Club, the outstanding organization of that kind in the city as well as belonging to the Ministerial Association.

I want to say to you that the people generally are very kind to the missionaries, and I want to say this that it is necessary that we make friendships among the people. I don't care what denomination they belong to or whether they belong to any denomination at all, we must be tolerant. We must make friends of them before we can convert them to the gospel of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. So I rejoice that these people are looking favorably upon us. I had the opportunity while there of delivering the baccalaureate address at one of the great universities in Missouri. Again we had the opportunity of going to Lamoni which was the headquarters of the Reorganized Church before they came to Independence. Israel Smith, the President of the Church was kind enough to furnish us with a conveyance there and back. It was a brotherhood affair. We felt honored that I had been called upon to deliver the talk upon that occasion. The one who introduced us said, "This is the first time in the history of our church that we have ever conferred an honor like this upon an elder from Utah."

My brothers and sisters, I love all mankind. I think there is no person in all the world whom I cannot love and extend the hand of fellowship, especially those who are striving to serve the Lord. In closing I want to bear my testimony to you that I know that this is the work of the Lord. These brethren who have succeeded Joseph Smith are indeed prophets of God as they have presided over this Church. I love this man who presides at the present time with all my heart, and I say God bless him and all of these fine brethren who are associated with them in presiding over the affairs of this great latter-day work.

God help us to be faithful and true to the covenants which we have made with him that our testimonies may grow daily, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have a message of greeting from Cornelius Zappey, President of the Netherlands Mission, in which he sends the good will and the greetings of that particular mission.

Again I call attention to these beautiful calla lilies that were sent by the Berkeley Stake in California, which have been such an ornament in our meeting today.

I am sure you all feel as I do to bless these people—the Tabernacle Choir and the organist—that have furnished such delightful music for us during this conference today.

The "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Mount of Olives," by Beethoven, will be sung by the Tabernacle Choir. The closing prayer will be offered by President Orval T. Mortensen of the North Rexburg Stake.

We shall stand adjourned at the conclusion of this meeting until tomorrow at ten o'clock, and the proceedings of the session tomorrow will be broadcast over the same radio stations that have been announced here for today. Tomorrow morning the audience should be in their places not later than ten minutes before the hour for opening the meeting, which is ten o'clock.

Any important messages that might have been delivered here will be broadcast at the conclusion of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds, so if you hear the broadcast out there, listen to see if there are any messages you are interested in.

I am sure we have all been fed the bread of life, and I for one desire to express my gratitude to God for the opportunity I have had of being here today with these great audiences and rejoicing under the inspiration of the Almighty.

The Choir sang: "Hallelujah Chorus," from the "Mount of Olives."

Elder Orval T. Mortensen, President of the North Rexburg Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Monday morning, April 5, at 10:00.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference convened Monday morning, April 5, at 10:00.

Again the building was crowded, and, in addition, many met together in the Assembly Hall and enjoyed the services by means of amplifying and television equipment.

President George Albert Smith:

We have pleasure this beautiful morning in greeting you, and we hope that you are all comfortable. The Lord blessed us wonderfully yesterday. We had a good day, good weather, and now the sun is shining outside, and I hope it will shine in our hearts. It is a joy to be here in this tabernacle this morning. I want to take this occasion to thank all of you who were so considerate and kind to me yesterday. I appreciate the many kind expressions and all your remembrances. They will never be forgotten.

This morning President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. will conduct our services, so we will now turn the meeting over to him.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the third session of the 118th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Stephen L. Richards, who is touring the South American missions, Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific missions, Elder Thomas E. McKay, who is convalescing from a minor operation, and Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission.

This service will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen, conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

Station KSL has set up for us a television installation which will enable those sitting in the Assembly Hall to see as well as hear the speakers, and the choirs that sing for us. The television pictures will not be all that we hope they will become some day, but they will be sufficiently good to be a great help to those who are seated in the Assembly Hall.

For the beautiful calla lilies that you see here on the stand we are indebted to the good people of the Berkeley Stake in California, who have sent them to us with their compliments. These flowers add much to our pleasure and comfort on this occasion.

We will begin this morning service by the mixed chorus singing: "Glory to God in the Highest," by Pergolesi.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Henry R. Cooper of the Logan Stake.

Singing by the Choir: "Glory to God in the Highest."

Elder Henry R. Cooper, President of the Logan Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang: "Open Our Eyes," by Macfarlane, solo by Elder Moyle Brown.

PRESIDENT DAVID O McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

This group of choice young men and women from Brigham Young University is an inspiration even aside from the glorious singing. Just to look at them and realize what they represent, I am sure, fills each heart with thanksgiving. They are here to render service today, and we appreciate their presence. I was just thinking as I listened to these inspiring opening songs that every one of these young men and young women has been taught by a mother and a father to be true to the gospel of Jesus Christ, has been taught that to keep himself or herself unspotted from the world will bring the greatest joy and happiness in this life and in the world to come. I am thankful for an institution in the Church which associates with all the sciences and all the learning given in the institutions of the state the teachings of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I know they are true, and so may these young people, and I pray that they will always hold to that truth.

Monday, April 5

Some of their mothers are worried. Some of you mothers have called by telephone; some of you have called in person and expressed deep concern over the conditions in the world. Your pleas and questions have prompted what I desire to say this morning. I wish all the world could partake of this peaceful spirit, and the hope and inspiration that we received in the sessions of the conference that were held yesterday, and the encouragement from the excellent messages given, and I pray that I may say a word or two that will put you at peace and increase that spirit of contentment.

A GUIDE TO PEACE

Jesus said on one occasion to his disciples who were somewhat worried and anxious because Jesus had told them he was going to leave them,

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. (John 14:1.)

In that one sentence, Jesus gives both a comforting admonition and a guide to contentment and peace.

We are living in a troublous age. Many people in the Church, as millions in the world, are stirred with anxiety; hearts are heavy with feelings of foreboding. For the third time in half a century lowering war clouds threaten world peace. O foolish man! Will he never profit by the experiences of the past! The responsibility of choice always rests upon each normal individual. Never was that responsibility greater than today. A former member of the Deseret Sunday School Union Board (author of an excellent little work, Out of the Ashes) expresses the thought succinctly thus:

What the people now think and do, or what they fail to think, or what they fail to do means which way to this generation, and means what chance to the generation next to come.

THE NEED FOR REPENTANCE

A leading businessman, Mr. W. T. Holliday, president of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, in an article captioned, "Our Final Choice," declares that ... whenever a civilization is faced with a new and fundamental challenge, there is only one thing that can save it from decline and fall—its men and women must change their habits of thought to meet the challenge. Either they meet their new world with new thinking, or they go under.

Though with a different ideal in mind, that is the advice which Peter gave the multitude on the day of Pentecost, when in perplexity they cried: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" His answer was:

... Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. (Acts 2:37-39.)

To repent is to change one's mind or one's heart with regard to past or intended action, conduct, etc., on account of regret or dissatisfaction.

Individuals, groups, and nations viewing with alarm the many critical national, industrial, and moral problems are hoping that "some means will be found to turn our misdirected powers into new channels, leading to the establishment of new and prosperous conditions."

SPIRITUAL READINESS

Radio and press commentators, contributors to magazines, editorial writers and statesmen suggest various plans and policies as solutions of our difficulties and perplexities. One of the best is a plan for a world federation, supported by a sufficiently strong armament to enforce its laws and statutes.

One great objection to its adoption, however, is that "human nature is not spiritually ready" for such a federation.

It is of this "spiritual readiness" I wish to speak.

It is the duty of the members of the Church to hold aloft true spiritual standards. Then we shall be better prepared for any eventuality brought about by pagan aggression. These principles have been proclaimed in all ages. They are simple, easily understood, but all too generally ignored.

WARNING OF MOSES TO ISRAEL

Approximately thirty-five centuries ago Moses, "the human transmitter of the greatest human conduct code of all time," warned the people of Israel as follows:

Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him.

For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills;

A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates; a land of oil olive, and honey;

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.

Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day:

Lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein:

And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied;

Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God, which brought thee forth. . . .

And thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth.

But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant. . . .

And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish. (Deut. 8:6-14, 17-19.)

All that Moses wrote in praise of the richness and productivity of the Promised Land, and more than he wrote can be applied to this great land of America—a land of corn, wheat, barley, and all other kinds of grain—a land of milk and honey—a land where we eat bread without scarceness—a land whose stones are gold, silver, and iron, and out of whose hills we dig brass—a land aptly called the “granary of the world.”

His words of admonition are equally applicable—

When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee. (Ibid., 8:10.)

That was the message to ancient Israel.

“LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED”

Fifteen hundred years later a little group of men faced a future that was just as threatening and foreboding to them as that which the world faces today. The men in that group were Simon Peter, Thomas, Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, James and John, sons of Zebedee, and two others of his disciples. A short time before that gloomy period Jesus had said to them:

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. (John 14:1.)

He promised them the Comforter who would testify of the Christ, who would bring all things to their remembrance, who would show them things to come.

Notwithstanding all those promises and divine exhortations, the disciples, following the crucifixion of their Lord, were depressed in their feelings. Their hopes were shattered. Their future, so far as Christ's triumph on earth was concerned, seemed all but blighted. They had been called and set apart to be “fishers” of men, and to Peter had been given the keys of the kingdom. Notwithstanding all this, in that hour of despondency, Peter turned to his old vocation, and said: “I go a fishing,” and the others replied, “We go also with thee.” (See John 21:3, 15-18.)

CHARGE GIVEN TO APOSTLES OF CHRIST

They were in that state of mind when the Resurrected Christ said to the discouraged leader of the Twelve: "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Peter answered, "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." Said the Lord, "Feed my sheep." I have my own interpretation of what "these" means. Keep in mind, will you please, that it was his vocation—what he would get. He had there before him the products of his morning's fishing, for he had fished all night and had caught nothing. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" "Yea, Lord, thou knowest, I love thee." "Feed my sheep."

On that occasion Peter became conscious of his responsibility not only as a fisher of men, but also as a shepherd of the flock. It was then that he sensed finally and completely the full meaning of the divine injunction, "Follow thou me."

With that never-failing light, those twelve humble men succeeded in changing the course of human relations. Writes Beverley Nichols:

Twelve simple men with only the wind to bear them over the seas, with only a few pence in their pockets, and a shining faith in their hearts. They fell far short of their ideal; their words were twisted and mocked; and false temples were built over their bones, in praise of a Christ they would have rejected. And yet, by the light of their inspiration, many of the world's loveliest things were created, and many of the world's finest minds inspired.

If twelve men did that nineteen hundred years ago, what might not twelve men do today? For God has now given us the power of whispering across space, of transmitting our thoughts from one end of the earth to another. What shall we whisper—what shall we think? That is the question.

ETERNAL PRINCIPLES THAT WILL BRING PEACE

The world wants peace, the winning of which seems to be more difficult than the winning of the war.

No peace, even though temporarily obtained, will be permanent unless it is built upon the solid foundation of eternal principles enunciated in the two incidents I have mentioned.

The first of these the Lord gave to Moses on Mount Sinai—"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God." Consider what that means. When we sincerely accept God as our Father and make him the center of our being, we become conscious of a new aim in life. No longer is the chief end of daily life merely to nourish and to pamper the body as all animals do. Spiritual attainment, not physical indulgence, becomes the chief goal. God is not viewed from the standpoint of what we may get from him, but what we may give to him. Only in the complete surrender of our inner life may we rise above the selfish, sordid pull of nature. Divine and eternal as an element in the acquisition of peace is Christ's admonition,

... seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

Of equal importance is the acceptance of the Son of God as the Savior of mankind.

When Jesus was talking to his disciples, just immediately preceding his betrayal, explaining to them that he would have to leave them, he said: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." He desired them to understand, as he wants the whole world to know, that only through him can man find the life abundant. Those were not mere words of defiance which Peter uttered as he and John stood prisoners before the high priests. He proclaimed an eternal truth when he said:

... for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. (Acts 4:12.)

That truth is reiterated in the Doctrine and Covenants—

... all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ, and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they cannot be saved in the kingdom of God. (D. & C. 20:29.)

I like to associate with that word "saved" the power that man gets in this life to rise above his animal instincts and passions, power to overcome or resist social evils that blight men's and women's souls and shut them out not only from the peace of the world, but also from membership in the kingdom of God. Men may yearn for peace, cry for peace, and work for peace, but there will be no peace until they follow the path pointed out by the Living Christ.

CONFIDENCE IN FELLOWMEN

A third essential to our peace of mind, and eventually to the peace of nations, is to keep confidence in our fellow men. You say how can we keep confidence when men are so corrupt? I answer that even if two or three, or even a score of men prove themselves dishonest and wicked, we are not justified in losing confidence in all men. Most people are honorable and upright—I like to think that—and desirous to:

... do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God (Micah 6:8.)

Even if international leaders of a nation or of five nations disavow their Creator, and that's what they are saying in their hearts, "my power and the might of mine hand have got me this wealth," and even deny the Christ who redeemed them, let us remember that ten times that number of nations still profess to believe in God and in individual freedom.

These three principles—faith in God—acceptance of Christ as the Savior of men—confidence in our fellow men—are summed up by the Savior as follows:

... Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

This is the first and great commandment

And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. (Matthew 22:37-39.)

SLANDER OVERCOME BY GOOD WORKS

We learn from authentic sources that communistic countries, operating from behind the "iron curtain" accuse democratic countries, and particularly the United States, of virtually every political and moral crime under the sun. Our democracy is described as an instrument to enslave people.

Such slander has been compared to slugs that crawl over our cabbages. You may kill them, but there is still the slime.

The surest method against such slander is to live it down in perseverance in well doing, and by prayer to God that he would cure the dis-tempered mind of those who traduce and injure us.

To the Church today are applicable the words of the Savior:

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glory your Father which is in heaven. (Matthew 5:16.)

If we would face the future, no matter what it may be, with calmness of spirit, with an assurance that God governs in the affairs of men, let us as individuals and as a group live exemplary lives.

SOCIAL EVILS

Let us see to it that the social evils now rampant in the world that bring such sorrow and degradation to mankind, that spread sorrow and misery throughout the world are reduced to a minimum in our own communities; for example, there is too much drunkenness, too much unchastity. The excessive consumption of intoxicating liquors in this state is a reflection upon all.

To curtail those evils, to spread love and peace, brotherly kindness throughout the world is our paramount duty. If we succeed to a commendable degree we can say to the world—unbelievers, scoffers, and all others, "Come, our way of life is best because it works best. Our people are efficient, prosperous, and happy because we are a body who aid one another in the productive life. We waste none of our substance in vice, luxury, or ostentation. We do not dissipate our energy in brawling, gambling, or unwholesome habits. We conserve our resources of body and mind and devote them to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, which is not a mystical but a real kingdom. It is a body of people dominated by ideals of productivity, which is mutual service. We do not strive for the things which satisfy but for the moment and then leave a bad taste. We strive for the things which build us up, and enable us and our children to be strong, to flourish, and to conquer. We strive to make ourselves worthy to receive the world by fitting ourselves to use the world more productively than others. We believe that obedience to God means obedience to the laws of nature, which are but the manifestations of his will; and we try by painstaking study to acquire the most complete and exact knowledge of that will, in order that we may conform ourselves to it."

WORLD FACES A CRISIS

The world faces a crisis—a terrible crisis. Opportunity is given for men to choose wisely and live, or disregard the Master's teachings and die. Down through the ages come resounding the cry of Joshua—

... choose you this day whom ye will serve; ... but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. (Joshua 24:15.)

And the thrilling words of Peter when commanded not to speak at all, nor to teach in the name of Jesus:

... Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard. Acts 4:19-20.)

The choice today is between dictatorship with the atheistic teachings of communism, and the doctrine of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, obedience to which alone can make us free.

God bless the Church, particularly our young people who are going to maintain its standards. God bless fathers and mothers who instill this faith in the hearts of children and proclaim it throughout the world, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren and sisters, including radio listeners:

A year ago from this pulpit I spoke to the theme of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, indicating that, aside from Jesus Christ, I looked upon him as second in greatness to no other religious teacher that ever lived. And judged by the same standard used in judging greatness in men—by his works—as with Shakespeare, Washington, Lincoln, Einstein, etc.—I still believe my view of him is correct and that he is the greatest man America ever produced. Hence I am convinced that he is deserving of a careful, thorough, and honest study by every person interested in his personal well-being. According to first-class evidence, Joseph Smith did actually, really see and hear the Father and the Son, two highly glorified beings, they seemed to him, in whose image man himself is made. If this is not a fact, he was the greatest religious fraud this world has ever seen. Between these two positions—prophet or fraud—there is no middle ground, or compromise. This is a strong statement, I admit, but certainly a correct one. Which of these two positions is the right one? If the first one is right, then certainly Joseph Smith's teachings should be studied by every human being qualified to study, for Joseph was God-taught and made available to the modern world the knowledge that every person must have, and by which he must live, if he would return from mortality to the celestial kingdom, the realm where God personally lives.

LORD'S LAW OF HEALTH

With this brief introduction, I wish to talk for a few minutes on a phase of one of Joseph Smith's revelations, commonly spoken of as the Lord's Law of Health, or otherwise known as the Word of Wisdom.

But why the Word of Wisdom as a part of religion? someone may ask. In the language of the document itself the Word of Wisdom shows:

... forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days—

And those:

... who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones. (D. & C. 89:2, 18.)

And health is an important factor in the work of serving God and man.

The apostle Paul asked,

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (I Cor. 3:16-17.)

Now, in order that health may be maintained, it is common knowledge that the laws of health must be observed. Scientists have long taught that law is universal throughout material realms. With this thought in mind the poet wrote of the "music of the spheres." The Prophet Joseph Smith taught the universality of spiritual laws when he wrote:

There is a law, irrevocably decreed in heaven before the foundations of this world, upon which all blessings are predicated—

And when we obtain any blessing from God, it is by obedience to that law upon which it is predicated. (D. & C. 130:20-21.)

All over the Church the belief is general that the Word of Wisdom is practically observed if the individual abstains from the use of tea, coffee, liquor, and tobacco. But a careful reading of the revelation shows this belief to be erroneous. There is much more to the document than abstention from the use of narcotics. Among the statements are these:

Every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof; all these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving.

Yea, flesh also of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, have ordained for the use of man with thanksgiving; nevertheless they are to be used sparingly;

And it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used, only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine. (D. & C. 89:11-13.)

IMPORTANCE OF BALANCED DIET

It is to flesh as an article in human diet that I wish to direct your attention. It is needless to confess that I am not an authority in the field of nutrition. So I hope you will tolerate my quoting freely from writings of men generally accepted as authorities. These authorities say that generally food has more to do with health than any other factor affecting health. But that food may do its most for our health we must have a balanced diet, made up of five essential substances in the right proportions—these substances being proteins, fats, carbohydrates, minerals, and vitamins.

QUOTATIONS FROM "HOW TO LIVE"

In How To Live, perhaps the most widely read and authoritative book in English for the layman on the subject of personal hygiene and published under the auspices of the Life Extension Institute, Inc., we find a great fund of reliable information given in simple language by the authors, Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University and Dr. Eugene Lyman Fisk, medical director of the Life Extension Institute, Inc. The book was first published in 1915 under the auspices of the board of directors of the institute, of which Judge William Howard Taft was chairman and writer of the forewords to the first and the fifteenth editions. My citations will be from the fifth printing of the eighteenth edition, 1929. (The most recent revised edition, the twenty-first, was written by Professor Fisher and Dr. Haven Emerson of Columbia University, but nothing here quoted is nullified by this edition.)

As just stated, the essential foods are proteins, fats, carbohydrates, minerals, and vitamins. Protein is the tissue-building constituent of foods. It is found in meat, eggs, fowls, milk, peas, beans, grains, especially wheat, most vegetables, fruits, etc. Lean meat and the white of eggs are particularly high in protein. The book, How To Live, page 42, says:

They consist entirely of protein and water; also most ordinary foods contain more or less protein.

And the book goes on to say:

... foods should be so selected as to give to the ration the right amount of protein, or repair-foods, on the one hand, and of fats and carbohydrates, or fuel-foods, on the other.

According to what are regarded as the best investigations, the right proportion of protein is generally about 10 percent of the total number of heat units consumed. This means 10 percent of the total nutriment, that is ten calories of protein out of every one hundred calories of food.

And further on the books says:

... a chief and common error of diet consists of using too much protein, two or more times too much.

And on page 47, we read:

At a meeting of the Inter-Allied Council of Physiologists during the World War I, it was decided that meat was not a physiological necessity—since, the proteins of meat can be replaced by those contained in milk, cheese and eggs—as well as by the proteins of vegetable origin.

And why is too much protein injurious? On page 47, we read:

When protein is taken in great excess of the body's need, as is usually the case in the diet of Americans, added work is given the liver and kidneys, the circulation is over-stimulated and the "factor of safety" of these organs is exceeded.

And on page 68 is the following:

Before leaving the subject of intestinal poisoning, we may here again mention the importance of avoiding the poisoning that comes from too much protein.

Now please give particular attention to the following, found on page 250:

Even the most ardent advocates of a meat diet cannot produce a scientific evidence to show that intestinal putrefaction to a high degree due to the presence of meat is in any way beneficial to the organism; hence, in seeking the best form of diet, meat as a source of protein may well be excluded and the requisite protein secured from milk, nuts, cereals, and vegetables. If in the average diet a pint of milk daily is substituted for whatever meat portions have theretofore been taken, there would be no danger of protein lack.

And on the following page is found:

We have quoted Hübner, one of the world's foremost authorities in hygiene, as condemning the very popular idea that meat is very "strengthening." Actual experiments on this point have shown exactly the opposite to be the case.

This statement will surprise most people. But the book continues:

Meat eating and a high-protein diet, instead of increasing one's endurance, have been shown, like alcohol, actually to reduce it.

Then experiments conducted at Yale University by Professor Fisher are described, after which the book continues (page 252):

The experiments furnished a severe test of the claims of the flesh-abstainers. Two comparisons were planned: one between flesh-eating athletes and flesh-abstaining athletes, and the other between flesh-eating athletes and flesh-abstaining sedentary workers. The results would indicate that the users of low-protein and the nonflesh dietaries have far greater endurance than those who are accustomed to the ordinary American diet.

Now let me read to you a few words from the Word of Wisdom, given by the Prophet Joseph Smith to the world long before science knew any of the facts that I have just read to you from How to Live. As a promise for observing the Word of Wisdom the revelation says:

And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones; . . .

And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint.
(D. & C. 89:18, 20.)

Do the Yale experiments and the statements read from How To Live confirm or discredit the teaching of the Word of Wisdom relative to the eating of meat? How do you account for the fact that Joseph Smith could give these truths to the world many years before science knew about them?

"HEALTH AND EFFICIENCY"

Now I wish to quote from Health and Efficiency, a book written for schools by Professor M. V. O'Shea of the University of Wisconsin and Dr. J. H. Kellogg, superintendent of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, and published by the Macmillan Company in 1927. I believe anyone could read this little book on hygiene with a great deal of profit. From the chapter on "Food and Efficiency" I condense the following statements:

Proteins are body-building materials. They may also be used by the body as fuel, but this occurs only in case of necessity. When heat producing foods—fats and carbohydrates—are burned up proteins are used for fuel. So if the body does not need the protein for repairs it will use it, but it is a bad form of fuel, for it leaves behind what might be called clinkers. When fats and carbohydrates are consumed, they leave no "ashes." With protein foods the story is quite different. These, when formed, yield substances that are not ready for elimination by the kidneys until they have been chemically changed by the liver. These products are poisonous and circulating through the body are present in excess in the blood of heavy meat eaters. The result is that the liver and kidneys are much overworked and thus wear out prematurely.

Again:

Of the food eaten, a small portion remains behind in the intestine undigested. This is particularly true of protein food, the unused residue of which is usually much greater than that of the carbohydrates and fats. When more protein is eaten than needed some of it remains in the large intestine until it is discharged. The warmth of the body causes it to putrefy.

It is evident, then, that if one's diet is such that a considerable amount of undigested meat is left to decay in the colon, harmful poisons will be absorbed in the blood and will do harm to the liver, kidneys, blood-vessels, and the other tissues.

Dr. Newburgh, a University of Michigan professor, as a result of his researches, has concluded that an excess of protein in the diet resulting from heavy meat eating, is one of the causes of the great increase in recent years of diseases of the kidneys, heart, and blood-vessels.

The foods to be used most sparingly are those which contain a great excess of protein, such as meat, eggs, cheese, and beans. On this account, there are many authorities who think that it would be safer to discard the use of meat altogether than to continue to use it so freely as many Americans are doing.

And then the book quotes Dr. McCollum of Johns Hopkins University, an eminent authority on nutrition as follows:

I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that a vegetarian diet, supplemented with fairly liberal amounts of milk is the most satisfactory type of diet a man can take.

Next, Professor Chittenden of Yale University is quoted:

With vegetables of all kinds and milk, bread, and butter, you have at your command all the necessary resources for a nutritious diet.

Then the book speaks about a bulletin by the United States Department of Agriculture in which we are told that ... meat may be omitted from the diet altogether, for it has been determined that all necessary protein and energy may be obtained from other materials.

As a final quotation from the book Health and Efficiency I give the following:

Energy can be gotten from food only after it has become part of a living cell. The excess protein is never assimilated: it never becomes an actual part of the body; it is burned to get rid of it, just as rubbish is. Even the heat produced is extra heat which the body does not need and so is carried off by an increase in the insensible perspiration. Under conditions of extreme exposure to cold the heat might be of service. On the other hand, in case of fever, and in hot weather, the heat excess induced by too much protein may do great harm.

MEATS TO BE USED SPARINGLY

Now I read again the words of the revelation to the Prophet:

... they [meats] are to be used sparingly;
And it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used, only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine. (D. & C. 89:12-13.)

Latter-day Saints, why should you complain of the scarcity or high price of flesh foods? Have you not known that in any case you should eat them sparingly? The Lord told you so. I have quoted from some of the highest authorities in the world to the effect that they are not essential to your physical well-being. But Americans did not know this until God revealed it to them through his Prophet, Joseph Smith.

And now I sum up. Proteins are the building materials of the body, the needed amount of which is largely determined by age and the kind of physical activity; but for the average adult it is about 10 percent of food intake. More than this should be avoided. Meat is the richest source of proteins but sizable amounts are found in the excellent foods—eggs, milk, cheese, beans, nuts, wheat, and more or less in other cereals, vegetables, and fruits. Americans eat too much meat, a non-essential in human diet, because all the proteins needed are available in the other foods just named.

May the Lord help us to accept and live by every word he gives to us by the mouths of his holy prophets, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus and the congregation sang the hymn, "High On the Mountain Top," by Beesley. (Hymn Book, p. 134; L.D.S. Hymns No. 131.)

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brothers and sisters, I have here in this book a talk upon which I have spent many hours in thought and preparation. I had intended to give it at this conference. If I had spoken before President David O. McKay, I would have talked to you about the necessity of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as an effective means of bringing peace to the world. He has given my talk, body and soul, and in a much better way than I could have given it. I shall therefore not talk on that subject, but I will ask each of you, if you will, to offer a silent prayer in your heart for me, and for you, too—because you probably will stay here and listen to me—that I may have the Spirit of the Lord while I speak to you wholly extemporaneously.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

I have something for you which no other person in this world can give to you. It is my personal testimony. You have your testimony, and you can give that, but I have mine, and while you are not bound by my testimony, I am bound by it, and I would like to bear it to you if the Lord will give me strength.

FAITH IN GOD

I know that God lives. The first article of our faith begins, as I recall it, "We believe in God, the Eternal Father. . . ." I believe in him as a personal being. I do not think he is an immaterial substance. I do not think that, as a person he fills the immensity of space and at the same time is so small that he can dwell in my heart. I believe that his spirit can be in my heart, but I believe that God is my Father, a person. I believe with all my soul that he appeared personally with the Savior to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the grove and talked to him. At least he introduced the Savior to the boy Prophet in that great revelation and vision which opened this last dispensation. I believe he is the Father of my spirit and the Father of your spirit. I believe we were born to him and to our mother in heaven. I do not know the process, but I do know how we are born to our fathers and mothers in this earth and that is the way I think about it. I feel that there is a similar relationship between him and me that I feel toward my earthly father, or that I did feel toward him when he was here. I have always thought about God in this way. I believe I was born to him as a spirit child in the spirit world before I was born here, and what I say about myself—and you will pardon the personal reference—I feel about every other human soul that lives in the earth. I believe we all lived with him before we came here.

DIVINE MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST

I likewise believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. With all my soul I believe in him, and I put my hope of peace in this life and of exaltation and happiness in the life to come in the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe he was a Son of God in the same sense that we were sons and daughters of God in the spirit, and I believe that he was and is the Son of God in the flesh. I do not believe that Joseph was the father of Jesus Christ, although I do believe that he was a good and great man. I believe that Mary was the mother of Jesus as my mother was my mother, and I believe that the father of Jesus Christ in the flesh was Elohim, my Eternal and Heavenly Father.

I believe that Jesus came into the world with a very definite mission. I do not regard him merely as a great teacher nor as a profound philosopher, nor do I merely profess to believe in him, as is the case with many so-called Christian people of the day. President Grant used to illustrate their lack of faith in Him by telling of the experience of Senator Beveridge, who among several hundred eminent ministers of popular churches of the day, whom he interviewed and interrogated, failed to find a single one who could unequivocally say that he believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of the Living God, sent by him to save the world. I believe that, with all my soul I believe it, and I believe that in Gethsemane and on the cross Jesus suffered for the sins of all men, good and bad, that they might be resurrected from the dead and have immortal life. I believe that through his atonement, Jesus paid for the sins of every human soul who has lived or will live upon the earth, upon condition of repentance and acceptance of the gospel. I believe that by living the gospel we may be washed clean through his atoning blood and come back into the presence of God, our Eternal Father, when life is over; and live with him eternally in his celestial presence.

These things are realities to me. I do not believe the past experience of my own life any more than I believe these great truths.

THE HOLY GHOST

I believe in the gift of the Holy Ghost. On one occasion the Prophet Joseph Smith was in Washington talking to one of the presidents of the United States, I believe it was President Van Buren. I often think of that picture. There sat the president of what in my judgment is the greatest nation in the world and with him, although he was unknown, sat a man who was infinitely greater than the president of the United States, the Prophet of the Living God, the man whom God had reserved in the spirit world to come to earth in these latter-days to be the instrument through whom God would restore the everlasting gospel in this last dispensation. "Well," said President Van Buren to the Prophet, "What is the difference between you and the rest of the Christian world?" The Prophet answered in one sentence, "We have the Holy Ghost."

I believe that the Holy Ghost is the third member of the grand council that presides over the destinies of this world. I believe he is a person, because when Jesus spoke of him he said,

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth. (John 16:13.)

I believe he is not a person with a physical body of bone and flesh, but a spirit person, and I suppose if I should see him he would look something like the Savior looked to the brother of Jared when he appeared to him on the Mount. When Jared's brother looked upon him, he appeared to be a personal being as we appear, as men appear. Jesus explained to him that what he was looking upon was the body of his Spirit. Now I am not saying this is the doctrine of the Church. It is, however, the only way I can think about a spirit person, so I think about the Holy Ghost in this way. I believe his influence and his power are capable of spreading out into the hearts of all people, as many as will accept the gospel and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

When I was made a member of the Church, Elder George Teasdale, one of the Council of the Twelve, confirmed me. He laid his hands upon my head and confirmed me a member of the Church and said in words about like this, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." All of us who are members of the Church have had that same gift given to us. He did not tell the Holy Ghost to come to me; he told me to receive him. I believe that if I live the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost will come to me and guide me into all truth. Every one of us can be led and directed by this third member of the Godhead. The Prophet Joseph Smith said that his whole purpose was to bring light and intelligence and truth to the minds of men and women, and they cannot be deceived as long as they have his spirit with them.

Now, I believe that the gospel which we have accepted is the gospel of Jesus Christ. I do not think that President Smith, as much as I admire and love him, is the head of this Church. I think it is the Church of Jesus Christ, and I believe he directs its affairs.

CHURCH GUIDED BY REVELATION

My testimony of revelation does not end with the revelations of Joseph Smith. I believe that Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, and Heber J. Grant were led, guided and directed by direct revelation. I believe that President George Albert Smith is now guided in the affairs of the present day by the revelations which come from Jesus Christ directly and through the Holy Ghost. I do not believe revelation has ceased. If I did, I would not spend my time doing what I am doing. I believe that these prophets of God now seated on this stand live by revelation. I believe that when a man is chosen in the Council of the Twelve, he is chosen by revelation through the mind of President George Albert Smith, and I believe that when a man becomes President of this Church it is not just because he has lived a long time. It is because God Almighty wants him to lead this Church in the earth.

What these men say I follow, not because I think they are almighty as individual men, but because I think they live true and pure lives and through them God gives the direction he wants his Church to have. I believe that I would be a very unwise man to put the little information and knowledge I have above the vision of the Almighty which guides these men.

I believe this is the Church of God. I believe that it will yet save whatever of the world is saved. I believe we have the commission to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ to all the world. God help us that we may keep this testimony burning in our hearts and that we may do as he would have us do and live so that when life is over we will have brought ourselves within reach of the atoning blood of Jesus Christ and enjoy his rest forever, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

In speaking to you at this time let me recall to you the lesson contained in the story of Jonah as given by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University.

FAILURE TO SEE ARIGHT

Temptations beset every one of us in every walk of life. By temptations I mean failures to see aright. Jonah's was the case of a man who in success lost sight of the real object of his work. He failed to see the right path. He did no harm because God disposed otherwise; but if he could have had his way, he would have destroyed all the people of Nineveh, and thought he was doing right. Yet, had he stopped to ask himself seriously what was the right of his mission,* his own answer would certainly have been that it was to bring the people of Nineveh to repentance. His neglect to ask himself that question was the cause of his error. He lost sight of his object, not because he could not see it, but because he did not try to.

Men have good intentions; they mean well; but they do not act well. They do not continually ask themselves, "In what does my best consist?" They pursue lesser aims, not because they prefer them, but because in the press and strain of events, in the cares of life, they become absorbed in immediate objects and forget the higher ones. Then, too, many of our young men do not realize the importance of long, hard work. They have not disciplined their minds to persevere in diligence and steadfastness. They have not learned how to endure strenuous, conscientious work; how to wrestle and work through delays, through disappointments, and failures, through the darkness till the breaking of the day. Let us be sure we never become busy calling attention to our own virtues. Never let us thirst for praise but do right for right's sake.* Above all, avoid that indifference, that apathy, that is glad to wrap itself under the cloak of piety, and be self-satisfied, self-righteous. The knowledge that is really the crown of life, is that we may exercise choice, for we have our free agency. Let us never forget that the divine spark is in every man, in him alone, and that he is free to disregard it or to heed it, and to come closer to God by showing his eagerness to work with him and for him.

CONFORMITY TO IDEALS

The spectacle offered by humanity today is a deeply sad one. The gestures of faith, constant attendance at Church, outward piety, signify nothing if man does not conform his acts and his life to the ideals of the teachings of Christ. Men must be made to understand that the important thing is to develop what is within them, to purify themselves, to better themselves, to come closer to the perfect ideal which Jesus taught. He has shown us the way. The path is straight before us. We must love God; we must love our neighbor; we must do unto others as we would have them do unto us. We must pray that the kingdom of God may come to the earth as it is in heaven. The sincere desire of men to progress morally and spiritually leads to the erection of an inside temple, without which the outward manifestation of faith becomes useless. In I Corinthians, we read:

. . . the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.
(I Corinthians 3:17.)

And we read in II Corinthians:

. . . where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. (II Corinthians 3:17.)

HUMAN DESTINY

Says Le Comte du Nuoy in his Human Destiny:

There is only one way to attain peace. First, to reestablish the cult of historic peace, by teaching the youth of the entire world with the same substance, thus establishing a basis for mutual understanding. This is a preliminary step and it can be taken immediately. Next, to try to establish the cult of individual human destiny, and to improve man by stifling wrong instincts. This will be the work of centuries to come. It is only by direct action on youth that a better society can be successfully molded. All so-called philosophical and political principles must be replaced by Christian principles, the only ones based on liberty and the respect of human destiny.

And then Le Comte du Nuoy goes on to say that God gave men liberty and conscience, and the whole nobility of man is derived from the proper exercise of this liberty. The time has come for nations as well as individuals to know what they want. If civilized nations want peace, they must understand the basic elements of the problems. Peace must be established by creating within man a spiritual consciousness and not by erecting external structures. The source of all wars lies in us;* the source of peace will come when we begin to teach the youth of the world that peace depends on the individual development of man from within, on the deep penetration of the virtues of the Holy Scriptures, on the comprehension of human dignity.

WORLD SUFFERS FROM DISTRUST

All nations of the world believe in the Golden Rule, and all Christians are agreed to the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's Prayer, the birth and resurrection of Jesus Christ. These are the fundamental doctrines to be taught to the children of the world, for nothing permanent is built that is not the consequence of a deep previous transformation in the individual soul. We must have greater faith in mankind, and the divinity of man should be made known to children from the time they can walk on up to manhood or womanhood. It is from distrust that the world is suffering. We must be more determined than ever before to fulfil the great task expected of us; to make ourselves better; to make others better; to make this a better world to live in and to bring mankind nearer to God—to have peace in our hearts and love for all men.

SALVATION FOUND IN RELIGION

We believe that the only salvation for mankind will be found in religion, in the true and everlasting gospel. Never in its two thousand years has Christianity had a more urgent call and a nobler opportunity to fulfil its obligations as the comforter and guide of humanity.

I believe that faith and works must be taught and developed in our children. By works, I mean that there is a meaning to intellectual effort and that it plays an important part in our spiritual stature. Else why should the activity of divine intelligence, the power to think and reason, have been created? Intellectual effort is not condemned in the search for spiritual truth, for our spiritual growth, our religion have their roots in the deepest aspirations of man.

How deeply divine are the words of Joseph Smith when he said:

The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth.
(D. & C. 93:36.)

Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection. (Ibid., 130:18.)

These words inspired the Prophet Joseph to establish in his day schools of learning, and even a university. He advocated the study of the ancient classics, of all the learning of the world. No other American ever advocated as he did, for his wisdom and understanding came from the works of God.

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matthew 5:48.)

We may further express this idea by saying that all the intellectual acquisitions, all the facilities which society puts at the disposal of man-schools, universities, libraries, laboratories, all things offered by religion, all the occasions given him to develop his own aptitude, his work, his leisure, all must be considered by him as tools destined to improve his personality, his moral self, and to make him feel the divine purpose of God. If the moral law and true religion dominate the world today, mankind will be on the right road to the winning of peace and happiness for humanity.

Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. (II Timothy 1:6-7.)

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord. (Psalms 33:12.)

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I pray for the inspiration of the Lord as I address you for the next few moments. I have been thrilled with the testimonies that have been borne in this conference. I love this work in which we are engaged.

I am grateful, my brethren and sisters, for this land in which we live. I never return from foreign shores but what I have a feeling of gratitude for the prophetic mission of America. I love Zion, both as a place and as a condition.

THE FREEDOM TRAIN

During the last few weeks there has traveled from one end of the country to the other a so-called Freedom Train, the purpose of which has been to direct our attention and focus our interest upon our heritage and blessings as American citizens, and to call our attention to those foundation principles upon which this great country has been established as a Christian nation.

It has been an attempt to call to our attention sacred documents which mark the origin and development of our liberties and to re-awaken in us an appreciation of the American way of life. We have had called to our notice important things that we must do if we are to continue to enjoy and pass on to coming generations the priceless blessings which are ours. Embodied in these sacred documents are eternal principles—God given—and of the utmost importance to all of us.

Now, while the world is literally in a mess, is a good time to take stock. We are inclined so much to take our blessings for granted. We are five generations—170 years—removed from the founding of this great nation.

We are living in a critical period of the world's history. We note, on every side, the spread of coercive systems, the increased power of dictators, and the influence of state control and its power over the individual. Recently, we have witnessed nations which have succumbed to the onslaught of these coercive systems. I am sure it has caused deep reflection upon the part of all of us who enjoy the blessings of freedom in this blessed land of America.

MISSION OF AMERICA

I am grateful for the prophetic mission of this nation as it has been proclaimed by prophets, ancient and modern. I have before me, this morning, some of those prophecies made by Book of Mormon prophets which I should like to refer to briefly.

I have always been grateful that the Lord saw fit to hold this nation, as it were, in the hollow of his hand in preparation for its great mission as the cradle of liberty and the cradle for the Church and kingdom of God that was to be established, and now has been established, in this the last dispensation.

The prophet of the Jaredite colony, Mahonri Moriancumer, commonly referred to as the brother of Jared, spoke of this land as a choice land, a land choice above all other lands. He indicated that those people who live here should worship the God of this land if they were to enjoy the blessings of freedom and liberty and be free from bondage. Otherwise, if they failed, they were to be swept off. And he proclaimed that this is the everlasting decree of God.

Sixteen hundred years later the Prophet Nephi was privileged to see a large part of the history of the establishment of this great nation. He spoke in no uncertain terms regarding its mission. He told that the Spirit of the Lord came down and wrought upon a man upon foreign shores, and that he went forth and discovered this land. He also saw other gentiles follow to these shores under the influence of that same Spirit. And he saw that the Spirit of the Lord was here and that multitudes of people came to these shores and that God prospered them because they humbled themselves before him; that he was with them and that his power was here, and that during times of struggle and conflict—referring to the Revolutionary War—that the Lord was with them and sustained them and bore them off victorious. He further saw that this land was consecrated to those whom the Lord should bring and who would serve him and keep his commandments; that it should be a land of liberty; that it should never be brought down into captivity unless it be because of the iniquity of the people.

The Lord promised through Nephi that the power of God would be with the gentiles whom he should bring to this land and that the wrath of God would be "upon all those that were gathered against them to battle."

Later, after the colony, which came to be called Nephites, arrived on the western hemisphere, their prophet-leader Lehi declared:

Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so, it shall be because of iniquity; for if iniquity shall abound cursed shall be the land for their sakes, but unto the righteous it shall be blessed forever. (II Nephi 1:7.)

The Prophet Jacob, a brother of Nephi, twenty-five years later was privileged also to see into the future regarding this land and to proclaim that God would fortify the land against other nations; that he that fought against Zion would perish; that no king would ever be raised on these shores; that God would forever here be a light unto the people who accepted and listened to his words.

And so this great nation, my brothers and sisters, has come into being under the inspiration of the Almighty to accomplish his purposes. Through modern revelation we have had made very plain to us something of the mission of America and the establishment of our national Constitution in this dispensation.

THE CONSTITUTION A GLORIOUS STANDARD

During the dark days of Missouri when the Saints were being persecuted and driven, and their lives threatened, and their property taken from them, the Lord commanded the Saints, through the Prophet Joseph, to continue to importune for redress. He said:

According to the laws and constitution of the people, which I have suffered to be established, . . . for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles.

He proclaimed, at that time, that it is not right for men to be in bondage one to another. Then he said:

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. (D. & C. 101:77, 80.)

Earlier, the Lord had said:

. . . verily I say unto you, my law shall be kept on this land. . . .
Let no man break the laws of the land. (D. & C. 58:19, 21.)

He commanded the people to be subject to the powers that existed.

In the Kirtland Temple, in that glorious dedicatory prayer which, according to the Prophet, was given by revelation, we find this significant verse:

Have mercy, O Lord, upon all the nations of the earth; have mercy upon the rulers of our land; may those principles, which were so honorably and nobly defended, namely, the Constitution of our land, by our fathers, be established forever. (D. & C. 109:54.)

And so, every true Latter-day Saint has a deep love and respect for the Constitution of this land.

It is no wonder that the Prophet Joseph said—even though he knew he would suffer martyrdom in this land—"The Constitution of the United States is a glorious standard; it is founded in the wisdom of God. It is a heavenly banner."

Yet, according to his contemporaries, he foresaw the time when the destiny of the nation would be in danger and would hang as by a thread. Thank God he did not see the thread break. He also indicated the important part that this people should yet play in standing for the principles embodied in these sacred documents—the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

SPREAD OF COERCIVE SYSTEMS

We see abroad today on every hand, and to some degree in our own land, the spread of coercive man-made systems, which are contrary to eternal principles and which strike at the very foundation of all we hold dear as American citizens. These programs would take from us our liberty and freedom, and those opportunities for achievement which the Lord has promised for this nation in order that it might perpetuate those eternal principles so that a haven might be established here where men from all lands might come and enjoy the glorious blessings of freedom and liberty.

We see abroad in the world an increase in these coercive systems. We witness millions of God's children in bondage, who have had their blessings of liberty and freedom taken from them. Great numbers of liberty-loving people no longer have their free agency, no longer have freedom of choice such as we enjoy here. They no longer have the privilege of living where they wish, taking advantage of any educational or work opportunity, but on the contrary they are under the power of these coercive systems and have lost completely their God-given free agency.

The impelling force in the hearts of the founding fathers as also in the hearts of the pioneers of these valleys was their love of truth and virtue and their belief in the overruling power of Almighty God. They believed in the existence of eternal laws and principles in both the physical and spiritual realms. These, they believed, never change but are eternal and are embodied in the gospel of Jesus Christ. It was their conviction that there are certain inalienable rights which are God-ordained and that no man, group of men, or nation has the right to withhold these blessings from others of their fellow men. To them, governments should be the servants and not the masters of the people. There was no place in their hearts for the principles of communism, fascism, or any other coercive system which endangers the enjoyment of freedom.

WARNING AGAINST COMMUNISM

One of the greatest conflicts ever known to man is rapidly spreading throughout the world. Eternal principles of right and wrong are involved. Communism, to my mind, is not merely an economic program. It is a total philosophy of life, utterly atheistic and utterly opposed to all we hold dear as a great Christian nation. There should be no place in the heart of any true Latter-day Saint for the principles enunciated by the leaders of these coercive systems such as communism, fascism, or any form of state control.

I am pleased to quote to you a part of a statement which was made by the First Presidency of the Church in 1936, and reaffirmed later, regarding this problem of communism which has been referred to. It reads as follows:

Communism being thus hostile to loyal American citizenship and incompatible with true Church membership of necessity no loyal American citizen and no faithful Church member can be a communist.

We call upon all Church members completely to eschew communism. The safety of our divinely inspired Constitutional government and the welfare of our Church imperatively demand that communism shall have no place in America.

A MESSAGE OF PEACE

My brothers and sisters, our message to the world is, of course, first of all, a message of peace, a message of love, a message of the restored gospel. At the same time we stand firmly in support of the principles enunciated in the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, and every Latter-day Saint would defend to the last those eternal principles. We should measure every coercive system, every program that might be offered, by the standards of those principles set forth in these sacred documents. At the same time, as we face the spread of communism and the spread of other coercive forces in the world, we must keep our hearts free from hatred and remember ever that we should carry with us always a love for the children of men. We should renounce war and declare peace. The Lord has commanded us so to do. Our message is a message of peace. We are followers of the Prince of Peace, and we should rededicate our lives to the spread of truth and righteousness and the preservation of the liberty and freedom, which have been vouchsafed to us as American citizens and as Latter-day Saints.

SECURITY BASED ON RIGHTEOUSNESS

This nation rests upon a solid spiritual foundation, established by the Lord of heaven, and I hope and pray that the nation may go forward to accomplish its great mission. There is no security except upon the basis of righteousness. The prophets, ancient and modern, have so declared. And so may we value these spiritual principles and keep them close to our hearts and preserve this land as a land of liberty and freedom, that this, his Church, which has been established by the hand of the Lord, might go forward and accomplish its great mission.

I leave my testimony with you, my brothers and sisters, that God has again spoken from the heavens, that he has raised up a prophet as he said in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants, in preparation for the calamities which will follow:

Wherefore, I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments. (D. & C. 1:17.)

Zion is intended to be a place of refuge, a defense from the storm that is to come, from the wrath which shall be poured out upon the entire earth. God help us to be true and to live the gospel and do all in our power to promote righteousness in this great land. This is God's work, and I testify to you that God lives, that Jesus Christ is the Redeemer of the world, that Joseph Smith is his Prophet, raised up to establish this work in these, the last days, in preparation for the second coming of the Master. I leave this testimony with you in all humility, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus will now sing: "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes to the Hills," by Harker, solo by Elder Walter Richardson.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Lawrence S. Burton of the Ogden Stake, Ogden, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour of beginning.

The Chorus sang: "I will Lift Up Mine Eyes to the Hills," after which President Lawrence S. Burton, of the Ogden Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2:00 p.m., Monday, April 5.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus furnished musical numbers for this session of the conference.

President George Albert Smith:

It is time to start our meeting. There is no room for anyone else in the house unless he stands. It is marvelous how the weather has favored us, and it is delightful to know that over at the Assembly Hall as well as here people are enjoying the conference.

Monday, April 5

Second Day

This morning our Choir certainly brought joy to us. We are grateful to the great institution that they represent and hope that they will continue to represent that institution. They may not know it, but I was a student of the Brigham Young University when I was thirteen years old. It was the Brigham Young Academy at that time, so to me these members of the choir are like people from home.

We have a telegram here that I am sure you will be glad to hear. It is from Elder Stephen L Richards, sent from New York.

"Reached New York this morning after a pleasant journey. Missionaries and members in South America join us in greetings to yourself and to the Saints at conference. We give assurance that the spirit and power of the restored gospel can find their way into the hearts of men the world over and lay a foundation for brotherhood and peace as well.

"Faithfully yours,
"Stephen L Richards"

I am sure we are glad to hear from Elder Richards and that he is that far on his way home.

President David O. McKay will conduct the services this afternoon.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fourth session of the 118th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Stephen L Richards, who is returning from a tour of the South American Missions, Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific Missions, Elder Thomas E. McKay, who is recovering from an operation, and Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of European affairs.

This service and others will be broadcast over KSL, and by special arrangement through KSL, the session will be broadcast over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. We suggest you listen to those announcements as you leave this building.

The choir singing for this session will be furnished by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

The opening song by the mixed chorus will be "Give Unto the Lord," by Cadman; solo by Sister Jean Howard.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Samuel A. Hendricks of the Malad Stake.

Singing by the Chorus, "Give Unto the Lord," by Cadman.

President Samuel A. Hendricks, of the Malad Stake, offered the invocation.

President David O. McKay:

We wish that all who are listening in could see this crowd of young men and young women who are occupying all the seats in the choir area and overflowing into the seats of the gallery.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus will now sing "O Be Joyful All Ye Lands," by Gretchaninoff.

The Chorus sang: "O Be Joyful All Ye Lands."

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

One cannot read the record of Paul's missionary service without sensing his deep solicitude for those who through his ministry had been converted to the faith. As he moved from place to place, he contrived by one means or another to keep himself informed of the progress and failures of the bodies of the Church which he had previously established. To him they appeared to be as children who had not yet learned to walk alone, and he stood over them with outstretched hand to pick them up and steady them again when their childish unsteady feet stumbled and they were threatened with too disastrous a fall. Out of the gleanings of such information as filtered through to him, he constructed a picture of their doings and of the particular nature of the dangers which threatened their steadfastness.

LETTERS OF PAUL

Then he wrote them letters of instruction and of admonition and of promise, designed to fortify them in their beliefs, and to warn them of the disastrous consequences of unwholesome practices and to revive in their hearts the stirrings of a reborn hope—a pattern incidentally which might profitably be studied by all having responsibilities of leadership.

Among the objects of his special concern were the Philippian saints. He wrote them some letters, one of which contained this pregnant exhortation:

Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. (Philippians 2:12.)

So great was Paul's yearning for them that it is easy to picture him as willing, even eager, if he could have done it, to have made their struggle for them that they might have been spared the disappointments and discouragements and heartaches incident to their climb upward to the high plane which his teaching had set for them. But that could not be done. They had to fight their own fight; they had to rise through their own endeavor. In short, they had to work out their own salvation, and he so told them.

That is the statement of a principle of such primary importance that it ought to be received as axiomatic.

WORK ESSENTIAL TO PROGRESS

Work is a condition precedent to progress and accomplishment in every realm of life. It is a commonplace, accepted by all without question, that the way to develop strength of muscle in the physical body is to exercise the muscles, to put them to work performing the function for which they were intended. By inaction, nonuse, they would grow flabby and finally lose the power to fill the duties of their natural offices. It is readily admitted, too, that mental vigor comes only when the powers of the mind are extended to the mastery of difficult tasks. We all have had the disappointing experience of seeing young men of apparently scintillating brilliance fail utterly of achieving the distinction which their natural endowment gave promise of, just as we have been happily surprised at the success gained by some of slower mentality. The difference lies in their differing degrees of industry and endurance. The tenacious, plodding mind has often outrun the quick and apparently more alert one simply because the possessor of the former has been willing to submit himself to the rigid discipline of weary hours of toil which the latter would not endure. Almost we might, it seems to me, lay it down as a working rule that achievement is in proportion to the amount of intelligent effort one is willing to put into an enterprise.

SPIRITUALITY DEVELOPS THROUGH PRACTICE

Strangely enough, while the truth of these observations is readily admitted in relation to physical and mental development, there seem to be relatively few who recognize their equal applicability to what is spoken of as the spiritual realm. Taking people by and large, it would seem that an overwhelmingly preponderant number of them, while recognizing fully that intellectual growth can come only through unremitting toil, and that the development of physical skill can come only through persistent effort, yet somehow, when their religious or spiritual lives are concerned, they act as if a different rule governs. The attitude seems to be that religion is a placid, quiescent thing imposing no dynamic demand, and whose details can be put into the hands of some chosen class to take care of, who relay to the masses the essentials in the way of formulas, admonitions, or exhortations. What is spoken of as spirituality seems not to be thought of as being susceptible of development through practice. By some occult process it is supposed to bloom without cultivation and bear fruit without tending.

I find no warrant anywhere for such an assumption. If one aspires to fashion wood, or metal, or stone into houses, or cathedrals, or temples, or into some more delicate form of beauty, he must develop the skill for his craft through painstaking toil and endeavor. If he would paint a sunset, or coax music out of the harp or lyre, he must cultivate the artistry to do it by interminable practice with color and brush or instrument. It makes no difference how richly he may be endowed by nature with talents of craftsmanship or artistry if he lets those talents lie unused or uncultivated, he will never arrive at the state of excellence in craftsmanship or art. Howsoever lavishly one may be gifted with the qualities of mind that would fit him to be a great mathematician, or chemist, or physicist, or biologist, or historian, he never can become either except at the price of grueling struggle directed with intelligence to the desired end. That is the inexorable law of life. It may neither be escaped nor circumvented. The old copybook maxim was: "There is no excellence without labor." That must remain forever true. It is the uncompromising law of this world.

EVERYTHING HAS ITS PRICE

Everything has its price, and, if obtained, the price must be paid. No one ever gets anything for nothing. People sometimes flatter themselves that they do, but they are deceiving themselves. They always pay in one coin or another. It may be in the coin of the realm, or may be in the forfeiture of a degree of self-respect, or of honor, or of liberty, or the free exercise of the right of choice. We see abundant examples of this all about us today, individuals and whole nations, too, beguiled by the seductive promises of plenty without the trouble and anxiety of care for their own concern, surrendering themselves to the fatuous allurements of deceptive demagogues or to the blighting tyrannies of ruthless despots. Like Esau, they are selling their birthright for nothing better than a mess of pottage. And, saddest of all, they are dwarfing their own powers for progress and blighting their own prospects for achievement.

The struggle must be one's own. Nobody may do the learning act for another. One cannot obtain wisdom, or learning, or beauty of character as a gift or an inheritance. One's father and a long line of ancestry may have achieved distinction in one or more of the fields of notable endeavor, but the individual may not ride in on the accomplishments of either or all of them. Here, as elsewhere, he must perfect himself through his own striving; and he cannot rise above the level of his own accomplishment wrought through his own labor. There is just one way by which an inspiring son may rise to the same eminence as an illustrious father, and that is through the same process by which that father rose to the high plane he occupies, by the perfecting of his own powers, through mastering obstacles, overcoming discouragements, cultivating virtues, and pressing unremittingly towards his goal. There is no other way.

THE GOAL OF RELIGION

The same law governs in respect to religious or spiritual life. We have no warrant for supposing that we can build, or piece together, or fashion, a beautiful or perfect life without working painstakingly at it. And the goal of all religion is the perfection of life. It can be attained only through practice of the deeds which lead to perfection. It was the Master himself who, in the course of that inimitable Sermon on the Mount, invited his listeners to this high aspiration:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.)

And before the eyes of the rich young man who came inquiring what good thing he should do that he might have eternal life, Jesus dangled the concept of perfection as the ultimate goal of life:

. . . If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me. (Matt. 19:21.)

Here was no promise of a sheltered, placid life, but rather a bidding to heroic action. If the young man had been able to do it, he would have achieved a spiritual grandeur beyond anything all his wealth could buy.

Paul says of the Master himself:

Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; (Hebrews 5:8.)

And to the Corinthian saints he wrote:

. . . and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. (I Cor. 3:8.)

To the same body he further declared:

Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon [that is upon Jesus Christ as the foundation], he shall receive a reward. (Ibid., 3:13-14.)

JUDGMENT ACCORDING TO WORKS

The Revelator declares concerning those who in vision he saw come forth from the dead:

. . . and they were judged every man according to their works. (Rev. 20:13.)

In that beautiful parable of the builders, Jesus likened that man who heard his sayings and did them, to a wise man who built his house upon a rock, and when it was caught in rain and flood and tempest, it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock; but he who heard his sayings and did them not, he likened to a foolish man who built his house upon the sand, and when the rain descended and the floods came and the wind blew and beat upon that house, it fell, and great was the fall of it.

Modern-day revelation is replete with the same teaching, declaring with directness that at the final reckoning, every man shall be judged:

according to his works and the deeds which he hath done.
(D. & C. 19:3.)

It goes much further than that. It declares that:

Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection.

And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come. (D. & C. 130:18-19.)

That is only another way of saying that ennobling qualities woven into a life are eternal things. They never cease to be of value or to bring their reward. It is to be noted, too, that the only way to get them is by diligence and obedience. They do not come as gratuities. In fact, it is the growing process induced by diligent effort that eventuates in the final result. There is no need to multiply evidences. Scriptural teachings as well as the teachings of experience and reason are all one way.

That I may not leave any chance of being misunderstood, I want to say now I have no intention of getting involved in the old controversy as to whether salvation is by works or by grace. With a proper definition of terms there is no basis for controversy.

GROWTH DEPENDS ON INDIVIDUAL EXERTIONS

Neither do I wish to be understood as saying that technical intellectual training is essential to spiritual progress or understanding. There are too many evidences to the contrary. There need, however, be no enmity between the two, though their methods may be dissimilar. Perhaps the assumed distinction between the spiritual and the temporal grows out of the limitations of our understanding. We may find when we come to see far enough down the perspective that they unite in one. In fact God has said that to him all things are spiritual and not at any time has he made anything that is temporal. Perhaps, for safety, I ought to say, too, that I do not intend to discount the reality or the value of divine interposition in aid of struggling mortals, providing redemption and the plan of living which they could not provide for themselves. The thing that I do want to make clear is that the principle, that progress and growth depend upon our own exertion and compliance with the governing laws, is a universal principle applicable in the spiritual realm no less than in the realm of the temporal. Otherwise there is no meaning to the great parable of the talents spoken of by Jesus. He likened the kingdom of heaven to a man about to journey to a far country who called his servants to him and delivered to them his goods in proportion to their several abilities. To one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one. He who received the five talents forthwith traded with them and doubled them. So likewise did he who received the two talents. But he of the one talent hid it. When the master returned, each gave his accounting. They who had multiplied their talents were commended, but he who returned but the one talent which had been given him was denounced as a slothful servant, and it was taken from him and given to the one who had converted the five into ten.

CHURCH PROVIDES OPPORTUNITIES TO WORK

This brings me to the lesson I want to draw from all that has been said before and furnishes the justification for saying it. This Church is so organized that it provides something for every member to do. And the doing of those things offers the only means by which members grow toward their promised destiny. Teachings are, in themselves, mere abstractions, powerless to save unless they are translated into deeds. It is the doing of the deeds that leads to growth through development of latent powers and the evolving of desired qualities of character. And deeds are the individual acts of persons. One might sit passively for an eternity hearing the best of instruction, or the exposition of the loftiest of principles without being much improved unless those teachings and principles were made fruitful through conversion into practices of living. It is what we make of our lives that counts. It is at once a marvel and a beauty of Christ's gospel that for every requirement it lays down in the way of admonition to righteousness, it provides a practical means for bringing it about. And that way is always to provide things for the individual to do which result in the development of the desired qualities of mind and spirit. This it does through the organized Church.

Thus does the Church become the medium for giving practical effect to the teachings of the gospel. It introduces order where ineffectiveness and frustration would otherwise be. It provides the means by which its members may step by step build into themselves that aggregate of desired qualities which make men good and crowd out the qualities that are bad. Thus do they grow towards perfection and do their part towards working out their own salvation.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I am very grateful to my Heavenly Father for this privilege. I wish to bear to you my humble testimony that I know that this is the work of God and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. These very words and the utterance of this testimony have already brought a blessing. The joy that floods my heart and soul as I bear this testimony is a great satisfaction.

During the administration of President Calvin Coolidge as President of the United States, I became a great admirer of the things he said and did. I want to read a few lines from President Coolidge:

There is no substitute for morality, character, and religious conviction. Unless these abide, American citizenship will be found unequal to its task. Somehow we must get back to God, and that is very difficult for modern minds who have lost simplicity.

I read this morning this verse from Jeremiah:

... Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you. (Jeremiah 7:23.)

I am extremely grateful for the privileges that have come to me during my last calling in the Church. I have had the opportunity under assignment of going to Europe, Canada, and Mexico as well as traveling in many of the states of the United States. Today I would like to express appreciation for a number of simple incidents that have come to me recently. They may seem to you simple things on an occasion like this when great, profound doctrines are being taught, but to me these simple incidents have been deeply impressive, for constantly they have said to me,

Have more faith, live your religion, be what you say.

FAITH EXHIBITED

I shall not forget soon a young man at the hospital. He was entering the operating room. He was a very worthy young man and very dear to me personally. As they were wheeling him into the operating room, the doctor noticed that his eyes were closed. He said to the nurse, "Take his pulse quickly. He may be gone." The young man opened his eyes and said, "No, I'm not gone doctor. I was just talking to the Lord. I told him to be sure to be with you when you perform this operation. You may go ahead any time now. I am ready."

I am grateful for the privilege I had with the Mexican people of the Mexican and Spanish-American missions at the Arizona Temple, when I saw a humble Saint, entering the grounds, take off her shoes at the iron gate. I hurried over to her and said, "You may take your shoes off when you get inside," and she said, "Oh, no, I will take them off here. This is sacred ground to me." Then a little later in the sealing room I saw one of these dark-skinned mothers take into her arms her sixteen-year old son after they had gone through the sacred ceremony of sealing. She embraced her boy and said, "Now you are mine for eternity." I can't forget these simple things. To me they are truly great things. They have kept saying to me,

Have more faith. Know more about the temple of God. Seek the privileges of these great sacred opportunities.

CALIFORNIA CELEBRATION

Under a special assignment I was asked this year to go to Coloma, California, to be at the celebration of the anniversary of the discovery of gold and to represent our people on the program. Fifty to sixty thousand were in attendance. The governor and other dignitaries of that great state of California were present. They started three great years of celebration. I was very happy to have the privilege, humbly, to represent a group of Latter-day Saint men of the Mormon Battalion who were there at that time a hundred years ago. They had taken a contract to build a mill when the discovery of gold came, when people across the world started a trek to California and thousands left their homes and work. Even in San Francisco, judges were leaving their benches. People left their businesses. They rushed wildly to the place where gold had been discovered. I was proud to represent these humble Mormon men. They stayed with their task and finished their contract. They had made their promise to finish the mill, and on March 11, 1848, the mill was finished. Then they made their journey over the Sierra Nevada Mountains to meet their families and friends. The character, stability, the word of these men told me again what I must do.

TRACTING EXPERIENCE

I am grateful for a young missionary this year whom I met in the mission field. He told me of an incident that happened just a few days before. He said, "Brother Kirkham, I had a rather interesting experience just the other day. My companion and I were going out tracting. We had been instructed always to be prayerful as we approached a house, and when I came to the door the woman said to me, 'I understand you are a Mormon missionary. Well, I don't want anything to do with you. I know something about your people. You're just a menace. Leave this place.' Then," said the young missionary, "I had been told to be prayerful, so I continued in my heart to pray as I stood listening to what she had to say. The woman continued telling me what she thought of me and our people, and asked me again to leave. I continued to pray. In a few moments she turned abruptly and said, 'Well, why don't you come in?' " Thank God for the stability of the generation that's marching on to the greatest destiny of our people. They have taught me many helpful lessons.

May God grant that I may live worthy of their association, that I may live and do the thing I speak. May God grant that same high privilege to you, for then happiness shall be ours, and we will not need to go away to carry the message. The world will come to us..

God bless us, I humbly, pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

Like Brother Romney, I have spent some time in preparing a speech. However, a little different from his circumstances, I haven't been able to get the spirit to give that speech. I think when President McKay spoke my name my heart skipped a couple of beats, and I haven't been able to catch up with it yet.

POWER OF THE PRIESTHOOD

I have always been impressed with the assemblies in these conferences, ever since I was a small child. I have enjoyed very much especially the priesthood meetings, and as I look out over this audience here today and see this gathering of men in the body of the hall who are all holders of the priesthood, backed by their wives or their sweethearts, or the other members of their families, I am inspired with the power that lies behind them. We have been reminded of the power of twelve men who in the earlier days did a powerful work upon the earth. Today we have twelve men with the same power and the same authority, the same message, the same responsibility given to them. Not only do we have the twelve men but we also have thousands and hundreds of thousands of brethren in the Church holding the same priesthood, the same power to go out and gather the people of the earth and give to them that same power, that they may receive a testimony of the divinity of the gospel, that they might also catch the spirit of the Lord and progress and work out their salvation.

This power of the priesthood is more than that. It is the power to represent Jesus Christ, and all that the men do within the authority and power of that priesthood is just the same as if Jesus Christ himself were there personally doing it; that means in all the administrations and all the ordinations and in all the other activities which they perform. We readily accept it when we tell the deacons and the priests and those of the Aaronic Priesthood that they are representing Jesus Christ when they administer the sacrament and pass it to the congregation. We readily accept it in the various ordinations performed by those holding the Melchizedek Priesthood; but to me the power of the priesthood reaches much farther than that. We have also the patriarchs who are sitting over there, who are a representation of the patriarchs in the Church. I think we have about a third of the patriarchs, maybe less, represented in this group, who also have the power to lay their hands on your heads, if you desire it, and pronounce blessings upon your heads, and with such power that the Lord will accept of those blessings, and, through your activities and through your efforts to fulfill those blessings, the Lord himself shall sanction those blessings to your good. It goes even farther than that, to me. We have had many in our Church who have prophesied, told us of things to come in the future and which have come to pass. We have heard much during this conference of the prophecies of the Prophet Joseph Smith, which have been true prophecies, and prophecies are being made all the time today, not so outstanding probably as those that Joseph Smith gave in the beginning, but we are given warning, and are given counsel and advice and told that if we don't follow it, we will reap the penalty or reward in accordance to our actions and our deeds. To me the power of the priesthood goes even farther than that. The power of the priesthood is the same power which Christ used in creating the earth. The limits of the power of the priesthood are endless. The power of the priesthood, if used correctly, under the proper inspiration, may command the elements, and they shall obey in accordance to the will of the Lord.

MIRACULOUS HEALINGS THROUGH PRIESTHOOD

Last Wednesday we heard several of the mission presidents bear testimony in the temple meeting, of the ministrations which have been miraculously accepted, that healings were made almost immediately, some were immediate, that the power of the Lord is being poured out upon this people all over this earth in the same manner. Through the administration of those who hold the priesthood even the elements of the earth obey. The power of the priesthood is the power of Christ, which he had to create the earth and all that lives on it. Now if Christ has delegated that power to us, and we use it correctly with faith, then why should we hesitate to administer to the sick? Why should we hesitate to call upon his help? Why should we hesitate to call upon the elders at any time we need the power of the Lord with us?

EXPERIMENTS WITH ATOMIC BOMB

We have taught since the beginning of this dispensation the doctrine of the indestructibility of matter, and during the war I had the experience of working in the plant which produced the materials for the atomic bomb. We were working, you might say, with an invisible ray, because we took the material, put it through a certain process which made it invisible to the eye. Then it was caught again in a separated condition, separating the U235 and U238 and other elements of uranium. As a result of using those materials, elements of the earth were dissipated into the air. The steel tower for instance upon which the first atomic bomb was exploded, vaporized; that steel tower was dissipated into the atmosphere. We didn't return it, but none of it has been destroyed. It has just been broken up into a different form. The atmosphere is full of materials, and wherever there is one law given, there is a reverse law or contrary law. We have learned the law that we may break up the elements of the earth, to a great extent.

PRIESTHOOD EXERCISED THROUGH FAITH

The power of the priesthood is the power to call upon God who knows the reverse law, and in accordance to his will, he will exercise his power to call together the elements or to put them into action for our benefit. By such process beyond our mortal control and beyond our knowledge, the sick can be healed; the blind can be made to see; the deaf can be made to hear. God has those powers, and he has given them to us through the power of the priesthood. How can we strengthen that faith which we have that will help us to use that power, for we cannot use the power of the priesthood correctly without faith. Our faith and our testimony are strengthened day by day in our actions and in our deeds. We have had called to our attention, during this conference, many of the ways by which we can strengthen our testimony and strengthen our faith. We will go away from this conference remembering little of the words that were spoken, but if we can instil into ourselves the desire to get out and do more for our fellow men and our fellow workers, we have gained the purpose of these conferences, and with the help of the Lord we shall work harder and go farther and progress faster in the work of the Lord here in the earth.

In closing let me quote a poem which expresses the thought of how we can strengthen our testimony and our faith that we might use the power of the Lord and have it with us more abundantly:

OTHERS

Lord, let me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayers will be for Others.

Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true
And know that all I do for you
Must needs be done for—Others.

Let "self" be crucified and slain
And buried deep; and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again
Unless to live for—Others.

And when my work on earth is done
And my new work in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won
While thinking still of—Others.

Others, Lord, yes others,
Let this my motto be;
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like thee.

—C. D. Meigs

I bear you my testimony, by brothers and sisters, that I know this is the work of the Lord and that this power of the priesthood which has been given to this people is truly the power of God. If we will continue to live as he has taught us, it shall be a source of happiness and joy to us all and shall enable us to accomplish the duties required of us from day to day in our lives. I bear you this testimony in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus and the congregation joined in singing the hymn; "How Firm a Foundation." (Hymn Book, p. 260; L.D.S. Hymns No. 329.)

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

While I have been sitting here today, I have been wondering how many of you in this audience have sons or daughters in the mission field. I don't believe President Smith would mind if I ask you to show your hands. Please do so. [A good number of hands.] I am interested also in knowing how many of you folk here have ever traveled on missions for the Lord and for the Church and at one time or another on those missions have traveled without money. Would you mind showing your hands? [A very large number responded.] The number is sufficient to give me courage to go ahead and talk.

RESPONSIBILITY OF A MISSION PRESIDENT

I have a distinct feeling of humbleness when I realize that I am one of a large number of men in whom the Presidency of the Church has placed the responsibility of guiding the young men of the Church on missions. The Lord said, in trying to explain his purposes to men, and of course he had to use the words of men:

. . . this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Moses 1:39.)

When I see your boys come out into the field, with fear in their eyes and fear in their hearts, not knowing how to commence, I realize that somehow my responsibility is to bring to pass in their hearts and their lives what the Lord desires when he said he wanted to bring men into eternal life. It fills me with fear. I confess to you that I have spent more hours of the night in sleeplessness since I arrived on this mission, worrying about it, than I have at any other time in my life. I am sure, too, that I speak for my co-laborers when I say this.

WITHOUT PURSE OR SCRIP

How well these young men perform you need have no fear. They are remarkable. They come among the people of the world, and they are determined that theirs shall be a mission filled with honor. They do not yet know for certain the one great lesson they must learn before they can be good missionaries, but they certainly are anxious to learn it. I can still see a six-foot four lad with eyes so large—it seems to me they filled his whole face they were so large—he came into the mission home after a long ride and sat down, and we talked. Somehow he had heard he was going to go out and do some work in the country so he was nervous about it, and he began to ask me questions. He said, "President Young, are we going to carry copies of the Book of Mormon with us?" I assured him that he was. He said, "May we read these copies of the Book of Mormon?" "Oh," I said, "we want you to read them. You are supposed to know what's on the inside so you can tell the people of the world about them." He thought about that for a minute. He said, "Do you mean we can read the Book of Mormon we carry with us, and that we're going to carry some?" "Yes, sir." He heaved quite a sigh of relief and finally said, "Well, I don't mind going without purse, but I didn't want to go without script." The boy really thought we were going to take his Bible, his Book of Mormon, his Doctrine and Covenants, his Pearl of Great Price, and all of his tracts away from him and let him go with an empty suitcase.

CARRYING GOSPEL TO INDIANS

Now, I should like to say one thing with regard to the principles of this matter. Brother Bowen's remarks today are the key to it. Any boy who goes into the mission field with an idea that he is going to get personal development out of it will fail. If he goes into the mission field forgetting himself, with only the idea that he is going to do something for the people of the world, that his message is the most sacred trust that he can possibly have, he cannot fail. That's the lesson that the elders learn. How well they learn it I should like to attest before you by letting them speak for themselves. I sent two of your boys out, recently, to a tribe of Indians. That's nothing unusual. Ever since Brother Kimball has urged us to get busy, most of the brethren in the missions have done so, but I have delayed until just recently. These young men said to me before they left, "What are your instructions?" I had none for them. I did not know what to tell them, so I said, "I don't know, but you go up there, and if you have had the proper training in this mission, you will know what to do, after you have asked the Lord." I assured them that if they were humble enough and really desired to help those people find out about their ancestors, the way would be opened. Their faces were white when they left, and I am sure they were uneasy about the assignment. May I now let them speak for themselves? I borrowed from one of the boy's parents a letter and would like to read a small portion of it to you:

"President Young gave us no instructions, but we have had free rein and have only to depend on the Lord to guide us in presenting our message. He has blessed us even more than we could have hoped for." Then he tells how they hired a hall in the reservation hoping the Indians would come out, how only one or two showed up, even though they had promises from many, how they felt very much discouraged about it. Finally, they left. An old gentleman at the hall walked out, too. Catching up with them on a corner, they began to talk as they walked along. Finally the gentleman said to them (as they were silently praying to know what to do, because they didn't want to have their evening spoiled). "I know a lady down here who I think would like to hear you."

Their letter continues:

"Well, we had nothing to lose and felt we should go in and see her, so we did. They were the people to whom we had loaned a Book of Mormon, a Mrs. Shay and a couple of other people. These are Indian people with American names. We were just going to spend a while visiting one or two people, we thought, and maybe to talk about the Church some, but the Lord had other ideas. The people who were in the house didn't avoid us as most would, but came on in the living room and sat down, and another girl came in and sat down in the living room. The Franceses came in, then came another Mr. and Mrs. Shay who were going to the hall quite late, but finding us not there just happened in at the place where we were. Another young man drifted in and took a chair, another young girl, then two ladies came. They had been directed to where we were by a sick man who had just heard," (and the elder adds in his letter) "I wonder how he heard about where we were."

"Then Chief Tahachee himself drifted in, and before the evening was over a couple or three more. It was miraculous how people just seemed to gravitate to where we were. It just worked in perfectly for a warm friendly cottage meeting which I suggested, as Elder M. felt the same way. With an audience of ten or twelve adults and a couple of children we began the meeting. Elder M. prayed beautifully. I stood and talked on the restoration of the Book of Mormon for twenty minutes or so, the most inspired, easiest talk I ever gave. It was promoted by the Holy Ghost; I know it was. I bore my testimony humbly and fervently to the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon, their book, and that the Church is true, and that Jesus lives. I told them of the vision of Joseph Smith, of the bringing forth of the book, about the Witnesses, the need for the Book of Mormon. The people were very attentive and drank it all in, and then Elder M. got up and gave a beautiful talk confirming mine, telling more about the Book of Mormon, how to get a testimony and other great points pertinent to the time. It was an inspired talk. Then a half hour of questions, and we loaned or gave to them" (according to how it works out, I suppose) "five more Books of Mormon. They were eager to have them, and I think will really read them with real interest and with real intent to know the truth. After I closed with prayer, there was a little more questioning, and we left with a fine spirit in the place and went with Chief Tahachee toward the river. As we left, Mrs. Shay told us we could hold a meeting at her place again if we didn't get the hall, and she would invite those interested. Chief Tahachee took us to his house to meet his wife and played records of her singing of Indian songs, and he chanted and played tom-toms for us. He was very friendly. As we left his place and headed home across the frozen river in the bright moonlight, I said, 'You can't tell me prayers aren't answered.'"

That letter is from a pair of missionaries who went out some time ago in the mission field and were obedient, with the belief that if they did their best and were humble, they could hear in their hearts the voice of the Lord directing them what to do. They are opening up the work with that particular tribe of Indians, not by my direction, I assure you, but under the inspiration the Lord gives to those who humbly desire to discover for themselves by works what he desires.

CHANGE WROUGHT IN MISSIONARY

I would like to give one more incident, if I may: We had a missionary go out to stay but a year. He informed me that he had come out to get an experience. He didn't want to go through his life and finish his college without being able to say that he had had a missionary experience. He felt it would do him good. This is what he writes:

"In these past three months He has abundantly blessed me beyond my power of words to express, and a rich deep feeling of happiness which I have within me at this moment and which I have enjoyed during this work has been pay enough for me. May I enumerate just how He has blessed us and what the results are?"

"The way was opened to us to change our place of lodging and to find a lovely three-room apartment completely furnished for only ten dollars a month, (They had been paying ten dollars a week,) "living in the house of good Christian people and every opportunity to preach the gospel to them. During these three months we have sold forty-five copies of the Book of Mormon and held fifty-two cottage meetings.

"We organized a Sunday School with an attendance of twenty-five persons there this past Sunday and a promise of fifteen others that they would start attending in the immediate future. Been invited out to ninety dinners, thus cutting down our expenses, and also providing a way that we could preach the gospel to them. We have had the following items given to us: Thirty-three quarts of preserves, ten dozen eggs, three pies, four cakes, six jars of jams and jellies, three cans of honey, thus cutting down some more on the expenses. Perhaps the greatest exhibit to show for this work is the fact that five persons have requested baptism at our hands, and two men who have been members of the Church, have repented of their sins and are earnestly living the Word of Wisdom and are desirous of advancing in the priesthood.

"Two future requests to speak before large groups of from forty to sixty people on the subject of Mormonism. All of these items point to the fact that it can be done if a missionary desires to do the will of his Father in heaven and realize the hopes of the folks who send him, and it can be done in the period of a few short months."

Those two young brethren, my friends and fellow workers, are only two of four thousand who feel just exactly the same way.

May the Lord help us to give them support by our faith and prayers, I ask, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, it is a great inspiration to see all of you folk before me, you who are leaders in the stakes and wards and missions. I pray for the blessings of the Lord.

WORK AMONG INDIANS PROGRESSING

It has been hard for me to refrain from talking about the Indians this time, but I must mention one or two items inasmuch as President S. Dilworth Young has spoken of them.

Down on the Navajo Reservation, the Indians call the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, "Gamalii." Recently at mission headquarters, they were trying to ascertain from the natives, themselves, what this word meant to them. And one Navajo said, "A 'Gamalii is one who invites you to dinner and does not charge you for it." And another said, "A 'Gamalii is one who has the same father and mother that we have."

I will just say that the work among the Indians is progressing, for which we are deeply grateful.

ERUPTION OF MT. VESUVIUS

I want to comment on another theme and preface it by a little experience: Back in 1937, Sister Kimball and I had the privilege of traveling through some of the European countries, and it was our privilege to go, among other places, to Italy. And one of the most intriguing sights in that country was Mt. Vesuvius in eruption. Here we saw a high, conically-shaped mountain, and at night for nearly a hundred miles we could see the display of fireworks in the heavens. We came around the semi-circular bay of Naples to the city of Pompeii. As a child I had read the book, The Last Days of Pompeii, telling about the eruption of 79 A.D., when the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed. Here we were, visiting the city of the dead, which had been covered and hidden for nearly two millenniums. We walked through the streets of this deserted city, now excavated; we went into the shops, homes, and temples; we saw their liquor establishments and houses of prostitution with the pictures still on the walls in original colors. These all had been buried under ashes for long centuries. We climbed this mountain with its cinders and lava, and when we came into the great crater at the top, we were amazed to find that a few inches beneath our feet was molten lava, still flaming.

We climbed up into the crater of that volcanic mountain. In ages past there had been a terrific convulsion of nature, and a mountain was born. Lying dormant for long centuries, the monster had watched with evil eye the coming of the inhabitants, the planting of vineyards upon its sunny slopes, and the building of homes upon its foothills. But finally in jealous rage at seeing green things grow, and children laugh and play, and life spring up in contrast to its age-old environment of desolation and death, the ogre burst forth in fiery blasts spewing its seething vomit from its corrupt throat in molten lava to run down its sides and to fill the heavens with its ash and steam and rocks. The volcano was merciless. It would leave nothing to grow upon its breasts.

In a matter of hours the fury of this powerful destroyer had seared the trees, the vines, and all living things, long before the slow moving lava had reached them to crush and burn them into nothingness. The heavens were filled with ashes which soon smothered all life including the humans who were utterly helpless before the whims of this destructive element.

All was destruction: Plants and people were destroyed; homes, shops, baths, and circuses leveled; soil covered with a conglomerate mass of hardness which would take the elements ages to pulverize into soil again. All was death!

WONDER OF THE NILE RIVER

Then across the blue Mediterranean is a contrasting picture of the builder in nature. The Nile River, one of the greatest wonders of the world, changes the dead and barren sands of the desert into a fertile land with trees and grass and animal life. The heavy April showers in the basin of the White Nile start the flood, and the May rains in Abyssinia swell the stream with its rich muddy water that fertilizes as it irrigates, and this sterile sand becomes fertile land to bring life from death. The mud and water constitute the difference between the Sahara Desert and the green gardens and fields of Egypt. Those of us who have been in the Gila Valley in Arizona, which is one of the most notable examples of soil erosion in the world perhaps, will know about what has been done in the valley of the Nile. The rich sediment is laid gently on the land so that it might produce crops. The productive valley is a gift of the river Nile. It is at once a garden and a museum; a composite of the ancient and modern; the land of Abraham and Joseph and Moses with its sphinxes and catacombs and pyramids, and the land of today with its 19,000,000 people; a land of brilliant sun, deep blue sky, and vivid colors, with the driest air in the world. In contrast to the sand under the glare of the sun and the dull color of the river, the fields and palms appear the greenest things in the world. The sand pours over the yellow rocks in a torrent of gold, and the rocks cast purple shadows. All this is the bounty of the Nile, which nurtures life in the very jaws of the death of the hot dry desert through which it flows. Its annual overflow is one of the greatest marvels of the world. It has risen to within a few hours of the same time and to within a few inches of the same height year after year for unknown ages.

Another spring, another flood, the soaking stream, more fertile mud and the Nile continues to give, to build and sustain, while Vesuvius burns and crushes and suffocates. The volcano is a destroyer—the river a builder.

MEN MAY BUILD OR DESTROY

I find that men are like rivers and volcanoes. They construct, and they destroy; they purify and inspire, and they defile and mystify; they give life, and they bring about death. Recently I had a visit from a handsome youth, the product of a builder. His eyes were bright; his step was light; he walked with calm assurance. Here were courage, optimism, and positiveness. He was clean. He had a wholesome attitude toward life, no sourness, no bitterness. He looked life straight in the eye and met its challenges. "All my life," he told me, "I have been taught that 'cleanliness is next to Godliness.' Through all the priesthood and auxiliary organizations I have learned Paul's statement: '... that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?'"

"If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." (I Cor. 3:16-17.) He had been eager to fill a mission, for said he: "Since my earliest recollection, I have earmarked my savings for my mission; I have listened intently to every returning missionary and anticipated with eagerness my opportunity to go. All my life I have been taught by men of God who have stirred my ambition, stimulated my thinking, built my character, and increased my faith. There were always markers at the crossroads which I could recognize, for these valiant people had prepared me to identify them. Oh, how grateful I am that such builders have had a part in making my life! They have helped to lift the fogs, dissipate the mists, banish the doubts, and fortify me against the temptations. My life is full—there is no remorse—I have no fears—life is glorious and rich in promise."

And I remembered the words of the Lord through his ancient prophet:

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; . . . that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! (Isaiah 52:7.)

VICTIM OF HUMAN DESTROYERS

In contrast, I had a visit from one of the victims of the human destroyers. He was a fair-haired youth of twenty-two years; the last four of those years had been filled with experiences too sordid and too horrible for a lad of those tender years—experiences which would challenge the resistance of a veteran. His manner was mild, his approach shy, but his voice registered sincerity. My heart immediately opened and took him in. "Brother Kimball," he asked, "would it be possible for me to go on a mission? I think it would help me to find myself again. I do want very much to go into the mission field."

"You've had some frustrating experiences, haven't you?" I asked. And he poured out his soul in a series of heart-rending stories. So many upon the head of a youth—and so concentrated! Why, he had hardly recovered from one until another blow fell upon him. He continued: "I hope that if I can go out and preach the gospel, I might be able to get my thinking straight, to be really happy again, to get back that which I have lost. You see, Brother Kimball, I grew up in the Church clean and with never a doubt. I was active, faithful, believing. My trust was complete. I felt secure in my faith, never questioning seriously the truth. It was as though my bark of life were in a safe harbor, securely tied with heavy cable to docks which were immovable. My parents and my Church leaders gave me anchor to hold me safe. Oh, if I could only have again that sweet spirit of tranquility and peace and sureness!"

Then he told me of the storms that had engulfed him. He had fought a war. There were horrors in the battles; there were temptations in the camps. At eighteen he had been surrounded suddenly by all the accumulated sins of the world. The pressure was crushing. For two years he had been hearing vile and vulgar speech and the name of God desecrated by constant use. He told how well-meaning entertainers had come to the camps but had sung for them sexy songs, told them ribald jokes, and had acted to satisfy the coarse, the crude, and vulgar. He had seen motion pictures in which smoking was universal, drinking was approved as smart and proper, immorality was condoned, and broken homes and infidelity in marriage were common; he had spent his leisure hours in cities near the camps and had been accosted by women of the streets. And he had come to wonder! He had attended a class in his ward and had heard a discussion on the mysteries. Subjects were debated on which there was little recorded revelation and on which there were conflicting opinions, and he had heard criticism of Church leaders, of Church policies, and of Church doctrines, and he wondered! He had read a book, the author of which was one of rich endowments, of much learning, and of considerable prestige. The things which our youth had always accepted were ridiculed. Logic was used; rationalizing was done; corrupt writers of a bygone day were quoted; the supernatural was explained away; the revelations were said to be man's wisdom; prophets were demoted to the status of laymen; and even Gods were dethroned and made a creation of man. All this in strict denial and total destruction of the basic things which had always been his life—and he continued to wonder. He had gone to school when the war was over, under the G.I. Bill of Rights. Here he had been further confused. There was no personal God, he was told, but God was a figment of the imagination, a creation of intellectual man. And God, being a creation of man could not help him, but man was alone to work out his own destiny. He was led to believe that religion was for only the simple and gullible. He found that in the schools:

Atheism may be taught our children, but not the word of God, not the Bible, not the Prophets, not the Apostles. Karl Marx is legal in the schools, but not Isaiah, or St. Mark. They suffer from Bible affiliation. (George E. Sokolsky, Atheism by Law.)

And his props had been moved from under him. His light-house was destroyed: his anchor broken loose; his harbor blasted. His bark was at sea in a storm without anchor, sail, or rudder; and with a pilot who had lost his compass and knew not his way. His heaven was clouded, and his stars were hidden. His lights were all but extinguished, and his vision dimmed. And he said again: "Oh, if I could only get back what I have lost of peace, of hope, of virtue, of faith! I had hoped that a mission might dispel the fog and mists; prove my repentance; build back my faith in sacred things and return to me the testimony I once had with all its peace, security, and happiness. I had hoped I might repair my bark and get it in full control and steer it again into calm waters and safe harbors."

REDEEMER'S VIEW OF OFFENDERS

And as I felt the sincerity of this young man struggling for a foothold, for a foundation, for something to which to cling, there came these words of the Redeemer into my memory:

And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. (Mark 9:42.)

And the words of the Lord came again:

But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. (Matt. 23:13.)

Not all scribes and Pharisees lived anciently. There are today wreckers as well as builders among men and in nature. In the Church library there are more than 1,700 books and pamphlets of a defamatory character. The books are dead. They are seldom consulted. They can be purchased from secondhand bookstores at low cost. The authors likewise are dead. They flickered for a moment and went out, dying of their own corruption, after having polluted the minds of a few. They went into the discard while the cause they fought went steadily on. Simon Peter warned us:

... there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring unto themselves swift destruction. (II Peter 2:1.)

The Lord said:

Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: the fulness of the scriptures; ye enter not in yourselves, into the kingdom and those who were entering in ye hindered. (See Luke 11:52; Revised.)

TEACHERS TO BE DIRECTED BY THE SPIRIT

Apparently there were in the early church those who taught for doctrines the sophistries of men. There are those today who seem to take pride in disagreeing with the orthodox teachings of the Church and who present their own opinions which are at variance with the revealed truth. Some may be partially innocent in the matter; others are feeding their own egotism; and some seem to be deliberate. Men may think as they please, but they have no right to impose upon others their unorthodox views. Such persons should realize that their own souls are in jeopardy. The Lord said to us through the Prophet Joseph:

. . . teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel.

And they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit.

. . . And if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. . . (D. & C. 42:12-14. Italics speaker's.)

OBJECTIVE TO BUILD FAITH

The great objective of all our work is to build character and increase faith in the lives of those whom we serve. If one cannot accept and teach the program of the Church in an orthodox way without reservations, he should not teach. It would be the part of honor to resign his position. Not only would he be dishonest and deceitful, but he is also actually under condemnation, for the Savior said that it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he be cast into the sea than that he should lead astray doctrinally or betray the cause or give offense, destroying the faith of one of "these little ones" who believe in him. And remember that this means not only the small children, it includes even adults who believe and trust in God.

Man is like the volcano which in a few weeks can devastate the countryside, wreck cities, and smother human lives. And the human destructionist can likewise inject into other human lives in a short time the doubt and skepticism which can mean total loss of faith. It may take centuries for the other forces of nature to pulverize the lava around a volcano so that it may eventually again give life to plants and animals, and just as surely the damage to faith of an individual done by an iconoclast, whether deliberate or not, may take years or ages of rebuilding, if it is ever fully restored.

The Savior also said:

Monday, April 5

Second Day

And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. (Matt. 10:28.)

In our own society, the murderer who kills the body is hunted, imprisoned, and executed, but the character who kills the soul by implanting doubt and shattering faith is permitted not only to go free but also is often retained in high places. The body which is killed will rise again in the resurrection with little damage to its eternal welfare, but he whose faith has been shattered may suffer long ages before complete restoration of spiritual stature can be had, if at all. And Jesus said:

Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! (Matt. 18:7.)

Far better to take from a man his flocks or herds, his lands or wealth, even his sight or limbs, than to be responsible for the loss of his faith. The Son of God put it this way:

Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt and maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.

And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire. (Matt. 18:8-9.)

And so we admonish the leaders in stakes, wards, and missions to be ever vigilant to see that no incorrect doctrines are promulgated in their classes or congregations. Wolves will come in sheep's clothing and will deceive the very elect, if that were possible. And we warn again those who write or preach or otherwise teach subversive doctrines, that their punishment is sure for their "worm dieth not."

And like the rich man who despised the beggar Lazarus, they will eventually come to a realization of the statement of the Lord Jesus Christ:

And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed. (Luke 16:26.)

The Lord bless you, my brothers and sisters. May we all, like the Nile River, build and nourish, strengthen and fortify, rather than be like the volcano which brings only death and desolation and destruction, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus will sing: "If Ye Love Me, Keep My Commandments," by Harker.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Fred H. Peck, Jr. of the Pioneer Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 7:00 o'clock this evening, when in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held. This building, judging from experiences recently, is not adequate to accommodate the Priesthood, and so we cannot invite our sisters. It is not fair for a few to come unless we let others also. This meeting, therefore, tonight is for the Priesthood of the Church. The session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning will be heard over the radio stations already announced.

The choir singing for this day's sessions of the conference has been by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

May we add to what has already been said a word of appreciation and commendation for the excellent service rendered by these students. Truly they have lifted us to inspirational heights, and we say to them, to their leader, and to all associated with them: "God bless you."

For the benefit of those who cannot get into the tabernacle, the Assembly Hall will be open tonight as it has been throughout the sessions of the conference.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang: "If Ye Love Me Keep My Commandments."

The benediction was pronounced by President Fred H. Peck, Jr., of the Pioneer Stake.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Tuesday morning, April 6, at 10:00.

The Tabernacle was crowded with people, and there was an overflow of people into the Assembly Hall on the Tabernacle grounds, where provision was made for those who gathered there to enjoy the services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle by means of amplifiers and television equipment.

The Ricks College Choir furnished the music for this session, with Elder John M. Anderson conducting. Alexander Schreiner was at the organ.

President George Albert Smith:

I think you are a courageous lot of people this morning to come out in this storm and fill the Tabernacle. I want to tell you that some of us are more than pleased to see this fine chorus from Idaho that has come to sing for us, here in their seats instead of trying to get in. They evidently know the country they live in, and so they are here on time.

This is the sixth session of the 118th Annual Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this morning all of the General Authorities except Elder Stephen L Richards, who is returning from a tour of the South American Missions, Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific Missions, Elder Thomas E. McKay, who is convalescing from a minor operation, and Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission.

This service will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The choir singing during today's sessions will be by the Ricks College Choir, with Elder John M. Anderson conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. Of course, you all know where the Ricks College Choir comes from.

KSL has set up for us a television installation which will enable those in the Assembly Hall to see as well as hear the speakers and the choirs that sing for us. The television pictures will not be all that we hope they will become some day, but they will be sufficiently good to be a great help to those who are seated in the Assembly Hall.

I would like also to call attention to the fact that ordinarily these grounds are beautiful for this particular conference, and they have been until the snow covered them. Brother Irvin Nelson who has charge of the grounds takes care of them and makes this place a delightful place for people to come and enjoy the Tabernacle grounds. We would like these brethren who look after these grounds to know that we appreciate them.

We will begin the morning services by the Choir singing "God So Loved the World," from "The Crucifixion," by Stainer.

The opening prayer will be offered by President E. Vaughn Abbott, of the Reno Stake, Reno, Nevada.

---

The Choir sang: "God So Loved the World."

Elder E. Vaughn Abbott, President of the Reno Stake, offered the opening prayer.

Singing by the Choir, "But the Lord Is Mindful of His Own," from "St. Paul," by Mendelssohn.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.First Counselor in the First Presidency*

My brethren and sisters: Here are more statistics. I hope you get more pleasure out of hearing them than I get out of reading them. There is one situation, however, and a very important one, that I should like to call to your attention, and that is that the figures are all in the black. There are none in the red.

Before reading the annual financial statement, we may note a few preliminary matters, some by way of repetition of what has been said on like occasions heretofore.

REVELATION AT FISHING RIVER

At Fishing River, Missouri, June 22, 1834, the Lord declared that 'the commandments which he had given concerning Zion and her law should be executed and fulfilled after Zion's redemption.' (D. & C. 105:34.) This suspended the operation of the United Order in Zion—i.e., Missouri. The Order continued for a time thereafter in Kirtland, but was later discontinued there.

In the years immediately following there was no organized plan for meeting the money needs of the Church, and the financial situation became increasingly serious.

THE LAW OF TITHING

In July of 1838 (four years after the Fishing River revelation) the Prophet was again in Missouri, at Far West. On the eighth of the month, the Prophet, urged by the serious financial needs of the Church, went to the Lord, enquiring:

O Lord! Show unto thy servant how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing. (D.H.C. 3:44.)

The Lord answered with two revelations—the first giving the law of tithing (D. & C. 119), and the other fixing the order of its distribution. (D. & C. 120.)

COUNCIL ON THE DISTRIBUTION OF TITHES

Pursuant to these revelations, and as explained at recent conferences, the Church has a Council on the Distribution of Tithes, made up of the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric. This Council considers the proposed budget of the Church, which is itemized under general headings, and then approves and authorizes such expenditures as it deems proper.

A subcommittee of this Council on the Distribution of Tithes then makes the detailed appropriations from the sums approved and authorized by the Council. This subcommittee is known as the Committee on Expenditures, and is made up of the First Presidency, three members of the Council of the Twelve, and the Presiding

Bishopric. A Church Building Committee acts under the direction of the Committee on Expenditures. The Financial Secretary to the First Presidency acts as the secretary of the Committee on Expenditures.

The budget authorized by the Council on the Distribution of Tithes is made up of two parts:

1. The regular approved authorizations for the various items covered by the budget, in the amounts estimated as necessary to carry on the work of the Church for each item of expenditure; and

2. A contingent reserve out of which can be met any unusual expenditures not provided for in the budget, either as to budget items or as to special or unforeseen expenditures. This contingent reserve is likewise spent under the authorization of the Committee on Expenditures. In 1947 the reserve set up was a little over eight percent of the total budget appropriations from the general funds of the Church; this year (1948 budget) this reserve equals about five percent of the itemized budget. Last year the reserve was more than ample to cover the supplementary appropriations. It is believed the reserve for this year will be likewise sufficient.

All unexpended appropriations lapse with the end of the fiscal year and are returned to and are absorbed into the general funds of the Church, subject to appropriation therefrom as are other like Church funds.

EXPENDITURES OF THE CHURCH

The expenditures of the Church are increasing at what seems to me to be a disquieting rate. For the ten years 1936 to 1945, both inclusive, the average expenditure from our general Church funds was just under $5,000,000 annually. As we reported to you at the last April conference, the expenditures for 1946 equaled $6,890,000 from general Church funds, and, including all other cash expenditures made by the people on various accounts, the expenditures amounted in total to $12,310,000. As we shall see, expenditures for 1947 were $11,263,000 out of general Church funds (or $4,373,000 more than in 1946,) while the total cash expenditures, general funds, plus non-budget funds contributed by the people, were $18,919,000 (or $6,609,000 more than 1946). The total cash expenditures, including budget and nonbudget items for 1948 are put at over $20,000,000.

I may observe that we owe no money. We shall not have to borrow any money to meet our budget. But in my own view, we must all watch more carefully our spending.

As individuals our standard has become, not our need, nor our comfort only, but our luxury. Many of us are not yet willing to bring ourselves under control and to quit spending not only all of our savings, but also all we are making, and in addition, running in debt on instalment buying. Our young people, particularly our boys returned from the service, are being inveigled into running debts that, in most cases, will take all their surplus (if they have any) for the next ten to twenty years, and under circumstances and conditions that will cause them to lose everything they have put into their ventures, if there should come to them any incapacitating illness, or accident, or if death came, or if the hard times should come that so many predict and that some fear are even now beginning.

DANGER OF INFLATION

Unemployment is increasing, and if it continues it could become serious. In that event, if we shall follow the pattern other countries have followed, we must not be too surprised if the people, accustomed over the last few years to a certain standard of living and not having money enough to buy the things that will enable them to continue that standard of living, raise the cry that there is not enough money. In other countries when this cry has become sufficiently insistent and from sufficiently large numbers, they have started the printing presses going to print money, always under the delusion that the presumed restrictions and safeguards which are then provided, would enable the stopping of the money flood before it becomes dangerous. But again, if the pattern of other countries worked out here, it would not be possible to stop this flood of paper money once it was well started, and then would follow the inflation that ruins not the very wealthy, but those of moderate means and those with means that are less than moderate. In other words, the poor people are the ones who always suffer most in such financial debacles. Our people should remember the lessons of history, even very recent history, and do all they can to avoid this catastrophe, for such it has always proved to be in the past.

MODERATION IN EXPENDITURES

As to Church spending, for my own part, I should like to urge the people to cease building cathedrals for ward meetinghouses, and to stop furnishing them as if they were palaces. I think I should say to you that the First Presidency is not urging the building of these expensive, luxurious buildings; indeed, they consider that often the load placed upon the people thereby is both unfair and unwise; they feel we could well be much more moderate in many of our expenditures.

The Lord still does not look at the magnificence of our meetinghouses, nor at the luxury of the pews, nor at our expensive carpeting, nor at our overstuffed furniture and the mahogany chairs of the foyer and of the high council and other rooms. The Lord still looks at the humble heart and the contrite spirit of his children, and as he said when he walked with his apostles in the Holy Land:

... where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. (Matthew 18:20.)

It is not the place in which we meet, but the spirit in which we gather together that concerns the Lord. Not pride but humility brings him into our midst.

I will now read the financial statement:

1947 Financial and Statistical Report

CHURCH DISBURSEMENTS—1947 PART I—CHURCH BUDGET CASH EXPENDITURES FROM GENERAL CHURCH FUNDS, BOTH TITHING AND NON-TITHING INCOMES

Total cash budget expenditures for 1947 ..... 11,263,344.00

Excess of appropriations over expenditures for 1947 ..... $ 1,481,429.00

As a preliminary statement, I should like to say this regarding salaries: The Church has not and does not now pay extravagant salaries. We have tried to accommodate the salaries of those who draw compensation from the Church to the "Little Steel formula." In addition to that we have made certain adjustments in particular cases to meet the needs of the individual. We have tried to see that no one suffered. We have been unable to relieve them of the necessity of living modestly and frugally, but we do have in mind their needs, that none shall suffer.

In addition to the distribution reported above, there were sent from storehouse stock to Saints in foreign missions 545,504 quarts canned produce, 184,072 pounds of meat and lard, 650,817 pounds of grain products and 44,391 bars of soap and miscellaneous items.

Group Canning

The following canning was done at welfare canneries for their own use by 632 groups, consisting of 12,345 people:

Fruits and vegetables .....	715,785 quarts	(942,233 cans)
Meat and fish .....	27,620 pounds	( 22,709 cans)
		<hr/> 964,942 cans

Field Activities:

Field activities carried on in the production of the 1947 welfare budget include 818 crop projects, cultivating 4,758 acres of land; 227 livestock projects, which produced 1,736 head of livestock, 5,511 chickens, 282 rabbits, and 24 stands of bees.

Eighty-two thousand five hundred twenty-five man days of work were donated on these projects, and 11,552 man days of work were donated in operating storehouses and processing plants.

For purposes other than the production of the budget for the bishops' storehouse program, there were 140 crop projects, 49 livestock projects, and 55 manufacturing projects operated during 1947. These agricultural projects utilized 978 acres of land and produced 128 head of livestock.

Assistance Rendered:

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the bishops' storehouse program each year since 1938. In 1947, there were 24,458 persons so assisted in the United States. We also sent to Europe enough food and clothing to help a larger number, or over 50,000 persons all told in 1947.

During this period and outside of Europe more than 1,178 families have been helped to become self-supporting; 9,626 persons have been assisted in other ways; and 1,744 construction projects have been completed in addition to the construction for the bishops' storehouse program.

Welfare Meetings Being Held:

Of the 163 stakes reporting, 146 hold stake welfare committee meetings monthly or oftener, and 17 hold them less frequently. Of the 1,139 wards reporting, 247 hold weekly ward welfare committee meetings; 803 hold them less frequently; and 89 are not holding any meetings.

Persons Relinquishing Government Relief:

During the past five years 2,198 persons have relinquished their position on government relief rolls; of this number 948 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church, nor so far as known from any other gratuitous source, 810 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 440 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Relief Supplies Sent to Foreign Missions:

Relief supplies sent to European and Pacific missions through the welfare program, as of March 15, 1948. (Shipments commenced October 29, 1945.)

Eleven pound parcel post packages:

To European missions	8,319	parcels of clothing
	6,726	parcels of bedding
	31	parcels of food
To Pacific missions	556	parcels of clothing
	386	parcels of food
Total	16,018

A total of 16,018 parcels which together with 1,059 quilts and blankets shipped by the United States missions to Holland and Germany and 5,747 pounds of food shipped to the Tahitian mission, is the equivalent of seven freight carloads, valued at $88,730.00.

In addition to the foregoing, shipped by parcel post, we sent to Europe in bulk shipments:

	33	cars of clothing
	55	cars of food
A total of	88

The value of these 88 cars was $846,964.00.

This makes a total of 95 freight carloads, valued at $935,694.00 shipped at a cost for cartons, transportation, insurance, and handling, and purchase of some items not available from storehouses, of $345,319.47. A total of $1,281,013.47.

The materials sent to foreign missions went to the Church members in Austria, Belgium, Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Japan, China, and Tahiti.

In addition to the above, the General Church Welfare Committee shipped 6,323 pounds of clothing to the Indians in the Navajo-Zuni Mission.

As President Smith told you yesterday, we have now shipped as of this date one hundred carloads of food and clothing to Europe. Their needs are still great, but there are some observers returning from Europe who say that they are eighty percent of their normal production. It may be that notwithstanding the individual cases that we hear of, of great hardship, yet they over there may have acquired some of our habits and are glad to take all they can get. Please do not misunderstand me. The suffering is great, and we must not discontinue our efforts. But it is a relief to know that possibly the whole situation is not so bad as we might expect.

LORD'S ADMONITION TO PARENTS

Now I would like to read to you a little scripture to conclude with. In November of 1831 the Lord said:

"Again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents." (D. & C. 68:25.)

Furthermore in the same revelation:

"Now, I the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness." (Ibid., 68:31.)

The First Presidency of the Church was organized March 18, 1833. On May 6 the Lord gave a revelation regarding the conditions with reference to the children, and he began with the First Presidency, and I will read what he said:

"But verily I say unto you my servant Frederick G. Williams, you have continued under this condemnation;

"You have not taught your children light and truth, according to the commandments; and that wicked one hath power, as yet, over you, and this is the cause of your affliction.

"And now a commandment I give unto you—if you will be delivered you shall set in order your own house, for there are many things that are not right in your house.

"Verily, I say unto my servant Sidney Rigdon, that in some things he hath not kept the commandments concerning his children; therefore, first set in order thy house."

And then to the Prophet he says:

"Verily, I say unto my servant Joseph, Jun., or in other words, I will call you friends, for you are my friends, and ye shall have an inheritance with me—

"I called you servants for the world's sake, and ye are their servants for my sake—

"And now, verily I say unto Joseph Smith, Jun.—You have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord;

"Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place.

"What I say unto one I say unto all; pray always lest that wicked one have power in you and remove you out of your place."

And then he goes to the bishop:

"My servant Newel K. Whitney also, a bishop of my church, hath need to be chastened, and set in order his family, and see that they are more diligent and concerned at home, and pray always, or they shall be removed out of their place." (Ibid., 93:41-50.)

PRESENT NEED FOR PARENTAL GUIDANCE

As has already been said in this conference, these principles are as applicable today as they were at the time when the Lord gave them. Some of us sometimes think that these messages addressed to particular persons in the Doctrine and Covenants during the early days, are not applicable to us. I have always felt and believed that out of every personal revelation given in those early days, and given today, there is a lesson to the whole Church.

You parents need to instruct your children, to admonish them, and then yourselves so to live that they may emulate your example. I do not know whether you have thought of this fact, and fact I think it is: we have become so fearful about our children that discipline has too largely disappeared. The youth of today are very largely by their insistent requests, sometimes demands, directing the course of action of the whole world. We are so keen and anxious, as we should be, to keep them near us so that they will live properly that we are almost giving them everything they ask without any thought as to whether it is wise or unwise.

I appeal to you parents, take nothing for granted about your children. The great bulk of them, of course, are good but some of us do not know when they begin to go away from the path of truth and righteousness. Be watchful every day and hour. Never relax your care, your solicitude. Rule kindly in the spirit of the gospel and the spirit of the priesthood, but rule, if you wish your children to follow the right path. Now I am not talking about cruelty; I am not talking about whippings. Those are the recourses and the last recourses, of the unrighteous man. I am talking to you about loving them, bringing them to you, but always giving them counsel.

May God always be with us and help us to do his service and increase our testimonies; bring to us a testimony that Joseph Smith was the instrument through whom God restored the gospel and the priesthood. If that were not true, we would have nothing. It is true, and you should so teach the youth. Do not be fearful to tell the facts about your religion. Teach Jesus the Christ, the Son of God; teach Joseph the Prophet; teach God as a being who loves his children; and by your own lives and examples see that your children know that that is what you believe. And you teachers, see that your students know that is what you believe.

God bless us, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency has just read the financial statement and a summary of the Church's Welfare activity, and also given us some advice and counsel and has borne his testimony to us. I trust we can retain as far as possible the things we have heard.

We will now have a report from Elder Orval W. Adams, which is the report of the Church Auditing Committee.

REPORT OF CHURCH AUDITING COMMITTEE

Salt Lake City, Utah
March 30, 1948

President George Albert Smith and Counselors

Dear Brethren:

Your Committee has reviewed the Annual Financial Report of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1947. Meticulous care has been taken from year to year in the preparation of a comprehensive budget system, providing control to safeguard the expenditure of the funds of the Church, which funds are being conserved with great care and expended only after thoughtful and careful consideration. The review of the records discloses the Church to be in strong financial condition and free from debt.

Respectfully submitted

ELDER THOMAS D. REES

Former President of the Australian Mission

A few months ago Sister Rees and I bade goodbye to our fine saints in far-away sunny Australia. It was a sad day for us to leave that wonderful country and our fine people. The Australian people are a fine, progressive people, dynamic in their ways. Just before our leaving, out of the clouds that bank along the coast came a clipper from over the Pacific Sea and as it landed there stepped from it Elder Matthew Cowley of the Quorum of the Twelve. With him was President Charles B. Richmond and Sister Richmond. To the Australian Saints and to the mission the coming of Elder Cowley is a great event in the life and the history of that mission. They had known that he had been appointed to preside over the Pacific Missions and that Australia, that great island continent was a part of his mission.

Visits from the First Presidency or the Quorum of the Twelve had been far between. Ten years ago President George Albert Smith and the late Rufus K. Hardy came into that mission. The people were thrilled to meet one of the Quorum of the Twelve, and now they are thrilled to say, "We know the president of our great Church," and they rejoice and are happy to say that they have met him and spoken to him and heard him bless them. This, too, was a wonderful event. Eighteen years previous to that time Elder David O. McKay and Brother Hugh J. Cannon came to that great mission to visit, to see and meet those people, and it is one of the events that they still love to speak about. When you speak of that event to those who met them their eyes sparkle and their faces light up, and they say, "I have seen a servant of God and heard him speak." It is a wonderful thing now that they have President Cowley to visit them often. They feel that they are closer to the head here in Zion and they are happy. I want to say too, that the missionaries in those far-flung islands are happy, and the mission presidents that are so far away from each other will be glad to see him and to have his counsel about things pertaining to their great missions. When Elder Cowley met with the saints they gave him receptions, they came to the conferences, they were thrilled and happy. He could not linger long in one place.

He soon was again in the air toward the north of Australia, to the great State of Queensland where we have a few branches of our saints. Queensland is over sixteen hundred miles long and a thousand miles wide and in it we have only two or three and sometimes six elders. Along the coast of the Pacific from the capitol of Brisbane to the far north there are many beautiful cities, some as large as Logan or Idaho Falls, where we have never yet had our elders. The people of Australia treat our elders with respect and kindness wherever they go.

Then Elder Cowley again left headquarters to visit West Australia and by airplane he traveled twenty-seven hundred miles to that section where we have a little branch of saints. It is just about as far from headquarters to that branch as it is from our headquarters here to Hawaii. There are something over a half a million people on the west coast of Australia that seem quite isolated from the eastern coast, separated by a vast country. These people are all of English extraction and sometimes I think they are more English than England because they have not been on the highways of the world, nor the tourists have not visited them. We have a branch there, a fine little chapel. That is a great country, a fine people. I hope that in some future day we will have a mission there. They are entitled to it.

Seventeen hundred miles along the southern coast is the City of Adelaide, the closest of any note, to the west. The City of Adelaide also has in it and around it over a half million people. We have a branch in Adelaide which is twelve hundred miles from headquarters. Five hundred miles farther to the east we have the City of Melbourne in the State of Victoria. Melbourne has over a million people, more people than in the States of Utah and Idaho put together. We have a branch there with a few elders. Crossing the vast strait to the south is Tasmania, an island that has two hundred fifty thousand people, all white people. There is not a native, nor another race represented there. We have three branches there, and we are happy when we can have two to six elders there.

Then, coming back, Brother Cowley flew into Sidney and he said, "President Rees, this is not one big mission. This is six big missions, any one of which is as big, as to territory, as we have in America." I hope some day to see a mission in South Australia in the City of Melbourne, a great country of fine people. They, too, honor and respect our elders. Seldom is a door closed upon the face of one of our missionaries and those missionaries go out to that great country from headquarters. It is one of the outstanding things to see two of the elders called to cross that continent, and settle in the City of Perth, and be left on their own to preach the gospel, and they have never faltered. They know that God has spoken to a prophet in this day and with that testimony that the words of the Lord Jesus Christ to this Church should supersede all the opinions of men spoken or written, and that is the testimony of these humble elders. It is often only possible for the President of the Mission to reach that far-off section once a year.

There are nearly eight million people in Australia, nearly ninety-eight percent of whom came from the British Isles. There are many people there that belong to the House of Israel. Those elders have faith, as they go forth, that would astonish you. When they realize that they are ambassadors of God our Eternal Father, they speak without fear and bear their testimony in serious language so that people stop and listen. They administer to the sick, and do the many things that are handled in the Church.

Now I am constrained to relate one little circumstance of the many faith-promoting incidents that occurred. On one occasion I went into a big hospital where one of our sisters was seriously sick. I was called in by the physician attending her. He had said, "I would like to consult with you upon this case." I saw the patient. She was very, very sick. Her lips were blue. Her arms and limbs were swollen. Her pulse was very, very weak, and the doctor said, "I would like you to come with me in consultation." I went with him. He brought the record and he said, "She is dying. She cannot live." After talking with him for a time he said, "Go back now as the minister of your church and inform her family—that she is dying."

When I went back the family was smiling, and I said in astonishment, "What has happened?" Two of our elders had come, they said, two young men that had been in the field just a short time, and laid their hands upon her head and said, "You shall live." I stood there with the doctor's chart in my hand indicating that she should die, and from the standpoint of the medical world, I too, declared she would die. I was so astonished and overcome I was wondering whether those elders had been carried away by their sympathy. I couldn't speak. I walked away. The next day I came back, the sister opened her eyes and said, "I am going to get well. The Lord has promised that to me through the elders."

Brothers and sisters, the faith of those elders, though they are young, is the most powerful that I ever witnessed. As we travel up and down the highways and byways of that great country we are thrilled with the privilege of living the mission life, the richness of which can be found in no other way.

I bear you my testimony that I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ. I bear you my testimony that I know that they who preside at the head of this Church are the prophets of God our Eternal Father, I know it as well as I know I live. I give this testimony feeling that it is my duty to declare it wherever I am called upon to teach the word of the Lord. President George Albert Smith said to those elders, "When you preach before the people, preach the word of God. There is so much that is beautiful in this Church that we need not speak with disrespect or tear down the religion of any other people."

I am happy to be home with you again, God bless us, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to President Thomas D. Rees, who has filled two missions in Australia, and he has been telling you about that island continent the size of United States of America, and about your sons and some of your daughters who work there in the interest of the Church.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I need your assistance and the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord. I would like to read a little from the book of Malachi, whom I may designate as a prophet of the restoration, for he has a great deal to say about the restoration.

In the third chapter we read:

A PROPHET OF THE RESTORATION

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. (Malachi 3:1.)

Throughout the world the idea prevails that this prediction has reference to the first coming of Christ in the days of his ministry, but this is not the case, it has reference to his second coming, for the predictions which follow were not fulfilled at his first coming, but are to be fulfilled when he comes in power, at and preceding the second coming. We read:

But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap:

And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.

And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. (Ibid., 3:2-5.)

Now we understand, and the whole world could understand, that the offering of Judah in the days of Christ's ministry, was not pleasant. Levi was not at that time cleansed, but Judah and Levi turned away from the Lord. It is in the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times that these things are to be fulfilled.

In the fourth chapter Malachi speaks again of the coming of the Son of God, in these words:

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. (Ibid., 4:1.)

This will happen when our Savior comes in his glory to take vengeance upon the ungodly and take his place as King of kings and Lord of lords. Then this prophet Malachi goes on to say that before that day can come, which will be terrible, Elijah the prophet was to come, and these are the words as we have them in this King James translation:

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord:

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. (Ibid., 4:5-6.)

GREAT AND DREADFUL DAY NEAR

The whole world ought to take notice of this prediction, but the world does not understand it. Surely the signs of the times point to the fact that the great and dreadful day is near, even at our doors. The fig tree, figuratively, is putting forth her leaves. The turmoil, trouble, the war and bloodshed that we have seen, and which we still see, all point to the fact that this day for the coming of the Son of God is near. Therefore, Elijah the prophet is due to appear. I am sure you agree with me that he has already appeared, for we have it so recorded by the testimony of witnesses. It was on the third day of April, 1836, when he came to the Kirtland Temple, to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and conferred upon them the keys of his priesthood and told them that he came in fulfillment of the prophecy of Malachi, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to their fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse.

Therefore, the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands; and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors. (D. & C. 110:16.)

RESTORATION BY ELIJAH

Well, of course, the world does not believe that Elijah came to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery; but they have no record in the world that he has come to anyone else. There has been no appearance and no claim of an appearance, and a restoration of his priesthood to anyone else. May we not, then, with perfect consistency, put forth the claim that he did come on that occasion and that he did restore his keys of authority to these two humble men, which turned the hearts of the fathers to their children and the hearts of the children to their fathers? No one else has ever disputed this claim by the giving of another claim. And why could he not come to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery as well as to anybody else? I testify to you that he did come, and if the world want to know it also, they can. We have an abundance of evidence that this story is true. If Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had lied, it would have been impossible for them to have turned the hearts of the fathers to their children and the hearts of the children to their fathers. Surely, they would not have any power to do that. It is true that following the declaration by them that Elijah did come, the hearts of the children commenced to turn to their dead fathers. There is strong presumptive evidence that this was because these keys were restored. This is a demonstrative fact, that the hearts of children have turned to their fathers.

ACTIVITY IN GENEALOGY

I have a little information here that I think is important, and this coming of Elijah is one of the vital things in the history of this world. It is vital to me and to you and to every other soul upon the face of the earth. Before the days of the coming of Elijah in 1836, there was no endeavor of any import to search the records of the dead. What was done, here and there, was usually where some estate was involved. The people were not turning their hearts to their dead fathers. They were not searching the records. They were not compiling them. There were no organizations or societies on the face of the earth, as far as I can learn, gathering records of the dead, before the year 1836. In 1837, however, one year later, Great Britain passed laws providing for and compelling the preservation of records of the dead. In the year 1844, the New England Historical and Genealogical Society was organized in Boston, and I think this was the first organization of the kind in the world. In 1869, the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society in the city of New York was organized. Then followed rapidly other societies up and down the Atlantic coast of the United States, from Maine to Georgia. Then these organizations began to spread inland, and this spirit took hold of the people in other parts. I have visited some of these societies in various parts of the United States, and they have extended now from the east to the Pacific Ocean. In Great Britain, genealogical societies have been organized in practically every county in that land and in Scotland. These records have been kept and filed also in other countries in Europe, the countries from which the Latter-day Saints have come. The spirit has taken hold of the people, not only in the Church, but also of many who are not of the Church, and they, too, are searching the records, and compiling them, of the dead.

PREVALENCE OF GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH

In the year 1902, I had the privilege of going east on a genealogical mission. My father wanted me to go because there was some confusion in our family line in those early days, which he wanted me to straighten out. I went back to Essex County, Massachusetts. At Topsfield, where our ancestors first settled in the United States, I became acquainted with Mr. George Francis Dow, a very prominent gentleman of Massachusetts. I told him the purpose of my visit to that part of the country. He invited me to his home. I asked him where I could find the best sources for information in my search. He said: "You do not have to go anywhere. I have all that information. I have compiled it." So he put in my hands this record, and I found it already prepared. He was working on many other lines also. While there I met a Mr. Perley, a prominent lawyer of Salem, Massachusetts. He likewise was engaged in genealogical research. I had a long conversation with him. He told me that he had undertaken a great work for the benefit of the descendants of people who settled in Essex County. "It is my ambition," he said, "if I can do it, to search out the records of every individual who came to Essex County before the year 1700. I said to him, "Mr. Perley, you have cut out for yourself a big work, haven't you?" He replied, "Yes, and I am afraid I'll never finish it." Then I said to him, "Why are you doing this work?" He thought a moment and looked rather puzzled and then replied, "I do not know why, but I got started, and I cannot stop." I said, "I can tell you why you are doing this and why you cannot stop, but if I did, you would not believe me and would laugh at me." "Oh," he said, "I don't know. If you can tell me, I am sure I will be interested." Then I told him of the prophecy concerning Elijah and the fulfilment of this promise to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, April 3, 1836, in the Kirtland Temple, and how this spirit of research had taken hold of many people, and they had turned their hearts to the seeking after the dead in fulfilment of this great promise which was to come before the second coming, so that the earth would not be smitten with a curse. Now the children were turning their hearts toward their fathers, and we were doing the ordinance work for the dead that they might find redemption and have the privilege of coming into the kingdom of God, although dead.

When I got through, he laughed and said, "It is a very pretty story, but I do not believe it." Yet he admitted that there was something compelling him to carry on this research, and he could not stop. I have met a great many others who also started and could not stop, men and women who are not members of the Church. So we find today thousands of men and women searching out the records of the dead. They do not know why, but it is so that we can obtain these compiled records and go into our temples and do the work for our dead.

President Clark told us that the Church is putting forth considerable sums for the purpose of collecting records in Europe that we might search out our ancestors and go into the house of the Lord and do work for them.

Now here is something which I think is interesting. In 1935, Mr. T. B. Thompson published A Catalogue of British Family Histories. It included the titles and years of publication of some two thousand seventy-one families and was supposed to be a complete list of all such published records up to that date. Here are his figures from the date of the invention of printing:

From 1450 to 1600, were published 2 family histories.
 From 1600 to 1700, were published 18 family histories.
 From 1700 to 1800, were published 72 family histories.
 From 1800 to 1836, when Elijah came, were published 100 family histories.
 From 1837 to 1935, were published 1,879 family histories.

THE KEYS OF SEALING POWER

These were records in Europe, and since the year 1836, there have been published in Great Britain and the United States thousands of records of the dead. I have some other things I would like to present but cannot at this time. Let me call your attention to the fact, however, my good brethren and sisters, that Elijah restored to this Church and, if they would receive it, to the world, the keys of the sealing power; and that sealing power puts the stamp of approval upon every ordinance that is done in this Church and more particularly those that are performed in the temples of the Lord. Through that restoration each of you, my brethren, has the privilege, of going into this house or one of the other temples (I believe most of you have done so) to have your wife sealed to you for time and for all eternity, and your children sealed to you also, or better, have them born under that covenant. What a glorious privilege it is to know that the family organization will remain intact. It is not destroyed. It does not come to an end wherein we have complied with the divine law by virtue of the keys which are held by the President of the Church. We may go into the house of the Lord and do these things and be baptized for our dead, those who have died, the scriptures say, and we have heard it repeated at this conference, who died without the knowledge of the gospel. Our duty is to search out our dead, and I am very grateful that the Church is helping us in these matters by securing the records of the dead that we might have them, and our duty is to perform the necessary ordinances in their behalf in our temples.

STATEMENT OF PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH

The Prophet Joseph Smith has said:

The Bible says, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to their children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

Now the word turn here should be translated bind or seal. But what is the object of this important mission? or how is it to be fulfilled? The keys are to be delivered, the spirit of Elijah is to come, the Gospel to be established, the Saints of God gathered, Zion built up, and the Saints to come up as saviors on Mount Zion.

But how are they to become saviors on Mount Zion? By building their temples, erecting their baptismal fonts, and going forth and receiving all the ordinances, baptisms, confirmations, washings, anointings, ordinations and sealing powers upon their heads, in behalf of their progenitors who are dead, and redeem them that they may come forth in the first resurrection and be exalted to thrones of glory with them; and herein is the chain that binds the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, which fulfills the mission of Elijah. . . .

The Saints have not too much time to save and redeem their dead, and gather together their living relatives, that they may be saved also, before the earth will be smitten, and the consumption decreed falls upon the world.

I would advise all the Saints to go with their might and gather together all their living relatives to this place, that they may be sealed and saved, that they may be prepared against the day that the destroying angel goes forth: and if the whole Church should go to with all their might to save their dead, seal their posterity, and gather their living friends, and spend none of their time in behalf of the world, they would hardly get through before night would come, when no man can work; . . .

The question is frequently asked: "Can we not be saved without going through with all these ordinances, etc.?" I would answer, No, not the fullness of salvation. Jesus said, "There are many mansions in my Father's house, and I will go and prepare a place for you." House here named should have been translated kingdom; and any person who is exalted to the highest mansion has to abide a celestial law, and the whole law, too. (D.H.C. 6:183-184.)

I call your attention to these things. The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Ricks College Choir will now sing "O Savior of the World," by Goss.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Lewis R. Critchfield of the Cassia Stake, Oakley, Idaho, after which this conference will stand adjourned until two o'clock this afternoon.

The meeting this afternoon will be broadcast as already indicated this morning.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour of beginning the meeting.

The choir singing for this session of the conference has been by the Ricks College Choir with Elder John M. Anderson conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. They have certainly done a fine job, and we are glad they come from a country where it snows so they won't be discouraged with us.

The Ricks College Choir sang: "O Savior of the World," after which the benediction was pronounced by President Lewis R. Critchfield, of the Cassia Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 o'clock p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding general session of the Conference was held Tuesday, April 6, at 2:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the seventh and closing session of the 118th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Stephen L Richards, who is returning from a tour through the South American Missions; Elder Matthew Cowley, who is presiding over the Pacific Missions; Elder Thomas E. McKay who is convalescing from a minor operation, and Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Ricks College Choir with Elder John M. Anderson conducting, and with Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin this afternoon's service by the choir singing "Cherubim Song," by Bortniansky.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Douglas Q. Cannon of the Garfield Stake, Circleville, Utah.

---

The Ricks College Choir sang "Cherubim Song."

Elder Douglas Q. Cannon, President of the Garfield Stake offered the opening prayer.

Selection by the Ricks College Choir, "He Watching Over Israel," from "Elijah" by Mendelssohn.

President David O. McKay:

There is a change which must necessarily be made in the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association. For several months past Sister Lucy Grant Cannon has expressed the thought that wisdom would prompt her being given an honorable release as president of the Young Women's Association in the Church. Her husband, Brother George J. Cannon, has also consulted the First Presidency. There is nothing which Sister Cannon would not do or which Brother George J. would not do for the advancement of the Church, but the Lord, I am sure, does not want anyone to sacrifice his or her health. He wants us to live and devote the energy and strength which he has given us to the welfare of our loved ones as well as to the Church.

It is with reluctance that the First Presidency yield to the suggestion, that owing to her health and conditions at home, we relieve Sister Cannon of some of her arduous duties in the Church. In coming to this conclusion we but express your feelings and your knowledge when we say Sister Cannon is loyal, faithful by inheritance, by training, and by a life of devoted service. She has radiated cheerfulness throughout her life. She has rendered a service in teaching and expressed that teaching also by radiation from a sincere soul.

Thousands, I might say tens of thousands of young women and others in this Church, will bless her for the service she has given and for the encouragement rendered.

She has had two loyal, faithful counselors, women who have sustained her unitedly, and we commend them—all three of them—for the contribution they have given to this Church and particularly to this most important auxiliary organization, the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association.

It was thought that it would be well to release the presidency and the members of the board at this time and sustain others to succeed them, but June conference is approaching. The program is already well in hand, and it would be rather unfair to ask a new board to take charge and consummate that program. On the other hand, we should take some action so that those who succeed these sisters will have the experience between now and June of participating in the preparation of lessons for next year, the plan of which will be presented in the June conference.

We recommend therefore that the present board, Sister Cannon and her counselors and members of the board, continue until June, when they will be honorably released. In the meantime, we should like to ask you to sustain Sister Cannon's successor that she may, with your sustaining vote and the blessings of the Lord, have ample time to choose her counselors and members of the board who will succeed the present presidency and board. So we submit the following to you with that understanding:

That we sustain Sister Lucy Grant Cannon as President, Verna Wright Goddard as first counselor, and Lucy T. Andersen as second counselor, with all the members of the board as at present constituted, to serve until the June conference. All in favor please manifest it.

(This proposition was unanimously sustained by the uplifted hands of those present.)

Any opposed, by the same sign.

(There was no negative vote)

It is proposed that we sustain as Sister Cannon's successor as president of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Sister Bertha Stone Reeder, wife of President Wm. H. Reeder, who were recently in the presidency of the New England Mission.

All in favor of this proposal will please manifest it.

(All present signified their approval by raising their right hands.)

Opposed by the same sign.

(There were no opposing votes.)

The voting in all cases, has been unanimous in the affirmative.

President George Albert Smith:

I cannot resist the temptation to say that it is worth the trip from Los Angeles or New York or San Francisco to be in this house and see the voting for the General Authorities of the Church. As your hands go up it is a real picture. We appreciate the harmony and the unity with which these officers have all been sustained.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

It is with a prayer in my heart, my brethren and sisters, that I attempt, this afternoon, to express one or two thoughts.

THE PRE-EXISTENT STATE

This morning as we listened to that beautiful number, rendered in such an inspirational way by the choir of Ricks College, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," it took my mind back into the pre-existent state, when God our Eternal Father sat in counsel with the great and the mighty ones in an endeavor to evolve a plan whereby his children might come to the earth and have all the experiences of mortality, and at the same time, a plan which would permit them to return and dwell with him throughout the eternities to come. There were presented in that great council two plans; one by Lucifer, a son of the morning. His proposal was that all of the children of God should be saved and returned to him. But he would force salvation upon them, and for that achievement he was to have all of the honor and the glory. That plan was rejected and another son of God came forth in the spirit of, "Lord, here am I," proposing a plan whereby all spirits should have their free agency and where, through a gospel of love, a gospel which would bring them a knowledge and a testimony that God the Eternal Father loved them and because of his great love for them, they in turn would love and obey the Lord and thereby have the privilege of returning to his presence.

I am quite sure that when our Heavenly Father looked into that great multitude of spiritual faces, he knew that there were not any two of them alike, in personality, or in gifts or talents, and hence a plan had to be adopted which would fit all of these personalities and their talents. Hence, he accepted the plan of the Lord Jesus Christ; and then he so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son that whosoever believed in him should not perish but should have everlasting life.

ADVENT OF THE SON OF GOD

In the meridian of time the Son of God appeared among men, and he made it plain that he had come to serve God and to give God all the glory and the credit for his achievements, and said he,

For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. (John 6:38.)

He also taught the people that he had come as the living bread which came down from heaven.

... if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. (John 6:51.)

As we contemplate the ministry of the Savior, we will recall the time when, in the Garden of Gethsemane, he suffered spiritual and mental anguish in anticipation of the crucifixion that was just about to take place, and in that hour he called to his Father in heaven,

... if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. (Matt. 26:42.)

And the Savior was crucified. His bleeding and pierced body was taken down from the cross, consummating the plan of the great atonement, as Paul said,

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (I Cor. 15:22.)

THE FAITH OF ABRAHAM

There was another father and his son, Father Abraham, a man without guile, and who was privileged to walk and talk with divine beings. Abraham was an old man, a man ninety-nine years of age, and up to that time he had not been blessed with a son by his wife Sarah. Three heavenly messengers appeared to him and promised that he and Sarah in their declining years should have the blessing of a son. A son was born unto them, and he was named Isaac, becoming their most precious possession. Abraham heard the voice of the Lord calling and in response to the Lord said, "Behold, here I am," and the Lord said to him:

... Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. (Gen. 22:2.)

Abraham secured wood and a knife and requesting two young men to accompany him, made the journey to the base of the designated mountain, and there Abraham requested the two young men to remain behind, and taking Isaac by the hand pushed toward the summit. Arriving there, an altar was built, wood was placed upon it. The curiosity of the boy was aroused, and he asked his father, "Behold the fire and the wood; but where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" And Abraham said, "My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering."

Abraham's faith in God was so implicit and profound that, although in the moment of offering up his own son, he felt that God would provide a lamb for the sacrifice. Isaac was bound upon the altar. The arm of Abraham was raised to strike the fatal blow when he heard the voice of an angel calling to him from heaven and said, "Abraham, Abraham: and he said, Here am I. And he said, Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him; for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him, a ram caught in a thicket by his horns; and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son." (See Genesis 22.)

Abraham's faith in God was wholly justified, for while he was about to sacrifice his own son, God provided a ram. The obedience of Abraham in this incident, without a doubt, is one of the greatest examples of obedience in the history of the whole human family, and because of his great love for God and having implicit faith in God, God made him the father of all nations, promising him that his descendants would be as numerous as the sands of the seashore. God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, and Abraham so loved God that he was willing to sacrifice his son at the command of God.

APOSTASY FROM THE TRUTH

The law of sacrifice was ended upon the cross and a new era was inaugurated, the era of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ which would give men the opportunity to serve God in the spirit of love. After the crucifixion and the resurrection of the Savior, his apostles went forth and preached the gospel of the kingdom. Shortly after, they too gave their lives and disappeared; the Church's organization disintegrated; men substituted their own doctrines for those of the Christ; they changed the organization and the ordinances; and it was only a short time until the shadow of the great apostasy was upon the earth. For some two thousand years ecclesiastical and political tyranny dictated to men as to what kind of God they should worship and what kind of principles they should follow and obey. There were many of them who had the inherent blessing in their hearts, that of free agency, who refused to accept man-made gods and man-made doctrines, and consequently, the penalty was death. But the dawn of a new day was upon the horizon, the day when the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ should be restored, and in answer to the supplication of a humble boy in the woods of western New York, that same God who presided in the great spiritual council, and his Son, Jesus Christ, who had been crucified and resurrected stood before him. The Father introduced him, saying to the boy, "This is my Beloved Son, hear him!"

RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL

The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was restored in its fulness, and just one hundred and eighteen years ago, on this very day, the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ was officially organized. It has a complete organization, with a prophet of God standing at its head, twelve apostles, and the two priesthoods, and with every officer that is necessary to have it function as perfectly in behalf of the Lord's children as it did two thousand years ago.

The people joined the Church by the hundreds, those who had been seeking light and truth. The early members of this Church were driven from Kirtland to Independence, and from Independence to Nauvoo, and from Nauvoo to these promised valleys. Perhaps we shall never realize or know what they suffered or what they went through. In thinking of them, with your indulgence I would like to speak of my own grandfather. He caught the spirit of gathering in one of the far-off European countries, and made the long journey to the valley of the Great Salt Lake. Upon arriving here he stood on what is now Main Street, with just the clothes he had on his back, with one silver dollar in his pocket, and a pair of shoes that were about worn out, for he had made the long trek from the banks of the Mississippi to the valley of the Great Salt Lake afoot. He soon married; and going out to what is now the corner of Eighth East and South Temple, he built a mansion, a one-room dugout in the ground. Becoming somewhat prosperous, after two years they came up out of the ground and erected two rooms upon the surface. Here my father and other children were born. They were in the vale of poverty, but that mattered not. They had received the light and the truth of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. They felt it was not only a blessing for them, but a blessing also for their unborn posterity, even down to the fourth and fifth generations. Were they not in the shades of the temple of which Isaiah spoke, which was being slowly but surely erected? Did they not have the privilege of coming into this historic building, hearing the voice of the prophets of God and accepting their counsel as if it came directly from God?

FAITH OF GRANDPARENTS

In a short time the Lord did speak to them through his prophet, my grandfather being called to go on a mission. They took inventory of their resources and discovered that they did not have the finances to pay his traveling expenses back to his mission field. It was decided to sell the family cow, their only source of food. It was sold without any hesitation, grandfather taking the money and making his way back to Switzerland. My grandmother had the responsibility of maintaining the family and of doing what she could for her husband in a financial way. She went to work sewing salt sacks for one dollar a thousand, payable in tithing scrip.

I am quite sure that many of us would say that was a great sacrifice; that it was in the extreme; that it was fanatical. We might even say it was radical; but I want to say that if any of us were ever to make such an accusation against our grandparents who gave their all for the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, we are forgetting that they loved God with all their soul, might and strength. We forget too, that God had endowed them with a divine revelation that we call a testimony by the power of the gift of the Holy Ghost, so that they knew that God lived, they knew that he who was crucified upon Calvary's Hill was the Redeemer of the world, and the humble boy who supplicated God in the woods of New York was his chosen servant in the last days through whom the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was restored. To accuse them of being fanatical would be to accuse God of being fanatical, because he gave his Only Son, it would be to accuse Abraham of being radical, because he too was willing to sacrifice his only son upon God's command.

The spirit of the pioneers is reflected in these words, "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of God shall give unto you."

TWO KINDS OF SACRIFICE

In thinking of our fathers; our Heavenly Father, our father Abraham and our pioneer forefathers, I wonder what all this means, to you and to me. I wonder if we accept the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and all of its obligations as an opportunity, or I wonder if we accept these obligations somewhat in the spirit of sacrifice. I tell you there are two kinds of sacrifices. The greatest sacrifice was made by God, namely the offering of his son for the atonement and salvation of mankind, and that of Abraham in the offering of his son, Isaac, as a sacrifice out of pure love for God and his full understanding of the law of obedience. The other kind of sacrifice has the atmosphere of selfishness which causes men to feel that they are giving too much for this great cause, and that kind of sacrifice, let me tell you, circumscribes and restricts people in their activities in this great Church, for God expects us to give liberally and freely of our talents, our resources and our all for the upbuilding of his kingdom, as did our pioneer forefathers.

Do you approach your assignments in the spirit of sacrifice, do you do your temple work in the spirit of being a savior on Mt. Zion, or do you do it in the spirit of sacrifice? Do you pay your contributions as a sacrifice or do you pay them because you wish to express gratitude to God for the many blessings that he has bestowed upon you, and you are but returning that part which belongs to him? Do you who are called to go out and teach the people the doctrines of the kingdom, do it in the spirit of sacrificing your time, or do you do it in the spirit of liberality, with a desire to contribute all you can for the salvation of the souls of our Heavenly Father's children? Do you who send out missionaries, do it in the spirit of sacrifice or do you do it in the spirit of promulgating through your children the gospel of Jesus Christ as your forefathers and mine preached it? If we go forward in the spirit of the gospel, which is the spirit of opportunity, the spirit of service and love, there is no question that the Lord

God will bless us and keep his promises in providing us with our daily needs. We should always follow the admonition of the Savior,

... seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

never forgetting that the first and great commandment is to,

... love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. (Mark 12:30-31.)

which brings me to another thought. When thinking of this great welfare program can you think of an opportunity that is comparable to it in loving our neighbors as we love ourselves? If modern-day Israel ever received a revelation in this day with reference to what we should do in loving and helping our neighbor, let me tell you the opportunity has come through the great welfare program of this Church. The hundred carloads of food that we have sent has been a blessing to those who have been in need, but think of the blessings that will come to us because we thought of them, expressing our love in food and clothing.

LOVE OF GOD REQUIRES ACTION

Love of God is something that requires action, for men cannot have faith in God, nor love him, unless they are acting in his cause, with their whole heart constantly thinking of him and giving of their physical strength in love.

... God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son. (John 3:16.)

and Abraham so loved God that he was willing to give his son, and your fathers and mine so loved God that they gave their all to establish the kingdom here in the tops of the mountains, where you and I might enjoy every blessing which will be for our spiritual and temporal good. Let us remember this, too, that God calls men in this day exactly as he called in the day of Abraham, exactly as he called in the day of the Savior, and in the day of Joseph Smith. He may call to you and he may call to me, through his servants—the First Presidency of the Church, through the Council of the Twelve or through any of the other General Authorities. He may call to us to render some service through the stake presidency or our bishop, and please remember when they call, it is the voice of God, speaking through them to us, and they are not calling because of their choice, but because they are God's servants endowed with the authority to call upon us to render service whenever it is needed. So, in the Spirit of Jesus when that call comes let us answer as Abraham answered, and as the Prophet answered, and as your forefathers and mine answered; "Lord, behold, here am I," and never forgetting that God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that he who believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life, which I pray will be the blessing and the destiny of each and every one of us, in the name of our crucified Savior. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve will now address us, although he has been advised by those who have been looking after his welfare that he must not exert himself, but we know he would like to bear his testimony and other than that do as he pleases.

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, it is always a great privilege to be allowed to bear testimony of the truth of the great work in which we are engaged. It may be in the great Tabernacle where we are now assembled or it may be in a humble cottage meeting; it matters little. It is very good for all of us, every member, to give voice to his testimony, to his belief, to his faith in this the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH

This work is of God; established by him, by the voice of revelation. It is the truth. It has been my joy, throughout the years of my life, to discover from time to time, that every principle, every doctrine, every historic event in the building of this great latter-day kingdom, are in harmony with every discovered and revealed truth. This is the truth, and we must rely upon it, learn to understand that it is the truth; otherwise the great joy that the Lord has offered us in this work will not be ours. I agree with Brigham Young that another name for the gospel might well be truth.

Along with truth comes light. Light is never found except in the presence of truth. The Lord in his latter-day revelations said over and over again that truth and light go together. We who receive truth have light to point the way, to solve our problems, to tell us where we are going, and to give us an enlightening faith to help us in the journey of life.

Truth also does something else for us: It gives us power, not only principles and doctrines of truth and light, but it also gives power to accomplish the work of the Lord in these latter-days.

THE SEALING POWER

I trust all of us listened intently to the sermon by Elder Joseph Fielding Smith today. The power of the priesthood, the power of this Church, culminates in the sealing power which is exercised ordinarily in the temples of the Most High. He might have quoted, if he had had more time this morning, from Moroni the prophet, who was visiting Joseph Smith the boy, as he was then, the change made in the statement of Malachi. Moroni said, if I remember correctly, Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers.

If it were not so—

—and this is the greatest part of this revelation.

If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming. (D. & C. 2:3.)

That is the power that belongs to the Church, to the priesthood, to those who walk in truth and light. It is the power that holds the earth's events together, that makes possible the accomplishment of God's purposes in these latter-days.

IMPORTANCE OF TEMPLE WORK

I trust that we all, as has been advised here today, seek to win the power that flows out of the temples of the Lord, by giving some of our time and means to genealogy and temple work. Thereby strength will come to us, for the temples are places of revelation. They are the places around which the Saints have always gathered and will do so, more and more, in the days to come.

I bear testimony to the truth of this work, to its accompanying light, to its great accompanying power, and thank the Lord for the gospel of Jesus Christ, restored in these days. I pray that all of us may get some measure of the exquisite joy and happiness that come to those who accept the truth and live its principles, who surrender to it. God be with us all and bless us, bless all who labor in this great cause. May the work grow and increase until it shall cover the earth with its truth and light and power, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER WILLIAM H. REEDER, JR.

Former President of the New England Mission

My brethren and sisters, I am very happy to be present on this occasion, although I am not too happy at standing before you.

I would not feel good if I did not express to you the deep joy and satisfaction I feel in attending these conferences, and as it were, sitting at the feet of the servants of the living God and listening to their instructions and encouragement. We have enjoyed a great outpouring of the Spirit and received an abundance of sound doctrine, and I am sure that those who are anxious to be faithful to their responsibilities will strive to carry out what we have been told today.

It seems strange and a little bit improper to be here today reporting on the New England Mission after being away from it for nearly a year. We were released last May after five and one-half years of service. But I do want to express to you the the gratitude I feel, and my wife likewise, at having had the opportunity of serving in the mission field and preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to our fellow men. It was a grand and glorious experience; but we are happy to be home.

I want to pay tribute to my wife, for the splendid work she did in the mission field. I served before the days when mission presidents had counselors, but in her I had a faithful and wise counselor, and a faithful and willing helper. We strove, at all times, to do things together, and much of our traveling and service was done together. She was a loyal and wonderful companion. She has now been called to an important position in the Church. It is an honor to her and to me, too. I am sure she did not seek it. In fact, I know she did not; and that if her wishes had been observed she would not have received the call; but now that it has come to her, I know that she will give the position the best that she has. She will work hard at it, and I assure you that she will have my support, such as I can give her.

We had a wonderful lot of missionaries in that five and one-half years, and I want to publicly express my gratitude to them for the faithful service they performed under us; and to their parents and other loved ones who afforded them that opportunity. They rendered a great service and the effects of that service will be felt for many years to come.

I want to say that in the New England Mission we have a lot of faithful, loyal and valiant members of the Church, who are a credit to the Church. They have assisted in advancing the cause of the Church, and with their help the Church has grown in the New England Mission. I have seen some of them, here in this Conference, for whom I have the greatest love and respect because of the creditable manner in which they devoted themselves to the service to which they were called.

I think I owe it to our beloved President to tell you that his son, George Albert, Jr., is a faithful, loyal and dependable member of the Church in Cambridge, Massachusetts. In the Cambridge Branch, he is one of the bulwarks. During all of the time that I served as Mission President, he was engaged in some teaching of the members. It was a source of great satisfaction to see the students in those great educational institutions flock to his classes to listen to his instruction on the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He has attained some eminence by the sheer force of his own efforts and personality and is, today, the Assistant Dean of the Harvard School of Business Administration, perhaps the greatest school of its kind in the world. He is honored and respected.

If it were my prerogative to preach a sermon, I should like to cry out against the hypocrisy that seems to prevail among some of our members. I am sure there is no greater offense against the Holy Ghost than insincerity, inconsistency, and hypocrisy. The Savior denounced it most vehemently. It does not get any of us—who do not practice what we preach and profess to be—anywhere or anything. Those who are true and loyal are the ones who reap the benefits, not only the direct benefits of blessings that come through obedience to the principles to the gospel, but also the incidental benefits. I want to tell you a little story.

One of our members in the Branch of Cambridge was out of a job. He responded to an advertisement in the newspaper and went to one of the great manufacturing institutions of the area on the day appointed, and there he found twenty-five or thirty other young men seeking the same job. A questionnaire was handed out to them, and he answered it, disclosing qualifications which were required for the position. And then, at the bottom of the questionnaire, there was this question: "What Church do you belong to?" He said he scratched his head and thought if he told the whole truth he would not get the job, so first he decided to put "L.D.S. Church," and then he concluded that that would require some explanation that would elicit the truth and so he thought, "Oh, well, I am a Mormon and why not say so." And so he wrote in that column "Mormon." The questionnaires were gathered up and taken in to the manager and in a little while a young lady came to the door and asked this young man to come in. He said he could not understand why he got the first invitation for an interview. When he got inside the manager talked to him casually for a little while, then finally he said, "Do you keep the word of wisdom?" The young man said, "Yes, why?" The manager said, "Do you pay your tithing?" The young man said, "Yes, why?" "Well," the manager said, "I was in Salt Lake City some time ago, and I was introduced to President Grant and in his office he and other men, treated us cordially and explained some of the striking features of the Mormon Church. And," he said, "I will never forget what I was told about the Word of Wisdom and tithing. And," he said, "Young man, if you are that loyal to your Church, twenty-five hundred miles away from its headquarters, you will be loyal to us. You are the kind of man we want in our employ, and the job is yours if you want it." He was happy to accept the position and was instrumental, thereafter, in securing positions for quite a number of our young folks in that locality who needed employment. Now, there is one of the incidental blessings that followed obedience to the principles and practices and standards of the Church. All of us ought to want those blessings, but we will forfeit them if we are not faithful and obedient.

I know that this is the Church of God. I am happy to be active in it, and hope I shall remain so all the days of my life. I found great joy in being acquainted with these wonderful men. No finer men exist anywhere in the world, whose aims and purposes and attitudes are cleaner and more wholesome and more beneficial to their associates than is the case with these men. It is a joy to know them and to associate with them, and I want to strive to remain as close as possible all the days of my life to men who exert that kind of influence upon their fellow men.

I have never heard a single expression from the mouths of any one of these men that would have a tendency to lead any one of us astray or into unrighteous paths. They are always telling us to live good lives and be faithful members of the Church and be obedient to the gospel plan of Jesus Christ. God bless them, and God bless us and help us to be faithful and loyal and consistent, and avoid all forms of hypocrisy and be real "livers" of our religion instead of just "professors," and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

This conference has certainly been a great inspiration to me. I am grateful for the strength that I have received from my brethren as they have talked to me and to you. I am very glad that the Lord has blessed them so, and I hope that he will bless me as he has blessed them.

GRATITUDE FOR FAITH OF YOUTH

I have been more than happy with the participation of the young people in this conference. Like you, I was thrilled in my soul by the singing of the Brigham Young University chorus, yesterday; by the Aaronic Priesthood chorus in our priesthood meeting last night, and now again, by the singing of these wonderful young people from Ricks College. I am glad for them. As I have visited the various stakes and met with your young people in firesides and other meetings, I have been everlastingly grateful for them. I am glad for their strength, for their faith, and their devotion, and I have a feeling of confidence that in the years to come, when the affairs of the Church are given into their hands, that all will be well.

I realize that there are many pitfalls in the paths of our young people, and some fall into those pitfalls, and for them we grieve. With this in mind, I would like to direct my remarks more particularly to the young people, and I desire to talk about cigarets.

REVELATION ON USE OF TOBACCO

I wonder, young people of the Church, if you have ever seriously thought about what a cigaret means to a Latter-day Saint. It means more to us than it does to other people. I know that some of you will say that you do not see why, that you have friends in other churches who smoke, and they seem to get along all right, and their churches do not criticize them for it, and you do not see why our Church takes the attitude it does on this subject. Just remember, if you will, that the Lord has not spoken to your young friends in the other churches, nor to the heads of their churches, giving them any divine revelation directing them to abstain from these harmful things. In their churches they do not even accept the principle of modern revelation.

But with us, it is entirely different. God has spoken to us by his latter-day prophets. He has given us modern-day revelation, declaring that tobacco is not good for man. That is the word and the will of the Lord to the Latter-day Saints. Whenever we turn our backs upon that principle, to that extent we turn our backs upon the Lord.

The average young American is an individual who loves freedom, wants to be his own boss, and does not like to have other people regulate his life for him. But some of them misunderstand their independence, and in a spirit of misunderstanding say, "Well, if I want to take a smoke, that is my business. I have a perfect right to. It is a free country, isn't it?" But in submitting to the enslaving influence of nicotine, they contribute to a loss of the very freedom they talk about.

CIGARET HABIT DETERMINES COURSE OF LIFE

If you adopt the cigaret habit, it will, in large measure determine the kind of life you are going to live, the kind of friends you will have, the kind of person you are going to marry, even the kind of children you may have. Do you regard that as an extreme statement? Let us think about it for a few moments.

If, at your house, you happen to take a newspaper or a magazine which carries cigaret advertising, and those alluring advertisements tempt you to smoke and try to make you think that it is smart to puff on a cigaret, and if you fall for that temptation, what is the first thing you do?

You brush to one side all the teachings of your parents, your Church, and your friends who love you. Instead, you take the advice of a tobacco merchant who has no more interest in you than to get what money he can out of you by making you a slave to his product. And then, you tell yourself, "I think I will buy some cigarets." And so, with a guilty conscience, and feeling as if the eyes of the whole world are upon you, you go and buy your first package of cigarets. Then, you wonder where you are going to smoke them. You do not want to smoke them in front of your parents because you know it is wrong, and you know it would break their hearts. You do not want to smoke in front of your non-smoking friends because you know what they would tell you. And so, you go some place where neither your friends nor your parents can see you. Then you open the package, and you take out that first cigaret, put it in your mouth and light it. Then you make a great discovery: You find out that by sucking on one end of that cigaret, with the light on the other, you can actually get smoke out of it; and having read what you have in the advertisements, and having puffed away on that cigaret, the whole operation inflates your ego. So you throw back your head, and you blow the smoke in the air, and you say, "Well, I really must be somebody."

SMOKERS ASSOCIATE WITH SMOKERS

You want to smoke some more, inasmuch as you have fallen for that temptation, but you do not want to do it in private all the time, and you do not want to be the only smoker in a non-smoking crowd, so you seek out other people who smoke, so you can smoke with them. It may be that you already have some smoking friends and that they were the ones who provided those first cigarets and that you began to smoke with them. In either case, you begin breaking off your connections with your non-smoking friends and start to form your associates among smokers. And in this way, your cigarets begin to choose your friends for you.

One of the very difficult things about this is that the habits of smokers so often do not stop with smoking, but they include drinking and unwise partying, as well. And when you start going with people who do those things, it will not be very long before you are doing the same things they are, and in that way the cigaret lays the foundation on which you form other evil habits.

CIGARET USER STAYS AWAY FROM CHURCH

If you are going to be a smoker, you realize that you are breaking one of the commandments of God, and you do not feel good about it. You know that over in the ward they speak about the Word of Wisdom every once in a while and now that you are a smoker you do not like to hear about the Word of Wisdom. You have heard about it all your life, and you do not want your conscience to hurt you any more than it already does, so tell yourself you had better stay away from your meetings. You begin to realize that for a Latter-day Saint, worship and smoking just do not go together. And so the cigaret persuades you to stay away from church.

When you were small, your parents taught you to pray, and you prayed with more or less regularity all your life. But now that you are a smoker, you feel out of harmony with the Lord and you hesitate to go to him in prayer.

CIGARETS UNDERMINE FAITH

You begin to discover that, for a Latter-day Saint, cigarets undermine faith and interfere with prayer. And as a child who has been hurt avoids the instruments which hurt him, so you with a smarting conscience shy away from your religious duties. You have come to know that spirituality and smoking are incompatible. And so the cigaret persuades you to stop praying.

Your parents also taught you to pay tithing on everything you earned, but now that you do not go to church very often and you are not very proud of your Church connections, you stop paying your tithing. "What is the use?" you ask yourself. You say, "This tithing money itself would buy quite a few cigarets; they cost real money these days." Rather an expensive habit you have picked up! And so the cigaret persuades you to stop paying your tithing.

When you get old enough to get married, you ask yourself, "Whom shall I marry?" If you are a boy you say, "Will it be Helen or Jane or Elizabeth?" And if you are a girl, you ask yourself, "Will it be Tom or Dick or Harry?" And then you tell yourself that you like Tom better than Harry, and Jane better than Elizabeth. And why do you like them better? Because you know them better. And how did you get to know them better? Because they are in the crowd you go with; you know, the smoking crowd. And they do the things that you do. They are like you. Why, you would not even think of marrying one of your former friends in the non-smoking crowd. How ridiculous! Why, he would not smoke with you—would not even take a cocktail, and he would not neck, and he would not pet, and he would not party around. Why, you would not marry one of them! You are going to marry one of your own crowd. And then, if you want to sit down together and smoke together you can, and there is no embarrassment—so you tell yourself. There is nobody to get after you if you fill the house full of tobacco smoke, and no one to nag at you if your cigaret burns a hole in the overstuffed, or if you drop hot ashes on the new rug. So your cigaret has helped to choose the kind of person you marry.

WORLDLINESS IN HOME LIFE

What kind of home will you have? There will not be much faith in it, because the cigarets have already undermined your faith. And you will not say very many prayers because the cigarets have taken care of that too. And there will not be much Church activity in your house, because the cigarets have checked that off also. So you will have a worldly home with precious little of spirituality in it. Is that really the kind of home you want?

Will you have any children in that home? If you are like many of the smoking young people of today, you will not have any children. One of them recently said, "Why a squawking kid would cramp my style! Do you think I am going to stay up and walk the floor in the middle of the night with a squealing baby in my arms? None of that for me." And so the cigaret may help to rob you of one of the greatest blessings that God gives us in this life: The privilege of having little children.

But suppose by some chance you do have children—what will they be like? Why, they will be just like you. They will not believe very much in God, because you will not make religion very important in their lives. They will not say very many prayers because you will not teach them how. And they will not go to Church much because you do not. And when they get a little older, they will acquire the other habits that you have, and they will be just about like you. So the cigaret determines in large measure the kind of children you will have.

Do you not see, young people of the Church, how the cigarets can mark out your life for you—point the path for you to follow? Are you, as young Americans, willing to surrender to the tyranny of a cigaret? Are you willing to allow a cigaret to determine in such large measure the kind of life you are going to live? Are you going to allow a cigaret to choose the kind of friends you have, the kind of person you will marry—even the kind of children you may have? Are you, as a young Latter-day Saint, willing to allow a cigaret to determine your attitude toward God?

THE VALUE OF RELIGION

Let me ask you one other thing: What do you think of religion, anyway? Is it worth while? Is it worth the trouble we go to? Does it do any good in the world? Or would we be better off without it?

I once read an advertisement which asked this question: "How would you like to live in a town in which there were no churches?" And then it listed the crime and the violence and the debauchery and the filth and the heartbreak and the sorrow and the disappointment associated with persons who reject the soul-elevating, character-building influence of true religion. Would you like to live in a town in which there were no churches? Bring it right down to your own case and ask yourself about it. Would you like to live a life in which there was no religion? Do you really want the degrading influence of the irreligious? That influence is just as deadly for an individual as it is for a whole town.

Choose for yourself: Do you want to live a life without God? The cigaret would like you to. But remember, you can never live successfully without the Lord. So many have tried, and all have failed.

And so I come back to the question with which I began: Have you ever really considered what a cigaret means to a Latter-day Saint? You who smoke now, do not make the mistake of supposing that the Church is against you, because it is not. It only desires your welfare, and it hopes and prays for the day when you will declare your independence from the slavery of nicotine. And you who do not smoke, before you take that first cigaret ask yourself, "Will it help me or hurt me?" Think it over carefully, and may God guide you in your thinking, I earnestly pray for you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

It falls to my lot as the President of the Church to make some concluding remarks.

I would like to ask all of you, could you imagine any other place that we could have been during the past three days, where we would have been nearer to our Heavenly Father than we have in this great conference? Is there any place in the world where you could gather together a group of men who, one after another, would stand on their feet and bear witness that they know the gospel is here and that we are partakers of it and testify of the blessings that result from keeping the commandments of our Heavenly Father?

SMOKER FAILS TO GET JOB

The brethren have reminded me of one or two little incidents that I think I will relate. One has to do with a cigaret. One of our missionaries who filled a good mission came home and sought employment and was unable to find it here. He had been a smoker before he went on his mission, but he had quit, so when he came back and became a little bit discouraged, he took up his habit of smoking again. About that time a non-Latter-day Saint businessman spoke to one of the prominent men of the Church, also in business, and said, "I need a man to come into my business, one that is capable and able to grow to take my place, because I want to retire after a while. I can pay him a good salary, and I have concluded that, while I am not a member of your Church, I would like to have one of your returned missionaries. They have had such wonderful experiences, many of them. I've heard some of them talk. If one of them comes home and you know of him, you don't need to tell him what it is all about, just send him to me with the understanding that there may be a position. I'd like to interrogate him."

Not long after that the young man who had been seeking work visited the office of the brother who told me this story. He said to the young man: "I think I know where you can find employment." He sent the returned missionary to the individual who had told him without hesitation what he wanted. This returned missionary was a fine, intelligent, young fellow, and he supposed it meant a job for him.

Our Church businessman said, "I met the young applicant on the street two or three days after, and asked him, 'How did you come out?' The young man said, 'I didn't succeed. The man asked me a few questions and then remarked, 'I think we had better not try it out together.'"

Sometime later the two businessmen met, and the member asked the non-member why the young man had not been employed. He replied, "When the missionary came into my office, he told me you had sent him. I thought to myself, this is my opportunity. He was a fine-looking young fellow and appeared satisfactory to me. As he entered the office, I was smoking my pipe, and all at once he took a cigaret out of his pocket and lit it, and we started to talk. I said to him, 'I thought you were a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.' He replied, 'I am,' and I said, 'I thought you were a returned missionary.' 'I am,' he answered.

"I'm sorry, I wanted just such an individual as I thought you might be, but what are you smoking for?" and the young man said, 'You are smoking; why shouldn't I smoke?' I said, 'The difference is this: You have been taught that it is not a proper thing to smoke; I was never taught that. You are violating the advice and desires of those who love you, and I think there is no use discussing this matter any further. I will just say that I haven't any position ready for you, and we'll part.'"

That young man lost a fine position because he had that filthy habit, and that's the only word I can think of just now that exactly fills the bill.

RETURNED MISSIONARY WHO LACKED COURAGE OF CONVICTION

Another instance that may be of interest: one of our missionaries returned from the Eastern States where he had become acquainted with a shop foreman in a large manufacturing establishment, and after returning home he tried for some time to secure employment but was not successful. Finally he said to himself, "Well, I believe if I go back East, my friend there will give me a job."

He was a very fine, capable young fellow, but the friend that he spoke of did not know that he was a member of the Church. So when he went to him and said, 'I've come back. I wonder if you will give me something to do?' the foreman said, "Certainly I will; come right in." So the young man began work in the very city where he had been laboring as a missionary. He avoided the members of the Church; he didn't go to meeting; he kept away from them because he was afraid the men who employed him who were not members of the Church would not give him the same kind of opportunity for advancement if they knew who he was. But he was a good worker and kept at it for some time.

One day, after he had been there about three months, the shop foreman called him and said, "You had better go upstairs; the president wants to see you." The president had told the shop foreman that he needed a young man for another department who had ability. He wanted a young man with a good education. He said, "Look around, and if you can find such a man as that, let me know."

The foreman replied, "We have just such a man working for us right now."

"Already in our employ?" the president asked.

"Yes."

The president said, "That pleases me. Send him up to see me." So the young man, not knowing what the circumstances were reported to the president's office and said, "I understand, Mr. Grant, that you want to speak to me."

He answered, "Yes. Have you been sent up by the shop foreman?"

The young man replied, "Yes, sir."

"Please sit down. I want to know something about you; I'd like to know where you are from."

"Well," the young man said, "I live away out in the Rocky Mountains." That was the first hedge.

"But, what part of the Rocky Mountains?"

"Well," he replied, "not very far from Idaho."

"But what are you doing here?"

"Well," he said, "I'm here working as one of your employees."

"Were you ever here before?"

"Yes."

"Do you know anybody here in the city?"

"Not very many, just two or three."

"Well, I don't quite understand why you came back here for employment."

I want to say before going any further, the president knew all about this boy. He had had somebody check his record, and so when he kept hedging, the president asked, "But who are your friends here?"

"Oh," he replied, "they're just people that work around town."

"But," the president continued, "do you belong to any church?"

"Well, not here."

"Did you ever belong to a church?"

He said, "Yes, I did at one time," and he began to be afraid the president did know who he was, and he didn't want him to find out now, so he kept on hedging and said, "At one time I was a member of a church, but I didn't take much interest in it, and I'm not doing much at it now."

"What church was it?"

"Well, you'd call it the Mormon Church."

The president said, "Do you mean to tell me that you are a son of a Mormon family?"

The boy knew the jig was up with him then; so he answered, "Yes, sir."

The president queried, "Do you mean to tell me that you would desert the faith of your parents, when you had known that they were Mormons and desired you to be one?"

"Well, not exactly that."

"I'm afraid," the president said, "you're not much credit to them. If you haven't the courage to stand up for your faith, what good are you? Now," he said, "I will be plain with you. I thought you were the man I was seeking for this position, but I want to say to you that if you would betray your parents and go back on the Church you belong to, I'd be afraid to give you any kind of a job where you have to handle money." And so the young man lost his opportunity because he did not have the courage to do his duty by his Church and his family.

These things happen so many times; while on the contrary our boys and girls who keep the commandments of the Lord, and observe the advice of our Heavenly Father, need not be afraid anywhere.

ADVANTAGES OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

I have traveled considerably in the world, myself. I have covered approximately a million miles. I have been in the homes of the rich and the poor, in many parts of the world, and I never have found one instance among the better class of people where I have been, where if they knew I was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it was any detriment to me. But I have known many cases where it has opened the way and offered opportunity that I couldn't have had before. You know, it is a strange thing that it is possible for an individual to belong to the Church, not just a church, but to belong to the Church, to have had a witness and a testimony that the Lord himself established this Church, to know that he spoke by the power that he had, in his wisdom, and gave to us in this day the gospel of Jesus Christ, again, and to belong to just such an organization. No other church in the world makes such a claim as we do. When I see this wonderful group of young folk, behind us here, and the choir, and those that we had from Provo yesterday, and others that we meet all the time, I know of no other place in the world where you can find such young people as the Lord gives to us in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Where can you go, in all the world, and find such companionship as you can have in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? It is his Church. He gave it his name, and he advised us that it should be so called. Again I want to mention that fact to some of our brethren. Don't let the Lord down by calling this the Mormon Church. He didn't call it the Mormon Church. It is all right for us to believe in the Book of Mormon. He expects us to do that, but he told us what to call this Church. The Lord has said:

THE NAME OF THE CHURCH

And how be it my church save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel. (III Nephi 27:8.)

This is his Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I sometimes feel disappointed that so many of us seem to be timid, if I may use that term, and give this Church that the Lord has permitted us to be identified with rather a casual reference. I am so proud of membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, when I think that all the blessings of the world may be mine as a member of his Church, and if I were not a member how many blessings there may be lost for me. Think of the wonderful people in the world and in all these various churches. I want to tell you that there are thousands of them, I think I would be safe in saying millions of them who, if they knew what we know and had the testimony that God has given to us, wouldn't hesitate to join the Church. They would be afraid not to take advantage of the opportunities that he has given to us. In this wonderful conference where we have been assembled the past three days, think how we have mingled together. I have shaken hands with people all the way from Australia, to Portland, Maine, and from Europe to Hawaii, who have come here, happy to make these long journeys, delighted to be permitted to associate and to shake hands with the membership of this Church.

I feel it is a great compliment to you, my brothers and sisters, that so many of you find in the lives of one another the things that make you proud and grateful to be identified with this organization. When we think of what the Lord has done for us—think of the thousands of our young men and women who have had an education that they could obtain in no other way except in the missionary field, and that we have more than four thousand out in the world today—what a privilege it is! This is not a Church to criticize, to find fault with others. The Lord doesn't advise us or counsel us to make it uncomfortable for other people who don't understand, but the Lord in every way encourages us to set an example that others seeing our good works will be constrained to glorify his name.

GRATITUDE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

I am so proud and grateful for the young people of this great organization as I meet them in different parts of the country, and I am so thankful for their fathers and mothers who have given them the training that encourages them to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord, encourages them to avoid bad habits and not partake of things that otherwise would hurt them. Think of it. Do you realize, my brethren and sisters, that there isn't a blessing, a real blessing in any church in the world that is enjoyed in that church that you may not enjoy as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints? You can't think of a thing that is worth while in preparation for eternal life that we do not have and while we are only a small organization compared with the great ones in the world, all that they have, all together, that is necessary for eternal life in the celestial kingdom, we have, plus the authority of our Heavenly Father and the promise of eternal happiness if we will obey his commandments.

This is not a man-made organization. It is not just a small fraternal department in this great world; this is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Think what that means, a Church of the Son of God, who gave his life that we might live again. So today as I worship here with you I am thankful for my birthright, thankful for parents who taught me the gospel of Jesus Christ and set the example in their home. If I did anything that I should not do in my life, it would be something that I could not have learned in my mother's home. There were sweetness and kindness and love always. With a large family of children it took a mother with a good deal of patience, but she was always patient with us.

KEEPING COMMANDMENTS BRINGS JOY

It will not be very long, in the natural course of events, till the summons that took Father and Mother and other loved ones to the other side, will reach me. I look forward to that time with pleasant anticipation. I have lived a long time, as contrasted with the average of human beings, and I have had a happy life. I can think of nobody who has had a fuller life than I have had, and I don't say that boastfully, but gratefully; and I want to say to you that every happiness and every joy that has been worthy of the name has been the result of keeping the commandments of God and observing his advice and counsel. So, as we go forward, each of us, each having an influence with our neighbors and our friends, let us not be too timid. We do not need to annoy people, but let us make them feel and understand that we are interested, not in making them members of the Church for membership, but in bringing them into the Church that they may enjoy the same blessings that we enjoy.

WORLD IN CRITICAL CONDITION

This world is in a critical condition. It is a pitiable situation that faces us, and not anything in the world but the power of our Heavenly Father can preserve the civilization of our day and the people who live upon the earth at the present time. The adversary is having his innings because the people of the world have refused to listen to their Heavenly Father. Now it is our privilege, not only to set the example but also to encourage others to take advantage of it. Nobody knows, when we pick up a paper today, what the headlines may read. So many lives destroyed here, so many there, some from accident, some from warfare, some from wickedness, and the greatest destruction of all that is going on in the world today is the result of immorality. There was a time, as we have been reminded, when the people of Sodom and Gomorrah could not produce, in those two cities, ten individuals who were worthy to live. They had been so wicked that they were not fit to live any longer, and so they were consumed by fire.

Now, brethren and sisters, somebody said in this conference that the same laws apply, the same rules govern today, and it is just as necessary for us to keep the commandments of our Heavenly Father today as it was for any of the prophets of old or any of his faithful sons and daughters who have lived upon the earth, who have earned a right to a place in the celestial kingdom. We can't gain our exaltation by the good lives of our neighbors, but we can profit by their good example, and we can improve ourselves.

With love in my heart for every one of you, may I say I am grateful. I haven't any way of expressing my thanksgiving to the people of this Church and many people out of the Church, where I have traveled in the world, for their kindnesses to me, one of the humblest of our Father's sons. I wish I could return in full measure all the good which has been done for me wherever I have been.

RICHES OF ETERNAL LIFE

And now, brothers and sisters, it is not so important how many valuables you may have, how much property you may possess, and how many of the honors of men you may acquire, and all those things that are so desirable in the world, the thing that God has given to you that is worth more than all the rest is the opportunity to obtain eternal life in the celestial kingdom and have as your companions, throughout the ages of eternity, sons and daughters, husbands and wives with whom you have associated here on earth. That is what the Lord teaches us, and when the world is so distressed and uncertain, we ought to be grateful, we ought to be thankful for our blessings. I can think of no people in the world who have so much reason to be thankful for their blessings as right here in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BLESSINGS OF CONFERENCE

This will be the conclusion of a remarkable conference. It has been delightful to me, these wonderful choirs that have made us so happy with their singing, the fine advice and counsel that we have received from our brethren, the opportunity even to sit in the room and feel the influences that are here, because everyone who is here, I am sure, has felt as I have felt the inspiration of our Heavenly Father and the spirit of love and kindness and a determination to do better than we have ever done before.

This is God's work. It is for the salvation of all the human family if they will accept it, and we who have received it and know it is true should be ever alert and watchful to share with others the things that we know. Let our homes be the abiding place of prayer and thanksgiving and gratitude. Every day when we go out from our homes, let us leave a place that has been sanctified by the righteousness of our own lives, and when we return to it that we may feel that influence that is always there when the Spirit of God is present.

I pray that these fine boys and girls who have come to sing to us, along with the other visitors, may go home from this conference, that you may return to your various homes in safety and in peace, and take with you a renewed desire to be real members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, worthy to be called members.

Now, I pray that the Lord may add his blessing, that his peace may be upon you and in your lives, and in your home. Let us pray for the great men and women of the world who need the Lord but do not understand his interest in them. Pray for the President of the United States who, at the present time, so much needs guidance from our Heavenly Father. Pray for our representatives in Congress, our governors, our mayors of cities, the men who have influence in politics in our various communities, that they may do the things that will be better for all of us and make us happier, and please our Heavenly Father. That is our privilege. I say to you that the power of prayer is something that cannot be measured. If there were time, I could tell you many instances where prayer has been answered in a marvelous way. People have risen from beds when they have been told they could not live, that it was not possible, and yet they have lived and performed a great work. This is the kind of Church that you belong to. This is the kind of organization the Lord has offered to all people. Think of our great educational institutions, the opportunities which are given to our children to learn all that the world can teach them, plus the glorious truths that are necessary for us to absorb and make a part of our lives in order that we may gain an exaltation in the celestial kingdom.

ADMONITION TO LOVE ONE ANOTHER

God bless you, my brothers and sisters. I feel I want to be with you. I am so grateful for the privilege of being here, and now I am anxious that you may all go to your homes and carry with you love unfeigned, love for your boys and your girls, for your husbands and wives, for your neighbors and friends, and let that love abound wherever you may be. If we will do that, when the returns come from this conference and we hear from the various stakes and missions of the world, where people have gone from here, we will discover that we did receive a blessing and that the Lord did magnify us and give us our opportunities, and we will go on keeping his commandments.

I pray that every one of us will remember that to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is an honor beyond all price in comparison, and that we may so live that our neighbors and friends who know us, who may not be members of the Church, will be grateful for our fellowship. Peace be with you. May you go to your homes in peace and safety and continue to live in love and happiness as long as you are upon the earth. And when the time comes for us to depart this life, may each of us find our names recorded in the Lamb's book of life, not one missing, entitling us to an inheritance in the celestial kingdom, right here upon this earth, in the companionship of those we love, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The choir music for today's sessions has been by the Ricks Choir, Elder John M. Anderson conducting, Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ. I am sure we have all appreciated this fine body of young people. We have appreciated all those who have given us music during this fine conference. We are grateful for the ones who built the organ and gave us this fine tabernacle in which to meet. I would like to take occasion again to thank everyone who has made a contribution to the joy of our conference so that we will remember our experience forever.

Tomorrow morning the presidents of stakes and counselors, the bishops of wards and the mission presidents have an important meeting in the Salt Lake Temple. You have all received your notice undoubtedly. Those who have received that notice should be here at 8:00 tomorrow morning, and we will go from here to the temple and will wait upon the Lord there in matters that pertain to this great Church. Please be on time or as soon after eight o'clock as you can possibly come, so that we will not be delayed in beginning our meeting in the temple.

The Ricks College Choir will now sing "Thanks Be to God," by Dickson, and the closing prayer will be offered by President Virgil H. Sponberg of the Long Beach Stake, Long Beach, California.

The Choir sang: "Thanks Be to God," after which President Virgil H. Sponberg of the Long Beach Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned, sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Monday evening, April 5, at 7:00.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

The Aaronic Priesthood Chorus, Elder M. Lorenzo Mitchell, and John Parrish conductors, with Frank W. Asper at the organ, furnished special musical numbers.

As an opening number the Aaronic Priesthood Chorus sang "The Lord's Prayer," by Malotte, conducted by John Parrish.

President Frank T. Simmons of the Weber Stake offered the invocation.

A vocal selection, "The Priesthood of God," (Mitchell) was sung by Raymond Baird.

President George Albert Smith:

President Richard L. Evans, of the First Council of the Seventy, will talk to us. Some of you may know that Brother Evans has been given the additional responsibility of looking after this Block, meeting the tourists, etc., and there may be something about that part of his labors that he would like to say, as well as other things. We are glad to have President Evans here tonight.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My Brethren, I am awed in your presence, and I express my gratitude to my Father in Heaven for my fellowship among the Priesthood of this Church. One cannot be here and not feel that there is strength in Israel, and I am deeply grateful to be ever so small a part of it. And I earnestly ask that my Father in Heaven, through your faith and prayers, added to my own, will give me utterance during the few minutes I shall stand before you here this evening.

I could not help thinking this morning, during President McKay's message, of another verse of scripture that tied in very closely with the one which he reiterated, a verse from the Psalms which mentioned a man who was greatly blessed:

He shall not be afraid of evil tidings. (Psalms 112:7.)

There are many blessings recorded in scripture which are of surpassing worth, but this particular one for our particular day impressed me as being one of the greatest: "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings."

President McKay spoke this morning of the Savior's words, "Let not your hearts be troubled." I believe that in this body of the Priesthood there is less of fear of evil tidings than there is among any like number in all the world; although, it is very difficult not to be afraid of evil tidings. But I am grateful that our faith helps to sustain us in times when evil tidings are being spread about thickly. It is unthinkable that there should be talk of war, earnest talk of it, so soon after the terrible experience this world has been through. I am sure, in my own mind, that no one ever won a war—it is only a question of who lost the least or the most. And our losses in the last war are, by no means, calculated yet. But, again, I am grateful that we have here the faith which enables us to be equal to the prospects that lie before us.

THE COSTS OF WAR

There came to my desk within a few hours—this morning's mail brought it—just one indication of some of the costs of war which cannot by any means be stated in manpower or in money. One of the results—an appalling result—is the high incidence of divorce. In the United States in the year 1947—an all-time high—there were six hundred thirteen thousand divorces, as against fifty-five thousand in 1900; and as against about five hundred thousand in 1945.

I think this subject is somewhat on my mind at this moment because of a young couple that called on us some weeks ago. One of our girls from a nearby community had married a young man from the East after a very brief acquaintance, he of another church. They had only been married a few months and they were beginning to have their problems as to which way they should go: he with her, or she with him. And they were earnestly trying to solve their differences. He was much better able to defend his faith than she was—better informed as to the letter of it—but there was something burning in her heart that made her seemingly immovable, also.

PROBLEM OF THE SPLIT HOME

I believe the problem of the split home in this Church is one of our great problems, one which we have the means and the agencies within our hands to go a long way toward helping to solve—but one which is so far-reaching in its consequences that it affects not only the generation in which it occurs, but all succeeding generations. It is a problem that requires our earnest attention. And I believe that our Ward Teachers and our Stake Missionaries, if they are given proper direction and proper help and manpower and freedom to go about their work and encouragement in it, and if they take their assignments seriously, can do as much or more than any other agency.

As we go about the Wards and Stakes in some areas, particularly in some communities, it is noticeable that there are quite a number of children over nine years of age un-baptized, which means that someone has failed in his assignment—either a parent or a ward or stake or mission officer. It cannot mean anything else.

It is difficult enough in these days to rear a family when parents are solidly united in their ideals and purposes and convictions, and in the things toward which they direct their children. But it makes it virtually impossible to be assured of any satisfactory results when parents are divided on these matters. With a divided house, principles become a matter of contention, rather than of conviction. It is not fair to any child to be pulled between two parents in two different directions, or to be asked to make his choice between two people to both of whom he is bound by ties of authority and love and affection. It makes for confusion and for instability. Too often the home that is divided becomes of home of irreligion; quite often it goes one way or the other, but in neither case is it often very satisfactory.

Sometimes there have been evidences of defection from the faith because people have gone their way in neglect and have been overlooked by us, or because we have wearied of working with them.

When this young couple came to us some weeks ago, we immediately got in touch with a former member of the faith of the young man who had married one of our girls and asked him a number of questions. We asked him, for example, "what would be the attitude of his church if someone were to marry outside or otherwise withdraw himself from activity." He said that that would be the signal for them to be more kindly and more attentive. I wonder if that should not be the cue to our own attitude and action, not only in this, but in many other things.

I am reminded of the story of the prodigal son. Certainly we must distinguish between a man who is in full duty and who is mindful of all his obligations and the man who has stepped over the line in the wrong direction. There is a distinction between them, and we cannot help but be mindful of it. But certainly, also, we must do our best to bring those who have wavered into activity with us again. The brother of the prodigal son, for whom there was no feast made, was somewhat unhappy about it, but his father explained to him that his inheritance was assured, but when the penitent sinner returned it was cause for rejoicing, and a feast was made, and he was welcomed back warmly.

I hope, my brethren, that we will keep a consciousness of our responsibility toward these children who are not baptized, who are of us, and toward these families that pull in different directions, toward all those who by every natural reason should be in full fellowship with us, but who will go elsewhere if we do not have time for them, as will our children if we do not have time for them. They will find activity, they will find companionship, they will find their place in some social circle, in some group. And if we do not have time for them, it will be in some group not of our choosing, and perhaps not to our liking.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR SEVENTIES

I should like to say one word on another subject, just for a moment, concerning the Seventies, and appeal to you Presidents of Stakes to assure yourselves of the worthiness of those whom you recommend to us to become Seventies, before you send in their recommendations, because you know them and we do not. And we of the First Council feel, and I think our other brethren here are in accord with us—and if they are not theirs is the opportunity and right to modify our views—we feel that any man who is recommended to be ordained a Seventy should comply with the standards of the Church in all particulars. We feel that, generally speaking, there is no reason why a man should be made anything other than an Elder, if he is already an Elder, unless there is some particular function for him to perform and unless he has the qualifications and the worthiness to perform that function. We are not interested, generally speaking—and there may admittedly be justification for exceptions for which we shall ask you to take Europe. Two other brethren have been appointed, Elder Spencer Kimball and Elder Mark Petersen of the Council of the Twelve. The reports of the activities of this young woman and those who have assisted her are in their hands. It is pleasing to note that a number of girls have been saved; but some have been lost.

Recently, you received a letter, Bishops, asking that you notify these brethren of any young girls who leave your Wards for whatever purpose and go to another town. It will be necessary for the Ward Teachers and those who are in charge of the young girls—the teen-age girls to assist you in this duty. Here is an opportunity to apply the injunction of our Father in Heaven to the teachers, "Watch over the Church, always. Be with and strengthen them." No other organization in the world, I think, is so adequately equipped as is the Church to guard our young men and young women and to keep them from the tragedies of sin. Will you please cooperate with these brethren, for your own sake, for the sake of the fathers and mothers who, perhaps, have lost control of their children. The reports indicate that most of these unfortunates come from broken homes. They are tragedies.

LOST SHEEP

Another thing, once a month, through the courtesy of two County Officers, there come to my desk reports of the young men and older men who have been caught in the meshes of the law. In these reports, those who hold the priesthood are designated. Do you teachers know about them? So many Deacons, so many Priests, so many Teachers, so many Elders, Seventies and High Priests. These too may be tragedies! Remember that the injunction, "Watch over the Church, always," does not mean just once a month.

In the parable of the lost sheep, ninety-nine were safe in the fold, but one had strayed; and the Good Shepherd did not rest until the lost one was found.

I have in mind another theme, tonight, which I should like to preface with these statements: (1) That truth never grows old; and (2) that responsibility is never dis-associated from the Priesthood.

THE IMPORTANCE OF EXAMPLE

To the Priesthood here assembled tonight I quote the truth and the admonition given by the chief Apostle to the members of the Priesthood over nineteen hundred years ago—that chief Apostle, my favorite, wrote this letter,

To the Elders which are among you.

I who am also an Elder, and a witness of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. Feed the flock of God, which is among you, taking the oversight thereof not by overruling, but willingly, not by constraint, not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples, ensamples to the flock. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Likewise, ye younger submit yourselves unto the Elders; yea, all of you be subject one to another and be clothed with humility, for God resisteth the proud, or rather seeth the proud and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves, therefore, unto the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time, casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you. Be sober, vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour. Whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished to your brother in the world.

Just one element I wish to emphasize. The instructions I give are nineteen hundred years old, yet new today and applicable as then to elders, from the chief elder. But he said, "Be an ensample to the flock." Ever keep in mind, fellow workers that example should start at home. That is the best place to exercise the lofty ideals of the Priesthood.

GRATITUDE FOR PARENTS

The older I grow the more grateful I am for my parents, for what they did for us children in that old country home. They lived the gospel. Father used to preach it, particularly to visitors who came, more than to us boys and girls; but both Father and Mother lived the gospel. And I have realized throughout this conference, more than ever before, that my testimony of the reality of the existence of God dates back to my childhood, that my parents' teachings and their examples led me to the absolute knowledge that God is my Father; that I received then the knowledge of the reality of the spiritual world, and I testify to you tonight that that is a reality.

It is just as easy for me to accept as a divine truth the fact that Christ preached to the spirits in prison while His body lay in the tomb, as it is for me to look at you from this pulpit. It is true. And it is just as easy for me to realize that one may so live that he may receive impressions and direct messages through the Holy Ghost. The veil is thin between those who hold the Priesthood and divine messengers on the other side of the veil.

That testimony was born in that home, because of the example of a man who lived the Priesthood and a wife who sustained him and lived it in daily life. I do not know that Peter had that in mind, particularly, when he mentioned, "Be an ensample to the flock," but I know that each home is a part of that flock. The influence you spread in your home will go throughout the town, will go throughout the county, the Wards and the Stakes.

TRUTH NEVER GROWS OLD

The most precious thing in the world is a testimony of the truth. I repeat, truth never grows old, and the truth is that God is the source of your Priesthood and mine; that He lives, that Jesus Christ, the great High Priest, stands at the head of this Church, and that every man who holds the Priesthood, if he lives properly, soberly, industriously, humbly and prayerfully, is entitled to the inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit. I know that is true.

STRENGTH TO RESIST EVIL

Peter admonished the young men to be careful about the sins of the world. Evil things tempt them. Now is the time when our young men are tempted. They always have been. Some have resisted and some have not, but those who have resisted have succeeded and are happy. It is the happiest life. The boys of our Church who uphold the standards are the ones who are respected and who receive honor from the men of the world as well as from those of the Church.

For the benefit of those young men who have inspired us tonight and come here in such a large body to sing the songs of the Lesser Priesthood, I am going to conclude with a story of a boy who was not in the Church—as far as I know—but he grew in his teens and using the inheritance of his father, he started in business. His father had set him a proper example. Then he found himself in financial difficulties; and in distress he went to a friend of his father's, a Mr. Chaplin. "Mr. Chaplin," said the young man, "I am in distress, and I need ten thousand dollars. Those upon whom I have depended have not paid me. Perhaps they will, but they have not to date, and I need money. I have come to you because you knew my father." "Come in," said Mr. Chaplin, "Have a glass of wine." "No, thank you," said the young man, "I do not drink." "Well, come in anyhow, and have a cigar." "No, thank you, I do not smoke." "Well, I am sorry, but I do not think I can lend you the money." "Very well," said the young man, "I am sorry." And he started to go out. "Wait a minute," said Mr. Chaplin, who had just been testing him, "Come here. Your father asked me those same questions years ago. He trusted me for five thousand dollars, and I am going to trust you for ten or five times that amount if you want it. No, do not thank me, I owe it to your father. He trusted me as I am trusting you, and I am just trying to pay him back."

Think of that, young men! Try to picture what would have happened had the boy taken his wine and taken his tobacco, just to show off in the presence of another. An example!

The responsibility of keeping these young men and aiding them is started in our homes and is never dis-associated with the Priesthood.

God help us to be true to the testimony which is ours; give us power to discharge the responsibility placed upon us when the Priesthood of the Almighty was placed upon our shoulders and given to us as an eternal endowment, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The next part of our program is something we may all join in, and I hope that we will. There is a wonderful hymn that is sung by the Latter-day Saints, as well as others, that refers to our Heavenly Father and Jesus Christ, our Lord, "Come, O Thou King of Kings." We are going to ask everybody to join in singing that hymn.

The congregation and Aaronic Priesthood Chorus joined in singing the hymn, "Come, O Thou King of Kings," Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren, I think perhaps if I were as wise as I ought to be, I would endorse, as I do fully, all that has been said by President Evans and President McKay, bear my testimony, and take my seat. However, I suppose that perhaps you expect me at least to try to say something and I shall meet, so far as I can, at least part of your expectations.

I hope that the very few minutes that I shall stand before you, I may really have an interest in your faith and your prayers. I am not saying this idly, I am saying it because I know and you know the power of prayer, and that if I am aided by your prayers, I will be able to say a little something, at least that may be helpful to all of us.

LOSSES RESULTING FROM WAR

I should like Brother Evans' permission to refer to one of his observations, and that is as to the losses we suffered during the last war and as a result of that war. I am not speaking now of the loss of loved ones, great as that loss was. I wonder if I can strike at the very root of the loss. You cannot fill the hearts of men with murder and then have a normal world. When you get hate into the hearts of men, anything can happen—lying, cheating, stealing, immorality, and the thousands of other things that follow. For when we lose our regard and respect for human life, we have very little left. And that is one reason why the Church has taken the position it has taken regarding compulsory military training; because the military men may speak as they wish—I have been rather close to them in years past and have been among some of the best of them—but I tell you that to make an army, you must teach to kill and that must be the thing that you get into the hearts of these young people. And, I repeat, plant that once in their hearts and everything else is possible.

I am going to push the problem one step farther. So far as one can judge, the next war is now planning under a system that will call for the use of weapons which will wipe out cities and, if necessary, nations. I have had it reported—I do not know how accurately—that our military men are saying that if we had a forty-eight hour lead, the war would be over. How many of us brethren are really horrified by the thought of the indiscriminate, wholesale slaughter of men, women and children—the old, the decrepit, the diseased; or are we sitting back and saying, "Let's get at it first."

How far away is the spirit of murder from the hearts of those of us who take no thought in it? We have travelled a long distance since the opening of World War I.

COURSE OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

There is not time for me tonight to trace, even briefly, the course of international relations since the day when the great Grotius wrote his great work concerning war and peace; but I would like to say to you this: That when we went into the Civil War, there was no rule or regulation of war, and I would like to say to you, further, that the United States Army—the Union Army—drew up the first Military Code that the world has ever known. It was drawn by Francis Liebert, a political exile from Germany, and it is known as General Order 100. And I should like to tell you, briefly, that it provided that unfortified places should not be bombarded, that works of art should be sacred, that hospitals should be protected, that non-belligerents should not be killed, that the children, the aged, the infirm, the mothers and the babes at their breasts should be preserved, and it was sought to make war as human as an agency of Satan can be. Today, we sit quietly, with our consciences scarcely stricken when we contemplate Nagasaki and Hiroshima where we introduced the use of the Atom Bomb. Now, if you want to know where the losses of war are, that great field to which I have referred is where you can look.

PRINCIPLE OF UNITY

I want to revert to my favorite theme in these Priesthood meetings, that of unity; and I do urge you brethren to come to a unity of faith in your feelings, one with another, in your ministrations among the people, in your administering of the affairs of the Church. I hope that we shall not have brought to the ears of the First Presidency, more situations where Bishops and Presidents of Stakes cannot agree. You Presidents of Stakes have no right to try to impose your will upon the Bishops; and you Bishops have no right to resist the counsel of the Presidents of Stakes, because you feel somewhat differently. Work together. Make mutual concessions on matters of opinions. There are precious few all-wise men in the world.

RELIEF SOCIETY WHEAT

One more point I would like to touch: Some of you older men here have been through what I have been through out in the fields. I do not recollect the days of the scythe, but I do remember the days of what we called the "dropper," which was a great advance over the scythe. And you who know about it will remember that you had to have enough men scattered around the field to bind the grain as fast as it was cut. The next advance was where it was raked off at the side, and then we had the self-binder, etc.

In the early days of this Church, in the days of the scythe and the "dropper," while it was felt that we might have trouble to get enough to eat, the Relief Society was asked to begin to accumulate wheat. And how did they do it, brethren? They were to go out in the fields and glean after we men had taken out of the field all that we thought was worthwhile. And to those of you who have bent in the sun, as some of us have, and had the sun bake your backs as you bound the grain by hand, working as perhaps you had not worked before, and maybe since, so that you know the heat, dirt, and the discomfort and all the rest of it—I want you to think about the women that we afterwards let go into the same hot fields where we had cut the grain and taken all we cared to garner, that they might glean, pick up the occasional wheat heads we had left. This wheat which the sisters so gleaned, was hauled into the yards and threshed. Over the years, it accumulated in their bins until they had three hundred or four hundred thousand bushels, wheat laid up against a day of need. Enough to give bread for one year to 50,000 or 60,000 people.

Then we got into international trouble and the Government came along and took it and paid us for it. The Presiding Bishop handled this wheat fund for years, paying to the Relief Society an interest return thereon. When the Welfare Program was set up, we reinvested the money in wheat.

BUILDING FOR WOMEN

But in the meanwhile the sisters had been promised a building and they began to build what we now call the Presiding Bishop's Office. The sisters thought it was to be their house, but time went on and the Presiding Bishopric needed it—not this Presiding Bishopric, I do not know what they would do about it if the situation arose now—but the Presiding Bishopric then needed the building, so they took it, and it became the Presiding Bishop's Office. Well, I hear of some Bishops who expect the Relief Society to furnish the money to run the Ward. I am always reminded, as I think about such a situation as between a husband and the wife, of the farmer's wife who makes a little butter and gathers a few eggs, etc., you brethren know—she gets a little money and father gets into financial trouble and does not have any money to pay his taxes or other obligation, and so he "borrows," he "borrows" Mother's money and too often never gets where he can pay it back.

You know these women of ours are as near angels as some of us are going to see for a long time.

Now, these Relief Society sisters are starting out with high hopes and a great deal of confidence in the Presiding Bishopric—they want to build a building for themselves. There has been some talk about it as being the wrong time. It is nearly always the wrong time for Mother to have a little bit of money.

Now, brethren, Bishops, let us see if we cannot help them a little. I know no reason why we should not, and every reason why we should. If there is any Bishop in this Church who thinks he can get along without his Relief Society, he does not yet know his job. And if he is getting along without his Relief Society, he is not doing his job. So, I ask you, brethren, not to hang back in helping your wives in this matter. They are not going to ask you for much, five dollars, I believe—any one of them is worth five dollars. Let us hear no more sour talk about this Relief Society Building.

THE CONDITION OF OUR HEARTS

Now, I want to return—and then I will close—to this question of the condition of our hearts. Brethren, I beseech you, put hate out of your hearts, fill them with the love of your fellow-men and bring into your consciousness the enormity of the crime that is contemplated and pray God that some way may be found to avoid it. If the nations will seek for peace in the spirit of the peace of Christ, it will be found. I fear they will not do it.

God give us strength to live our lives day by day, give us the testimony that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph was the Prophet, build the testimonies we already have until they fill our beings, to the upbuilding of our strength, our determination to do the will of God, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I endorse heartily the fine instructions you have already received. I think perhaps this is the largest assembly of Priesthood that the world has ever seen. Every man here and every boy here, who has conferred upon him the Aaronic or Melchizedek Priesthood, has a portion of divine authority. In my judgment, no other place in the world in our day or in olden times has had such an experience. And there are not very many places in the world where you could get as many men together in a religious service as we have here tonight.

The brethren have been calling our attention today, to the fact that we have some things to do that we have not yet accomplished. Immorality is just as terrible in the world today as it ever has been; that is, the results are just as bad. Dishonesty brings the same dread and destruction. Conditions generally are pitiable.

LETTER FROM GERMANY

I have a letter here that comes from a portion of the old world, and I will call your attention to part of it. Here is a man who is writing to a friend. This brother is in the Russian Zone of Germany. He is writing to a young man who had performed a mission in Germany several years ago. The letter reads: "As you know, my wife is very fragile and delicate, as you were in Dresden when she brought our little Claus into the world. He will be nine years old on the thirty-first of March. Three years later she bore me another son, and this year in June, we are expecting another child.

Now, I am fearful that my wife will not be able to carry on, because of this famine and undernourishment." He says, "You know, together with others, what we need. This is what I have to ask you, and do not be afraid. The Church has already helped us twice with food, besides the times they have given us clothing, but it is only a drop of water on a hot stove—not delicacies that we need, but bread and potatoes. We have no potatoes at all in our house and there are none that can be bought in the stores. The daily ration of my wife in her present critical condition is, as follows: (for each day) nine ounces of bread, a little less than one ounce of sugar, less than one ounce of meat, a little less than one ounce of lard, one ounce of marmalade, and a little less than one ounce of other staples."

EUROPEAN RELIEF

This condition is the result of war and famine in Europe. He calls attention to the fact that they do not know what to do, they do not know where to obtain food. They appreciate what the Church has already done. We have shipped a hundred carloads of food, bedding and clothing, since the war, into those countries. Unfortunately, in this particular section, much of it has been taken—that is, some of it has been stolen, thus preventing delivery to those those for whom it was intended. Many of our people here have been sending packages. And if you send small packages by mail this individual says that it will probably be delivered, but if it comes any other way that the Russian Government, that is, those that represent the Russian Government will just take it, no matter what quantity it is, and dole out just enough to keep people from starvation. By the way, there was another thing in that letter—and I want to be sure I get it right, because it was astonishing to me. He told how much milk the small children were permitted to have. Perhaps I cannot turn to it in this letter in a hurry, but the small children have nothing else but just a small portion of milk once a day.

When I think of the blessings that we have, brethren, think of the way the Lord has made the desert to blossom and bear fruit; when I think of the comforts that we have in our homes, our opportunities, and then realize that there are some of our brethren and sisters in the old world that have not enough to eat but are suffering for the want of food and other necessities, I am grateful to the Lord for his bounties extended to us and am glad that we are sharing with those in need.

RELIEF SOCIETY BUILDING

President Clark has referred to our Relief Society that has done a marvelous piece of work in providing quilts and bedding for thousands of needy people and who are on hand always to help. The suggestion is now that we assist them to build a house, for their own use. They started the house that they are now in, and it was intended to have been a women's building but it became necessary, apparently, to take most of it over for other purposes and the sisters have had one floor of the house that was to have been theirs for the Relief Society. But they have not complained, and have gone right along. It would be a fine thing if the women of this Church could possess an office building and meeting place of their own and I hope that each of us who know of what they are trying to do—when they come into the neighborhood they will probably ask for a little contribution to help build a house—will feel that they are worth a good deal more than the small amount they ask for, and that we will demonstrate to our wives and our daughters that we appreciate their efforts.

CONDITION OF THE WORLD

It seems to me that the world never could have been in any worse condition than it is now, even at the time of the flood, or at the time of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, or the time of the destruction of other places in the world, the destruction in this country at the time of the crucifixion of the Savior. Wickedness was so terrible, and people did not believe in God, apparently; they refused to accept the idea that there was a God; notwithstanding, they were warned in time to repent if they would have done. In the case of Nineveh they did repent and were not destroyed, but we find so many people today who do not believe in God, do not believe in the divine mission of Jesus Christ—millions of them—and yet, He is the Father of us all. It is a strange thing how difficult it is for many people to believe that there is a God. There are many who are anti-Christ, they can believe in anything, almost, that you can think of and produce arguments for believing it, and I want to say to you today, that the largest portion of the population of the world that we live in is anti-Christ, not the followers of Christ at all. And among those who claim to believe in Christianity, comparatively few of them really believe in the divine mission of Jesus Christ.

Well, what is the result? People have turned away from the Lord and He cannot bless them when they refuse to be blessed. Our Heavenly Father has said to His children, all down through the ages, "If you will follow Me and keep My commandments, the fullness of the earth shall be yours." That has been His promise, and it has been fulfilled, notwithstanding that selfishness and immorality and other sins creep into the hearts of individuals, and they turn away from the Lord.

It is a good deal like a man once said to me—or remarked in a place where I happened to be—"Why, these people here seem to think I am full of the devil, but I am not." And I said to him, "My brother, did you ever know anybody that was full of the devil and knew it?" That is one of the tricks of the devil: To get possession of you and keep you from knowing it. And that is one of our difficulties.

ABSENCE OF SPIRIT OF GOD

This community has been an example in many respects—I speak now of the Latter-day Saint communities in different parts of the country—our sons and our daughters have been very reasonably careful to honor us and help us, I am sure. But this terrible world war that has filled people with hatred for one another, has had its effect on everybody, apparently. And there is no longer the idea among the children of men that they can sit down around a peace table and satisfy all those who are concerned. Why? Because they do not have the Spirit of God; and without it they never will come to an agreement. Now, we know that and the world does not know it.

DANGER OF ANTI-CHRISTS

In our own country we are in danger of anti-Christ; we are in danger of those who prefer to have their own way regardless of whether it is right or wrong. And I want to say that there are in our own community men and women who are looking with toleration and with some anxiety that we do not say anything unkind about those people across the sea who are just as wicked as they can be. It is not our business to criticize them. But it is our business to see that they do not bring into our community the policies and falsehoods and wickedness that control them in their own land.

The newspapers give us a little information now and again—not very much. And there comes in through the mails, to many of us, magazines of various kinds. I wonder if we are paying attention to what is going on, as a people, and realizing that if we do not prevent anti-Christ from controlling our Government of the United States, we have got to take a stand on the side of the Savior. We cannot be on the other side of the fence.

Now, we have had information and instruction that no other people in the world have had. We know that God lives. We know that Jesus is the Christ. We know that the Gospel is upon the earth, but the other people do not know that and are in the hands of the adversary. If they only had the understanding that we have, that God lives and that we are all His children and that we will be judged by our works here in this earth and by our lives, probably they would feel different, but they do not seem to know that. And on the contrary, there is bitterness and hatred in their hearts, for one another, and it is not a question of whether it is right or wrong; it is a question of which one has the most power.

INSTRUMENTS OF DESTRUCTION

Reference has been made to the Atom Bomb. That is only one thing. But just imagine, take this group here tonight, one bomb dropped upon this house that we are in, such as was dropped over there in Japan and there would not be any of us left to tell the tale. They are being manufactured, and other instruments of destruction, through the wisdom and intelligence of men, all of them sons of the living God, but they are being utilized not to find the way of peace, but to find other means of power and aggression against those that they associate with. That is our danger. And this Church cannot remain idle and silent in regard to things of that kind.

If people come into our community and try to teach our families things that are harmful, surely, knowing our responsibility, we will ask the help of our Heavenly Father to teach them better. We do not have to become angry. We do not have to be filled with hatred, but we should be filled with wisdom that comes from our Heavenly Father when we keep His commandments. We should have the privilege of going to the Lord in prayer for guidance when we are in doubt. He will always hear and answer our prayers if we are worthy to be heard.

AID FOR WAR-STRICKEN COUNTRIES

And so, my brethren, let us set our houses in order. Let us see if we cannot do a few things that we have not been doing. We are becoming so wrapped up with the world that we forget the people who are suffering that we could help, in many cases. The Church that you belong to has done a magnificent job, and the people who belong to it have been sending means in addition to what the Welfare Organization has sent to the war-stricken countries, including food, clothing, bedding and medicines. They have done a fine piece of work, but it is only partly done and we will have to continue, and unless we are willing to continue we can hardly go to the Lord and say, "Heavenly Father, give us a bounteous harvest." They are all His children. They need us; they need not only our moral support and our religious teaching, but they need food and clothing and bedding and help of all kinds because, in many cases, they haven't anything left. If you could see some of the letters that come into our office from some of the poor people over there, it would wring your hearts. People who have been taken away from their homes with the idea that they were going to be allowed to settle elsewhere, and all of a sudden deserted, and then when they returned to their homes, found them pillaged and robbed of what they had—everything—and left helpless, with no place to go.

GRATITUDE FOR BLESSINGS

And so, tonight, as we sit in the comfort of this grand auditorium, this house that was reared during the poverty of the people, when we did not have so many conveniences, at the same time when the Temple was going on, think how the Lord has blessed us! And I am sure we are grateful for it and we will continue to be grateful as long as we have the Spirit of our Heavenly Father; the feeling of gratitude as a result of enjoying the Spirit of the Lord. And when we have so much to be grateful for, surely, we will be glad not to let somebody else do it, but to do our portion.

Now, we have had a wonderful two days of conference. We have another day tomorrow, and what a privilege it is to know that we can sit here in comfort, enjoying the influences that come from our Heavenly Father, listening to the most delightful music that you can hear anywhere in the world, and then go where we can find food and places where we may be able to lay our bodies down when they are tired.

And, by the way, brethren, if you know of anybody who has not a place, let us all try to help out, because there are people here from many places, some of whom have been unable to find rooms. If you will go to Bro. Romney's office, who looks after the Welfare Organization, at 19 W. South Temple, today, or tomorrow, or the day after as long as the city is crowded, I am sure he will try to be of assistance. I am giving you that because there might be cases, and we have had that happen once or twice here in Salt Lake City, where people did not know where to go and they stayed out all night or sat in the hotels in chairs. Well, now, that is a part of our work. They are our Brothers and Sisters, that have come in and we want them to be happy, and I am sure most of you have done something, who live here, to help take care of the group. I know that I never have any difficulty in having the house I live in filled, and I know that I am happy when they come and help to fill it and the Lord has blessed me for it.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Now, there are many things that I might talk about, tonight, but I want to raise my voice to you and say, our Heavenly Father raised up the very men that framed the Constitution of the United States. He said He did. He gave to us the greatest Palladian of human rights that the world knows anything about, the only system whereby people could worship God according to the dictates of their consciences without, in any way, being molested when the law, itself, was in effect. Now that is what the Lord gave to us. That is the Constitution of this country. Yet, we have people who would like to change that and bring some of those forms of government that have failed absolutely to make peace and happiness and comfort any other place in the world, and exchange what God has given to us—the fullness of the earth and the riches of liberty and happiness. Yet, there are those who go around whispering and talking and saying, "Let us change this thing." I am saying to you that to me the Constitution of the United States of America is just as much from my Heavenly Father as the Ten Commandments. When that is my feeling, I am not going to go very far away from the Constitution, and I am going to try to keep it where the Lord started it, and not let anti-Christians come into this country that began because people wanted to serve God.

People who came here came that they might honor God without molestation. They did some very foolish and unwise things, but after awhile the Lord took a hand. He was ready to organize His Church, or would be soon, and so He raised up men that knew how to frame the Constitution of our great country and made it possible for an organization such as is in this house tonight to enjoy the blessings that we have enjoyed all these years, sometimes under difficulties, of course, but not the trials and distresses that other countries have had. So let us appreciate it and let us evidence to our Heavenly Father that we do appreciate it, not by talking about it but by letting our light so shine—the light of righteousness, the light of faith, the light of honesty, the light of generosity, the light of truthfulness, all those things that our Heavenly Father indicates that we should manifest to the world—let that light so shine that others seeing our good works will desire to be identified with an organization that seeks to live the commandments of God and honor Him. If we will do that I am sure that some problems may pass us by that otherwise may come to us.

KINDNESS TO WIVES ENJOINED

Brethren, be kind to your wives. I hope that there is no man here who has married one of the daughters of God—and He loves them, they are His daughters—who is not willing to do by her as he knows the Lord would have him do. Do not make her just a convenience in the home to do the slavery and to gratify his appetites—that is not what women were given to men, as wives, for—and I want to say to you that it is your duty and your privilege, as men who hold the Priesthood, to honor your wives and your children if you expect them to honor you. Unless you honor them, God will not be pleased with you. Live in such a way, in love and kindness, that peace and prayer and thanksgiving will be in your homes together. Do not let your homes just be a place to hang your hats at night and get your meals and then run off some place else but let your homes be the abiding place of the Spirit of the Lord. And so, let us reach out, each of us, help our neighbors as well as ourselves, set the examples in our homes and as sons and daughters of the living God in our great community, working hand in hand.

SET HOMES IN ORDER

Reference has been made to some of the divorces that are increasing in the land. I want to say to you that the larger portion of the divorces are the result of infidelity and immorality, and unfortunately on the part of both men and women. So, brethren, let us set our own homes in order. Let us make our adjustments. Let us live so that we can truthfully look toward the skies and say, "Heavenly Father, we want to be worthy of what you have given to us. We would like to be an example to our neighbors and to all who come in contact with us." And if we will do that, our wives will be true to us, and our children will appreciate us and be true to us. I want to tell you if we want happiness in the Celestial Kingdom of our God, we will have to lay the foundation for it right here; and part of that requirement of the Lord is that we do right in our homes and live right. Some men think that because they hold the Priesthood that that gives them a special way in which they may conduct themselves in their homes. I want to tell you that you men who hold the Priesthood will never get into the Celestial Kingdom, unless you honor your wives and your families and train them and give them the blessings that you want for yourselves.

The fact that they hold the Priesthood will be to many men a condemnation, because of the manner in which they have treated it, regarding it as though it were something very ordinary. Priesthood is a word as the titles Apostle, Prophet, are words and names that ought not to be repeated unnecessarily. We ought to honor these sacred names that bring to us the blessings when we understand.

GRATITUDE FOR COMPANIONSHIP

Brethren, I have no way of expressing my gratitude to you who are here tonight for your companionship. I have no way of explaining to my brethren whom I associate with, my Counselors, how thankful I am to them for their help and their kindness and their cooperation. I love my brethren. When I see this fine lot of young men here tonight, who are here to sing to us—a glorious group—all these boys, every one of them, a child of our Heavenly Father with the possibility held out to them to grow to manhood, to grow to greatness, to grow to eternal happiness in the Kingdom of our Lord, I think what a privilege it is to have them here tonight with us. What a joy it must be to them to be in this great house of the Lord tonight under the influence of the Spirit of our Heavenly Father.

The Lord bless you, brethren. We have other meetings tomorrow; the usual meetings will be held as we have been holding them the last two days, and in addition to that we have a meeting on Wednesday in the Temple, for the brethren who have been invited, the Presidents of Stakes, Bishops, and a few others, because the Temple is so small it will only hold a comparatively few, but we would like those brethren to plan to be here in this building at eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, all of those who are expected to go there, assemble here in Stake capacity, the Stake Presidents meet with your counselors and meet with the others of your Stakes that are supposed to go, and we will find right here, before we go into the Temple, who is going in and whether we can all get in or not, and of course we are hoping that we all can.

Bishop, what time is your meeting tomorrow night? Seven o'clock in this building. The Aaronic Priesthood of the Church, represented by the Bishops and those whom they bring with them are expected to meet here in this building tomorrow night at seven o'clock, and I am sure those who are fortunate enough to be here will have a happy time.

LORD'S SIDE OF THE LINE

Now, brethren, again I pray that the Lord will bless you, not only tonight but henceforth and forever. Let us each go from this house this night with a renewed determination that we will stay on the Lord's side of the line, no matter what the others may do, for on His side of the line there is safety, and on the other side of the line there is not. I pray that He may give us wisdom to choose that which is holy, for it will give to us the blessings we desire, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Singing by the Aaronic Priesthood Chorus, "Joseph Smith's First Prayer," by Smyth, Elder N. Lorenzo Mitchell conducting.

Elder William J. Lewis, President of the Yellowstone Stake, (St. Anthony, Idaho) offered the closing prayer.

---

The congregational singing of the Conference meetings was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir presented musical numbers at the Sunday meetings. J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, directed the singing of the Choir.

The Choir singing during the Monday sessions was by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Frankin Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the Organ.

The Choir singing during Tuesday sessions was by the Ricks College Choir, with John M. Anderson conducting, and with Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The Aaronic Priesthood Chorus, with Elders N. Lorenzo Mitchell and John Parrish conducting, furnished numbers for the General Priesthood meeting. Frank W. Asper was at the organ.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:00, as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Frank W. Asper was at the organ, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper, and Roy M. Darley.

Stenographic notes of the conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson
Clerk of the Conference.

For more than 100 years vigorous, but futile attempts have been made to explain him away, only to be rejected, discredited or abandoned.

One explanation survives the tests of time and truth. Read it, and its many-sided manifestations in these books:

The One Hundred Nineteenth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Nineteenth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, October 1, 2, and 3, 1948.

The general sessions of the Conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting was held Saturday evening at 7:00.

The Church of the Air broadcast (a copy of which is included in this record) was presented Sunday morning, October 3, at 8:30 over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, which was presented over KSL and, through the courtesy and facilities of Columbia Broadcasting Company's system, throughout the United States, on Sunday morning at 9:30, is also made a part of this report.

Television equipment having been installed in the Assembly Hall, on the Tabernacle Grounds, those who assembled in that building were enabled to see and hear the speakers and those who rendered musical numbers.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided at each of the sessions. He conducted the services at each of the meetings, with the exception of the Friday afternoon meeting, which was conducted by President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., and the Saturday morning meeting, which was conducted by President David O. McKay.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The Conference commenced Friday morning, October 1, at 10:00, with President George Albert Smith presiding and conducting the services.

Every seat in the great Tabernacle auditorium and galleries was occupied, and in addition many people found accommodation in the Assembly Hall, directly south of the Tabernacle, where they listened to and watched the proceedings by means of a loud-speaking system and television.

President George Albert Smith:

This is a glorious sight and we welcome you to the house of the Lord at the beginning of our conference that will now extend for three days. The Relief Society had this building filled to overflowing yesterday, a wonderful group of women, and I am sure they had a happy time. Now, we follow up today with the General Conference, and I am assuming that each of us has come to worship. We are here to wait upon the Lord, and he has promised us that his Spirit would always be with us when we do that.

Our program this morning, so that you may understand what we are going to do, will be as follows:

This is the opening session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

---

***Elder S. Dilworth Young was absent, presiding over the New England Mission.

There are on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Spencer W. Kimball, who is convalescing at home under his doctor's orders; Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Missions; and President S. Dilworth Young, President of the New England Mission.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

This full service will be broadcast over Station KSL, Salt Lake City, as will also the service this afternoon, beginning at 2:00 p.m.; likewise the services tomorrow, Saturday, at 10:00 a.m., and 2:00 p.m.; and also the two services on Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. By arrangement through KSL, these same sessions will be broadcast over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

Any messages and calls that come to us from persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir singing during today's sessions will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen is the conductor; Elder Frank W. Asper the organist.

The first song will be: "Come, Come Ye Saints," sung by the Choir and congregation, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by President James E. Ririe of the East Rigby Stake, Rigby, Idaho.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Come, Come Ye Saints."

President James E. Ririe of the East Rigby Stake offered the invocation.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region sang: "O Come, Let Us Worship."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I appreciate the fact that there are many people who come to this house from time to time who do not realize what a blessing a gathering of this kind means to those who attend. As your first speaker this morning, and for the benefit of the radio audience, I will say, George Albert Smith, the President of the Church will now speak.

Friday, October 1

First Day

RELIEF SOCIETY CONFERENCE

I announce to you that you can find nowhere else in all the world a gathering comparable to this one. We have had two days of meetings on this block. This house has been filled with women of the Relief Society of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints gathered here, representing the stakes and missions of the Church. They represent the oldest women's religious organization in the world. They came, not on a sight-seeing trip, but to worship, and to be instructed. They came here to the house of the Lord knowing that if they were assembled under proper conditions, they would be blessed. Their two days of mingling and rejoicing together have prepared the way for this other great general conference.

This conference will continue three days, and during that time it will be remarkable if all the seats in the building are not taken and people standing, and in addition to that the Assembly Hall, which has been equipped with radio television, will take care of an overflow as far as possible, and also the open air will be enjoyed by many people listening to the amplified program outside.

As I came in this morning and saw this wonderful audience, these beautiful flowers, our sisters here representing a great organization, the Singing Mothers, I felt subdued in my soul and thankful to my Heavenly Father that it is possible for me to meet with you today. When we think of the disturbances that are in the world, the uncertainty that is in the minds of individuals everywhere as to what may occur, we are grateful to come into the Lord's house as we do this morning, a house that was dedicated to him in the days of the poverty of our people, a house that has been recognized as unusual among all the houses of worship in all the world, and from this tabernacle every Sabbath day there goes forth a broadcast to all the states of the American Union and to many parts of the world in other lands, a broadcast of religious music and a sermonette. Not anything to compare with this program can be found anywhere. These singers voluntarily come here every Sunday to render these programs.

SERVICE OF TABERNACLE CHOIR

For twenty years this great choir has been rendering service to the delight and the spiritual uplift of hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of people, by means of radio, and the choir itself receives no compensation. This organ, when it was built, was one of the great organs of the world and still is, and it has been heard in many lands. Personally I have had the pleasure of hearing it and the choir while visiting in the missions in the South Seas and other places. They are devoting their time, every Sunday, singing praises to our Heavenly Father, causing his children everywhere to rejoice.

Here in Salt Lake City a large percentage of the population are not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but thousands of them listen to this program and seem to have joy in telling us that they feel that it is a rich, spiritual uplift to them.

MISSIONARY WORK

This morning we have over five thousand missionaries scattered throughout the world. For what purpose? "Surely," as one minister said to me in England many years ago, "we don't desire you to come over here to preach; we have all the churches that we can fill." And he said, "We have all the preachers that we can afford to pay. Why do you come over here?"

And my answer to him was, "My brother, we are over here without financial remuneration to share the gospel of Jesus Christ with the wonderful people who dwell in this part of the world."

He asked, "Why don't you go to the heathens like we do?" And I answered, "We do." He asked, "Where do you go?" And I said, "We come right here."

He looked somewhat annoyed, and I said to him, "Now don't be disturbed, my brother. That isn't intended as an offense at all. There are no finer people in the world than you have here, but what is a heathen anyhow?"

With some hesitation he answered, "Well, a heathen is a man who doesn't believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Jesus Christ."

I said, "Do you have any people like that here in Great Britain?"

He dropped his head and said, "Yes, I am sorry to say we have."

Then I said, "Surely you are not going to complain about us if we come over here to help you convert them. You haven't been able to do it, and that is why we are here. We want them all to understand the gospel of Jesus Christ."

Today our five thousand missionaries are scattered over the face of the earth, paying their own expenses or having them paid by their loved ones at home, and the sole purpose of that great missionary effort is that all of your brothers and sisters and mine, all of the children of our Heavenly Father, may be brought to a knowledge of the purpose of life and be given understanding of what it means to be born into this world and to know that we are living eternal lives. The entire world is a marvelous missionary field for this great Church! There are some nations in which we have been unable to do missionary work, but the Lord in his own way, will provide for doing that. And, of course, many people hear the gospel of Jesus Christ by means of radio, who wouldn't otherwise hear it.

CENTER OF MISSIONARY ACTIVITY

Speaking of the missionary field, I wonder sometimes, if we realize that Salt Lake City is the center of our great missionary activity. There isn't a city in the world, in my judgment, that is better known than this city because of the temple, the Tabernacle, and the great organ and choir broadcasting as they have been every Sunday for nearly twenty years. Salt Lake City is one of the world's most beautiful cities.

I wonder if some of you realize the hours and the days and the months that are spent by your brothers under the direction of President Irvin T. Nelson of the Big Cottonwood Stake beautifying the grounds, making the flowers to bloom and the shrubs to be delightful, the lawns to be kept green. I would like those brethren who do that fine work to know that many of us appreciate it very much. They are helping the people who come here to become interested in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and many of them say, "Why we never saw anything like this any place else," and they go away and tell their neighbors and friends.

Wherever I go, it seems to be in the minds of people, many of them, and they say, "I'm going to Salt Lake City some day. I want to go out there and see what you people have accomplished in the wilderness." We haven't done it all, brethren and sisters. This is the Lord's Church. He gave it the name of his Beloved Son. He directed the pioneers to come here. He didn't send them some place else, and, under his guidance, and under his inspiration, the people have lived out here and, with his blessing, the soil has been made fruitful, and there is no more beautiful place in all the world that is occupied as homes by the sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father than the section of country that you live in. Surely we should be grateful.

Referring to the missionary work, think of sending more than five thousand into the world to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ to people who believe that they already have it, and yet when they compare what the Lord has revealed in this latter-day in addition to what they already have, they discover that it took the revelations of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day to make the Bible, the Old and the New Testaments, plain to these people.

CONVERSION THROUGH BOOK OF MORMON

I remember a good many years ago when I was down in California, I met a man who was a great geologist, whose name was Robert Hill. While being employed in research in Mexico and Central America by the Smithsonian Institute or National Museum, a Book of Mormon fell into his hands, and he read it. He was working under the direction of the department at Washington, where they collect all of the curiosities from the various sections of the country. He was there as a government employee. The National Museum, I presume, is where much of the material may be found.

When he read the Book of Mormon he asked for a leave of absence. He came to Salt Lake City and inquired for somebody who would indicate to him the source of the Book of Mormon, for he said, "This book explains some things that the scientists are unable to harmonize." Dr. James E. Talmage took him in hand and informed him as to the source of the Book of Mormon, how it had been revealed, how the people had come here under the direction of our Heavenly Father and built up this country. Before Robert Hill left, he said, "This is what I have been looking for," and he was baptized and became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He returned to Mexico, and I saw him later in Los Angeles. When I asked him what effect the Book of Mormon had on his life, he said, "Why, Brother Smith, it enabled me to understand the Bible as I have never understood it before."

There have been distributed hundreds of thousands of tracts and books teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, the expense for which has been paid by the Church and its members in order that other people might enjoy what we enjoy.

There isn't anything that enriches our lives like an understanding of the purposes of life and the ability to live the gospel of Jesus Christ. All happiness worthy of the name comes to us when we observe the teachings of our Lord and live to be worthy to be his sons and daughters.

VISITORS TO TEMPLE SQUARE

Since coming into this building this morning I have asked how many strangers there are who come onto this block each year. Last year I had supposed was the greatest year we have ever had because of the number coming here during our celebration, but I understand that this year up to today 840,662 of the children of our Heavenly Father, your brothers and sisters and mine, have come here onto this block to see and learn what the Lord has done. I think it is marvelous, and so this morning as I stand here in your presence, I am grateful that I belong to the same organization that you belong to, grateful that all the good things that the world enjoys, all that is true and wholesome and uplifting and educational may be enjoyed by the membership of this Church without having to give up one thing.

I have said to many people when they have asked me, "What is there about this organization that you belong to? What is it that you are so concerned about, that you send your missionaries all over the world?" I have replied sometimes, "We want you all to be happy. We want you all to rejoice as we rejoice. After awhile we will have to meet our record, and if we have been faithful, I am sure the Father of us all in the world will thank us and bless us for bringing so many of his sons and daughters to an understanding of the purpose of life and how to enjoy it under the influence of his spirit."

OBEDIENCE BRINGS BLESSINGS

It is glorious to live in this part of the world. I might say it is glorious to live in this age of the world notwithstanding the sorrow and distress and uncertainty that exist. We have received an assurance that our Heavenly Father is mindful of us if we will be faithful. We have no promise that he will care for us on any other terms, but he has said that if we will honor him and keep his commandments, he will watch over us and protect and bless us. I think of that lovely audience that I saw here yesterday, all our sisters, and now this morning there is a great mixed audience apparently mostly men. Yet we are only a small portion of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that has become identified with the Church of the Lamb of God since the year 1830. It is marvelous, my brothers and sisters, what the Lord has done—and he has done it.

INSPIRATION OF GENERAL CONFERENCE

We will have the pleasure today and during the days to follow of hearing quite a number of those who devote their time to teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. We have people here from nearly all parts of the Church throughout the world. Many have come a long way, not to hear men speak, but to feel the inspiration of the Almighty as it flows to those who are called to address us, play for us, and sing for us in this wonderful house of the Lord.

I know that God lives. I know that Jesus is the Christ. And I am thankful to know that we are all brothers and sisters—thankful that he gives us all opportunities so to adjust our lives here that when mortality is complete and our work is done that we will dwell in his presence and enjoy the companionship of those we love forever. Shouldn't that make us feel that our homes must be the abiding place of the Spirit of the Lord? Shouldn't that make each of us feel, where we know what the Lord has advised us to do, that it is the best for us and we will do what he wants us to do? I want to say that the happiest people in all the world are those who obey the counsel of our Heavenly Father.

I pray that his spirit may continue with us. I pray that when we have finished this conference, we may go away feeling that we have waited upon our Heavenly Father and not in vain. We will return to our homes, sharing what we have enjoyed here with those not able to come, and to our families with a renewed determination that we will keep the commandments of God and that we will so adjust ourselves that our homes will be the abiding place of his spirit that will guide us into all truth. That the Lord may add his blessings and his peace be with us, as we go through this conference, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

It is written that faith is the first principle of revealed religion, the foundation of all righteousness. (See D. & C. Lectures on Faith 1:1.) This being true, all our righteousness is due to faith, and it follows that our unrighteousness is due to a lack of faith. We desire in preaching the gospel to the Saints and strangers alike to establish as far as possible faith in the minds and the hearts of people that they may bring forth righteousness, for righteousness is what makes for salvation in the kingdom of God, and we are all candidates for salvation.

EVIDENCES OF GOD'S EXISTENCE

In my remarks today, I desire to speak of some of the evidences of the divine, personal, and glorified existence of God, the Eternal Father, and of his Son, Jesus Christ, a knowledge of whom I regard as the world's greatest need; also to give evidence of the fact that Joseph Smith was a divinely inspired prophet of God, that he was an instrument in the hands of God in the restoration of the everlasting gospel, and the establishment of the Church and kingdom of God on earth in this, the gospel Dispensation of the Fulness of Times.

JOSEPH SMITH'S FIRST VISION

On a beautiful spring morning in the year 1820, a fourteen-year-old boy of Manchester, New York, being considerably exercised over religion, and believing the scripture which reads:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him (James 1:5)

retired into a grove of trees nearby to pray. He tells his own story as follows:

After I had retired to the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me, and finding myself alone, I kneeled down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God. I had scarcely done so, when immediately I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such an astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak. Thick darkness gathered around me, and it seemed to me for a time as if I were doomed to sudden destruction.

But, exerting all my powers to call upon God to deliver me out of the power of this enemy which had seized upon me, and at the very moment when I was ready to sink into despair and abandon myself to destruction—not to an imaginary ruin, but to the power of some actual being from the unseen world, who had such marvelous power as I had never before felt in any being—just at this moment of great alarm, I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me.

It no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the enemy which held me bound. When the light rested upon me I saw two Personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!

My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner, therefore, did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the Personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right—and which I should join.

I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong; and the Personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; that: "they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof."

He again forbade me to join with any of them. . . . (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:15-20.)

It is of supreme importance that the story told by this boy Joseph Smith, and the evidence of its truth, be carefully and prayerfully considered, for upon the truth or falsity of his story, Mormonism, so-called, must stand or fall.

TRUTH CONCERNING GOD REVEALED

In this eventful experience there was revealed to the boy Joseph, and through him, to the world, two exceedingly important truths. First, that God the Eternal Father and his Son Jesus Christ are separate, living personages, glorified and exalted; and second, that all the religious creeds were wrong.

Whatever Joseph's views or understanding pertaining to the personality of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ may have been, he now had a perfect knowledge on that point. He had not before entertained the thought that all the creeds or denominations might be wrong, but on these two points his mind was now clear and at ease.

The debris of a decayed religion having now been removed, room is made in the world for the establishment of the true religion of the Master. It later developed that this boy, Joseph Smith, was raised up of the Lord to be the mighty prophet of the last days, an instrument in the hands of God in the restoration of the everlasting gospel, and in the establishment of his Church and kingdom anew upon the earth, as described by Daniel the prophet in his interpretation of the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar.

EVIL POWER OF SATAN

As important evidence that Joseph's story is true, when he knelt down to pray, he was seized upon by an evil power which bound his tongue, so that he could not speak. Such an attack by Satan might well have been expected.

If his story had not included his experience with the evil power, at that psychological moment, it would have lacked vital evidence of its truth. Satan, who is the enemy of God and of man, has from the beginning thus operated in an effort to defeat the purpose of God whose purpose is the saving of the souls of men.

When Adam and Eve were placed in the Garden of Eden, straightway came Satan tempting them, with the same evil intent. After the personal visitation of God to his servant Moses, as recorded in the first chapter of the Book of Moses, Satan came tempting him, saying:

Moses, son of man, worship me . . . (Moses 1:12)

a presumption of which only Satan could be capable.

When the Savior had fasted forty days and nights and was an hungry, Satan came tempting him, saying:

. . . If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread. (Luke 4:3.)

In what respect was the boy, Joseph Smith, so different from other fourteen-year-old boys of his time that Satan should seek his destruction; and why mention him in connection with Adam and Eve, Moses, and Jesus as objects of Satan's attack? Let us see if we can find the explanation in the following scripture:

Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these were many of the noble and great ones;

And God saw these souls that they were good, and he stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers; for he stood among those that were spirits, and he saw that they were good; and he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born. (Abraham 3:22-23.)

JOSEPH SMITH CHOSEN FOR HIS WORK

Joseph Smith was also one of those noble spirits chosen before he was born. Had any number of boys fourteen years of age, other than Joseph Smith, gone into the woods to pray for light and spiritual guidance, not one of them would have had the vision given to the boy Joseph. He was chosen and ordained for the special work of restoration, and this vision of the Father and the Son was the first step in his life's ministry. No doubt Satan knew of Joseph's calling, and that if he did not succeed in destroying him at this time, he would not be able to do so thereafter; hence the vigorous assault made upon the boy's life.

Again, by the testimony of the eleven living witnesses to the Book of Mormon, the truth of Joseph's story is established, for had his story been untrue, he would have been a great imposter and as such, God would not have used him in bringing forth the Book of Mormon, which contains a fulness of the gospel, as taught by Jesus Christ to the ancient inhabitants of this American continent, which fact is logically established by eleven living witnesses.

NEED OF NEW REVELATION

The need of this new revelation of God today, as in 1820, is apparent from statements such as follows:

In a radio address Elder Thomas C. Romney related a conversation with a professor in a great educational institution in which the professor said to Elder Romney:

Your conception of God, to me, is most absurd. I cannot conceive of a group of people who claim to keep abreast of the times in science, art, and religion, still clinging to the antiquated doctrine that God is in the form of a man.

On page 15 of Shorter Catechism, a textbook of the Presbyterian Church, is found the following:

We must be content to call Father, Son, and Holy Ghost persons; but while we do so, we must always remember that they are utterly unlike any personalities we have ever known. In modern philosophical usage, the term person means a separate and distinct rational individual. But the personality of God is not a numerical or essential trinity of three beings, like Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Another reference showing the need for a new revelation from God is the following:

The Bishop of Liverpool performed the consecration ceremony at Holy Trinity Church, Southport, yesterday, October 11, 1911. In his sermon he said one of the great needs of the Christian Church was power. Religion today was wearing silver slippers and moving in high places, and yet he ventured to think there was a strange want of power about the Church of God, not only in their church, but about every other branch. . . . What was the cause of the strange paralysis that had befallen the church? He believed that the church needed today a rediscovery of God; he believed the church was weak today because God was so distant, so unreal, so dimly seen. Today they saw the results of that dim vision of the distant God.

The first article of religion in the Church of England Prayer book reads as follows:

There is one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; of infinite wisdom, power, and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things, visible and invisible, and in the unity of this godhead, there are three personages of one substance, power, and eternity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

PERSONALITY OF GOD

There are some men of considerable eminence who are not bound by religious creeds, who are frank in their professions of belief in the personality of God, and their views should be weighed in this connection as in opposition to the views of those who do not believe in a personal God. For example:

In a discourse by President Brigham H. Roberts, delivered in this Tabernacle March 15, 1914, he quotes a statement made by William H. Gladstone, a great English statesman, and at one time prime minister of Great Britain, in response to the question put to him as to what he regarded as the world's greatest need; and his answer to that question in substance was that the world's greatest need was to hold more firmly to the conception of God as a personality, to whom man was accountable for his deeds. Said he:

I mean a living faith in a personal God. After sixty years of public life, I hold more strongly than ever to the conviction, deepened and strengthened by long experience, of the reality, and the nearness, and the personality of God.

Henry Ward Beecher, in his book entitled, Lectures on Preaching, page 129, says:

I am compelled to say that I must form an ideal of God, through his Son Jesus Christ. Christ is indispensable to me. My nature needs to fashion the thought of God, though I know him to be a spirit, into something that will nearly or remotely represent that which I know. I hold before my eyes a glorified form, therefore, but after all this glory, whatever may be the nimbus and the effulgence round about it, it is to me a glorified form of a glorified man.

The first Article of Faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reads as follows:

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

What we believe concerning these members of the Godhead is set forth in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 130:22, as follows:

The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit. . . .

These latter quotations and interpretations are in complete harmony with Joseph Smith's vision and with the teachings of the Bible, both the Old and the New Testament, and cannot be successfully controverted. They are truths which all men must accept who would be saved in the kingdom of God; and to which I bear testimony, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers and the congregation joined in singing the hymn: "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet."

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My dear brethren and sisters, it is a real inspiration to look into the faces of so many people as are assembled in this vast congregation. I do humbly pray that the Spirit of God will attend me in the few remarks that I make on this occasion. It is my desire this morning, with the help of the Lord, to say a few words which will supplement the beautiful talk just given by President George F. Richards.

THE CHARACTER OF GOD

It is my sincere desire to bear my testimony and say a few words regarding the Latter-day Saints' concept of God the Eternal Father, whom we as members of the true Church of Jesus Christ so devotedly, humbly, and prayerfully worship.

Shortly before his death, the Prophet Joseph Smith stated that:

It is the first principle of the gospel to know for a certainty the character of God. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 345.)

We read in the gospel of John (and a similar statement is recorded in modern revelation) that:

... this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. (John 17:3; see D. & C. 132:24.)

From these statements made by holy men through divine revelation, we find that the concept of God that a people have is very important in helping to determine the type of life that they live. History affirms that when any group of people have had as their belief the concept that God was a God of love, charity, and kindness; in other words, when they have accepted God as a divine Being possessing all of the characteristics of goodness in an infinite portion, those people have tried to emulate in their lives that type of Deity. On the other hand, when a group of people have believed that the Eternal Father was a God of caprice, a God who is unjust and prone to play favoritism, we find that those people have resorted to very low forms and modes of worship, such as human sacrifice. In fact, their moral behavior was on the same plane as their concept of God.

As I occupy this position this morning, I realize that it will be absolutely impossible for me to explain very accurately the Latter-day Saints' concept of the personality of God the Eternal Father, because he is an infinite being with infinite characteristics and attributes while I am merely a finite man. It is impossible for the finite to understand and fully comprehend the infinite; and yet I would like to say a few words, as I have already indicated, to supplement what President George F. Richards has so masterfully explained regarding Elohim—the Eternal Father.

GOD A PERSONAL BEING

We believe that God is a personal being. By a personal being, we mean that he is a man—an exalted man. Approximately one hundred years ago, soon after Lorenzo Snow became a member of the true Church of Jesus Christ, he formulated a remarkable couplet which has since that time become famous. He said: "As man is, God once was; as God is, man may become." (Lorenzo Snow, The Millennial Star 54:404.) Time and time again during the period of the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Prophet Joseph Smith, various evidences were given to him sustaining, amplifying, and explaining the personality of God. If time would permit, many excellent quotations could be cited from the Doctrine and Covenants which would help to describe the personality of our Eternal Father. However, I would like on this occasion to quote a statement taken from a great sermon which was given by the Prophet Joseph shortly before his death. This quotation is a continuation of the statement I have already quoted from the Prophet. To use his exact words:

It is the first principle of the Gospel to know for a certainty the character of God, and to know that we may converse with him as one man converses with another, and that he was once a man like us; yea, that God himself, the Father of us all, dwelt on an earth, the same as Jesus Christ himself did. . . .

I will go back to the beginning before the world was, to show what kind of a being God is. What sort of a being was God in the beginning? Open your ears and hear, all ye ends of the earth. . . .

God himself was once as we are now, and is an exalted man, and sits enthroned in yonder heavens. That is the great secret. If the veil were rent today, and the great God who holds this world in its orbit, and who upholds all worlds and all things by his power, was to make himself visible,—I say, if you were to see him today, you would see him like a man in form—like yourselves in all the person, image, and very form as a man; for Adam was created in the very fashion, image and likeness of God, and received instructions from, and walked, talked and conversed with him, as one man talks and communes with another. (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pp. 345-346.)

I would like to discuss with you for a moment or two the doctrine of what kind of being God is at the present time. He is an exalted, glorified, celestialized man, but actually and literally a personal being. By this description I mean that his body is eternal, being composed of spiritual matter which cannot decay, age, nor deteriorate. Furthermore, Elohim, or the Eternal Father, is a being brighter than the noonday sun. From that Divine Personage radiates light, light with the characteristic of excessive brilliance.

THE FIRST VISION

I believe that in order best to define what I have in mind, we could with profit refer to that wonderful experience had by the Prophet Joseph Smith, known as the "First Vision," which was so beautifully explained a few moments ago by President George F. Richards. When the Prophet Joseph was engaged in deep prayer on that memorable spring morning in 1820, a pillar of light, as he explained, brighter than the noonday sun came down from heaven and fell upon him. In the midst of that light, Joseph saw two "... Personages whose brightness and glory defy all description," as far as their glory, radiance, and brilliance are concerned. (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith, 2:17.)

The Boy-Prophet returned from the Sacred Grove that morning with more knowledge, yes, with a clearer concept in his mind regarding the personality of God and the Godhead than had all the ministers in the world combined. And it would be no exaggeration to say that his knowledge of God, received through that divine manifestation, surpassed the understanding had at that time by all the people in the world combined. I feel deeply that it is a fact that one of the principal purposes that God the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son had in coming to the Prophet Joseph Smith on that beautiful spring morning was to give to the world again a true concept of the personality of God.

THE HOLY TRINITY

Jesus Christ came into the world in the meridian of time to reveal to the human family the Eternal Father. Shortly before Christ's death Philip asked him to show the Apostles the Father. The Son of Man answered that those who had seen him had seen the Father, meaning that he was a perfect prototype of the Father and that he exemplified the Father in all things. (See John 14:8-9.) Throughout the pages of the New Testament we find a very definite doctrine proclaimed of the actuality and existence of three members in the Godhead—three personal beings, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost—constituting the Holy Trinity.

During the early Christian centuries following the death of Jesus' Apostles, darkness crept into the minds of the Christian leaders. This fact resulted in the holding of council meetings during the early portion of the fourth century for the purpose of re-defining God. At those council meetings, the "Christian Fathers" formulated a creed or creeds in which they attempted to define the personality of God and the Godhead. In those creeds, the three Divine Personages of the Godhead were merged into one. Their new and corrupted concept of God did away with his personal attributes, making of him a God without body, parts, and passions. In fact, they confused and polluted the beautiful concept of the Holy Trinity which had been revealed to his followers by the Son of God by making the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible and indefinable. During the following fifteen hundred years, all Christian churches were affected by the erroneous and benighted thinking of the fourth century "Christian Fathers."

REVELATION OF GOD'S PERSONALITY

Since the Prophet Joseph Smith revealed the fact that the first principle of the gospel is to know for a certainty the character of God and the world was engulfed in spiritual darkness, it became necessary for Elohim, the Eternal Father, to open the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times with a new revelation of his personality. As a result of that revelation and the restoration of the gospel in its fulness, Latter-day Saints accept the viewpoint that God is omnipotent, that he is omniscient, and that he is omnipresent. In other words, he is all-powerful and all-knowing. We believe that he always works according to natural law, and through his understanding of those laws and by putting them into operation he has created worlds without number, that is, they are not numbered to mortal man. In fact, he created this earth upon which we live and gave the laws or put the laws into operation which govern it. Also, he put into operation the laws which govern all the worlds that he has created.

We believe that God is omniscient: that he is all-knowing, that he sees all things and that he hears all sounds. In other words, that his sight and his hearing know no bounds, and that his knowledge is absolutely unlimited. We even believe that so great is the infinite power of that Divine Being that he can see the things that we do at nighttime in our private chambers or even read the secret thoughts of our hearts.

We also believe that God the Eternal Father is omnipresent. Now by that I might point out that since he is a personal being, he can be in only one place at one time; and yet from him emanates a divine substance or spirit which we term the Spirit of God, the Spirit of the Lord, or the Holy Spirit. That divine substance emanates from God to fill the immensity of space. It is through that divine spirit that he performs his great work. Also, it is through that divine Spirit that he is omnipresent.

DIVINE ATTRIBUTES

This Supreme Being whom we worship has a number of attributes. In fact, all the good attributes that you and I possess, he possesses to an infinite degree. The attributes of love, justice, mercy, kindness, integrity, honesty, charity, purity, and constancy are among those that belong to him. The author of the Gospel of John was explaining and defining God, and he summarized his great explanation by saying that "God is love." So deep, so great, so universal, and so all-comprehensive is the love of our Divine Father that John's definition—"God is love"—describes the Infinite and Eternal One very aptly.

We are informed by the holy scriptures that God is a God that cannot sin; and also, that God is a God that cannot lie. He lives in accordance with truth and eternal law, therefore, every act that he performs is in complete harmony with divine truth and divine law.

The Book of Mormon prophets proclaimed that all truth emanates from God and that he is the author of all truth. Having put himself in harmony with all truth and by being interested in you and me, he reveals to us those divine and eternal truths as fast as we are willing and able to receive them; and so he is the author of all truth.

One of the greatest attributes of God is the attribute of intelligence. We read in the Doctrine and Covenants that "The glory of God is intelligence." (D. & C. 93:36.) In the great vision given to Father Abraham, referred to by President Richards, the Lord showed the ancient patriarch the spirits that he had created and made the remark, "I am the Lord thy God, I am more intelligent than they all." (Abraham 3:19.) For these reasons I have concluded that God's intelligence is one of his greatest attributes.

You and I are closely akin to God. He is our Father. He is actually and literally the Father of all people who have ever been in this world and who ever will be in this world. We were born unto him in the spirit world as his sons and daughters. By being his children, we inherited from him the divine attributes that he as our Father possesses. It is our duty to develop those attributes. Since we are his sons, he has a great concern over us and a great love for us. He desires that we live in harmony with the gospel plan of salvation in order that we may eventually come back to dwell in his presence.

TESTIMONY

In conclusion I would like to bear my testimony.* I know that God lives. I know that he is the Father of the human family. I know that he has a deep concern and love for us. I know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the true and Living God, the Savior of the world, and that his name is the only name given whereby salvation can come to the children of men. I know that Joseph Smith is a true prophet of God, and the great prophet who was foreordained to open the last dispensation of the gospel. If you and I will live according to the teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ, I know that we will some day return to the presence of God our Eternal Father and become exalted, glorified, and celesttialized beings, receiving a portion, along with him, of the great glory that he possesses.

I humbly pray that you and I will do this, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President Smith, my dear brothers and sisters, (and I can call you my dear brothers and sisters because I feel that way towards you, and I hope you feel that way toward me), I feel very humble this morning, and I can publicly admit that I have asked the Lord not once, but many times, to bless me this day while I speak to you for a few moments. I am sure that I could not occupy this position and say anything worth while without the help of the Lord, and I will be grateful to you if I can have an interest in your faith and prayers.

DEFENSE IN SPIRITUALITY

This is surely a spiritual conference, and the Spirit of the Lord is here in rich abundance. Each one of us knows that. The testimonies that we have listened to about the Prophet Joseph are true, and the words that we shall hear from your brethren will be inspired by the Lord. I hope that we can take the advice and the testimonies that will be given to us, that our minds and hearts will be open. Truly, we can rejoice in the gospel of the Lord, Jesus Christ.

If we can live close to our Father in heaven, we can partake of his Spirit. If we get too far away from the Lord, we cannot partake of his Spirit. I have come to believe that the only defense that we can have against the spirit of the adversary or against the spirit of the devil is the Spirit of the Lord. That is truly the great defense that we can have.

May I repeat from Corinthians, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." (1 Cor. 2:9.) As I think of that, it makes me feel that I cannot quite understand the blessings that the Lord has in store for us if we love him. They are great blessings, but, to the best of our ability, we can partake of them if we truly love the Lord. How can we love our Father in heaven? The best way, I believe, is for us to draw near to him each day of our lives, and it is good for us to study his words and his life. We have so beautifully heard this morning, "Love our Father in heaven, try to serve him and keep his commandments, and he will bless us to a greater degree than we can ever realize."

PRINCIPLE OF REPENTANCE

It may be necessary for us to make some adjustments in our lives. It may be necessary for us to overcome some things, but the Lord has promised us great blessings if we try to repent and come unto him and partake of his life and his Spirit. And what has he said about him that overcometh? In Revelation we read:

To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, . . .
To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written. (Rev. 2:7, 17.)

We can come near to our Father in heaven through that great principle of prayer and repentance. We have been known as a praying people. We are glad to be known as a praying people, because we believe in prayer. We bear witness to the world that the Lord does hear and answer prayers if we ask in humility, and so we can go to the Lord each day of our lives. We do not need to worry about talking to the Lord, no matter where we are, about any of our trials and sorrows and problems, and the Lord has told us if we ask in faith, he will bless us.

PRAYER A VALUABLE HABIT

What is prayer? Someone has said, "Prayer is the most valuable habit a boy can have. It is a safeguard in youth, a comfort and a pillar of strength and power in middle life, and in old age a consolation that wipes away the sting of the grave and takes from death its victory." That is the way we can become close to our Father in heaven, yes, through the principle of prayer, and, oh, that we could keep our lines open so that we can communicate with the Lord and so that we can hear his answer.

Just a little poem on prayer:

I say a prayer each morning,
So the day will turn out right,
And when the sun has disappeared,
I tell the Lord good night.

The world looks brighter in the dawn
When I pronounce a prayer,
Because it reassures me
The Lord is really there,

And that I seem to walk with him
Each hour of the day,
While I am occupied with work
Or taking time to play.

I listen to his counsel
And find my courage strong,
Whenever I am weary
Or when anything goes wrong.

And when the day is over,
And the moon and stars are bright,
I feel the least that I can do
Is tell the Lord good night.

—Author Unknown

May we draw nearer to the Lord each day, thank him for the blessings that we enjoy, try to serve him and keep his commandments with all the strength that we can muster, because therein lies the happiness of life and its fulness. Without those blessings, we are not happy nor can we be successful.

GOODNESS OF THE LORD

I want to bear testimony of the goodness of the Lord to me. I am grateful for the association that I have with the brethren of the General Authorities of the Church whom I love very dearly. I want to say to the people of the Church and to the whole world that there is no disunity in the Church so far as the brethren are concerned. No greater love hath one man for another than is experienced in the associations with these men. I know they are men of God; I witness their faith each day; I know they believe in the principle of prayer; and I know they encourage the people and bless the people because they know that is the will of the Lord.

OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH DAY

With reference to the Sabbath day, I was quite astonished recently regarding the London Olympic Games of the world wherein those great games were not held on Sunday, even though many of the people of that great city wanted those games to go forward on the Sabbath day, because they could get large crowds and because the revenue would be great. But there is a law in London that says there can be no games or sports on the Sabbath day. When I read that letter and read that law and read that article that was sent to me about the Olympic Games from one of our people in London, I could not help feeling a little ashamed that here we are living right where those doctrines and principles have been given to us, and sometimes we have a hard time living the Sabbath day and keeping it holy as the Lord has told us to do. I hope that we can popularize the Sabbath day and keep it holy and truly worship the Lord with all our hearts and draw near to him so that we can partake of his Spirit and be happy in our daily life and in our homes.

I hope that our young people are not being robbed of the blessings of prayer and that we are not too busy in our daily life to call our family together, or that we will not become too self-sufficient, or too modest, or too backward, to call our family together. Even though there are only one or two home, do not let us deny our children the blessing that comes from family prayers. Do not let us feel sufficient without the Lord's help, because it is impossible for us to succeed and reach eternal life and have joy and happiness here upon earth without those blessings that come from our kind, loving Father in heaven.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO OVERCOME MISTAKES

In closing, I would like to bear you my testimony that I know the Lord hears and answers prayers. I know that he will help his people overcome some of their weaknesses. I know that he will help them in their problems. I like to believe that I can go to my God, the Eternal Father, no matter what my problems may be, no matter how far I may have drifted. I want to feel that I can go to him, and I hope that our young people, and for that matter, all of our people, will never feel as though they can make a break with the Living God, even though they have mistakes to overcome. There is no time that we can forsake the Lord, least of all when we are weak, least of all when we are discouraged, least of all when we are disappointed, and I hope that the young people will not live with their mistakes long. I think they should be encouraged to go to the Lord as soon as they have made mistakes, and I hope we as bishops, Aaronic Priesthood advisers and advisers to adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, can be so true with those men, yes, likewise, with all young men and young women, that if they have made mistakes or if they need help, do not let us cut them off sharp. Let us be kind and lovable to them so they can come to us with their sorrows and their mistakes and their problems, and then encourage them to go to the Lord and ask him to forgive them, and go to the Lord and ask him to help them overcome some of the things that they have done that they should not have done.

I like to believe in the law of repentance where the Lord has said in effect: "If you come unto me truly and repent of your wrongdoing, I will forgive you." I am grateful for the law of repentance; it's never too late to repent.

The Lord has never forsaken us. He has told us, "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." (D. & C. 82:10.) And in closing, may I urge that we start all over again and try not to make those mistakes. In the words of Emerson: "All that I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all I have not seen."

God bless you that you may enjoy the spirit of the conference, that the spirit of prayer may always be with us, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

That I may have your sustaining prayers and the Spirit of the Lord to be with me, as it has been with the brethren who have spoken this morning, is the desire of my heart.

Today we have heard President George F. Richards and President Milton R. Hunter talk to us about the nature and kind of being that God the Eternal Father is, and about our relationship to him. If he will sustain me I would like to bear you my witness and tell you what I understand to be the doctrine of this Church and kingdom with reference to his Beloved Son, Jesus Christ.

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST"

When Christ was among men, in one of his last conversations with the Pharisees, he asked: ". . . What think ye of Christ? whose son is he?" He received the answer, "The son of David." Thereupon he asked:

How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying,
The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?

If David then call him Lord, how is he his son? (Matt. 22:42-45.)

Because those Jews had lost the knowledge of God and of Christ, they were unable to answer. The world by wisdom knew not God. Like many devout people today they had inherited from their fathers lies, vanity, and things in which there was no profit. They did not know that God the Eternal Father was the Father of Christ, and that Christ was of the seed of David through Mary, his mother. People in that day needed, just as did the people in Joseph Smith's day, a new revelation of God and of the plan of salvation.

As I understand it, our mission to the world in this day, is to testify of Jesus Christ. Our mission is to bear record that he is the Son of the Living God and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through his atoning blood; that by virtue of his atonement all men will be raised in immortality, and those who believe and obey the gospel law both in immortality and unto eternal life.

And the position which Joseph Smith holds in the scheme of things is that he is the chiefest witness of Christ that there has been in this world since the Son of God personally walked among men and bore record of himself saying, "I am the Son of God!"

FIRSTBORN IN SPIRIT WORLD

We believe, and I certify that Jesus Christ is the Firstborn Spirit Child of Elohim who is God, our Heavenly Father. We believe that while he lived in the pre-existent world, by virtue of his superior intelligence, progression, and obedience, he attained unto the station of a God. And he then became, under the Father, the Creator of this world and all things that are in it, as also the Creator of worlds without number.

We believe that he was the Jehovah of the Old Testament; that it was through him that God the Father dealt with all the ancient prophets, revealing his mind and his will and the plan of salvation to them.

Christ gave the gospel to the ancients beginning with Adam and going on down, dispensation after dispensation, until this present time. And everything that has been given in the gospel and everything that has been in any way connected with it has been designed for the express purpose of bearing record of Christ and certifying as to his divine mission.

IN THE SIMILITUDE OF CHRIST

From Adam to Moses and From Moses to Christ, God's prophets and priests offered sacrifices. Such were in the similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father who was to come. When Moses lifted the serpent on the pole in ancient Israel and told the Israelites that those who would look would live when they were bitten by poisonous serpents, it was in similitude of the fact that the Son of God would be lifted up on the cross and that all who would look to him might live eternally.

Every ordinance of the gospel is designed to point and center the attention of men in Christ. We are baptized in similitude of his death, burial, and resurrection. We honor Sunday as the Sabbath because it was on that day when he arose from the grave, breaking the bands of death and becoming the first fruits of them that slept. The ancients honored the seventh day as one of rest and worship because it was on that day that he rested from his labors after working under the direction of his Father in the creation of this world. In fact, as Jacob says:

... all things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of him. (II Nephi 11:4.)

Every prophet that there has been in the world has borne record that he is the Son of God, because in its very nature that is the chief calling of a prophet. The testimony of Jesus is synonymous with the spirit of prophecy.

CHRIST'S EARTHLY MINISTRY

We believe that Christ was born into the world, literally and actually, in the most real and positive sense as the Son of God, the Eternal Father. He was born with that Being as his Father just as certainly and just as actually, just as literally and definitely as he was born with Mary as his mother. It was by virtue of that birth that he was able to say that no man took his life from him, that he had power to lay down his life and power to take it up again, and had been so commanded of his Father.

We believe that he came into the world with the express mission of dying upon the cross for the sins of the world; that he is actually, literally, and really the Redeemer of the world and the Savior of men; and that by the shedding of his blood he has offered to all men forgiveness of sins conditioned upon their repentance and obedience to the gospel plan.

Our revelations say that when he came into this life he received not of the fulness at the first, but that he continued from grace to grace—which, I take it, means from intelligence to intelligence, from a low degree to a higher one—until he received a fulness of the glory of the Father. Then the revelation recites that if you and I keep the commandments of God and walk in the paths of truth and righteousness, we, too, shall go from grace to grace until we receive of the fulness of the Father and are glorified in Christ as he is in the Father.

We understand that he was in all points tempted as we are, and yet remained without sin. We accept Paul's statement that

Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. (Heb. 5:8-9.)

In his ministry he preached the gospel of salvation, revealed to men his Father who must be known if men gain life eternal, and went forth working many mighty miracles. He raised the dead, caused the lame to walk, the blind to receive their sight, the deaf to hear, and cured all manner of diseases. He suffered temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer, except it be unto death.

In the Garden of Gethsemane when he took upon himself the sins of the world, conditioned upon the repentance of men, his agony and suffering were so great that he sweat drops of blood from every pore. Then it was he suffered for all that they might not suffer if they would repent, which suffering, he says, caused himself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that he might not drink the bitter cup that the Father had given him.

"Nevertheless," he says, "glory be to the Father, and I partook." It was the spirit, "Thy will, O God, not mine be done." It was exactly the stand he had taken in the counsels of eternity when the Father had presented the plan of salvation and explained the need for a Redeemer. In answer to that call for a Redeemer he had said: "Here am I, send me." And also: "Father, thy will be done and the glory be thine forever." And such, to my way of thinking, is the perfect answer, the one we should all give in all things pertaining to life and salvation and to all of our affairs during this mortal probation, and then on in eternity. It is the will of the Father that you and I want to follow, not the will of anyone else; we want to rise above our own wayward courses.

LATTER-DAY APPEARANCES

We believe that Christ has appeared in this our day with his Father, as has been certified to from this pulpit this day. His latter-day appearances began when he and the Father came to the Prophet Joseph Smith in the sacred grove. We believe that from the day of its organization, his hand has been guiding and directing and looking after the affairs of this Church. He has given us the spirit of revelation, and the Light of Christ, and also the Holy Ghost which bears record of the Father and the Son, to light our path and guide the destiny of the Church.

And it will not be a far-distant day when with power and glory and dominion the Son will return to reign a thousand years on earth with righteous men. And there will be a time appointed when you and I and every person who has lived from Adam to the last man will be called to stand before the judgment bar and be judged by him according to our works.

WITNESSES OF CHRIST

When we Latter-day Saints pass through the waters of baptism, it is with a covenant that we will stand as witnesses of Christ at all times and in all things, and in all places that we may be in, even until death, that we may be redeemed of God, numbered with those of the first resurrection and gain eternal life, by which we mean life in the celestial kingdom of heaven. One of our revelations says that it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor. That is our responsibility.

You and I are the most blessed and favored people on the face of the earth. God has actually spoken in this day and that through the men who have presided over this kingdom. We have that testimony, and the Holy Ghost bears record of its truth to us. And now our obligation is to carry that message to the world, to proclaim Christ's divine Sonship and the salvation which comes through him. He is the Savior of the world, and I think that every one of us ought to take every opportunity that comes to us to bear that witness.

Now it is not always a matter of just saying in so many words that these things are true. First of all, I think we bear witness of Christ in the life that we live, by letting our light shine and by letting the gospel principles speak through us. If we can get the love, charity, integrity, humility, and virtue that are part of the gospel into our hearts so that others may see our good works, we are by that fact testifying of the fruits of Mormonism, of the fact of the restoration of the gospel, and of the divinity of Jesus Christ whose hand is in this work.

THE MESSAGE OF SALVATION

Having done that, it remains our responsibility, I think, to teach the doctrines of the kingdom, to expound the principles of salvation to the world. Our time is too important to teach ethical platitudes. We are expected to give all men to whom we have opportunity to give it, the message of salvation, the glad tidings of the restoration, the fact that God has spoken in this day, and the assurance that there is peace and joy and happiness by living the gospel here and now, and an eternal reward in the world to come.

Then after we have taught people the principles of the gospel, after we have let our light shine before them, it remains for us to seal that witness with pure testimony, as moved upon by the Holy Ghost, that we as individuals know that these things are true.

Last Sunday I was in the Granite Stake. They have about 5500 members of the Church and sixty-three missionaries serving in the foreign field, nearly 1.2 percent of their stake population. Two weeks ago I was in the Juarez Stake. The Dublin Ward has 214 members of the Church and twelve foreign missionaries now serving. As President Smith said, there are 5000 missionaries out in the world today, which is one-half of one percent of the Church population.

I am not so sure but what we can increase our missionary force, but what the quorums of the priesthood can do more to assist in the support of worthy missionaries who cannot otherwise be supported in the mission field. By doing this they will be helping to roll forth the testimony of Christ in this day. Our ward teachers have the glorious opportunity of bearing testimony of Christ every month to the members of the Church, by teaching them the doctrines of the kingdom and urging them to righteousness.

The Lord has given us every opportunity. We have the promise that, if we are valiant in the testimony of Christ and keep his commandments, we will receive glory and honor and reward in eternity, but if we do not what the Lord says, we have no promise.

I know that this work is true. I know that God's hand is with this Church and that the men who now preside over it as prophets, seers, and revelators are giving the mind and will of the Lord to the Latter-day Saints, the things that will lead them to glory and honor and reward in the eternal world. I think every member of this Church who has arrived at the years of accountability is both entitled to be and expected to be a witness for Christ. That you and I may stand valiant and firm in the testimony of Christ is my prayer, in his name. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region will now Sing: "Build, Thou, For Life's Immortal Goal," words and music by Florence Jepperson Madsen.

The closing prayer will be offered by President Cecil E. Hart of the South Idaho Falls Stake, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon. The afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls; KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

The audience should be seated not later than ten minutes before the hour for starting the meeting.

Any important messages and calls that have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference, will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region, Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ. They will now sing, after which President Hart will offer the benediction.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers: "Build Thou, For Life's Immortal Goal."

Elder Cecil E. Hart, President of the South Idaho Falls Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m., Friday, October 1.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the second session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

President Smith is presiding. He has requested the speaker, President Clark, to conduct these services.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all the General Authorities of the Church except Elder Spencer W. Kimball, who is convalescing at home by his doctor's direction; Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe in charge of the European Missions; and President S. ### ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, it is with humility that I seek the sustaining influence of your faith and prayers while I endeavor to fill this most important responsibility.

THE WAYS OF THE WORLD

I have been impressed, since this call came to me, with the fact that it is very easy for the children of our Heavenly Father, in their lives, to follow the will and the ways of the masses. There seems to be something that naturally attracts us in our weakness to go with the ways of the world. In so doing we lose sight of the fact that one of the greatest gifts bestowed upon us is our own free agency, and that free agency of ours should compel us to make our own decisions, to exercise our own judgment, to know where we are going, and to know the means by which we expect to arrive at our destination. There is so much that could be said upon this subject because, unwittingly, it would seem that so many of us are sacrificing this right of free agency. We are so imbued with the idea that we must do as the world does, be one with our neighbors regardless of what their ideals and ambitions may be, that we are unwittingly forfeiting the right to make our own judgments and our own decisions.

OBJECTIVES OF LIFE SIDETRACKED

There are few of us who, if we were to take a trip, would not give some concern to the vehicle in which we would travel, the road along which we would walk or go, and the goal we would seek as a destination. Now all of these things seem commonplace to us in our everyday life, but when it comes to knowing where we are going, so far as life is concerned, where our goal is, the objective of our creation, the fulfilling of our purposes here upon this earth, we seem to be very easily sidetracked.

I was very much impressed in reading recently a statement of the Prophet Joseph Smith. He said:

Consider for a moment, brethren, the fulfilment of the words of the prophet; for we behold that darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the inhabitants thereof—that crimes of every description are increasing among men—vices of great enormity are practiced—the rising generation growing up in the fulness of pride and arrogance—the aged losing every sense of conviction and seemingly banishing every thought of a day of retribution—intemperance, immorality, extravagance, pride, blindness of heart, idolatry, the loss of natural affection; the love of this world, and indifference toward the things of eternity increasing among those who profess a belief in the religion of heaven, and infidelity spreading itself in consequence of the same—men giving themselves up to commit acts of the foulest kind, and deeds of the blackest dye, blaspheming, defrauding, blasting the reputation of neighbors, stealing, robbing, murdering, advocating error and opposing the truth, forsaking the covenant of heaven, and denying the faith of Jesus—and in the midst of all this, the day of the Lord fast approaching when none except those who have won the wedding garment will be permitted to eat and drink in the presence of the Bridegroom, the Prince of Peace! (Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, p. 47.)

LOSS OF NATURAL AFFECTION

In thus enumerating the crimes of which the world would, in the future, be guilty, the Prophet Joseph evidenced his true prophetic nature—the power which he possessed, given him from on high to see into the future, for I warrant that in the days of the Prophet no one realized the extent to which the people of the world, would lose their, “natural affection,” in the years to come. Today there seems to be a greater urge to destroy this “natural affection” than to commit any other offense of comparable enormity.

We are for the most part, not conscious of the existence of agencies at work in our midst with this result as their purpose. We are losing one of our most precious prizes which mankind can hold on to if they will.

Certainly natural affection is something that was bestowed upon us at birth. We had an abundance of love at that time for our parents. The child loves its mother. We are brought to a time in our lives, in the history of this world, today, when we should begin to inquire as to whether there is any less degree of affection existing between us, as we grow to maturity, for our parents, than that which existed in the days of our childhood and our youth. If we find the slightest difference, if we find that there has been any loss of affection, then we should examine our lives carefully to ascertain what we can do to bring about its restoration. Of all the people upon this earth we should be the last people to consider accepting any of the philosophies of the world, no matter what the prize attached thereto might be, if so to do would be to withdraw from that close affinity and affection which must exist between father and son and mother and daughter if we are to realize here in our mortal existence the full purpose of our creation.

It is a serious matter to me and one which has been brought close to my heart, because of my work in our welfare program. I am thrilled when I read the statistics of how much we have accomplished in the welfare program, how many trainloads, carloads, shiploads of supplies we have sent to the needy Saints in Europe and how much we have accomplished in the organized stakes of Zion. It seems as though those things may be measured in tons, but there has been a benefit come to the people of this Church as a result of this welfare program of a spiritual nature which cannot be measured. It cannot be estimated, but the good which has been accomplished can be seen in the increased affection which this work has brought between the children and the parents. If we were to work all the days of our life and sacrifice all of our surplus and keep only that which we actually need for ourselves and bring into our lives as a result thereof a closer love and affection for our children than we have heretofore had, no one would deny but what we have spent our means well.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE HOME

It would seem that all of the philosophies of the world today are set upon destroying the home. As we travel through the world, the people of the world seem to have lost in their lives the significance of home. We as Latter-day Saints cannot do this. We must still maintain the home as a place where we can kneel down daily with our children and teach them to pray. Our home is the place where we can teach them the gospel. We cannot be saved in ignorance, and neither can our children. What a wonderful work it would be if today we could bring back into the home the teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ as a means of overcoming the delinquency there is in the world, among the youth. We can't deny the fact that there is greater delinquency among the young people of the world than ever before. We as Latter-day Saints have the responsibility to see to it that this delinquency of which the world is guilty does not creep into our homes. I have had occasion many times, to suggest that maybe if we would enter into this family relationship with the same enthusiasm, with the same ambition and the same energy and the same desire as we do our temporal affairs that our families and the home would mean more to us than they do now. It has been my thought for a long time, certainly my considered opinion and my testimony to you today that one way to combat divorce in the world is for men to pay more attention to their wives and for wives to pay more attention to their husbands, and let some of the things of the world go by and do not take the example of the world as that which we must follow but rather apply ourselves to the performance of some of the humbler duties of life.

The Lord bless the mothers in Israel who keep their flock under their arms, who teach them to pray at their knees, and the Lord bless the fathers in Israel who are willing to take time off from their business and from their farms to spend with their sons and their daughters.

VIRTUE IN CHURCH ACTIVITY

Of course I see a great deal of virtue in this welfare program. If fathers would pull themselves away from their work and would engage themselves in the various projects that have been initiated in this welfare program, they would soon see the blessing to be derived from taking their sons with them and mothers their daughters.

As I go into the meetings of the Saints, I always have a feeling, I have it today, that the adversary has absolutely no power over us so long as we are assembled here in the Lord's house and worshipping him. Brethren and sisters that same protection goes with us throughout our lives and in all our activities if our associations be with those who have the same ideals and the same objectives in life. The priesthood was given to us to be a protection, and in order that it be a protection we must be active in the quorums to which we belong. Men who associate actively in the priesthood quorums of this Church will keep themselves from the power of the adversary. Their motives will always be righteous. They will bring into their homes a spirit and an atmosphere that will keep their children in the line of their duty. It will give to each and every one of us a desire which we cannot overcome except we fulfil it, to see to it that every son and daughter with whom we are blessed knows as much about this gospel of Jesus Christ as we do.

It would be a reflection upon the people of the Church if their sons and daughters as they come to us to be interviewed to go on a mission should tell us that they had never heard their father or their mother bear their testimony. So we should go to our various places of labor throughout the Church and teach our people to bear their testimonies to their children and to teach them the simple but the fundamental principles of this gospel. There will be none of our youth leave our Church and join any of the churches of the world if they once have within themselves a knowledge of the true gospel of Jesus Christ as restored through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I tell you, my brothers and sisters, we have a responsibility to make of our homes a sacred place where our children will want to come and bring their children and kneel with us in prayer and read the scriptures with us and discuss with us the problems of life.

PARENTAL INFLUENCE IN THE HOME

Now, if we devote ourselves to the institutions of the world, and they are multiplying daily, we will have no time for the Church. All of us have opportunities to join this organization or that organization, and it is time for us to realize that every organization which we join, no matter how good its purposes may be, detracts, to some extent at least, from our observing and practising the things which we should do in our home and above all giving of ourselves to our families. It is not enough in this day and age to make money, to be able to bestow the riches of the world upon our children to let them live in luxury, give them all of the things of life that they might want. Better than all that is to give a little of ourselves to our children, that they might know us for what we are and feel of the spirit which we have and which we receive through keeping the commandments of our Heavenly Father.

I was reading the other day what President George Albert Smith said many years ago, and in conclusion I want to read his statement:

Grateful should we be for a knowledge of the eternity of the marriage covenant. If in this life only have we hope we would indeed be of all men the most miserable. The assurance that our relationship here as parents and children, as husbands and wives, will continue in heaven and this is but the beginning of a great and glorious kingdom that our Father has destined we shall inherit on the other side, fills us with hope and joy. One of the greatest evidences to me of the divinity of this work is that it teaches there is life eternal on the other side and that there will be a reunion there of the loved ones who have known each other here, consequently as parents we may well be patient and loving toward our children, for they will eternally abide with us on the other side, if we and they are faithful. The few years that we live here will be regarded as a time in which we become acquainted, but when we mingle in the other life, we will know each other better than we have here.

President Wilford Woodruff said on one occasion:

Bless your souls, if you live here in the flesh a thousand years, as long as Father Adam and lived and labored all your life in poverty and when we get through, if by your acts you could secure your wives and children in the first resurrection to dwell with you in the presence of God that one thing would amply pay you for the labors of a thousand years.

Now let us make the sacrifice, my brothers and sisters, of the labors of a day or two a month to spend with our children and help them to gain a place in the celestial kingdom of our Heavenly Father, there to dwell with us and to add to our glory eternally. I pray humbly this may be our happy lot, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I approach this task, my brothers and sisters, with a good deal of misgiving, and I trust I may have an interest in your faith and prayers the few minutes that I occupy. It seems to me we have had thus far an unusual outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The counsel and advice that we have received and the fundamental teachings that have been given certainly should give us cause for serious reflection, and we should go to our homes encouraged in the thought that we are engaged in the work of the Lord.

THE MESSAGE ALL-IMPORTANT

Some time ago I was reading of the laying of the cable from England to India, which, it is said cost so much effort and sacrifice and heartache because of the encountering of so many obstacles and difficulties incident to the frequent breaking of the cable. Finally it was completed and to commemorate this great achievement a celebration was held in London. John Ruskin was asked to speak, and in the course of his remarks he is said to have made this striking observation:

I am not concerned about the mechanics of this which we are here celebrating; the all-important thing is the message that will be transmitted over this cable.

As I thought of that and applied it to the stirring messages we have thus far received in this conference, the message of eternal truth, I thought that after all it is the message that is giving this work its great vitality.

INTEGRITY OF MISSIONARY SERVICE

Since our last conference it has been my great privilege to visit and tour two of our missions. This has brought me in close contact, not only with the mission presidents but with the missionaries themselves, and I have been tremendously impressed with the integrity of our missionary service, with the young boys and girls who are called to this activity of the Church. I thought, where could one find its equal? Here we have a cross section of our youth, boys and girls who are not called because of their scholastic training; they have not been trained in the refinement of the ministry, nor have they had seminary training, as this is understood outside of our Church. They are called from the farms, the workshops, and from the schools; called to a service which is quite new to them, yet they enter into this new work with a spirit and energy which is most impressive and inspiring.

Back of all this, I repeat, is not their training but the great message of eternal truth which they have to give to the world.

Friday, October 1First Day

If one needed additional evidence of the ultimate destiny of this work, he need but reflect on the great missionary system of the Church to which President Smith has referred, and the splendid work being done by these missionaries. Few there are that fail, very few indeed. Most of them make good, and they come through with an abiding testimony of the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph, the divine mission of Jesus, our Savior, that he is the Christ, that God lives and hears and answers our prayers. It is one of the most heartening experiences of one's life to sit in a testimony meeting of these missionaries and feel the intensity of their spirit and faith, and their devotion to this work. It is the testimony we feel, these unseen things, these hidden assets, if we may so call them, that give such force to this work.

TRIBUTE TO MISSION PRESIDENTS

Then, too, I want to pay my humble tribute to these mission presidents and their wives. They, too, are called from all walks of life. They are asked to give up their vocations, many of them of a lucrative nature, and yet they never waver; nor do their wives. It is not an easy task to break those home ties that have been established perhaps for a quarter of a century or more and to leave home to go into the mission field to devote three or four years of one's time and service to this great work. Yet these men and women do just that, and it is certainly gratifying to note the lovely spirit they have, the interest they take in your boys and girls, the personal interviews they have with them, the help they give them. Some of the boys and girls come poorly prepared for missionary service, and yet through the kindness and generosity of these splendid men and women they are brought into line, not in unkindness, but in the spirit of love and sympathy and understanding, and they are thus able to adjust themselves and they come through successfully. One young man that I have in mind, a man who comes from an excellent family, and thousands of them are so situated, a boy who gives great promise to his parents, had been in the mission field for twenty-three months. The school year was beginning. He had the opportunity to go to college, and when his mission president approached him to see if it would be helpful to him, knowing of his ambition to go to school, if he were released in the twenty-three months so that he could enter college, the boy replied, "No, I want to finish out my mission. That's the important thing to me." It is a lovely spirit, and this is reflected, my brethren and sisters, by these missionaries, these boys and girls of yours, and you may be proud of and grateful to the Lord, for them.

BLESSINGS OF SABBATH OBSERVANCE

Now, there is another phase that has been touched on in this conference that I would like to speak about for a few minutes that involves, too, our young people. I had the privilege of attending a sacrament meeting in this city during the summer vacation. To attend this meeting I came up from my home in Utah County with my daughter, and as we were riding along Sunday afternoon we passed a ball park. Two games were being played, one in one end and the other in the other end of the park, and there were hundreds of people there and a large number of boys and girls witnessing these games. My daughter remarked: "Dad, just what harm is there to these boys and girls in watching this sport? Isn't there a rather wholesome influence about it? They're doing no harm here Sunday afternoon; aren't they better here than they would be some other places?" I was rather challenged. These questions are always a challenge. I didn't say anything. We rode along. We had a lovely meeting. The spirit of it was so impressive; it was reflected in the music, the administering of the sacrament as it should be, and in very deed we were made to feel that we were remembering the Lord, that we were renewing our covenants, taking upon ourselves again his holy name, being made to feel that he is near, and when the meeting was over, we felt that we wanted to keep his commandments.

After meeting, we rode home. My daughter's reaction was heartening, "Dad," she said, "I know the answer now. I know the harm. I know the danger. If this thing is permitted to go on, boys and girls will lose their desire for the lovely thing that we have had tonight, and something will be taken out of their lives that they can't recover." She continued, "If men and women and boys and girls could just realize what it means to be spiritually fed on the Sabbath day, many of our problems of keeping this day holy would be solved." Well, I thank the Lord for that faith. I thank the Lord for that inspiration because it inspired me. I know it isn't an easy thing to say to boys and girls and to our children that they must not do this or that. We should, if possible, find some answer, some solution to these problems.

PROBLEM OF SUNDAY BASEBALL

I commend to you a method that has been adopted in one of our stakes. Baseball on Sunday became a challenge. The stake presidency took the problem in hand and by contacting those who were on the committee to provide this athletic activity the way was opened whereby the games could be played on a week-night. Flood lights were provided, and the men who had it in charge felt good about it. They are our own people. They are Latter-day Saints. They are not very active, but they are not unsympathetic, and I thought to myself if we could approach understandingly some of these important problems perhaps we could find a solution by sitting down around a table and together working them out. I know these problems are not easy to solve, but I do know that if we can make our young people feel the strength of our message, if we can make them feel this hidden something that gives strength and power to these boys and girls who I said are not so well trained but who have testimony and faith, if our children can be made to feel the strength and power that comes from the spirit of our Heavenly Father and from serving him, and from keeping his commandments, many of our problems will be solved. None of us know, as I have said many times, all the answers, but we do know that there is a spiritual force in this great work. I would that we could translate it into the lives of our people, that we could make them all feel as you and I feel, in this house of worship this day, that divine presence, to make them feel resolved in their hearts as we feel resolved in ours, that as for us we will try to serve the Lord and to keep his commandments. May God help us so to do, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

My brothers and sisters, I have been delighted with the messages we have heard from the brethren during this conference. I love to meet with the Latter-day Saints. I have a great appreciation in my heart for you fine people and for your kindness to me as I am privileged to visit in the various stakes of Zion.

FINANCIAL OBLIGATIONS

In trying to think what I might say today that could be an encouragement or help to you, I thought I might say a few words on our financial and temporal obligations to the Church because they are many, and there are some among us who feel that they are heavy. One stake president said: "It costs a lot to be a member of this Church," and I have thought a great deal of it. I have thought of the payment of our tithing, our fast offerings, our welfare contributions, our ward budget, our great missionary work, the building of our chapels and temples and places of worship, the temple work we are doing, and genealogical work, and I feel as many of you do that when we consecrate all that we have to the building up of the kingdom of God it really is a substantial thing as far as our temporal obligations and responsibilities are concerned.

The Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith that he had never given a temporal commandment unto his children, that all of his commandments were spiritual, for they all have a spiritual meaning and a spiritual development and a spiritual purpose, because behind all that the Lord is attempting to do in the earth, he has indicated that

... this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. (Pearl of Great Price, Moses 1:39.)

And hence, all of his commandments have been given for the achievement and the accomplishment of that great objective.

"NO MAN CAN SERVE TWO MASTERS"

However, the Lord has made some definite statements with respect to temporal things and our responsibility therein. That is, I suppose, what Jesus meant when he said:

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. (Matt. 6:24.)

I take it he understood that in the lives of most men the time would come when they might have to make a choice as to whether or not they should choose God or mammon, and it is my conviction and my testimony that when we make the choice, if we choose to serve the Lord, it is just like forming a partnership with him. He will be on our side, he will see us through; and I wonder sometimes if we really sacrifice when we choose to serve the Lord, rather than to serve mammon, and make the necessary effort and contributions required to show our faith in him.

You will recall that before the Lord needed any financial help to promote the interests of his kingdom in the earth he gave unto Cain and Abel the law of sacrifice. The Lord did not need the fruits of the field from Cain nor the first of the flocks from Abel, but they needed to give it; they needed to put their faith to the test. They needed to be able to show to God whether they served and chose God or mammon, for you cannot serve two masters.

And you will recall that Cain brought of the fruit of the field, and his offering was not acceptable to the Lord, and Abel brought the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. We are told that Abel's offering was accepted. We do not know just why Cain's was not; probably he did not bring the best of his field, but at any rate, he was very much perturbed and put out when his offering was not accepted, and hardness entered into his heart. The light of the Lord left him, and he turned to that terrible sin of murdering his own brother. And the Lord indicated to Cain when he expressed his displeasure: "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" (Gen. 4:7.)

We often see in our midst brethren who turn away from the Lord, who cease to pay their tithes and their offerings, who neglect to prove to God that they love him better than they love mammon, and darkness comes into their lives, and they do things that are not pleasing to the Lord. They walk in the ways of darkness and cease to help to build the kingdom of God in the earth.

EXPERIENCE OF JOB

You will recall the experience of Job when the devil came to the Lord and the Lord said: "Hast thou considered my servant Job?" (Job 1:8.) And the devil rather laughingly said, in substance:

Oh, that is easy. You have surrounded him with so much. You have given him everything. No wonder he is your friend, but just let me take it away from him.

The Lord gave him the privilege; told him he might take everything away if he would just spare his life. So he took everything away, his lands and his herds, and his buildings were burned, and his family died, and when his body was afflicted and sore, he lay there, and his wife said unto him: "Dost thou still retain thine integrity?"

Now, brethren and sisters, I would like to read the testimony that came from Job. I think it is one of the most beautiful things that we have in holy writ, for this is what Job said:

Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book!

That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever! For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

And though after my skin worms destroy this body; yet in my flesh shall I see God:

Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another. (Job 19:23-27.)

Is there any amount of wealth in this world that could take the place of that positive assurance that Job had in his heart, as a friend of God, through the testimony of the Holy Ghost, that though his body should be destroyed yet in his flesh should he see God—whom he should see for himself?

MALACHI'S ADMONITION

Malachi gives us this call back to service of the Lord in the matter of the payment of our tithes and our offerings. I think the third chapter of Malachi was directed entirely to the people of this generation, for he begins that he would send his angel to prepare the way for his coming, and then he should come swiftly to his temple—that did not occur in the meridian of time—and that he should come cleansing and purifying as refiner's fire and as fuller's soap, and then he invites all Israel to return unto him; and they say:

... Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. (Malachi 3:7-9.)

And I presume there is not one here today who realizes what the truth of that statement was, for I think there was no church or people in all the world paying tithes at the time the Church was restored in these latter days, when the Lord sent his angel to call them back to serve him.

And then the Lord said:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.

And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts. (Idem 10-13.)

A DELIGHTSOME LAND

Brothers and sisters, when we think of the condition of this land when our pioneer fathers came here, has not the Lord fulfilled his promise; has he not made it a delightsome land; has he not proved that he would keep his promise? The Lord has indicated that he is bound when we do what he says, but when we do not what he says, then have we no promise. The Lord has made this a delightsome land, and all nations who know us and know of our prosperity call us blessed, and out of this land we are able to send forth the gospel message, as David of old saw, unto the inhabitants of the earth, for David said:

Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. (Psalms 50:2.)

There is one part of that third chapter of Malachi that we do not usually hear much about, and I would like to read it to you today.

After the Lord said that all nations should call us blessed, he adds:

Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord. Yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?

Ye have said, It is vain to serve God: [and we hear that occasionally in our midst] and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?

And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. (Mal. 3:13-15.)

A BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

In other words, as the scriptures say, the rain falls upon the just and the unjust, and when we see the unjust in our midst enjoying blessings of the Lord, sometimes, in our own estimation, beyond even the blessings of him who walks in His ways and keeps his commandments, we begin to argue whether or not it pays to serve the Lord. That is what Malachi saw, and the Lord heard them, and said:

Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. (Idem 16-18.)

I would like to see every friend of mine in this Church have his name recorded in that book of remembrance, and I am sure that when he comes to claim his jewels, he will realize that no sacrifice that has ever been required at his hands could compensate for the lack of that very thing, for they will be numbered among his jewels. That is what I think being partners with him means.

What a promise! What a promise that he will bless the land! I wonder as we go about our daily duties from day to day if we are able to realize how much of the joy and the happiness and the success that is ours in life is really ours by virtue of our own doings and how much of it is the result of the blessings of the Lord.

REDEMPTION OF ZION

Do you remember the statement of Daniel Webster about this western part of America, when he said that he would not vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific coast one inch nearer Boston than it was then? And Jim Bridger, when Brigham Young met him, said that he would give one thousand dollars if he only knew we could raise an ear of corn in these valleys, but Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the prophets of old, had seen the prosperity of Zion in these valleys of the mountains. The Prophet Joseph had declared that the Saints would continue to suffer persecution and be driven, and many would apostatize, and some would be put to death, and that they should ultimately be driven to the Rocky Mountains, and here they should become a mighty people in the Rocky Mountains.

I want to read to you two brief statements from Isaiah with respect to what the Lord promised to do in the redemption of this wilderness, to make it blossom as the rose, and I want to say to you it is a miracle in my mind the part "water" was to play in the redemption of latter-day Zion.

Isaiah said: "Behold, I will do a new thing," and as far as my understanding of this scripture is concerned, that new thing was the great principle of irrigation. It is true the Saints had to make the canals, they had to make the ditches, they had to put in the dams, but the land might have remained arid had not the Lord put into their minds the inspiration to do this very thing, and that is what Isaiah saw that the Lord would do. He said:

Behold, I will do a new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the owls: because I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert. . . . (Isaiah 43:19-20.)

If you want to see the rivers in the desert, just go up through Idaho and see the great canals that come out of the Snake River. They are greater than many of the rivers of the land.

[The Lord has done this] . . . to give drink to my people, my chosen. This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.

And Isaiah states:

I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it. (Isaiah 43:20-21; 41:18, 20.)

So as you brethren gather in your crops by day in the harvest time, remember that it was the Lord God of Israel who did this new thing in this great wilderness to make it to prosper as a rose and to be a land that would attract the attention of all the world.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S EXPERIENCE

Now, I would like to remind you of a little statement that President Grant used to make often. He said:

I believe that to those who are liberal, the Lord gives ideas, and they grow in capacity and ability more rapidly than those who are stingy. I have that faith and I have had it from the time I was a boy.

I believe the Lord gives ideas to men who are liberal and men who have desires to serve God, and those who choose to serve the God of Israel rather than the God of mammon, and I remind you of President Grant's story. It impressed me when I was a boy. When he heard Bishop Woolley, President Clark's grandfather, in a fast meeting ask the Saints to be liberal in their contributions, he promised them that, if they would be liberal, the Lord would bless them four-fold.

President Grant was then only a boy. He had fifty dollars in his pocket. He was working at the Zion's Savings Bank and intended to deposit it, but he handed it to the bishop, and the bishop wrote him a receipt for five dollars and gave him forty-five dollars change, but President Grant indicated that he wanted to pay it all. He wanted to put the Lord in his debt, because his mother needed two hundred dollars, and, if he paid fifty and he got four-fold, he would have his two hundred dollars. And Bishop Woolley said: "Do you believe, Heber, that you will get your two hundred dollars sooner if you give this fifty dollars to the Lord?"

Friday, October 1

First Day

He said: "I do." And the bishop wrote him a receipt for the other forty-five dollars, and on the way back to the bank he got an idea. Where did he get it from? He might never have received it had he not paid the fifty dollars. God Almighty sends ideas and he has regard for each one of his children individually. President Grant wired a man in the East, and in a few days he sold him enough bonds to make $218.50 profit, so when he paid the tithing on it the Lord had given him his two hundred dollars and almost enough to pay the tithing.

TESTIMONY OF LAW OF TITHING

I met a man in the East when I was there on a short-term mission. I noticed that he paid a large tithing and that he was very regular in the payment of his tithing, and I said,

Brother so-and-so, you must have a wonderful testimony of the law of tithing, and he said, "I have."

I said: "Would you tell me?"

"Well," he said, "my wife and children joined the Church a few years ago in England, but I didn't join because I did not have enough faith to pay my tithing, and I did not want to be a hypocrite. And so," he said, "one day when one of the young missionaries was being released, he came to me and said:

"Brother so-and-so, I want to baptize you before I go home."

And I said, "You cannot."

"Why not?"

"Well," I said, "I have not the faith to pay my tithing, and I am not going to join the Church until I have."

And then that young elder spoke up, under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord, and the Lord heeded his words and his promise when he said: "Brother so-and-so, if you will let me baptize you before I go home, I promise you that within a year from now you will be in America earning three times as much as you are earning today."

I said: "All right, where shall we go? That is good enough for me. If you are a servant of the Lord, I will take your promise." "Now," he said, "I did not see how in the world it could be fulfilled, because I was under contract to work for my company for three years, and I knew I would not break my contract."

This was during the first world war when we had great difficulty here in America to get dyes that would hold their color, and we sent representatives from America to England to get dye workers. They went to this man's father, and his father said: "I am not interested, but I have a son who may be."

They went to the son. The son said: "I cannot go. I am under contract with my company."

"Well, if we will buy you off, will you go?"

And he said, "Yes."

"Now," he said, "to make the story short, the Lord just threw in a little for good measure."

"Within a year I was in America with my family, and I was earning four times as much as I was when that young elder made me that promise."

THE LORD FULFILLS HIS PROMISES

I told the elders, where it has been my privilege to preside in the mission field, if they wanted to see what the Lord did in the way of fulfilling his promises just to keep their eyes open as they went around among the Saints—those who kept the commandments, paid their tithes and their offerings—and compare them with those who failed, and they would know that the Lord is true to his promises.

I say to you brothers and you sisters, may God bless you, and when you give, remember you are only giving to show your loyalty to him whom you have chosen to serve, for "No man can serve two masters."

God bless you all, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I desire your faith and prayers, my brothers and sisters, for I feel terribly in need of them. There is nothing, I believe, that I appreciate more in all the world than my membership in the Church. It is the last thing I would ever want to lose, and I trust that with your aid and the aid that I can get from the Spirit of the Lord, I shall be able to carry on in a life of service unto the Church and unto my brethren and sisters. I want to thank all of you who are here who have been kind to me in the visits that I have made to your conferences. I realize that it is a burden many times upon you, and I appreciate it very, very much, just as Bishop Richards has expressed his appreciation.

SERVICE BRINGS HAPPINESS

The great value, I believe, that the Church has for us is the opportunity it gives us to serve, for, after all, the great benefits of life come from service. Generous, open-hearted, full service to our fellows, I believe, is the thing which brings us the greatest happiness. We can serve our families and gain happiness by it; we can serve our friends and gain happiness by it; but if we would be happy we must serve and serve generously, and I believe myself that the greatest happiness that comes to me from observing the standards of the Church and meeting my obligations to it is the spiritual values that I get out of that service. I would like to be able to say that I always serve for the sheer love of service. I don't know whether I can honestly say that or not, but I hope I can. I would like to suggest that all of us who serve, serve for the same motive, out of sheer joy and love of service. I would that every man who accepts a responsibility in a priesthood quorum would accept it because of the opportunity for service which it offers him; not that he be a good deacon so he may be the president of his quorum. Not that he be a good priest that some day he may be made president of the elders' quorum. Not to be a good bishop, that when the stake is reorganized he may become the president of the stake, because if he serves with that motive, there is very likely to be a day of disappointment for him, but if he serves because he loves to, if he serves because he loves his fellows, then whether the other things come or not, he is never disappointed.*

SERVICE OF HIGH QUALITY

People may not appreciate his service, always, but he will always have deep down in his heart a feeling that he has done his best, and that is the great satisfaction, I believe, that comes from it. That is the motive that prompts our young men and young women to accept calls for the mission field. We have heard this afternoon of the great numbers that are in the mission field, preaching the gospel, trying to tell the world that after all there has come back to the earth a true testimony as to the personality of the God we worship and his Son Jesus Christ. We believe that through that testimony, through the acceptance of that testimony and the adherence to the standards and the requirements that the Church offers its members that there is a guarantee to us, a future, even after this life, of exaltation in the presence of our Heavenly Father, the boon that is greater than any earthly blessing that we may enjoy. We feel duty bound, because we have that privilege, to carry it to other people and to offer it to them. That is service in its high sense.

The other day when I asked a young man who wants to go on a mission why he wants to go, he said it was because he had always grown up with the idea that he would like to go out and serve the Church in that capacity. Another young man whom I asked why he wanted to go, said that while he was in the service of his country he gained a fervent testimony as to the truth of the gospel, but he saw the woeful lack of that testimony in the lives of his associates, and he wanted an opportunity to go out and teach repentance to the people of the world. That is service of a high degree and a high quality. Service is the great blessing, I believe, that we get from it all.

Loyalty to the Church demands that we render that service to it, whether it be a financial obligation of which we have just heard or whether it be a spiritual calling, for we do distinguish in our minds usually between the temporal and the spiritual. The Church asks that service of us, and loyalty to the Church demands that we give it.

MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITIES AT HOME

Now in the giving we sometimes miss our opportunities, and I wonder if you would allow me to call your attention this afternoon, for just a moment, to a field for missionary work that is not always emphasized but which seems to be always with us, and to me is a very, very important field. I have called the attention of the various officers of the stakes I have visited this year to this, but there are many of you here whom I shall not have the opportunity to visit and whose attention I wish to call to it.

The other day in visiting a stake, a stake within this valley, I discovered that there are within that stake two hundred and fifty men, more than twenty-one years of age who have never been sufficiently interested in the priesthood to be ordained to any office in it. I wonder who they are. I wonder why they are. I wonder if they are in that position because some of us, who have undertaken the responsibility of guiding our quorums, have been negligent or at least have overlooked a responsibility and an opportunity. Now those men, in most cases I believe, are men who have been born in the Church. They represent the same fine qualities as to their heritage that the active members do, but for some reason they were never brought into service and have never been ordained. Those of us who are neighbors to those people have a responsibility toward them, it seems to me. We may live by them, week after week and month after month, and even year after year, and we take them for granted, and we never offer them an opportunity. We never offer them an inducement to go with us as we perform our religious service. I have known of cases of men who have been offered such opportunities who were brought into activity and made rapid progress within the Church, and I recommend that all of us make it a personal responsibility to do all we can to bring into activity those men who are near us.

RECORD OF STAKE MISSIONARY WORK

During the ten years that these stake missionaries have been operating under the direction of the First Council of the Seventy—it is eleven years now I believe—but in the first ten years we made a baptismal record of twenty-two thousand odd baptisms and at the same time we reported back into activity through our stake missions thirty odd thousand people. Not too long ago I made an analysis of those twenty odd thousand baptisms and, brethren and sisters, I was astonished to find out that one out of three of those baptisms was the baptism of a person over nine and under fifteen both of whose parents are members of the Church. Now, why is that? Why do we let them slip by us that way? Is it the fault of the father or the mother? Is it the fault of a ward teacher? Is it the fault of a ward clerk who fails to notify his bishop of the approaching age of the children of his ward, or is it our fault when we don't bring it to your attention from the pulpit? But it certainly must be the fault of somebody because when our stake missionaries approached those young people, seven thousand of them asked to be baptized, and have come into the Church to receive its opportunities and its blessings. There are others we know, over fifteen, of Mormon parentage, who have come back through the ministry of our stake missionaries. They have done a grand work, but the thing that startles me is that unless we pay strict attention to our duties as leaders in the priesthood that that condition is likely to go on and on, and next year there will be an additional group written off the records of the Church because nobody has taken the care to teach them the importance and the value of baptism into the Church. And then I find that we have an army of forty-nine thousand people at home who are over twenty-one years of age and still in the Aaronic Priesthood. Many of them are fine men at heart and they just lack the inducement that some of us, if we were in touch with them, could render to bring them into activity, and activity is what it takes to keep them going. I have known those men who have started in the welfare work to go right on to advancement in the Melchizedek Priesthood, and when I tell you that I have visited stakes where there was only one out of three families in the stake who had a man in it holding the Melchizedek Priesthood, you will realize that we have another responsibility to teach our boys and girls the value of being married in the temple of God for time and for all eternity. It has already been suggested to you this afternoon. I have found one stake where only thirty-five families out of a hundred could possibly be represented in the Melchizedek Priesthood, and later I found one worse than that. The best I ever found was a hundred and seven percent.

Friday, October 1

First Day

CONCERN FOR INACTIVE NEIGHBORS

Brothers and sisters, while we are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars, as we are, to send men to Japan and Africa and all intervening points what are we doing with these people who are right around our doors, to bring them into activity? I give that to you as our great objective in the missionary work for the immediate future. Let us see, brothers and sisters, if we can do it. Now for that purpose perhaps each and every one of us will have to make of himself a specially-called emissary to his neighbor, especially his inactive neighbor, that he may show him the benefits and the blessings of the gospel; but before he goes to that neighbor he must trim his sails. He must analyze himself, and he must bring his conduct into strict conformity with the teachings of the gospel, and if he can go to him and show him by the life he lives the benefits he gets out of activity in the Church, the chances are far greater of a conversion than if he has to apologize for his own conduct when he tries to teach the advantages of adhering to the teachings of the Church.

That is our problem, brethren and sisters, to live in a way that every man who comes amongst us to study us will see the fine side of the gospel reflected in our lives and that he will have no just cause for adverse criticism of us. That is a large order, I will admit, but nevertheless it is the duty and responsibility of every man and woman in the Church to show by the way he lives the values that are in the gospel, and those values are usually spiritual. If you are highly spiritual, those values will shine from your eyes like the reflected light from a diamond. You can't prevent it. When you live it, it shows, and when you don't, it shows too, but it is a dark light which comes forth when you are not living the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Now I trust, brothers and sisters, that we may have the power of God to do it. When we bowed our heads here this afternoon, we asked God to give us his Spirit. It is my experience that when I enjoy the Spirit of God, it is because I try to put myself in conformity with it, and when I do that, I enjoy hearing what is prompted in others by the Spirit of God. If I can't do it, I get no pleasure out of it. So when we come to these gatherings, brethren, and when we undertake our duties as leaders in the wards and stakes, let us try and put ourselves in a position so that we can expect, when we ask it of God, his Spirit to guide and direct us.

May he bless us I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Two of the speakers this afternoon have expressed their appreciation for the courtesy and the consideration that is given them by the Saints as they move out on Church assignments throughout the stakes and missions of the Church. I have likewise in my heart an appreciation for that service. Not the least of the compensations that come to me from my present appointment is the fact that wherever I am sent under such conditions, during that period of service, I am visiting with and laboring with the finest people in the community and the finest people in the world.

It is about some of the observations that I have made while thus privileged that I would like to speak for a few moments, and time is too short to go into much detail, but merely to mention a few of those observations.

DANGERS CONFRONTING OUR HOMES

Elder Moyle has called our attention to some of the tragic things that warn us that there are dangers confronting our homes. The increase of crime and the increase of divorce, the increase of juvenile delinquency, all indicate that there is a weakening of the good influence of the family home, and an increase in the dangers that threaten to destroy it. From the stress that has been laid upon the subject of home and marriage, not only in the scriptures, but also in our conferences from time to time, it would appear that it has always been considered fundamental to the establishment of a strong religious life and the building of the kingdom that the homes of our people be safeguarded and marriage be held sacred.

In the first marriage that was performed upon this earth, the Lord made four significant declarations. First, that it was not good for man to be alone; second, that woman was formed to be a help meet for man; third, that they twain should be of one flesh; and fourth, that man should leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife.

At a later time the Lord reinforced that by saying:

... What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Matt. 19:6.)

LOFTY CONCEPTS OF THE HOME

There is no other people on the face of the earth, that I know anything about, who have the lofty concepts of marriage and the sacredness of the home as do the Latter-day Saints. In a revelation given in our day the Lord said:

... marriage is ordained of God unto man.

Wherefore, it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation. (D. & C. 49:15-16.)

There are, however, unmistakable evidences that the same dangers that are abroad are among us and are seeking to destroy this God-given institution, the home. Many there are who have given counsel in the scientific fields, relating to family life, but largely have their findings about the homes in the modern day been taken from broken and unhappy homes. It has been my privilege to visit, with the others of the General Authorities, regularly in the finest homes of our people, and it is from those visits that I have gleaned some things that I should like to mention to you, suggestive of the elements that build for strength and happiness in the home.

LOVE AND DESIRE FOR CHILDREN

If I were to name the first thing that impresses me always in these fine Latter-day Saint homes, I would say it was a love for and a desire for children. These are homes where the having of children was not delayed because of some social or educational or financial objective, and where the size of the families has not been limited by the practice of birth control.

A few years ago I read some statistics taken from the United States Census Bureau which indicated that out of 180,000 divorces for that given year, 57 percent were in homes where there were no children, 21.2 percent where there was only one child; and in families with five or more children, divorces ranged all the way from none to only .7 of one percent. Clearly is it evident that parental love and oneness that come from planned parenthood is a safe and sure guarantee to the happiness of the home.

MIRACLE OF MOTHERHOOD

Sometime ago I was privileged to hear something about the influence that had come from one of these homes in a letter that was written by a lovely daughter who had just given birth to her first baby. In the early hours of the morning the baby had come, and late in the afternoon she was in a reflective mood; in this reflective mood she had written home to her family. In her letter she told first about her impressions and feelings at the miracle of motherhood, how she had been privileged to be a participant in this wonderful creation. Then she wrote this:

I wonder that we women are not required to undergo even more than labor pains to bring these little ones from another world into this one. It seems so right that we through pain are forced to slip for a few minutes, at least, half-way into another sphere, to sort of bring our baby by the hand into this new world.

The beauty of that girl's thinking about the lofty ideals of womanhood and the sacred calling of the mother in the home is matched only by that which I heard in Canada when I interviewed a young man who was preparing to go on a mission. I sought to find out what his idea and standards had been with respect to honoring womanhood. He looked me unflinchingly in the eye and replied:

Brother Lee, my mother has taught me all my life that a mother can rear her daughter, but it takes a mother plus a good pure girl in order to rear her son properly.

GUARANTEES OF A HAPPY HOME

I am reminded of the remark of a young man to his sweetheart and her reply, when he planned to postpone their marriage because of finances. He said to her somewhat facetiously: "I think probably all I can promise you is a sagebrush home in Idaho," and she replied: "Well, that is fine, then if we ever get anything, it will belong to both of us and not just you."

I am thinking of that mother blessed with a family of girls who kneeled down each night and prayed God that somewhere there would be a mother rearing some sons worthy to become the husbands of her daughters, and then, the daughters finally married. In talking with the mothers of the sons, she found that those mothers had been praying ever since their boys were born that somewhere God would be preparing some girls worthy to become the wives of their sons.

First Day

I say to you, brethren and sisters, such lofty concepts of home, family, and the responsibilities of home and family, are certain guarantees to a happy and successful home.

Coming home on the train from California this last week, I rode with one of these lovely mothers whom I have known and who has reared an excellent family. We talked about the things that had helped to keep her family in line. She said:

Brother Lee, I made it my practice and rule, when my children came along that I was going to make as many contacts with my children in the home as I possibly could. I was always there when they went to school; I planned to give up everything else, if necessary, to be there when they came home; I was there when they had their parties and their friends in the home; and I always waited up after the evening parties in order to greet my children when they came home from the party, because I found that at such moments I was able to encourage a frankness between us, and it permitted me to enjoy their confidences that over the years builded a comradeship which kept them safe in times of difficulty.

What a blessing is such a wise mother! Such children, so taught, with whom mothers and fathers have made such comrades, in times of stress and storm will turn to mother and father as the ship laboring in the storm to the port for safety.

LOVE IN THE HOME

The Apostle Paul, because apparently of the importance that he saw of love in the home, made this statement:

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; . . .

So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. (Eph. 5:25, 28.)

And another prophet condemned the infidelity of men and their unfaithfulness to their companions, those who had failed in their parental responsibilities in these words:

For behold, I, the Lord, have seen the sorrow, and heard the mourning of the daughters of my people in the land of Jerusalem, yea and in all the lands of my people, because of the wickedness and abominations of their husbands.

. . . Ye have broken the hearts of your tender wives, and lost the confidence of your children, because of your bad examples before them and the sobbings of their hearts ascend up to God against you. And because of the strictness of the word of God, which cometh down against you, many hearts died, pierced with deep wounds. (Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:31, 35.)

CHILDREN MADE PARTNERS

I have found in these Latter-day Saint homes that one of the characteristics that mark them as outstanding is that the family has been made into a partnership. Father and mother in the early days, managing the income, have given small weekly allowances to the children to make them partners. As they have grown older, there has been a sort of partial partnership with father and mother as the parent corporation, and still older, a full partnership, and then in old age the parents sell to the children and retire on the income from the properties thus disposed of. Learning how to do on the farm, having a part in homemaking and the family earnings is a sure guarantee against juvenile delinquency. The blase girl who is overpainted and immodestly dressed presents but the unlovely picture of the unhappy girl who is making a bid for a kind of popularity that personal endowments did not provide. The boy with his first smoke and the first drink and the beginning of profanity oftentimes is one who is trying to flag a feeling of inferiority, and acts thus to make himself seemingly equal to a difficult situation. The kinds of homes that I have been describing, as found among the leaders throughout the stakes and missions of this Church, are homes where delinquency is rarely to be found, because of the responsibilities that have been given to the children throughout their growing years. Individual responsibilities assigned to family members seems most vital in the building of these successful homes.

RESPECT FOR EACH OTHER

I see these families showing respect towards each other; father to mother, and affection for her, and mother to father; no quarrelings, no bickerings before the children at least, misunderstandings talked out sensibly—I saw one such home with nine lovely children where the children bear testimony to the fact that they have never heard their father and mother quarrel. The result is now that in the nine homes of these children, following this period of instruction, and the good example of parents, there are nine more lovely and secure families living happily together.

I contrast that with the lament of a father who said: "What is the matter with my family? In every one of their homes, now they are married, they are having trouble, and divorce is threatening." I saw the kind of home they grew up in, and I contrasted it with this other home where safety and security have been provided.

MAINTENANCE OF SPIRITUAL CONTACTS

The maintenance of spiritual contacts, the exercise of family prayers, the constant attention to Church duties have all been some of the things that have helped these homes to be successful, and so as I close with these few observations, may I remind you that the Lord has said that those who are sealed in the temple by the Holy Spirit of Promise shall pass by the angels and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation in all things.

Friday, October 1

May I call that to your attention, you brethren, reminding you that your marriages shall be eternal and shall be perpetuated through eternity only so long as you keep the covenants that you have made. The Spirit of Promise is the spirit which searches the hearts of men, and only when his sealing approval is given—only then will your blessings become eternal.

God grant that the homes of the Latter-day Saints may be blessed and that there shall come into them happiness here and the foundation for exaltation in the celestial kingdom in the world to come, for which I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

Brother Ursenbach, I believe they have, in military matters, what they call a reserve, which they throw in at times when they feel there is an emergent need, so we will ask you to constitute for tomorrow a reserve force upon which we may call.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region will sing as the closing number: "Peace I Leave With You." The closing prayer will be offered by President Robert J. Potter of the Bear River Stake, of Garland, Utah, after which this conference will adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow, Saturday morning.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City. KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KDVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

We should like to express at this time our keen appreciation and gratitude to the Relief Society Singing Mothers for furnishing us with such beautiful and well rendered songs during this Conference.

Tomorrow morning the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the time of beginning.

The Presiding Bishopric will meet the Bishoprics of the Church here in the Tabernacle tonight at 7:00 p.m. The members of all Bishoprics and Ward Clerks are requested to be in attendance. The members of the Presidencies of Stakes are also invited.

Singing by the Singing Mothers: "Peace I Leave With You."

Elder Robert J. Potter, President of the Bear River Stake, offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until Saturday, October 2, 10:00 a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Saturday morning at 10:00.

President George Albert Smith presided at this session, President David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services. The singing for this session of the Conference was furnished by the congregation.

President David O. McKay:

This is the third session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President George Albert Smith is presiding. He has requested that David O. McKay conduct the exercises. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this morning, all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Spencer W. Kimball, who is under doctor's care convalescing at home; Elder Alma Sonne, who is presiding over the European Mission; and President S. Dilworth Young, who is presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The singing during this morning's session will be by the Congregation led by Elder J. Spencer Cornwall, with Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We shall begin this morning's services by the congregation singing: "O Say, What Is Truth?"

The opening prayer will be offered by President Golden D. Carlston of the North Sanpete Stake.

As an opening number, the congregation sang the hymn: "O Say, What is Truth?"

President Golden D. Carlson, of the North Sanpete Stake, offered the opening prayer.

The congregation sang the hymn: "O Ye Mountains High."

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren, sisters and friends—those listening here and elsewhere: I propose in the few minutes allotted to me to talk primarily to the Mormon people, but I would feel complimented if any others would care to listen. It is trite to say that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has many characteristic teachings—those not accepted and taught by other churches as we teach them. Some of these are basic and therefore fundamental to Mormonism, as you all know. Among them are that Joseph Smith was the recipient of divine visions, visitations, and revelations, that the Book of Mormon is a God-given volume to the world which, by reason of the miraculous way it came forth, is the most marvelous book in print today and that the Holy Priesthood—the authority to act for and in the name of Jesus Christ—was given to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery by the laying on of hands of heavenly messengers—first, John the Baptist, and a little later, the Apostles Peter, James, and John. To members of our Church these are actual facts to which countless thousands of them bear fervent testimony, saying in effect they really do know, not believe only, that these things are true. Incidentally, may I say testimony bearing of this nature is, as you know, a characteristic practice among us.

TESTIMONIES OF RETURNED MISSIONARIES

Since the current policy of interviewing returned missionaries by some one of the General Authorities began a dozen years ago, I have interviewed hundreds of these young people and on questioning, at least ninety-nine percent of them readily and positively declared they knew certainly that God lives and that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is his Church. Were these young people telling the truth? Did they, and can any one, positively know that God lives? Multitudes of worldly people answer, nay. But in such a case a negative answer has no value. All it can do is to show that the witness is without knowledge. The testimony of a single witness who has the facts far outweighs the testimony of the multitudes who have no facts. We read that Jesus once declared:

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:16-17.)

Further, on one occasion addressing the question to his disciples, Jesus asked:

But whom say ye that I am?

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon

Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 16:15-17.)

The Latter-day Saints accept this teaching, and multitudes among them declare they know by personal experience that it is the truth. "But how can they know?" the doubter asks. Those having the knowledge rarely, if ever, claim they have ever seen or heard God. (But the boy Joseph Smith asserted that he both saw and heard.) "Then how can they know?" the doubter asks. The answer is: by the power of the Holy Ghost, as Moroni declared. (See Moroni 10:4-5.) Was it not by the power of the Holy Ghost that Peter got his knowledge?

AVENUES OF GETTING KNOWLEDGE

There are avenues of getting knowledge other than those of seeing, hearing, or touching. One of them is mind and feeling. If one has a pain, does he not know it? How? Through his feelings. If he is elated, or sad, or depressed, or hungry, does he not know it? It is through our feelings that much of our knowledge comes. In his work of translating the Book of Mormon, how did the Prophet Joseph Smith know when a particular translation was correct? By a "burning" in his bosom, he declared—that is, by a feeling of perfect assurance.

Many a prayer has been divinely answered while the petitioner was still on his knees. How did he know the answer came from above? By the way he felt—the feeling of satisfaction, of elation, of perfect assurance, of right accompanying the mental impressions received. But it is well for us to remember that mental impressions may come from two different sources—one from above, the other from below—from the Lord, or from Satan. We may know the source of the impression by the way we feel. If it is from the devil, it is never accompanied by a feeling of joyous satisfaction and positive assurance of right—a characteristic of impressions that come from the Lord. The one who prays need not be deceived by impressions that come into his mind in answer to prayer. Divine impressions have accompanying characteristics of genuineness.

VISION GIVEN TO JOSEPH SMITH

Yes, God does live. The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are three separate personal beings, alike in form, in whose image man is made. In order that these basic fundamental truths, lost to the world through centuries of erroneous teachings, might again be available to people of our day, a new revelation was necessary, and this was given to the fourteen-year-old Joseph Smith in the form of the most glorious vision ever given to mortal man, so far as the records indicate—a vision in which Father and Son appeared simultaneously—given to this uneducated, backwoods boy in order " . . . that I might show forth my wisdom through the weak things of the earth" (D. & C. 124:1) — a youth who three and one-half years later was told by a messenger from heaven that his name should be had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues. Yes, Joseph Smith was divinely called, a truth to which his works and the personal testimony of hundreds of thousands of his followers sincerely testify. And judged solely by his works—the measuring stick universally employed in determining greatness in men—Joseph Smith surely presents a challenge to every normal-minded adult human being interested in the good and happiness of himself and fellowmen, a challenge to give careful study and thorough investigation to his claims and teachings. Personally, I believe that even very many of our Mormon people are more or less careless and indifferent to the significance of the message Joseph Smith was called to deliver to the world.

SATAN RESPONSIBLE FOR WORLD TROUBLES

In this connection, it is perhaps well to remind ourselves that Satan the devil, whom I mentioned a moment ago, is a real personal being, a spirit brother of ours with a spirit body in form like that of all other men. He is here on earth with a multitude of other spirit children of our Father in heaven. He and his hosts are doing all they can to handicap the work of the Lord by handicapping the Father's children here in mortality. All our troubles, sorrows, miseries, sins, and wickedness stem right back to Satan, who through his temptations and machinations leads men away from the paths of peace, fair dealing, and righteous living, from the love of God and love of their fellow mortals.

When traveling about Europe twelve to fifteen years ago, we frequently met people who said, "There is no God who loves us and whose children we are; otherwise, he never would have permitted the First World War, entailing misery and destruction to many millions of human beings." Of course the answer of Mormonism to such false conclusions is that Satan, and not God, is responsible in the final analysis for these troubles. To every child that comes into mortality our Father in heaven has given his free agency—freedom to do as he pleases, freedom to yield to the temptations and power of Satan, freedom to reject God and righteousness. These matters are fairly well understood by Latter-day Saints, but not by many of their non-Mormon brethren. Yes, Satan is the father of lies, the inspiration of wickedness, and the source of wars. Years ago a great newspaper in the Middle West entitled its lead editorial "Hitler, the Devil Incarnate." God works through men willing to obey him, to lead his mortal children to paths of righteousness. Likewise, Satan works through men willing to yield to temptations, to bring troubles and destruction to God's children. Whether we serve God or Satan is a matter for the individual to decide. But having given each person his free agency, God holds him responsible for the way he uses it—whether for the good and uplift, or otherwise, of his fellow men.

THE POWER OF SATAN

Relative to Satan, perhaps he has more influence among men today than ever before in human history. We have yet no treaty of peace with Germany or Japan, and none as yet in sight, though fighting with these countries ended more than three years ago. In the First World War, Armistice Day came the 11th of November. In the following June a treaty of peace with Germany was signed. What is the trouble now? My answer is Satan. I think the leaders of certain nations who have a voice in making treaties are in the power of Satan. And Satan does not want peace. The more trouble, fighting, and wickedness in the world, the more Satan laughs. How childish, weak, and stupid many of us are! We yield more or less readily to our destroyer, both in matters that affect us in person and in mass. But Russia is wholly atheistic. In all the public schools there, from the kindergarten to the university, the children are taught the Satanic doctrine that there is no God. The "law of the jungle" rules in government circles. When will treaties of peace conformable to Christian standards, in the making of which Russia has a voice, become effective in Germany and Japan?

But we need not look abroad to see troubles and unchristian conduct. We have plenty in our beloved America. But whether in our country or abroad, the ultimate cause is the same—the influence of Satan. And this influence is largely manifested through a universal human trait—that of selfishness. Have not all the major wars of history been due to selfishness, especially when associated with the similar traits of ambition and greed? The Christian rule of conduct is indicated by the second great commandment: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." If you do this, then necessarily you treat your neighbor as you would like to be treated in similar circumstances. In other words, you observe the Golden Rule, a thing so difficult to do that perhaps no one fully succeeds in doing it. But the rule expresses the Christian ideal. If this ideal, even approximately, motivated the makers of international treaties, peace between nations would soon be here—the great desideratum of the vast majority of the people of every country.

DEVIL-INSPIRED TROUBLES

Now in our own country what do we see? A multitude of devil-inspired troubles, most of them having their roots in uncontrolled and excessive selfishness, exhibited by excessive prices of necessities, work stoppages, strikes, mass picketing, lockouts, crimes, and indulgence in sinful practices, pressure groups making inordinate demands, struggles to get something for nothing—to name only a few of them. Unless America wakes up to the grave dangers of the trend of the times and takes steps to curb and eliminate these evils, her doom is sealed as a land of free, prosperous, and happy people. This land is to continue as a "choice land above all other lands," (words divinely spoken) only on condition of the righteousness of her inhabitants.

Latter-day Saints will observe that I have said nothing new—nothing that they do not already know. But my purpose in saying these things is to call them again to our attention. In obedience to the divine will given to us by revelation, we partake weekly of the emblems of the Holy Sacrament as a reminder and for a renewal of our covenants. The Lord knows we have very good forgetters; he knows we need to be frequently reminded.

REPENTANCE NEEDED

Brethren and sisters, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we need to repent of sinful worldly practices in which many of us indulge more or less. We need to bring our selfish desires and practices within the limits of the Golden Rule. We need to cultivate humility and do more sincere praying, particularly in our family circles. We need to keep more vividly in mind the commandments of the Lord and with more determination increase our efforts to govern our lives accordingly, that is, implement these commandments in our daily living.

Everyone of us has more or less influence with those who see and know how we act, how we live. And since we are all expected to be missionaries and teach the gospel of Christ our Lord to all the world, we should keep in mind the fact that in the long run the most effective way the majority of us can do this is by example. We are all familiar with the old saying, "I would rather see a sermon than hear one"—a very natural attitude to take. With the Apostle James we teach that faith without works is dead and that in the great day of judgment we shall be judged according to our works.

OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH DAY

In this connection may I mention the Fourth Commandment which enjoins us to keep holy the Sabbath day—a commandment so frequently violated by multitudes of people, even by some of our own people. Whatever non-members may do in violation of this holy day does not justify us in any degree whatsoever in doing likewise on this day. We cannot go to movies, or ball games, or other kinds of commercial entertainments. We may not go hunting, or fishing, or golfing, on the Sabbath without violating the holiness of the day—such is a doctrine of the gospel of Jesus Christ as we interpret it, notwithstanding the teachings of some professing Christians to the contrary. The Lord has spoken in modern days on this subject.

I have spoken of some characteristic teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In addition we have some teachings that are at the basis of every acceptable Christian life. Some of these are indicated in the Thirteenth Article of Faith:

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. . . .

Brethren and sisters, God has again showed himself and spoken to man in modern times. He is a personal being in whose image we, his children are made both in the spirit and the flesh. This is his Church, the only one on earth that he recognizes as his own, a truth that we declare not boastfully but in humility, very thankful that we have been given eyes to see, ears to hear, hearts to feel, and minds to understand.

God help us all to accept and continue loyal and faithful to these truths I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Somehow or other, this task never seems to become any easier. In fact at times I feel that it becomes more difficult, and I earnestly hope that you will sustain me with your thoughts and prayers and that my Father in heaven will give me utterance.

TESTIMONY OF INFORMED WITNESS

I was struck by a thought that Dr. Merrill presented in the opening paragraphs of his talk, that the testimony of one informed witness is worth infinitely more than the testimony of many who don't know. I have often made the observation that an idiotic opinion multiplied by fifty million is still an idiotic opinion. Sometimes our children endeavor to induce us to give them permission to do things we know they shouldn't do, with the well-worn phrase that "everybody is doing them."

But no matter what everybody does, an error is still an error even though it is multiplied millions of times. So is an evil, and it doesn't matter how popular or how glamorous or how universal evils become, they are still evils. Some evils have been made very glamorous, very appealing and very popular, but we must be aware of the fact that they are still what they are, regardless of who partakes of them or what they are called, or what appearance they assume. History has proved many times over that the opinion of one man who knows and who knows that he knows, the opinion of one man who has the truth and proclaims it, is much more important than the opinions of many millions who don't know.

EVENTS OF A CENTURY AGO

I can't look at this audience this morning without thinking of another audience that gathered on Temple Square a hundred years ago. It is one hundred years this month since the first general conference was held on Temple Square. A bowery was built here in 1847. A special conference was held in that year, in August, I believe, and the two general conferences following that one, one on Christmas day, 1847, and one in April 1848, were held back in Kanesville, Iowa. The first general conference of the Church on this square was one hundred years ago now, and what has happened since then, here and elsewhere, is almost beyond belief.

The picture of those people comes before us—men and women who faced the harsh realities of physical existence, who had been, that summer and that spring, through the ordeal of seeing their crops threatened by complete destruction, and many of whom had witnessed the deliverance through their Father in heaven by the episode of the seagulls, which is now immortalized in stone on this block.

With what little they had, ragged, I am sure, many of them, and worn and weary, nevertheless they continued to consult their convictions rather than their convenience, and the fact that they did so accounts for what we have here today, physically and tangibly, as well as the greater spiritual and intangible values that have so blessed our lives and the lives of our children. May God bless their memories and help us to be worthy of the heritage they gave us.

FAME OF TEMPLE SQUARE

This square has since become one of the most visited and most talked-of ten acres in the world, I am sure. President Smith told you yesterday that we had had more than eight hundred forty thousand visitors up to this time this year. About a million people a year are coming here currently, a little more or less. There are still many people who come here from all parts of the country who remember and who speak feelingly of their visits in decades gone by, when they met such men as Joseph Peery who so greatly influenced what went on, on this block, for so many years.

But we are facing new circumstances so far as the operation of this square is concerned. It was only fifteen years ago, in 1933, that there were about one hundred thousand people who visited this place, and I rather think that that figure might have included the general conference visitors. We have about ten times that number now, excluding general conference visitors. It was only three years ago, 1945, that we had about a third as many people come here as we have now, three hundred seventy-seven thousand in 1945. You can see that we are facing new problems of organization and administration, and if the activities on these grounds continue to multiply in the next ten or fifteen years as they have in the past, these ten acres literally will not accommodate them.

TEMPLE SQUARE GUIDES

We have some seventy-five guides functioning now on these grounds, faithful men and women who take time from their businesses and their professions and their homes at a moment's notice to come here and render such service as is needed. We have about eight lawyers, three or four doctors, and many successful businessmen, who leave their clients, their patients, and their customers waiting in their offices while they come here to conduct strangers about these grounds. There are many times when we have five or six groups moving on the grounds at once, and if one building is tied up, it means that there are many times when we have no place to take these people who come. They come at their convenience, not at ours, and we have to take care of them when they come or not see them at all.

These grounds are open about fourteen hours a day at the present time, and they are open almost every day of the year, seven days a week. The only day we have been closed in my experience here is Christmas Day, and I am sure we could have conducted some people about the grounds even on that day. This is our window to the world, and I want to express my appreciation to the Presiding Bishopric for their most helpful and sympathetic cooperation in maintaining the personnel and the physical appearance of these grounds, and to the First Presidency, President Smith and President Clark, and President McKay, in helping us to get the help we need and in helping us with many of our problems and in acquiring the physical facilities we need here. I almost believe at times, without being able to prove it, that not only do we see more people here than anywhere else in the Church, but that more strangers see us here than in all the rest of the Church put together.

TEACHINGS OF KARL G. MAESER

I am grateful to Brother Frank Otterstrom for inviting again to my attention a few sentences from the mind and heart and experience of Brother Karl G. Maeser who had such an influence on this Church and its educational policies in his generation, and on the lives of those who have succeeded his generation.

Here is one which we may all have heard many times over but repetition of which is well worth while:

The Lord has unconditionally declared the triumph of his Church, but his promises to me are all conditional. My concern, therefore is about myself.

I have no fear, and I know you haven't, as to the ultimate destiny of this Church, and of the Lord's work in the earth. But many individuals fall by the wayside, and in the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord has in a number of places distinguished between his pleasure with the Church collectively and his pleasure with people individually, or displeasure as it may be. One such utterance is in the first section, where he declares that he is pleased with the Church speaking collectively but not individually. Regardless of the great strides the Church has made, in the words of Karl G. Maeser, "my concern . . . is about myself" and my own part and contribution to it. I commend to you the beautiful and profound thought of President Ivins yesterday: "Serving for the sheer joy of service, without thought of self."

Saturday, October 2

Second Day

Another sentence from Brother Maeser:

No man shall be more exacting of me or of my conduct than I am of myself.

And another one:

I would rather trust my child to a serpent than to a teacher who does not believe in God.

Here is another:

The Lord never gets in debt to any man.

I am reminded of Bishop Richards' remarks here yesterday.

And here is another sentence from Karl G. Maeser that is pertinent to our present problems:

Youth demands recreation, and if it is not provided in high places they will seek it in low places.

Brother Moyle touched on that yesterday: Spending time with our children regardless of our other pressing professional and business pursuits. These children of ours are going to grow up. What we have said about the visitors who come here, that they come at their convenience and not at ours, is true of children. They grow up at their convenience, or at Nature's convenience, and not at ours, and we had better touch their lives while they are with us and while we have the opportunity. They are going to find companionship somewhere, and if it isn't our companionship, it will be the companionship of someone else. If it isn't our influence, it will be some other influence that shapes and molds them, because they are not going to be isolated from outside influences, and we shall have no cause for complaint about the influences that do mold their lives unless we do our best to see that ours is dominant in the shaping and moulding of their characters.

A final sentence from Brother Maeser:

If you want excuses, go to the devil—he can give you any number.

We can go to the devil for a good many things, and sometimes, in some instances, I'm afraid that is the source of too much that is plentiful in the world. The law of supply and demand does not seem to work as well as it should in this instance.

REPENTANCE AND FORGIVENESS

I am grateful, however, as Bishop Isaacson expressed yesterday, that this is a Church that proclaims the principles of repentance and forgiveness. If it weren't for repentance and forgiveness, life would be hopeless for most of us, if not for all of us.

I was talking a day or two ago with two of our brethren who are attorneys, and we were speaking of some of our penal practices and problems, about life imprisonment, for example. A man who is imprisoned for life, and who knows that there is no hope for him, hasn't much inducement, perhaps, to be on his good behavior. I recall a scene to which I was a witness not long ago, which involved a small boy who had been invited to stay in the house for the rest of the day because he needed some disciplining. He was rather obstreperous during the day and said, "Why should I be good? I can't go out anyway."

Well, he had to be reminded that there was another day coming. If there isn't another day coming, there isn't much inducement, and I am grateful for the principle of repentance and forgiveness. There is another day coming for all men, with some rare exceptions, on terms of repentance and forgiveness, and obedience. "Go thy way, and sin no more." There are two parts to that equation and they involve both forgiveness and sincere repentance.

I am grateful for my fellowship with you, my brothers and sisters, more than I can speak. And I am grateful that the mysteries of the kingdom have never troubled me much. I think that the simple truths of the gospel are so plain and so beautiful that I don't worry much about the things that no man can explain; and I am sure in my own heart that if we will just live as well as we know how to live, we will be all right here and hereafter. It won't be the things that we don't know that will give us trouble. It will be the things that we do know and fail to abide by.

May God help us to go forth and live our lives and meet our problems and counsel our families and render service in his Church and be accepted into the kingdom of our Father in heaven, with his approbation, when that time shall come, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THOMAS E. McKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

President Smith, President Clark, President McKay, and President Richards, and brethren and sisters, may I join with some of the other speakers who have preceded me in expressing sincere appreciation for my membership in the Church and for the gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day. I am especially thankful for the gospel because of the many opportunities it has given me and is giving me to work. I think work is one of the greatest blessings a kind Heavenly Father can bestow upon his children.

I quote the following lines about work, signed "Author Unknown." It starts out by asking the question, "Who am I?"

WHO AM I?

I am the foundation of all prosperity.
 I am that from which all blessings flow.
 Everything that is of value in this world springs from me.
 I am the salt that gives life its savor.
 I am the sole support of the poor.
 And the rich who think they can do without me live futile lives—fill premature graves.
 I have made America.
 I have built her matchless industries, laid her incomparable railroads, created her citizens, and reared her skyscrapers.
 I am the friend of every worthy youth. If he makes my acquaintance when he is young and keeps me by his side throughout his life, I can do more for him than the richest parent.
 I keep bodies clean and fit, minds alert; and when neglected, both bodies and minds grow fat and sluggish.
 I am even the parent of genius itself.
 I am represented by every paper that flies from the press, in every loaf of bread that springs from the oven, in every train that crosses the continent, and in every ship that steams the ocean.
 Fools hate me; wise men love me.
 The man who keeps his hand in mine through life never dies—because that which he has created with my help lives on after he is gone.
 The man who shirks me and scorns my aid, never lives—Never really lives, even though he may continue to breathe.
 Who am I? What am I?
 I am WORK!

—Author Unknown

OPPORTUNITIES FOR CHURCH SERVICE

I am especially grateful for the great organization of our Church, an organization that gives every person, who desires, an opportunity for work. Even the members are supposed to be missionaries and set the proper example. "A clean life is the greatest sermon in the world."

I am indebted for the following figures, showing how the organization works, to the general committee on statistics of the Church of whom Dr. Widtsoe is the chairman.

Speaking first of the ward units:

		Total
Offices to be filled from ward membership (average ward membership 665)	257
Number of wards and dependent branches in stakes	1,419	364,683
Offices by stakes (average stake membership 5,300)	256
Number of stakes	172	44,032
Estimated offices in missions including missionaries		60,000
General Church officers (including general boards and mission presidencies)		400
Total Church offices to be filled		469,115

There is no other organization in the world comparable to the organization in our Church. Then think of the priesthood officers and the priesthood members, all of whom have special assignments.

		Quorums	Membership

CALLING OF A WARD TEACHER

All these officers and teachers have an opportunity to work. Some may think, "Oh, it doesn't matter if I don't keep the Word of Wisdom or am only a part tithepayer. I'm only a deacon, or I'm only an elder, or a counselor in an organization; if I were a bishop or a president of a stake, I'd keep the Word of Wisdom. I wouldn't break the Sabbath day, but I'm only a ward teacher." Only a ward teacher! There is no greater calling, brethren, in the Church, than that of a ward teacher. If the ward teachers realized what an opportunity that is and if they were doing their duty, we wouldn't have the condition exist that Brother Ivins referred to in his splendid talk yesterday. The bishop would know through these ward teachers if any of the children in his ward were over nine years of age and not baptized, or needed shoes before they could enter school. He would know if the ward teachers were doing their duty, where our boys are who are in the service at this time, and when they changed their address. They could always get such information from the mothers in the homes they visit. It doesn't matter, brethren and sisters, so much what the position is. It is how we fill that position. We are given a job to do. It may be the only position that we have to show our Father in heaven that we can make good, that he can depend upon us.

*In this computation, the approximately ten percent of transient Church members has been added only to the Melchizedek Priesthood figures. If a similar ten percent were added to the Aaronic Priesthood figures the Aaronic Priesthood membership would total 133,810, giving a total priesthood membership of 280,140.

VISIT TO WESTERN STATES MISSION

I am very grateful for the opportunity that I have in visiting the stakes and the missions. I wish to endorse what Brother Clifford Young said yesterday with reference to our mission presidents and missionaries—the fine work they are doing. Just recently Sister McKay and I returned from a very strenuous but interesting and beneficial tour of the Western States Mission with President and Sister Francis A. Child. They also are doing a wonderful work. They are real leaders, fine executives, and they have the respect, confidence, and love of all the missionaries as well as of the members and non-members.

We traveled by auto nearly five thousand miles, averaged about three hundred miles a day; held nineteen district conferences and eleven district meetings with the missionaries. In these thirty meetings we contacted and heard from all the one hundred and fifty missionaries. They are doing a fine work. We were certainly delighted with the manner in which President Child meets the new missionaries as they come into the field. They are taken to their home headquarters and made to feel that they are welcome. President and Sister Child get acquainted with these new missionaries by holding a testimony meeting and a "search-for-talent" meeting, an impromptu meeting where these new missionaries are given an opportunity to show what they can do; and then they are given their instructions and their assignments. I was especially delighted with one of the instructions.

Here's a good thing to remember and a better thing to do.
Always join the construction gang and never the wrecking crew.

THE GOOD AND THE BEAUTIFUL

President Child is an optimist. He exemplifies what I like to call the "boost spirit." I think we need more of it in the Church and in the world, more "boost spirit" and less knock-knock; more builders and fewer wreckers, more lifters and fewer leaners.

"If we look for the good and the beautiful, the good and the beautiful will come back to us." A prominent writer expresses this truth as follows:

The universe pays every man in his own coin: if you smile, it smiles upon you in return; if you frown, you will be frowned at; if you sing, you will be invited into gay company; if you think, you will be entertained by thinkers; and if you love the world and earnestly seek for the good that is therein, you will be surrounded by loving friends, and nature will pour into your lap the treasures of the earth. Censure, criticize, and hate, and you will be censured, criticized, and hated by your fellow men. Every seed brings forth after its kind. Mistrust begets mistrust, and confidence begets confidence; kindness begets kindness, and love begets love. ("Compensation"—N. W. Zimmerman.)

How much happier we would be and how much more joy there would be in the world 'if we looked for and spoke only of the good and the beautiful; if we looked at the beauty of the hawthorn twig, its symmetry, instead of pointing out to everyone the dead leaf; if we enjoyed the fragrance and the beauty of the rose, instead of frowning and calling people's attention to the thorn on the stem; if we enjoyed to the fullest the uplift of the purity of the lily instead of calling attention to the little dirt left on the roots!

I like this story of the old frog:

Once on the edge of a quiet pool,
Under the bank where 'twas nice and cool,
Just where the stream flowed out of the bay,
There sat a grumpy and mean old frog,
Who sat all day in the sand to soak,
And just did nothing but croak and croak.
A blackbird hollered, "I say, you know,
What is the matter down there below?
Are you in trouble or pain or what?"
The old frog growled, "Mine is an awful lot."
" 'Tis a dirty world," thus the old frog spoke—
"Croakety, croakety, croakety, croak."
Then the blackbird said, "I see what's wrong.
Why don't you smile or sing a song?
Look up, young feller, why bless my soul,
You're looking down a muskrat hole!"
A wise old turtle, who boarded near,
Said to the blackbird, "Now, friend, see here, Don't waste no tears on him," says he.
"That fool's down there, cause he wants to be."

BUILDERS AND NOT WRECKERS

In the future when any of us have the urge or are tempted to repeat gossip or speak unkindly or perhaps untruthfully of a neighbor or a brother, let us think that we also are just looking down a muskrat hole and then look up at the birds. Imagine we can hear the beautiful song of the meadow lark or the robin or the red-winged blackbird. My, how I used to thrill to listen to those red-winged blackbirds after a hard and dreary old winter, singing that early spring song! How much I am indebted to the Church, to the gospel of work since those early days! I trust, my brethren and sisters, that the Lord will bless us that we may be boosters and not fault-finders, builders and not wreckers, lifters and not leaners, that we may look for and speak of only the good and the beautiful and above all that we may do our work so well, no matter what the calling is, that it can never be said of us truthfully or written after our names that we were called and found wanting, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The following cablegram came this morning, signed by Harold Rex, President of the Brazilian Mission:

"Brazilian missionaries and Saints send greetings to Saints assembled in conference and wish to report a twenty per cent increase in membership thus far this year."

Singing by the congregation: "Redeemer of Israel."

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I would like to ask each of you to offer a silent prayer on your own behalf that while I speak you may enjoy the spirit of the Holy Ghost and that I, too may enjoy it, that we may thereby all be edified.

Like some of the other brethren, I have just returned from visiting one of the missions, the Canadian Mission. President Eyre, with the able support of his good wife, is doing a good work. While there, I was impressed as I think one might be who was watching a great experiment, an experiment in which it was being determined what the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ can do to the changing of the lives of men and women. The experiences of that visit are still upon my mind.

EARLY MISSIONARY EFFORTS IN CANADA

I was reminded of some of the events which took place there during the early rise of this kingdom in these latter-days. The Prophet Joseph Smith, with Sidney Rigdon, was in Brantford, Ontario, in 1833. They went there following receipt of the revelation we know as the one hundredth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, in which the Lord had shown unto them great mercy and consideration in advising them that their families were well. They had been separated from their families for some time and were concerned about them.

While in Canada, they experienced the fulfilment of the promise the Lord made in that revelation, that an effectual door would be opened for them in the land roundabout. At Mount Pleasant and Brantford, some sixteen or eighteen people joined the Church. The promise that the Holy Ghost would bear record of the truthfulness of what the brethren said was there fulfilled. Of one meeting the Prophet said:

Elder Rigdon preached to a large congregation . . . and I bore record while the Lord gave his spirit in a remarkable manner.

Toward the people the Prophet evidenced the same kind feelings that the Lord had shown to him and Sidney Rigdon. Of them he makes entries in his journal, such as, "The people were very tender and inquiring." And again, "O God, seal our testimony to their hearts."

You are all acquainted with the fact that in 1836 Parley P. Pratt went to Canada following a great prophecy uttered by Heber C. Kimball, in which Parley P. Pratt was instructed to go to Toronto. He was told that he would there find people waiting for him who would receive the gospel, and that from there the gospel would spread into England where a great work would be done. You know how he found President John Taylor, the Fieldings, and others, and how from correspondence that went out from that place the ground was laid for the opening of the great British Mission.

In August of the next year, 1837, the Prophet Joseph Smith with Sidney Rigdon and Thomas B. Marsh, then president of the Twelve Apostles, visited Toronto. Riding in a carriage and holding evening meetings by candlelight, they visited the churches. Elder Taylor accompanied them. "This was as great a treat to me as I ever enjoyed," he said. "I had daily opportunity of conversing with them, of listening to their instructions, and in participating in the rich stores of intelligence that flowed continually from the Prophet Joseph."

SPIRITUALITY NOTED IN CANADIAN MISSION

As we traveled through the mission, it seemed to me that the spirit which accompanied these early brethren in their missionary labors was still to be found among the people in that goodly land.

We could feel it among the missionaries as we shook hands with them and conversed with them and heard them make their reports. The power of the gospel operating upon them is effecting a marvelous transformation in their lives. In the missionary meetings they bore eloquent testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ and of its restoration through the Prophet Joseph Smith. Their eyes would fill with tears as they expressed their appreciation to their Heavenly Father, to you their parents, and to others of their loved ones, who are making it possible for them to fulfil their missions.

It was inspiring to see these young missionaries—who a few months ago were to a large extent, irresponsible, carefree boys and girls—watching the doors of the meetinghouses as the time for meeting approached. As their contacts arrived, they gathered them together, shepherded them to seats near the front, and proudly and tenderly sat down in the midst of them.

At the conferences there were in attendance in every one of the general meetings from seven to twenty non-member friends of the missionaries who were interested in the gospel. Some of them came as far as three hundred miles to attend the meeting—of course, some of the Saints came much longer distances—and they all said it was worth it. As the gospel has affected the lives of the missionaries in this great work, so has it affected the lives of the members and the investigators. When they truly accept the gospel of Jesus Christ, they have a completely new outlook on life.

After the meetings they are loath to leave the premises. They stand around for a long time. Of course that is characteristic of all Latter-day Saint gatherings. Speaking to one of the non-members after he had been there an hour, he said to me: "Well, since the meeting I have shaken hands with that young missionary over there four times. And," he said, "I have enjoyed it every time."

May I say again that the effect that the gospel of Jesus Christ has had upon these missionaries and upon these members and sincere investigators is proof positive of its power to change the interest and the very lives of men and women. It has always been that way.

EXPERIENCE OF ENOS

I call to mind the experience of Enos, a grandson of Lehi, who longed in his heart for a knowledge of the truthfulness of the things of which he had heard his father, Jacob, speak, and so while he was hunting beasts in the forest, he kneeled down upon the ground and called upon his Father in heaven in mighty prayer and supplication. And as he was praying, he heard a voice say unto him:

... Enos, thy sins are forgiven thee, and thou shalt be blessed.

And he cried out:

Lord, how is it done?

And then the Lord said:

... Because of thy faith in Christ, whom thou hast never before heard nor seen ... wherefore, go to, thy faith hath made thee whole. (Enos 5, 7-8)

Now the effect upon Enos of that testimony of the truth and the knowledge of the gospel which he had is shown in the following paragraph in which he said:

Now, it came to pass that when I heard these words I began to feel a desire for the welfare of my brethren, the Nephites; wherefore, I did pour out my whole soul unto God for them. (Ibid., 9.)

And not only did his heart change that he had a desire for the welfare of the Nephites, who were his brethren, but he had a similar desire for the Lamanites, who were his enemies, and he poured out his soul unto God for them.

GOSPEL EFFECTS CHANGES

In the twenty-third and twenty-fourth chapters of Alma we have a dramatic account of the power of the gospel changing almost a whole nation from a bloodthirsty, indolent, warlike people into industrious, peace-loving people. Of these people the record says that thousands were brought to a knowledge of the Lord, and that as many as were brought to a knowledge of the truth never did fall away,

For they became a righteous people; they did lay down the weapons of their rebellion, that they did not fight against God any more, neither against any of their brethren. (Alma 23:7.)

And:

... there was not one soul among all the people who had been converted unto the Lord that would take up arms against their brethren; ... they would not even make any preparations for war. (Ibid., 24:6.)

On the contrary, they gave thanks unto God that he had given them a portion of his spirit to soften their hearts.

That is the great message I want to leave here. It is the softening of the hearts that this gospel does to the people who receive it.

The record continues:

... and this they did, vouching and covenanting with God, that rather than shed the blood of their brethren they would give up their own lives; and rather than take away from a brother they would give unto him; and rather than spend their days in idleness they would labor abundantly with their hands. (Ibid., 24:18.)

And:

... they buried the weapons of war, for peace. (Ibid., 24:19)

Now this remarkable transformation wrought in the hearts of these thousands of people was done in a very short period of time under the influence and power of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It would do the same thing today for all the peoples of the earth if they would but receive it, for in very deed it is, as Paul said, "the power of God unto salvation," (Romans 1:16) not only spiritually, but also temporally and politically and in every other way.

It is a marvelous light even now shining in the darkness in this benighted world, but, unfortunately, as John said:

... the light shineth in the darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not. (John 1:5.)

RESULTS OF REJECTION

Time and time again during the history of man's sojourn upon this earth, the Lord has sent his gospel, this marvelous light, into the world to change the hearts of men in the time of crisis, that they might be saved from destruction, and time and time again the peoples of this earth have rejected it.

Just as acceptance of it changes the hearts of men and women, bringing righteousness, love, peace, and happiness, so the rejection of the gospel of Jesus, Christ brings wickedness, hate, war, and suffering. History clearly establishes the fact that the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ cannot be rejected with impunity.

On this point I call to mind and ask you to consider with me for a moment the experiences of the Jews in the meridian of time. The Savior presented himself and taught his gospel personally to them, but they rejected it. Near the close of his ministry, knowing that they had rejected both him and the gospel which he taught them, he was moved with profound sorrow and broke forth in that great well-known lamentation:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

He said, as a result of this rejection:

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matt. 23:37-39.)

Elder James E. Talmage says he probably uttered these fateful words as he stood on the heights of the temple for the last time overlooking the city of the great king. This thought seemed to continue with him, because a short time thereafter as he was leaving for the final time the temple environs, the Apostles came to him and pointed out to him the beauty of the temple and the buildings on the temple site. His only answer was:

... verily, I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down. (Ibid., 24:2.)

He returned again to this subject on his way to Golgotha when he said to certain women who, following him, bewailed the fate to which he was going:

... Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. (Luke 23:28.)

And then he detailed to them the terrible events that would accompany the destruction of Jerusalem, which he saw coming as a result of the rejection of his message by the people of that day. He told them that those times and events would be so terrible that they would call upon the mountains to fall upon them and upon the hills to cover them.

You all know the sequel, how the Jews carried through their awful plot and crucified the Son of God, and how thereafter they continued to fight against his gospel. You remember, too, the price they paid, how in 70 A.D. the city fell into the hands of the Romans as the climax of a siege in which the historian Josephus tells us there were a million one hundred thousand people killed and

. . . tens of thousands were taken captive, to be afterwards sold into slavery, or to be slain by wild beasts, or in gladiatorial combat for the amusement of Roman spectators.

All of this destruction and the dispersion of the Jews would have been avoided had the people accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ and had their hearts changed by it.

CHOICE BEFORE WORLD TODAY

Today the peoples of the earth stand at the crossing of the same roads as did the Jews in the days of Jesus. The same choice is before them. They may accept the gospel of Jesus Christ and move on to righteousness, peace, love, and happiness, or they may reject it and suffer wickedness, hate, war, and destruction.

The Lord in his great mercy has seen the events of our time coming, and he has sounded the warning and offered the way of escape. Remember that in the first section of the Doctrine and Covenants he said:

. . . I, the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jun., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments;

Continuing with this modern revelation, the Lord makes references to that experience of Jerusalem, of which I have told you:

Behold, I tell you these things even as I also told the people of the destruction of Jerusalem; and my word shall be verified at this time as it hath hitherto been verified. (Ibid., 5:19-20.)

Now my beloved brethren and sisters, in conclusion I bear witness to the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ as restored to the earth in these latter-days through the Prophet Joseph Smith is intended to be and it is the key to the solution of the problems which face our world today, both people individually and collectively. May we who have accepted and declared our allegiance to it keep it brightly shining in our own lives and before the nations of the world, and may others of our Father's children in sufficient numbers receive it before it is too late, that the world may be saved from destruction, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren and sisters, I humbly pray that the spirit which thus far has guided this conference, of which we have all partaken, may continue while I shall speak to you.

One gets so much in one of these general conferences not only from the direct instructions and observations which come, but also from the thought which these instructions and directions invoke, that it is a little difficult sometimes to collect one's thoughts along a particular line.

THE TREASURES OF LIFE

As we grow and enter the upper brackets of years, we reflect a great deal upon the things which are of lasting importance and we come clearly to see that many of the things which we thought were of value in our earlier lives are merely the dross and that the gold, the treasures of life, we may have overlooked.

I am grateful that while I still live and have opportunity to serve that I have come more or less to appreciate, I try fully so to do, the things that are worth while. I try to shear away the unimportant, and, when I do so, I find that worldly things have pretty largely disappeared, that the objects which ordinarily are the matters of ambition among men have gone, and life settles down to the problem of the future. I cease to look at time and get over as near as may be into eternity. I am grateful for the knowledge which the Lord has enabled me to get, which means he has given to me of the things of the spirit. I am grateful for the knowledge of the gospel, imperfect as is the knowledge which I have. I am grateful for my testimony which strengthens with the days and the years, and I am grateful that the blessings which I thus recount to myself are the blessings which belong and are enjoyed by all of you. I come to see that the things which men give in the way of honor and respect and office and position are really of little worth. They are not worth what sometimes we feel we have to give in order to obtain them. I come to know that worldly goods are of no consequence whatever, save I have enough to eat, and to drink and reasonably to wear, and that to attempt to leave wealth to my children will not only be a futile effort but that it may prove a curse.

I do not mean by this that we should cease to exert our efforts to become influential for good in our communities. I do not mean that we should forget that we are living here and have our lives to live. I do not forget that a reasonable provision for those who come after us is a wise thing. I am only saying that none of these things is worth the sacrifice of a principle. They are not worth the sacrifice of our integrity, of our honor, of our righteous living.

WORLD IN A MESS

It is a trite thing to say the world is in a mess. That we know, and out of a life of seventy-seven years I can say that so far as I can see, it has never been in the mess that it is in today. There have never before, in my life, been the powers of evil in such strength. Satan seems to have taken us over very largely, and we are more or less his tools. This is not the first time in our national history that we have been in trouble, and when I say "we," I mean the people. I am not talking of administrations. I am talking of us, we the people of the United States.

PROCLAMATION OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

I have always been impressed with a great proclamation that was issued by Abraham Lincoln. He issued it in one of the darkest hours of the Civil War, just before Vicksburg, the surrender of which opened up the Mississippi River, and just before Gettysburg, which stopped the threatened invasion of the North. The Senate had passed a resolution calling attention to the needs of the country and asked him to set apart a day for national prayer and humiliation. The nation was considered almost bankrupt from debt. The people were tax-ridden, almost beyond endurance; the army was unpaid, some of it for a period of six months, and it was daily dwindling by desertion. The president issued a proclamation, and I want to read two or three paragraphs therefrom.

"We," by which he meant the people, ... have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in number, wealth, and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us, and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own. Intoxicated with unbroken success we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God who made us.

It behooves us, then, to humble ourselves before the offended power, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness. Now, therefore in compliance with the request and fully concurring in the views of the Senate, I do by this my proclamation designate and set apart Thursday the 30th day of April, 1863, as a day of national humiliation, to abstain on that day from their ordinary secular pursuits, and to unite in their several places of public worship and be devoted to the humble discharge of the religious duties proper to that solemn occasion.

All this being done in sincerity and truth, let us then rest humbly in the hope authorized by the divine teachings that the united cry of the nation will be heard on high and answered with blessings no less than the pardon of our national sins and the restoration of our now divided and suffering country to its former happy condition of unity and peace.

WE HAVE HAD PROPHETS

In some respects, too many, we stand in that same place today.

Some time ago a pamphlet came across my desk which unfortunately I threw away. On the outside page it was stated, "We need a prophet," and as I read it then, and as I think of it now, I think how blind the world is. We have had a prophet, an American prophet, one who spoke our language, one who was imbued with Christian ideals, and that prophet gave us the great righteous principles of which we know and of which the world partly knows; he gave them in our own language over a hundred years ago. These may all be read; we have been teaching them for a century. The trouble with the world is they do not want a prophet teaching righteousness. They want a prophet that will tell them that what they are doing is right, no matter how wrong it may be.

There is nothing new in this. Going back to the beginning, Noah taught the people. He was a prophet, and he told them what to do. He finally convinced his own family, and they were saved. So of Moses—while the children of Israel were in Egypt and he was promising them deliverance, they followed him, they did what he told them, but once out of Egypt and away from the bondman's lash they forgot, and he had rebellion after rebellion upon his hands from then until he died. The later prophets in Israel—Elijah vindicated by a miracle, that he was a prophet of God; yet Jezebel hunted him like a wild beast and would have killed him had not the Lord taken him by a miracle; and Isaiah and Jeremiah, these prophets spoke not only about righteous living and what Israel should do in their family life and in their religious worship, but those prophets spoke also of the relationship of nations and how Israel should bear herself toward those nations, but their warnings and prophecies went unheeded, and the calamities which they predicted came.

Now our Prophet, Joseph Smith, and the prophets since his time—and there has always been a prophet in this Church, and prophets, and you sustain the brethren here, conference after conference, as prophets, seers, and revelators—the Prophet himself, through the Lord by revelation, gave certain great principles that would save the world if the world would but listen. We do not lack a prophet; what we lack is a listening ear by the people and a determination to live as God has commanded. That is all we need. The way has been made perfectly clear.

REVELATIONS GIVEN TO JOSEPH SMITH

In the earliest days of the Church the Prophet, through revelation, gave a plan—we call it the United Order—which, if lived, would have preserved individual initiative, what we have come to call the American way of life, and at the same time have cared for all who needed to be cared for. When we could not live that, the Lord then gave us, through a series of revelations, step by step—for he always leads us gradually, we cannot always be led clear through to the end all at once—he gave us revelations out of which we have developed the plan for caring for the poor, through the giving by those who have to those who have not. We now know it as the great welfare plan. There is nothing new in the welfare plan except a little machinery that we have added to carry it out.

The Lord gave us a great dietary law more than one hundred years ago. He called it a Word of Wisdom. If this law were lived, it would regenerate the human race, so far as their physical bodies are concerned; and because of the intimate relationship between our physical bodies and our spiritual welfare, we would, if we had lived it, by this time be well on our way spiritually toward that peace for which men today so earnestly and devoutly work and pray.

He taught us also the relationship between father and son, child and parent, a great principle, one of the saving principles of society, given first on Mount Sinai and repeated by the Savior to the questioning Pharisees. We have forgotten that. The prophecy is here. There is no difficulty about that. It is our ears that are at fault.

He gave us the true principle for righteous ruling in that great revelation which tells us how the priesthood should rule, as already referred to by Brother Romney, I believe, who quoted some teachings from the Book of Mormon.

He gave us a great law of war telling us that we his people, should not go to war unless commanded by him and then telling what those who were attacked should do, how many times they should forgive, following along the lines of those quotations made by Brother Romney.

He declared also, this prophet of ours, that this was a promised land and should so remain so long as we worshiped the God of this land, Jesus Christ; but he warned us that when and if we became ripe in iniquity, he would destroy us, just as he had destroyed others before us.

The Prophet gave a great revelation involving fundamental principles of government, the relationship between the civil officers and the people, the relationship between the people and the laws commanded obedience to righteous laws—all sufficient in general principles to take us out of our present morass of pride, lawlessness, and crime.

He told us that the Constitution, under which we live, was an inspired document, that its principles were elemental to free human government and declared we should adhere to the Constitution and to the principles thereof. In that Constitution is the great Bill of Rights, guaranteeing to us freedom of the press, freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, freedom to assemble, and so on.

AMERICA NEEDS A LISTENING EAR

All this is in our gospel. It is all part of the work of our great prophet Joseph Smith, and those who have followed him. It is in the books and has been in print for a century. The American Prophet has spoken; American prophets are speaking. The great principles I have named, and almost countless others, have been proclaimed for a hundred years. No, America does not need a prophet; America needs a listening ear. And more than all, we who are here, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, we need a listening ear.

May God give us that ear. May he give us a disposition to read what he has told us. May he give us a spirit, his spirit, to take into our souls the principles of the gospel which he has given to us. May he give us the will and power to live them, having taken them into our souls; and the blessings and the joy and the happiness of life that will come to us if we so live are beyond any powers of expression or suggestion that I possess.

May God give us, again I say, a listening ear to all that he has told us, in order that we may live as he would have us live and give us the spirit to which I have referred, and the power to live as he would have us live, and to us men the will and power to honor our priesthood, and give to all of us every blessing that would be for our good, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER OCTAVE W. URSENBACH

Former President of the Canadian Mission

With you, my brethren and sisters, I rejoice in the great blessing that is ours, collectively, for being in attendance at this conference. We have been fed the bread of life. We have drunk of that cup of living water which will give us an everlasting blessing. I hope our souls have been fired with a determination to serve the Lord and to keep his commandments.

I should like at this time to express my gratitude to my Father in heaven and to his servants who preside over this Church for the opportunity of serving in the Canadian Mission for almost four years. You may well imagine how closely I followed the report of Elder Romney as he recounted his experiences in that mission recently. It was the first foreign mission of the Church. Work commenced there in the year 1832. Canada is a great country, great in possibilities but not great in population. Its population of about twelve million people is represented in all the churches that are dominant. The largest church in Canada is the Catholic Church which comprises about forty-three percent of the population of the country. The United Church of Canada is the second largest. Of the people more than ninety-eight percent of the total population claim allegiance to some Christian denomination, according to the records of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Canada was settled by English, Irish, Scotch and French peoples and there are among them many honest souls, and from that country have come faithful members of the Church of Jesus Christ. My labor among those people was most satisfying. I congratulate the membership of this Church in giving of its strength in young men and young women who have faith and fortitude and fidelity to serve the Lord in the proclamation of the Lord Jesus Christ, and I have seen in their labors the exemplification of the admonition the Lord gave to his servants when he said, "Therefore, o ye that embark in the service of God see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. . . . And faith, hope, charity and love with an eye single to the glory of god qualify you for the work." That is being exemplified in the lives of the young men and young women who are serving in the Canadian Mission and I am sure in other missions. I wish to express my gratitude to my companion who stood side by side with me hardly missing any appointment in her endeavor to sustain the women of that mission. Also for the fidelity of my family, some of whom were with me and others who were not. I shall never be able to express my gratitude for that experience. I pray that the labor performed may have been pleasing to our Father in heaven and that many souls have been touched by the testimonies we have borne from time to time. I thank the Lord that he has given me a testimony of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ and that he lives today, that he is watching over his people, that he will bless and sustain us as we serve him in righteousness, which may we do I pray humbly, in his name. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

After congregational singing, "High On The Mountain Top," and the benediction by President William N. Brotherson of the Moon Lake Stake, this Conference will be adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL and other stations named at the opening of this session. The singing of this session of the Conference has been by the congregation, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Elder Roy M. Darley, organist. The congregation will now join in singing "High On the Mountain Top."

The Congregation joined in singing the hymn: "High On the Mountain Top."

President William N. Brotherson, of the Moon Lake Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference was held Saturday afternoon, October 2, at 2:00.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

The Choir singing for this session of the Conference was by members of the Tabernacle Choir.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fourth session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this afternoon, all of the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Spencer W. Kimball, who is convalescing at home under his doctor's directions; Elder Alma Sonne, who is presiding over the European Mission; and President S. Dilworth Young, who is presiding over the new England Mission.

The proceedings of this Conference will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir singing for this session will be furnished by members of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the services by the choir singing "Holy Spirit, Truth Divine."

The opening prayer will be offered by President J. Cleve Hansen of the Lost River Stake, Moore, Idaho.

The Choir sang as an opening number: "Holy Spirit, Truth Divine."

President J. Cleve Hansen of the Lost River Stake offered the invocation.

The Choir sang: "The Crusader's Hymn."

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Constancy is a virtue of such high degree that James, in his epistle to the tribes of Israel, declared it to be one of the distinguishing characteristics of Deity. He wrote.

Every good gift and every perfect gift . . . cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. (James 1:17.)

In like vein, Paul writing to the Hebrews, says of the Lord:

Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever. (Hebrews 13:8.)

GOD UNCHANGEABLE

In the very nature of things, the Almighty must possess this steadfastness. To be worshiped he must command the implicit confidence of the worshiper. Unless there is an abiding faith in the integrity of Deity, there could be no trust. But there could be neither faith nor trust if he were inconstant, changeable, capricious, or unstable. One must know that he is to be counted on. His promises must be infallibly sure of performance, and the same approbation or condemnation must flow unerringly from the same acts regardless of by whom, or where, or in what age of the world committed, with due allowance for the knowledge and enlightenment available to the actors. The ultimate law by which man's conduct is to be judged must be the same law tomorrow as today and so on down through all the tomorrows. Such is our concept of the immutability of the course of God. There is something immensely solid about that concept. It speaks of perpetuity and gives a sense of something enduring to stand on.

THE SOUNDNESS OF PRINCIPLES

But it is not a popular idea in this day when principles and practices and institutions and beliefs, grown venerable with age, are cast aside with contemptuous abandon, often for no other reason than that they are old. We have even invented some names for those who refuse to throw overboard the principles by which they have lived and flourished. In the language of the day, no doubt, James and Paul would be called reactionaries, anti-liberals, non-progressives. It would be easily demonstrable that most of the supposedly new and progressive offerings of the hour are in fact age-old and have been tried and found delusive and been thrown into the discard in the far-distant past. Their advocates so far from pointing the way to progress, are the real reactionaries, leading back to discredited failures of long ago. I have a notion that the reactionary or progressive quality of a doctrine should be determined by the soundness or lack of soundness of the principles it embodies and not by its age. Take for instance the Ten Commandments.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

They are fairly old. But which one of them would you eliminate? In what degree have the principles they lay down found their place in the laws enacted by the legislative bodies of modern nations? Would any one in all the world be the worse off for observing them? Can they be violated without injurious consequences to the violator? These are fair tests of their eternal nature. It is safe to say that the observance of them never brought to the individual remorse, nor caused injury or suffering to another. On the contrary, remorse, self-accusation, sorrow, and injury to others are the inescapable consequences of the violation of most of them.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor" (Exodus 20:16) is particularly to be commended to our attention in these electioneering times. If all the falsity and calculated deception were squeezed out of many of the speeches we listen to, they could be reduced to about one minute's duration instead of thirty.

"Thou shalt not covet . . . any thing that is thy neighbour's." (Exodus 20:17.) The observance of this law would rid the world of most of its strife. Out of a fairly long experience in dealing with the disputations of men, and the causes, I am persuaded that most of them arise out of a covetous desire to obtain some material thing or to reap some advantage to which the contender is not entitled. If everybody wanted to do what he knew was right—deal justly, man to man, and would be content to have what he justly could claim—there wouldn't be much litigation or strife. If applied to the conduct of nations, there would be no war. War results when one nation covets what another nation has or seeks dominion over it. The victim does not want to give up either its possession or its independence. The designing one says, "I am bigger than you," or "I have a bigger or better equipped army so I shall take what I want by force." The other resists, and we have war.

The tenth commandment has to be obeyed before war and contention can cease. It states a universal principle, true for all time; hence, it is subject neither to change nor compromise. The same may be said of all the commandments of God. I can think of none, the keeping of which is harmful to the observer or any one else. On the contrary, it brings inward peace. Great stability results to individuals and nations from steadfast adherence.

THE QUALITY OF STABILITY

John Ruskin, in that unique book, the Seven Lamps of Architecture, speaks of stability as an essential quality of the very buildings which we rear and which are the expression of our culture:

The greatest glory of a building is not in its stones, or in its gold. Its glory is in its Age, and in that deep sense of voicefulness . . . it is in that golden stain of time, that we are to look for the real light, and color, and preciousness of architecture; and it is not until a building has assumed this character, till it has been entrusted with the frame, and hallowed by the deeds of men, till its walls have been witnesses of suffering, and its pillars rise out of the shadows of death, that its existence, more lasting as it is than that of the natural objects of the world around it, can be gifted with even so much as these possess of language and of life.

Today, however, men are not building for durability either in their structures, their lives, their religious faiths, or their institutions. The result is a troubled world. Everywhere is anxiety and the dread arising from uncertainty which halts or stays all the normal processes of life. It all arises out of one cause—lack of fidelity to right principles—principles which are known and are not mysteriously hidden. Men have failed in allegiance to their religious principles and nations have not been true to their political principles. The two infidelities go together. When there is a breakdown of religious constancy, there inescapably follows deterioration in the political morality. Both have the same root cause, namely, the breaking away from or the compromising of sound principles. It amounts to a running away from reality and giving way to the urge for avoiding the hard and rigorous disciplines incident to meeting the issues of life, trying to reach goals without traveling the thorny road that leads to them. We want to avoid all the disagreeable things. We are trying to live under a pleasure economy in a pleasure world. So we live, really, in nothing: for no God, for no piety towards the past, for no pride of race or personality. Once we lived for freedom, pledging "our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor." The very expression implies sacrifice and suffering, discipline of the soul to meet reality. Now we want to be spared suffering of any kind—physical, emotional, or mental. We seek security, a six-hour day, a car, and a pension. But all the time life eludes us, peace of mind eludes us, and we have dissatisfaction, turmoil, uncertainty, and dread.

CONTINUITY NEEDED IN CHANGES

True, human institutions, bearing in themselves the imperfections incident to the limited wisdom and capacities of those who fashion and operate them, fall short of the permanence characteristic of things divine and may be subject to change with the progress of unfolding wisdom and experience. But change should be toward the ideal and should not run ahead of readiness to receive and assimilate it without violent disruptions lest mischief instead of betterment result. Change so brought about will be accomplished without destroying continuity, a factor vital to orderly progress.

Let me point this up with an illustration. When the American colonies revolted against the mother country, it was not out of a purpose to discard the principles by which they had lived. As Englishmen they merely claimed the recognized rights of Englishmen, which rights, they contended, they, as residents of the colonies, were being denied. If Britain had acceded to their requests, they would have been content to remain as subjects of the kingdom and there would have been no revolution. Britain did not yield to their demands. So they declared a political separation and fought a war to make their declaration good. Having achieved that, they had to set up a new framework of government to carry on. But they did not throw their old principles into the scrap heap. They perpetuated them under their new government. The principle they had contended for was freedom—the rights of free men. That continued to be the purpose of their new government and was the core of continuity binding the old to the new. They were still, as their English forebears had been, a God-fearing Christian nation standing on their right to be free. The government they fashioned was concerned primarily with making that ancient right secure. They tried by every art and device they knew to provide against another infringement of it. It took a little floundering, a period of travail, before they got their government going; but when they did, it constituted no rupture with the past, and that continuity imparted a wonderful stability to the new nation; it began life free of blood purges, reprisals and excesses. For one hundred sixty years now it has run its unbroken course. So begun and so perpetuated, the United States of America has achieved unparalleled transcendence among the nations. It stands today the last hope of free men, the one steady support to this reeling world.

FURY OF FRENCH REVOLUTION

Contrast that with the story of the French Revolution which came along shortly after. This was inaugurated by a wild fury of murder, rapine, and blind vengeance, with monsters contending for supremacy and the victor sending the vanquished to the guillotine. Excesses spiraled, with frenzied zealots pushing ever to further extremes. At the bottom was the utter abandonment of principles. It was sought to wipe out the past. God was dethroned and mocked in derision; reason deified and a new cult proclaimed. With the thread of continuity completely severed, there could be no settling down to a stabilized order, and terror reigned until Napoleon trained on them his guns and established his personal rule. Since then, governments have risen and fallen in France, republic passing into totalitarian empire, and empire back into republic, and republic into republic with the very existence of the present one hanging in the balance. The attendant uncertainty and confusion and lack of steadfastness is its plague.

SOCIALISTIC EXPERIMENTATION

And yet with this and multitudinous other examples of history before us, we have today in this land those who would destroy our solid foundations by importing here from the Old World what our forebears ran away from to come and plant deep in the virgin soil of this new land the roots of the tree of liberty. The news is leaking out that there is now forming, to be publicly launched as soon as the elections are over, a new party, spearheaded by men who, having enjoyed a brief hour of power, but now out of favor in the party that elevated them, are loath to see authority slipping out of their hands. Their purpose is to bring to pass here the socialistic experimentation that is destroying the strength of England and shaking that nation to its foundation. That experiment has been aptly described as "the half-way house on the road to totalitarianism."

The land is also fecund of pseudo religious cults spawning like pestilence. We have already lost some of our own stability and shall not recover it if the people surrender to the seductive lure of specious phantasmas, religious or political, forswearing the solid principles on which we are foundationed and on which the Church and the nation have grown to greatness and power.

UNREST AND TURMOIL ABROAD

Look out over the world today and you see seething unrest, turmoil, confusion, dread, suspicion, envy, distrust, and preparation for devastating war. What has happened?

Britain and France went to war to guarantee the territorial integrity of Poland. We made that cause our cause. The principle was that no nation should be suffered to be trampled underfoot by a ruthless invader of its land. The enemy was subdued, but the principle of protection of a people against the incursions and oppression of a foreign tyrant, for which the war was ostensibly fought, was relinquished and a large part of the territory of Poland was suffered to be seized and its entire people brought under the dominion of a despot quite as ruthless and cruel as the first invader. The invasion of Finland was denounced as an act of wanton brutality and the perpetrator of the invasion as a despot as tyrannical as any in the world. Then by a turn of the wheel of fortune that despot got over on to our side, or more properly speaking, we got on to his and winked our eyes at his dismemberment of that unhappy land and his impositions upon its people of unconscionable indemnities.

Without so much as consulting our ancient friend, China, we gave consent to the seizure of a vast chunk of its territory and the control over its vital communications.

ONE TRUTH AND ONE MORALITY

The world is reaping the fruit of this abandonment of principles. There is only one truth and one morality. When discovered, it matters not whether they find application to religious observances or to political systems. They bear the hallmark of eternity and may not with impunity be abandoned or compromised.

Stability will come when men once more live by the promises they make and in their public morality as in their private conduct, in their religious as in their political life, they develop integrity of purpose and steadfastness to principle and adherence to known laws foundationed in the wisdom of the eternal.

As we struggle forward toward that goal, let us hold steadfastly before our eyes the shining beacon of Christ's perfect order as stated for us by Alma:

... he cannot walk in crooked paths; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; neither hath he a shadow of turning from the right to the left, or from that which is right to that which is wrong; therefore, his course is one eternal round. (Alma 7:20.)

May God grant us the wisdom and the strength to achieve this stability, I pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

While I stand before you, my brothers and sisters, I sense my weakness, and ask, with humility, for your faith and prayers in my behalf. I am indeed grateful to the Lord for his many blessings to me, the greatest, of course, being the gospel and the knowledge of its divinity. The most cherished blessing of the gospel is the opportunity it gives us to continue throughout all eternity the family ties made on earth. Can there be anything greater or more far-reaching? Is there any greater joy that can come than that which comes from unselfish love for others, the love of a good wife and husband, united together in holy matrimony, the love for our children? Is there anything which makes a man feel more like bursting his shirt buttons off in pride and happiness than the first time he picks up his own child; or brings the mother more sheer joy than when her first child is placed in her arms?

IMPORTANCE OF TEMPLE MARRIAGE

Yet too many of us are willing to give up all these joys of family ties when death comes, and come it will, to separate us. If we do not obey God's laws of celestial marriage, we cannot hope to continue as a family unit with father, mother, children, grandchildren, and so on down the line. Death is a sad enough separation at best, even when we know it is only for a short time; but to have no certainty of a future union, that would be darkness indeed.

God has been so kind to us he has given us the wonderful promise of eternal progression in our family units, if we will but obey his laws; yet it is constantly being brought to my attention that many members of the Church are not taking full advantage of their blessings.

Temple marriage is an ideal which should be upheld in our homes from earliest infancy. Don't think that a child is too young to understand. You would be surprised at his comprehension. A small seven-year-old boy was being teased at school one day; his friends were saying that a certain little girl was his sweetheart. The little boy's answer was, "Oh, she couldn't be my sweetheart; she isn't even a Mormon." Truly, train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

TRAINING IN THE HOME

We have had too many cases in the Church (and if we have had one, that is too many), where the parents have been active in Church work and thought that as a result of their Church activities, the Lord would take care of their children for them. We too often forget that our children have to be taught the gospel, as well as anyone else. It is as much our responsibility, as parents, to teach the gospel to our children as it is to live it ourselves. We must not take it for granted that because they attend Sunday School, Primary, and M.I.A., our responsibility is ended. It isn't; it is only begun. It is in the home that the real training is given. From infancy on, we exert an influence which will direct our children's lives. We mustn't be too busy to answer questions or explain the principles of the gospel. When the child asks, is the time to answer, or promise a time when we will answer and then keep our promise.

I have fond memories of the home of my youth, where many times, many evenings, we have gathered together around the fireplace after dinner and studied the scriptures. We have taken turns reading to each other, and there we learned many of the principles of the gospel and doctrines which have helped us as a family; and I think my brothers and sisters can say the same, as their experiences, with mine, have helped us in our paths of life to stay true to the gospel, regardless of what may have come to us.

Our children are entitled to our missionary efforts more than anyone else in the world. They aren't born with a knowledge of the gospel, just because we are good Latter-day Saints. In section 68, verse 28, of the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord says:

And they [parents] shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

Parents, this is your responsibility, not that of the Sunday School or the M.I.A. They are willing to help, but it is you who shall have to answer. I have had several young men say to me, "My parents never taught any of their children the laws of chastity," and their parents were members of the Church. As parents, would you like to have that to answer for? Scarcely a day passes that I do not have someone come to see me who is having family trouble. The situations vary, but they are all very real. They usually have one situation in common: they are not married in the temple, and they do not provide adequate teaching for the children. Perhaps the fault is not all theirs. Perhaps they in turn did not learn from their parents, but they are suffering for the need of the blessings of the Lord, and their children are suffering.

There are some Latter-day Saints who are successful in converting their companions after marriage. Don't expect this to happen to you. In most of these cases those concerned are married before they know or understand the laws of temple marriage. Teach your children that if they do not love enough to be married for eternity, they should not be married at all. After one is given the knowledge of temple marriage, so that he knows how the Lord intended marriage to be, and then in spite of that knowledge he deliberately does contrary, it is like closing the door in the Lord's face and saying, "I don't need your help; I'll get along without you." We can't afford to try to get along without the Lord's help.

No wonder the divorce rate is much lower for those who are married for time and eternity than for those who have only a civil or ordinary church wedding. The Lord will help them to overcome their differences, if they will let him. If we understood more fully the significance of celestial marriage, there would be no such thing as divorce among our people.

BLESSINGS OF CELESTIAL MARRIAGE

In the Doctrine and Covenants, the Lord makes the following promise:

And again, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power and the keys of this priesthood; and it shall be said unto them—Ye shall come forth in the first resurrection; and if it be after the first resurrection, in the next resurrection; and shall inherit thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers, dominions, all heights and depths—then shall it be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, that he shall commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, and if he abide in my covenant, and commit no murder whereby to shed innocent blood, it shall be done unto them in all things whatsoever my servant hath put upon them, in time, and through all eternity; and shall be of full force when they are out of the world; and they shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.

Then shall they be gods, because they have no end; therefore shall they be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue; then shall they be above all, because all things are subject unto them. Then shall they be gods, because they have all power, and the angels are subject unto them.

Verily, verily I say unto you, except ye abide my law, ye cannot attain to this glory. (D. & C. 132:19-21.)

OPPORTUNITIES FOR EXALTATION

We often say, and you have heard the expression as it has already been referred to in this conference, that "as man now is, God once was, and as God now is, man may become." The only way man may become as God now is, is through fulfilling the laws of celestial marriage and the laws of the gospel, as I have just read to you the word of the Lord from the Doctrine and Covenants. Can we afford to overlook such opportunities for exaltation? Temple marriage is not just another form of church wedding; it is a divine covenant with the Lord that if we are faithful to the end, we may become as God now is.

Are you teaching your children to keep the Word of Wisdom only because it is a good health habit, or are you teaching them that by not keeping the Word of Wisdom they are not eligible to receive the knowledge and understanding to comprehend the laws of godliness, and so will be deprived of the opportunity to receive the power of the priesthood, and then not be permitted to enter the temple and thereby lose all the blessings of increase for all eternity? That is quite a price to pay, I would say. We are told they will become ministering angels, and in worlds without end shall have no increase. (See D. & C. 132:15-18.)

Teach them to live the gospel by keeping all the laws and ordinances of the gospel, that they may have eternal life. No price is too high, no sacrifice too great.

May the Lord's blessings be with us. May we follow these teachings and counsels, that these blessings and promises that are given to us will be realized in due time, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Like all great movements in history, the rise of Mormonism has been interpreted in various ways. When we think of its importance in the preparation of our modern habit of mind, we must class it with the greatest epochs of advancement in human history. Great epochs have always had a prime mover, a man with enlightened soul. So it is with Mormonism. Human society contains in itself the causes of development in everything except the higher religious and moral truths, and the real facts of our future life. To the divine help, the life of Joseph Smith was confined; to the bringing of that higher truth and moral light which could not be developed except by some divine message from heaven. He brought to light the nature of God, man's immortality, and the highest elements of moral character. The things which he taught are destined to be recognized as the most enlightened teachings for the world since Jesus Christ gave his gospel to mankind. The power of his teachings is gradually rising to shape the destiny of the human race. As a boy he bore witness to the nations of the earth of the need of a light which is not of man.

DIVISIONS OF CHRISTIANITY

Itinerant preachers of the frontier came to the parental cabin with tracts on the subject of religion. These preachers were the representatives of the denominations of America, particularly the Protestant faiths. The divisions of Christendom were the most conspicuous reproach and chief cause of the inefficiency of Christianity. "They presented a moral affront to the enterprise inaugurated by Jesus Christ and constituted the outstanding limitation of its progress in the world." Mr. Herbert L. Willett in a recent article in the magazine, Christendom, says:

As truly as war is an anachronism and a scandal to civilization the divided state of the Church is an affront to Christianity.

"Divide and conquer," was the counsel which Milton put into the mouth of Satan in the assembly of the rebel angels.

DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL

In the history of mankind down to the time of Christ, there have been dispensations of the gospel of Christ. Adam, the father of the human race, had the gospel. His descendants were knowing men, men with a knowledge of God. Between God and the earth was man, created in the image of God. The description is exalted. The greatness of man came by his knowledge that he was closely related to his Creator, and he felt the divine creative presence. He knew his Creator, he listened to him, he obeyed him, he loved him. In a phrase written long after by the Psalmist, man was made "a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour." (Psalms 8:5.) From Adam's time to the present, we may know this truth: "No religion made by man can do for men that which must be done."

One modern writer, Maurice Maeterlinck, writes in his book, The Great Secret: "What we read in the ancient archives of wisdom gives us only a faint idea of the sublime doctrines of the ancient teachers, and even so these are not in their original form. The more ancient the texts, the purer, the more awe-inspiring the doctrines which they reveal."

CONTRIBUTIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH

The facts of the Prophet's life are many. His teachings are reduced to writing in one of the marvelous books of the age in which we live: The Doctrine and Covenants. We may contrast this fact with the influence of other men upon the world, for there have been teachers whose influence never will die. Socrates became a moral force for mankind throughout the ages. Plato, his disciple, was second to none as a great teacher. He wrote copiously and elaborately. Possibly no one has ever surpassed him in the art of writing and thinking. Then came Aristotle, who wrote on science and philosophy. The force of the Greek mind of ages ago still lives. All of these masters were morally and intellectually great. Joseph Smith stands out as the revealer of God's eternal principles that show above all writers in this age the divinity of man; the doctrine of eternal progression; the true meaning of salvation; the divine love which man must have toward all other men; the purifying of the soul before God.

His teachings are not the result of mere intellectual attainments. It was not human genius that made him what he was. It is not enough for man to think wisely and well. The power of his teachings has arisen from the words that God spoke to him. The secret of his power lay in the truth that man is a divine creation and can understand the divine word if one's life is tuned to the noblest feeling with his God. The men who accepted the revealed gospel, who were given the priesthood, helped to inaugurate a new period in the history of the human race.

RELIGION REQUIRES REVELATION

The supreme test of religion is revelation. No religion can be persuasive and convincing that does not rely upon and embody an authentic principle of revelation. Religion as a purely human product, valuable as it might be to human progress, has not the inner vigor to maintain a place of commanding power. Religion requires revelation. All truth is revealed not less so because it is discovered.

The most complete carrier of revelation can be no other or less than a chosen personality. This is the Christian doctrine and conception. Revelation requires development and the concept of the divinity of the spirit and mind of man. Such was in brief the teaching of Adam, of Abraham, of Moses, Isaiah, and all the prophets of the Old Testament. It constituted the pure idealism and faith of Jesus Christ, for he gave to his Father in heaven the dominant role in ordering the world for good. It gave in olden times, and must give now, the supreme lesson that God lives, that the spirit and the body are the soul of man, and the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul. Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory. It gives to man the supreme principles of ethical and moral life. It becomes the supreme power whereby man knows life and knows it more abundantly,

For intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy and claimeth its own; justice continueth its course and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne and governeth and executeth all things.

"The Glory of God is Intelligence, . . . light and truth." "To his own master each man will stand or fall; and he that judgeth us is the Lord." We will serve our church and country best as we perform day by day and hour by hour those humble and simple acts of self-dedication which make our lives a silent witness of him who brought light, and life and love into this sorrowful world.

THE FOUNDERS OF AMERICA

America must hold to the simple beginnings of our founders. They brought hither in their little ships not money, not merchandise, no array of armed force, but they came with deep religious feelings, learning, law, and the spirit of faith. When they stepped upon these shores a wild, frowning wilderness received them. Strong in their faith in God, they began their combat with danger and hardship. Sickness overcame them, but they fainted not. They feasted on roots with patient spirits. The first thing they did was to kneel and give thanks to God for his protective care. Then they built a meetinghouse where they might worship, then a house for themselves. They established education and stern principles of morality. Their old town government was the most democratic of all governments. They knew the meaning of the term democratic, meaning a government of the people, but back of it is the feeling that every person must have a due respect for the rights of all other people. Churches arose in the depths of the forests, industry was fostered, no easy work in those days; colleges were established, and their civic life soon grew into the majesty of states. Then came a mighty nation—a nation of law, art, industry, education, and an expansion into new territory never before equaled in the history of man. A government was brought into being with a background of civic and political idealism which was the blessing of Almighty God, and for this they gave thanks in solemn prayer.

CARRYING THE GOSPEL TO THE NATIONS

Today we are sending into all the world young men and women who are carrying the gospel to the nations. It is a holy duty! We are turning our thoughts forward, as was done when the Church was organized. The missionary idea cannot be lost and the expectations cherished by our fathers cannot be forgotten. Men and women of many nations have found in the faith that which they required.

They have been the means of adding to the culture of our state. We must not overlook the benefits which these men confer. They are by no means confined to things unseen and eternal. They are students and teachers. Geography, ethnology, history, sociology, philology, and every department of knowledge is indebted to them. They represent their country, and with honor. What we term missionary work is not limited to personal effort. Nations are missionaries. Our mission today is to act. We must advance the cause of the restored gospel by our onward march to greater accomplishments. No one can measure the years to come. To be alive and increasing, to be young and awake, this is the order of the future. The heroes and divinities of the past have their own place, but we have our leaders today. There is perspective in prophecy. A prophet of old declared: "Your young men shall see visions. Your sons and daughters shall prophecy." Today it is superbly true. If there was ever a time that the world needs vision, it is today.

DUTIES OF SEVENTIES

Our Seventies have a great duty, a divine call. They are workers in the vineyard of God wherever they live. They must keep ever in mind that they have a fine ambition to teach and to live. In their everyday walks of life, they are committed to nothing but the truth. They have the ardor of youth with the discipline of study and prayer. The word Seventy signifies a divine calling to teach God's word. The gospel must prevail in all the world. We need energy, enterprise, to prove that the "now" is the most important time of all. It is an unmistakable idea that a man who gives himself to Christ and his Spirit, will become what has been termed "a new man." The gospel requires reverent and hopeful study. The gospel does more than teach duty. It provides the motive and desire to do it, and it gives the moral strength. The divine message is advancing, and the Spirit of the Lord moves before it, cloud by day and fire by night. The truth of Christ is to find men and to save them.

My brother Seventies, what the world needs first and to the end is God. Not God in the heavens and in the past alone. But God here, and known by "the man whom he hath ordained." The renewed gospel is young, and the currents of its life are strong. It keeps pace with knowledge, and intends to bring the world to the Lord. It is deep in the heart of man. The peoples of the world have made some preparation in the past. They are making preparation today. India will some day welcome missionaries. The walls of Egyptian sanctuaries long since destroyed will be rebuilt for Christ. The land of the Nile sheltered Christ when he was a child. It will shelter Christ again. All nations shall know his word.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Now Let Us Rejoice."

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brethren and sisters: This is an inspiring but sobering experience. I pray for the inspiration of heaven and for your faith and prayers as I attempt to speak to you briefly this afternoon.

FAITH OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS

I never return from visiting one of the great missions of the Church, as I did this week, or return from visiting a stake of Zion, but what my heart is filled with gratitude as I note the devotion, the loyalty, and the faith of the Latter-day Saints. As I witness the growth of the work of the Lord in various parts of the world, my heart rejoices. With you, my brethren and sisters, I love this great latter-day work. I am wondering today if we fully appreciate what we have.

I have sometimes said to my wife, as I returned from visiting in the stakes, that I do not know exactly what heaven is going to be like, but I could ask nothing finer over there than to have the pleasure and joy of associating with the type of men and women I meet in the leadership of the stakes and wards of Zion and the missions of the earth. Truly we are richly blessed. President Smith continually calls our attention to the rich treasures of heaven that come to us as Latter-day Saints, members of the true church of Christ. It is about one of these blessings that I should like to speak briefly this afternoon.

The Prophet Joseph said many years ago that one of the greatest sins for which the Latter-day Saints are guilty is the sin of ingratitude. I wonder, my brethren and sisters, if we are fully grateful for all that we enjoy.

DISTINGUISHING FEATURE OF TRUE CHURCH

One of the distinguishing features, and a very important feature, of the true church of Christ is its priesthood, the authority of God. It is widely distributed among the male membership of the Church, boys and men, fathers and sons, and its blessings are shared by our mothers, daughters and wives. Do we fully understand and appreciate what it means to us? What is it and what is its significance to those of us who have been blessed with it?

President Joseph F. Smith said:

[The priesthood] is nothing more nor less than the power of God delegated to man by which man can act in the earth for the salvation of the human family, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and act legitimately; not assuming that authority, nor borrowing it from generations that are dead and gone, but authority that has been given in this day in which we live by ministering angels and spirits from above, direct from the presence of Almighty God. . . . (Gospel Doctrine 1939 edition, pp. 139-140.)

President Taylor said:

[Priesthood] is the power of God delegated to intelligences in the heavens and to men on the earth. (The Gospel Kingdom, p. 129.)

So priesthood transcends this mortal life. Its power and greatness has been referred to by prophets, modern and ancient. In my own heart I can conceive of nothing greater that man can possess than the priesthood of God, coupled with a burning testimony of the divinity of this work. The two should always be coupled together. Priesthood is the very heart of the Church. We may have the priesthood without the Church, but never the Church without the priesthood.

GIFT OF THE HOLY PRIESTHOOD

There are many gifts that we enjoy as members of the Church, but I can think of none greater than the gift of the Holy Priesthood, the authority to represent God in the earth. This priesthood is destined to build and exalt men as well as to assist the Lord in the promotion of his great work in saving and exalting the souls of men.

In recent weeks, in fact, within the last few days, there have come into this building two distinguished Americans, one of them the President of the United States. I was not able to attend the meeting at which he spoke, but as I sat here the other night and contemplated our blessings as we listened to the other distinguished visitor, I wondered how men of the priesthood regard their priesthood in comparison with the honors of men, political and otherwise. Is the wealth of the world or the honors of men to be compared with the priesthood of God?

I realize it comes easy. Our boys twelve years of age, if worthy, receive the Holy Priesthood by the laying on of hands, and our young men are hardly more than boys when at nineteen they receive the holy Melchizedek Priesthood, the authority to officiate in the most sacred ordinances known to man. This priesthood will, if they are worthy, entitle them eventually to a place in the celestial kingdom of God. I have been amazed at the great number of men and boys in the Church who hold this great authority and who have in their hands this great blessing, if they will only take advantage of it.

I checked a few figures recently which indicate that we have approximately 280,140 men and boys in the Church who hold the priesthood. There are 146,330 who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood—elders in the Church—who are candidates for the celestial kingdom. We have 133,810 boys who have been blessed with this great privilege of serving in the name of the Master.

OBLIGATION OF THE PRIESTHOOD BEARER

What is the obligation of the priesthood bearer? We have been referred to as the greatest body of men on the face of the earth. Of course the fact that we possess the priesthood, is no assurance of our exaltation. But certainly in terms of power, prerogative, and responsibility no group of men in all the world has been blessed with such obligations and opportunities as has the body of men and boys in the Church who hold the priesthood.

I have been impressed, too, my brethren and sisters, that probably nowhere in all the world can we find a group of men who give so unselfishly of their time, their means, and their talents to the promotion of good and righteousness in the world as does this body of men. I marvel as I witness the great voluntary service which is carried forward by this body of priesthood, and always in the back of my head, as I give encouragement to greater activity, is the assurance that this is a choice group of men. In the Church, there is truly a spirit of unselfish service.

SPIRIT OF SERVICE

There came to my office a few days ago a fine upstanding, sweet-spirited elderly man. He came in timidly and took a chair at the desk, and then he said: "Brother Benson, how old can a man be before he is too old to go on a mission?"

And I answered: "My good brother, I do not know that there is any upper age limit."

He said: "I have been on two missions, and I would like to go on one more before I pass away. I would like to go back to Oklahoma, where I served my second mission. Do you think I am too old?"

"How old are you?"

"Eighty-six; but I would like to go once more before I die."

Now, there is much of that spirit among the priesthood of the Church. I thrill with it, my brethren, and I am grateful to be associated with men who carry that spirit.

I have been impressed in reading the revelations, that there are at least four significant things pertaining to this priesthood which have been emphasized by the Lord to his prophets. If I may, I would like to refer to those four items.

OATH AND COVENANT OF PRIESTHOOD

Back in 1832 when the missionaries had returned from their fields of labor to Kirtland, Ohio, and had evidenced concern about the priesthood which they had been blessed with, the Lord gave a revelation on priesthood, contained in the 84th section of the Doctrine and Covenants. In that revelation the Lord spoke of the "oath and covenant" of the priesthood, and the obligation of men who hold it to be true and faithful to that priesthood and to magnify their callings. The Lord said:

... whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying of their callings, are sanctified by the Spirit, . . . [and become] . . . the church and kingdom and the elect of God. (D. & C. 84:33-34.)

And then, even more significant, this great promise was made: "... therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him," (Idem 38) the priesthood-bearer who is faithful and magnifies his calling.

"... this," says the Lord, "is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood . . . those who receive the priesthood," the Lord indicates, "receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he cannot break. . . ." (Idem 39-40.)

And this solemn warning:

But whoso breaketh this covenant after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come. (Idem 41.)

Now this covenant is between our Heavenly Father and those of us who bear the priesthood. We promise when we receive it to be true and faithful, to honor the priesthood and magnify it. The Lord promises in return the richest blessings of eternity.

"ANXIOUSLY ENGAGED IN A GOOD CAUSE"

The second significant thing spoken of in the revelations is found in the fifty-eighth section of the Doctrine and Covenants and was given to the elders 117 years ago. It is to the effect that men who hold the priesthood "should be anxiously engaged in a good cause." The Lord points out that it is not to be expected, it is not expedient, "it is not meet," he says, "that I should command in all things," for he that does not anything until he is commanded is a slothful servant. And then he says: "... men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause . . . and bring to pass much righteousness" (D. & C. 58:26-27), of their own free will for the power is in them to be agents unto themselves.

So it is not enough to receive the priesthood and then sit back passively and wait until someone prods us into activity. When we receive the priesthood, we have the obligation of becoming actively and anxiously engaged in promoting the cause of righteousness in the earth, because the Lord says:

... he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. (Idem 29.)

PRIESTHOOD EXERCISED UPON RIGHTEOUSNESS

The third significant thing regarding the priesthood and the priesthood-bearer is that it should be exercised "only upon princi- ples of righteousness." Reference was made by President Clark this morning to that section of prayer and prophecies of the Prophet Joseph, section 121, in which it is pointed out that many are called but few are chosen. And the reason why they are not chosen is because men's hearts are so set upon the things of this world and aspire to the honors of men that they do not learn fundamental lessons. "That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven" (D. & C. 121:36), and the priesthood can be exercised and controlled only upon the principles of righteousness. Yes, there is danger in receiving authority and power, if exercised unrighteously. And the Prophet makes it very clear that it seems to be the disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little power, to exercise unrighteous dominion over their fellows, and when that time comes, then there usually follows the spirit of apostasy, a spirit of criticism, a tendency to persecute the Saints and fight against the Church. "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood," says this section, "only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned." (Idem 41.) And then great promises follow to the man who exercises his priesthood upon the principles of righteousness.

ACT IN ALL DILIGENCE

The fourth significant thing is found in that great revelation on the priesthood, given through the Prophet to the Council of the Twelve and the Church as the Twelve were about to depart on missions to various parts of the country. It is contained in the 107th section of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Lord closes that great revelation with these words:

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved shall not be counted worthy to stand. (Ibid. 107:99-100. Italics speaker's.)

There are two obligations in connection with that significant injunction; first, that we learn our duty, and secondly, that we act in the office in which we have been appointed in all diligence.

Now to help to make this priesthood more effective in our lives and in the lives of those we serve, the Lord has provided quorums of the priesthood—service units, classes, brotherhoods—through which we may operate and make our efforts more productive of good.

OBLIGATIONS OF PRIESTHOOD

There are really two great obligations resting upon the priesthood quorum, or brotherhood. First, is the obligation of looking after the welfare of our members. Anything pertaining to the social, economic, or spiritual welfare of members should be the concern of the quorum. In addition, it is the great obligation of quorums to assist in promoting the program of the Church which is three-fold: first, the building up of the stakes and wards of Zion and keeping the people in the line of their duty; second, the carrying of the message of the restored gospel to those who have not yet heard it or accepted it; and third, the carrying forward of the great responsibility of temple work for the living and the dead in the houses of the Lord.

These obligations rest squarely upon the priesthood.

INACTIVE MEMBERS PRESENT CHALLENGE

Now, my brethren, we face a great challenge. At the present time we have wide participation and wide activity, and we are making progress as evidenced by the records that come in from all parts of the Church. Our progress is splendid. Our performance probably was never any better, if as good, as now, yet there is much to be done. As we have checked the records for last year, we find that approximately one-third of the total Melchizedek Priesthood membership is not engaged in any Church activity of any kind. In addition to this group we have approximately twenty thousand men over twenty-one who hold no priesthood; approximately fifty-six thousand adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, and some four thousand boys twelve to twenty-one not yet ordained. This gives a total of eighty thousand for which the Lord will hold us in large measure responsible, to win them to activity and devotion, so that they may receive the Holy Melchizedek Priesthood and enjoy blessings which flow therefrom. This great number, plus inactive Melchizedek Priesthood members, present a great responsibility and challenge. In their veins flow some of the best blood of this dispensation.

We are expected, in very deed, to be our brother's keeper, and if we fail, we will, of course, be our own accusers. Now is the time to live the standards of the Church, to magnify our priesthood, to live worthy of the rich promises made to us as bearers of the priesthood. Let us, therefore, be anxiously engaged in a good cause. Let us be true to the oath and covenant of the priesthood. Let us exercise the priesthood upon the principles of righteousness. And let us all learn our duty and act in the office in which we have been appointed in all diligence.

I leave with you, my brethren and sisters, my testimony that no greater blessing can come to any man on this earth than to receive the priesthood of God and a testimony of the divinity of this work, if he honors that priesthood and lives according to the teachings and standards of the church.

This is the work of God. I know it as I know I live. May God help us as a body of men, clothed with power and authority, to help establish Zion and build up the kingdom, to go forward and accomplish the work which the Lord would have us do, without flinching and without hesitation, in all faithfulness, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ROY W. DOXEY

Formerly President of Eastern States Mission

I am grateful indeed for this opportunity to stand before you, coming so soon after my release from the Eastern States Mission. Sister Doxey and I have been here only one week.

Words cannot express the gratitude of our hearts for this wonderful privilege we have enjoyed of serving in a mission of the Church. There have been many things in our lives through which blessings have been received but of all things we feel this has been the greatest blessing that has come into our lives.

The missionary field is a great experience. In the mission field there is power, and there is happiness and joy in the lives of the missionaries and the membership of the Church. I should like to bring to you now the greetings of the over one hundred and sixty missionaries in that mission and also the membership of the Eastern States Mission. They are doing a very, very fine work and the Lord is blessing their efforts.

Of the many experiences which come into a missionary's life, he finds his relationship to his Father in heaven, and it has been our joy to see in the lives of the missionaries the strength which comes through diligence, through prayer and through activity in this great work.

The Lord blesses the missionaries in many, many ways. I am sure that their lives are greatly enriched, and when they come home they have found great happiness here in seeing the membership of the Church in Zion faithful and true.

I am thinking now of the many experiences which have come to many of these missionaries as they have participated actively in the work of the Lord. I recall the power and influence of the Holy Spirit in the lives of converts to this Church as they have been brought into the faith through the efforts of these young men and women. The happiness and joy that may come to them is so great that tears have been shed on many occasions by converts in expressing their happiness in the fact that they have been found by the missionaries, and their souls have been touched by the Holy Spirit.

Many expressions of joy and happiness are found in the mission field by the membership, the converts to the Church. I recall that not many months ago there came into my office a man who has served as an evangelist. He was free-lancing through this country and had spent considerable time in proselyting a message which he felt was most important. He had come into possession of a Book of Mormon and in reading it the Spirit of God had touched his soul. It had touched his soul so strongly that he had come to the conclusion that he must find more copies of the Book of Mormon to distribute to his friends in his proselyting work. Tears of joy came into his eyes as there was unfolded to him the great possibilities for increasing faith in Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world, through the instrumentality of this sacred record. It was his statement and belief that through the Book of Mormon there could come greater faith in the lives of people than through the other great book of scripture known as the Holy Bible. In this, of course, I concurred because of the promise which has been made manifest in the life of this man when he prayed to receive a testimony of its truthfulness.

And I recall also the experience of a retired Methodist minister, who, upon hearing the gospel of Jesus Christ as proclaimed by humble missionaries received a rejuvenation of faith, of health even, in the message which had come to him. It came into his consciousness that God had truly spoken from the heavens, revealed anew divine truths which would make men and women happy and bring to them the assurance, the comfort, the strength, which can come only through the power of the Holy Ghost. And then this man's great joy and happiness in becoming a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and testifying to his many friends and former parishioners of the happiness and the worth which might be found in the Gospel of Jesus Christ as it has been proclaimed and is being proclaimed today in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I rejoice with you, my brothers and sisters, in the strength which is found in this Church, in the power which is present in the stakes, in the missions of this great organization. I know beyond the shadow of a doubt that this work is of God. Truly he has spoken from the heavens and committed divine authority to his people here upon the earth, and we who have this power may go forth in the majesty of our calling to proclaim these great truths to the world, give to them the happiness and joy which is available through the gospel message.

I should like to say, my brethren and sisters, that I owe a great debt of gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the things which have come into my life as a result of this missionary service, and I feel grateful indeed to his servants here upon the earth. I believe that you and I will be the most happy people upon the earth if we can get into our consciousness the fact that there is no safety in this life except through following the counsel of those men who constitute the General Authorities of the Church.

It has been my blessing and privilege to indoctrinate this into the hearts of the missionaries of the Eastern States and I hope the membership of that mission, and in this there has been a great privilege, for it is my conviction that there is only stability in life, both temporal and spiritual, by following the counsel of those men who have the divine authority to speak in the name of God.

I pray the Lord's blessings to be with each one of us, that we shall remain true and faithful to the covenants which we have made with our Father in heaven, that we shall always recognize the blessings which may come to us by true faith and devotion to this great cause.

I bear testimony to the truthfulness of this work, knowing full well that God lives, that Jesus is indeed the Savior and Redeemer of the world, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and that his successors in like manner, with President George Albert Smith, and I leave this testimony with you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER A. REED HALVERSON

Former President of New Zealand Mission

Tena koutou e nga pononga a te Atua me nga hunga tapu kua huihui mai nei.

Such would be the greetings of any one of our good Maori brethren and sisters who may be called to speak in New Zealand. In other words, greetings to the servants of the Lord and to the saints who have gathered here.

It is a wonderful thing to be a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I am truly grateful for and proud of my membership in this Church. I am thankful for the privilege I have of again attending the General Conference of the Church. It helps satisfy a hunger for such a gathering and such inspiration that we have experienced during the past few years, the past four years, while it has not been our privilege to be here. That hunger has only been supplied in part in our hui tau, our annual conference of the Church in New Zealand, where we have three or four thousand of our good people meet together, not in a building of this kind, not under such favorable conditions, but rather under the covers of a large marquee; it almost takes us back to the days of the children of Israel when they met in the wilderness where they carried their tabernacle with them, and there in those large tents we do receive inspiration, we do enjoy the blessings of the Lord, and we are grateful for our membership and our connection with this Church.

I am truly grateful for the privilege I have at this time of being in the presence of the General Authorities. With all my heart I sustain them as servants of God. I am thankful for them, I am thankful for their faith in me that prompted them to call me and my good wife into the New Zealand mission. I am thankful for what they have done for that mission since that time.

It was a wonderful thrill to all the missionaries and the saints in New Zealand when we received word that our fine President Matthew Cowley, had been sustained as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; and a little later when we received the news that he had been appointed president of the Pacific Missions, another thrill came to us, and it has afforded the saints of New Zealand an opportunity for closer contact with the General Authorities of the Church.

Do you know that until the appointment of President Cowley as our Pacific Mission president, that good mission and others in the South Pacific had had but two visits of the General Authorities of the Church, once when President McKay and President Cannon made their visit in the year 1921, and the other the visit of President Smith and President Hardy in 1938. We, undoubtedly, as you will realize, miss that contact which you people enjoy, and so we are thankful for this closer contact that we have.

I appreciate the privilege which has come to me to labor among those people in the land of New Zealand—those good Europeans who reside there, as well as that remnant of the house of Israel who were led away to that far-off land, fulfilling the predictions of the scriptures of the prophets of old wherein they said that the house of Israel should be scattered even to the ends of the earth, to the islands of the sea, and there they should worship other gods, even gods of stone and of wood. Those were the gods of the Maori people until just a little over a hundred years ago. But it is a testimony to us that they are of the house of Israel since in this last hundred years that the gospel has been preached there, even though it has not always been preached with the understanding that we have of it, they recognized the story of the Lord Jesus Christ and this day they are all Christians. And even though our teaching to those people did not begin until they had all become members of other churches, still we have now more than ten thousand of those good people in our Church.

In my experiences in the mission I have learned many things and some things seemed rather peculiar to me as they do to all missionaries. One of our good missionaries made the remark one day after he had been out tracting for two or three days with one of the experienced elders, "I can't understand why the people that we visit can't accept the teachings in the way that my companion gives them. They are so plain, so natural, so simple, that anybody who really wants to could understand that they are the truth."

Well, it seems that way to all of us. It is just natural to us but the Lord gives unto us his revelations from time to time to guide us. We are the children of God. He would not put us down here without any possibility of knowing what to do, but from time to time while men have been upon the earth, as teachings of the gospel have become changed and different, he has enlightened his prophets and given them the commandment to go teach the gospel to all the world. And though they have been persecuted, though they have been put to death, still the word of the gospel has gone on. To us it is the natural thing, while to the world it seems ridiculous when we say that God the Father and his Son appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith. To us it seems only natural when angels come with knowledge and inspiration. To the world it is false.

I know that this gospel is true. I know that these men who lead this Church are indeed servants of God, that the Prophet Joseph Smith was raised up in this day to bring God's teachings to the earth, and I know that he was directed by the Lord Jesus Christ and by others, who visited him.

It is a wonderful thing, brothers and sisters, to know that not only once did Jesus Christ visit the earth in this day, but several times, that not only one angel, but several have come with messages and with inspiration and with power and have given that power and that inspiration and those messages to men here upon this earth.

I am thankful for the missionary system of this Church. To me it is a wonderful thing. You and I are here as a result of that missionary system. I am truly grateful for the humble missionaries that went into that far-off land of Scandinavia and gathered my ancestors from that land, and when I think of my own cousins in the land of New Zealand who are good people but understand not the gospel, I am that much more thankful for missionaries that converted my father and my grandparents on my mother's side.

I am thankful to you people that you, through your work in this day and age are showing your gratefulness to missionaries in that you have sent your sons and your daughters into the mission field. The one hundred and twenty young men and women that we have in the New Zealand Mission at the present time are truly an inspiration to me and to all who meet them and try to understand them in their work.

Brothers and sisters, it is a wonderful thing to come back and witness the activities of the Church in Zion. May God bless us and help us to realize the importance of the things that we are blessed with from time to time. May we go on and work day by day in fulfillment of our purposes here and appreciate the fact that we are living in a day and age when God is giving us inspiration through his chosen Authorities here upon this earth, I humbly pray, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The members of the Tabernacle Choir will sing "Lord, Hear Our Prayer," and the closing prayer will be offered by President James H. Ockey of the Juab Stake, Nephi, Utah, after which this Conference will be adjourned until 7:00 o'clock this evening, when in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the priesthood of the Church will be held. Only the priesthood are invited to be present. It takes every inch of space to hold them, and we invite those who do not hold the priesthood not to take that space. Persons not holding the priesthood will, therefore, please not enter the building at that time. That session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, Sunday, October 3rd, will be broadcast over the various stations that have already been announced.

Because the regular Tabernacle Choir broadcast comes from 9:30 to 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats in this building by 9:20. As the Choir may be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering, it is necessary to request that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast.

The Church of the Air broadcast, on which Elder John A. Widtsoe of the Council of the Twelve will be the speaker, will begin at 8:30 a.m. Those desiring to attend this broadcast must be in their seats by 8:20 a.m.

The regular session of the Conference will begin at 10:00 a.m.

I am sure we have had a lovely time, and now after the singing of the Choir and the benediction, we will be prepared to go to our homes grateful to the Lord not only that we live in the world but that we live in the Church and enjoy the Lord's blessings.

Singing by the Choir, "Lord, Hear Our Prayer."

President James H. Ockey, of the Juab Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until 10:00 a.m., Sunday, October 3.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, October 3, from 8:30 to 9:00 over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for the service, with Dr. Frank W. Asper at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The Choir sang a sacred song: "O Loving Saviour," and following the rendition of this number the Choir sang: "Hallelujah," by Louis Lewandowski.

Elder John A. Widtsoe, of the Council of the Twelve, was the speaker, his subject being "Hunger In the Midst of Plenty."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Friends of the Church of the Air:

Our generation of men has secured a tremendous command over surrounding things and forces. Matter and energy have become man's abject servants. His mastery of the physical universe has reached heights beyond the dreams of earlier days. Every thinkable material comfort and help, including the conquest of most diseases, seems within man's reach. Man has become a conquering giant. The utopias of the past, the dreams of ideal places, were trivial in material comforts compared with our present luxurious world.

HUNGER IN THE MIDST OF PLENTY

Yet, in the midst of such plenty there is hunger, a worldwide, gripping hunger—a hunger for simple happiness, culminating in peace. The nature of man is not satisfied with the multiplicity of inventions in our mechanical-scientific age. Fear and unhappiness are becoming the world's masters. The very discoveries that have made possible the world's physical comforts, have, in distorted use, produced unspeakably horrible instruments of destruction. Peace has been replaced by war, bloody and beastly; and, daily, war clouds rise in the horizon. As a result, fear, the chief torturing implement of evil stalks the halls of government, stands at household doors, and tears at every human heart. Tomorrow is no longer a hope; it has become a threat. The world is sick.

It requires neither sage nor "elder statesmen" in church or statecraft to tell us why this condition exists. The marvelous gifts of the day are material only. Such physical bounties do not produce happiness; they only contribute to our ease. Material gifts, used throughout the ages in the hope of satisfying man's hunger, have always been found wanting. If true happiness could be found in material things, humanity's joy should now exceed any ever known.

THE CURE FOR THE WORLD'S DILEMMA

To cure the world's present distemper, we must turn for help to the larger domain, of which the material is but a faint reflection. Out of the unseen world comes a body of laws, the so-called moral laws, among them the Ten Commandments and the Beatitudes. These laws are as real and comprehensible as any physical law. If a wire carrying an electric current is placed above a mariner's compass, the needle swings sharply to one side, and remains there. Just so, obedience to any of the moral laws will determine and hold the actions of the man under that law. The acceptance or rejection of these moral or spiritual laws, higher laws of God, determine in fact the behavior and conduct of every human being. They determine the use a man makes of any gift. It is the misuse of physical laws, in defiance of higher laws, which has brought into being cannons, bombs, torpedoes, and other devices for the destruction of human life. The moral laws, if sincerely and properly used, give power to solve life's problems. Above all else, conformity to them gives men conquest over themselves. They then dare to do right. In short, conformity to the laws that flow from the unseen world where God dwells, their acceptance in spirit and in deed, is the cure for the world's dilemma. True, it is an ancient remedy, but is certain to cure the soul's anxiety.

But, as a nation, and as a world, we are largely ignoring these laws of well-being. We have wandered away from the practices that form the foundation of the happy life. We must not shy away from the knowledge of existing conditions.

HAPPINESS BEGINS WITH HEALTH

For example: Happiness begins with the health of the human body, fashioned in the image of God. Yet our bodies are held, today, perhaps often ignorantly, in utter disregard. Not only are the general laws of health in contempt; but at no other time in our country have nerve-whipping, destructive substances been used by the people so extensively and greatly. For this surrender to unnatural appetites we are paying a terrible price in illness of body and mind. It is not conceivable that whiskey and vodka are reasonable preparations for the wise consideration of matters of state—so urgently needed today.

A LIST OF OUR SINS

The marriage covenant, the basis of a sound society, is flagrantly forgotten. The mounting divorce rate has become a national disgrace. Thereby the very foundations of our nation are undermined. Immorality, with its unspeakable slime of degradation, is reaping its harvest.

The Sabbath day, ordained by God, has been the main and full day of pleasure. In the mad rush for wealth, the nation will not suffer a play-day to be established in the week. Consequently, not only are the churches empty, but men no longer take time to commune with God, an essential requirement of the happy life. We are fast growing into a godless nation.

Likewise, in our greedy love of gold, advantage is taken of our neighbor whenever legally possible. Our own advantage is our main concern. When we give, it is because it helps us. That is not the spirit of honesty. We stand on the verge of becoming a dishonest nation.

We have forgotten the practice of family and private prayer. We have become sufficient unto ourselves, and therefore have loosed the tie that binds us to God. Thereby we are allowing evil to range freely among men, and in horror. We have lost the divine protection and sweet peace and satisfactions that come to a family who engage in daily prayer.

The list of our sins is long—too long for this talk.

RETURN TO THE SPIRITUAL FOLD

We know that to correct these and other evils, to heal our sick world, and to bring happiness to hungry hearts, mankind must return to the spiritual fold, and become worthy citizens of the moral kingdom. But how is it to be done? Churches and other organizations that try to win men to the better way of life have had indifferent success. They have been able to reach only a few.

Can we not hopefully try an old type of missionary endeavor, one which, unfortunately, has fallen into disuse in matters of human welfare? We have tried other ways and failed. Why not try this one?

Let each follower of the moral law, the nation over, accept the duty of being his neighbor's keeper. Let him assume a personal responsibility in this matter of curing a sick world. Let him constitute himself a missionary to neighbors and friends, to teach by example and word of mouth the better way of life, to persuade them that it is the best way.

DETERMINED RIGHTEOUSNESS NEEDED

Under this call to world service, all men of good will—in business and professions, farmers and artisans, in and out of organizations—would set out with courage, emphasis, and steady faith to talk about and teach the eternal plan for human joy, and the stern necessity of victory over self, if the world's sickness is to be cured.

This could be made a mass movement of national and international scope. It would flow and grow from centers, such as the group listening in today. It would be doubly powerful coming out of the hearts of common men. It would be a help to church and other organizations for human good. It would be a mighty deterrent to evil, for Satan, an incarnate coward, flees before determined righteousness. And it would have divine backing.

True, such a campaign would need some sacrifice of time, strength, and money. But the cause is the greatest on earth. Lesser causes are fiercely vocal. Millions of dollars are spent annually to advertise a brand of whiskey or cigarettes. Why not shout the way to peace from the housetops? Publicity and repetition need not be confined to the material aspects of life. Our spiritual needs, always battling with evil, have greater rights. It could be made the greatest campaign for human happiness in the last two thousand years. It would beggar any movement for human good, of any time.

CONSIDERATION OF INDIVIDUAL MAN

Any campaign for righteousness must consider first the individual man. As he is, so the group is. He is the one who, noting current events, is either hopeful or hopeless, who either courageously tries to solve for himself the problems of the day, or thinking there is no escape from impending events, eats, drinks, and is merry. By happy individuals the happy nation is built, as bricks of a color and shape reveal the architect's dream. Mass conversions are like heaps of bricks.

Moreover, we must teach these hungry individuals in our Christian country the doctrines of Christ, as taught by him, and not as conceived and interpreted by men. Christ spoke as man to man, to common men, and they understood him. It often happens that men lose the spirit of a doctrine because they cannot agree on the meaning of well-known words. There is no saving grace in such hair-splitting, no cure of the soul's hunger. It only confuses the ordinary man. We must speak to one another as we offer Christ's words, his lucid teachings, to solve our present crisis, in simple, understandable language.

Besides, the individual man asks for specific directions. Generalizations serve little. When we talk of the moral law, he replies, which one? He asks what in the nation saps our strength? What shall I do, he asks, to be saved from the world's confusion? In answer to such questions we can begin with the issues of the day at home, such as those here mentioned. Acceptance of one law makes it easier to yield to others.

SOLUTION OF WORLDS TROUBLES

There are then two principles of action in solving the world's troubles: Every man must be his brother's keeper; and in his labor must consider individual needs first, group needs last.

We live in a land of plenty in material things. We revel in luxury. Meanwhile, the blood of our children is shed over the earth, for heaven only knows what. We live in a land of spiritual famine. We are hungry for the bread that feeds the spirit. Because of our waywardness, contention, warfare, and other evils rob us of the happiness the Lord would have us enjoy.

However, we must not be hopeless of the future. Repentance and forgiveness are eternal principles. But there is work to do. Each one of us must change his own life. Each one of us must be a converter of others.

May the Lord of heaven help us so to build that there will no longer be hunger in the land—in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir then sang the hymn: "How Firm a Foundation," followed by another hymn, "God Is Our Refuge."

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

This broadcast, which was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City. It was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew" and on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls as music and the spoken word are heard again from the Crossroads of the West.

From Temple Square in Salt Lake City the Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour the music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Choir, Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word was by Richard Evans.

We open today with a chorus by A. Archangelsky written on Psalm 55—"Lend Thine ear to my prayer . . . Fear and trembling have come over me. Help me, Lord, to conquer over danger."

(Choir sang "Lend Thine Ear To My Prayer"—Archangelsky—Wilhousky.)

Announcer: The moving theme of a religious march by Guilmant is Dr. Asper's first organ offering.

(Organ presented "Marche Religieuse"—Guilmant.)

Announcer: We turn now to the music of the "Messiah" to hear the Tabernacle Choir singing a sacred song on a New Testament text: "His yoke is easy; his burden is light." (Adaptation of Matthew 11:30)

(Choir sang "His Yoke Is Easy"—Handel.)

Announcer: People who write plays often pull themselves out of predicaments by the use of "exit lines." With a good exit line an actor can extricate himself from the most difficult dilemmas. But the need for exit lines is by no means confined to the theatre. In real life exit lines may save many situations also. For example we could often use one for the person who has time to waste, and who wants to waste our time while he is wasting his—for the person who supposes that his leisure is everyone's leisure. But there are numerous needs for exit lines in more serious circumstances. Often young people are faced with unpleasant alternatives, such as a choice between their principles and so-called popularity. But popularity with people who offer only this alternative isn't ever worth the price. And when we are dealing with people who won't understand any other language, often the only adequate exit line is a definite and determined "No!" And if an emphatic "No" isn't accepted, exit by action may be called for—a determined exit without lingering or looking back. Doing just that has saved many a man from many a mistake—and Joseph in Egypt was one of them. One of the most unforgettable exit lines of all time is the one that terminated the temptation of Jesus the Christ when "the devil . . . showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, . . . and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan." In social situations, in business bargaining, and in many other matters, all of us meet many proposals. But when a proposal passes the limits of propriety and principle, then it is time for an exit. There isn't enough money in the world, there isn't enough popularity or social prestige to justify anyone's doing anything contrary to conscience and conviction. Our safety and self-respect suggest that we adopt principles within which we will conduct our lives, and beyond which we will not be moved—principles by which we can immediately decide what will be our final answer—our exit line—to any proposal. "Let men decide what they will not do, and they will be free to do vigorously what they ought to do."

(Organ presented "Song of Gratitude"—Harold K. Marks.)

Announcer: And now from Temple Square we recall the stirring conviction of a hymn by Daniel C. Roberts, with the music of George W. Warren: "God of our fathers, whose almighty hand leads forth in beauty all the starry band of shining worlds in splendor through the skies, our grateful songs before thy throne arise. Thy love divine hath led us in the past, in this free land by Thee our lot is cast; be Thou our ruler, guardian, guide and stay, Thy word our law, Thy paths our chosen way."

(Choir sang "God of Our Fathers"—Warren.)

(Organ presented, "He Died! The Great Redeemer Died."—George Careless.)

Announcer: ". . . I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter-day upon the earth." (Job 19:25) In the quiet conviction of this immortal utterance from Job, we close this day from Temple Square with the closing chorus from Handel's "Messiah": "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain. . . . Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him . . . for ever and ever."

(Choir sang "Worthy is the Lamb"—Handel.)

Announcer: We leave you now once more within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the 998th presentation continuing the 20th year of this broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Frank W. Asper was at the organ. The spoken word was by Richard Evans.

SUNDAY MORNING GENERAL CONFERENCE SESSION

Conference reconvened at 10:00 a.m., Sunday, October 3, immediately following the conclusion of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast.

The great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity; the Assembly Hall just south of the Tabernacle was filled with people, arrangements having been made so that they could enjoy the services by means of radio broadcasting and television; and hundreds who could not find accommodation in the Tabernacle or the Assembly Hall, assembled upon the Tabernacle grounds, where they listened to the Conference services as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services at this session.

The Tabernacle Choir was present and furnished the Choir singing for this meeting.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the sixth session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

There are present on the stand this morning all the General Authorities of the Church, except Elder Spencer W. Kimball, who is convalescing at home by orders of his doctor; Elder Alma Sonne, who is in Europe, presiding over the European Mission; and President S. Dilworth Young, presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and, by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

Any messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the Conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the morning session and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the afternoon session.

We will begin the morning services by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing: "Praise to the Man," Elder Richard P. Condie directing.

The opening prayer will be offered by President A. Carlos Murdock of the Beaver Stake, Beaver, Utah.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing the hymn: "Praise to the Man."

President A. Carlos Murdock, of the Beaver Stake, offered the invocation.

The Choir sang: "The King of Glory," Sister Jessie Evans Smith, soloist.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren and sisters, as I approach this solemn duty, I sense fully the need of your united support, and particularly the sustaining influence of the Spirit of the Lord.

IMPORTANCE OF ENVIRONMENT

It is my purpose this morning to say a few words about the effect of environment upon youth, and the responsibility of adults to make home and civic environment a contributing factor to their right living.

The following is pertinent to what I have in mind:

It is the age that forms the man, not the man that forms the age. Great minds do indeed react on the society which has made them what they are, but they only pay with interest what they have received. (Macaulay.)

So also is this ancient proverb applicable:

If there is righteousness in the heart, there will be beauty in the character. If there is beauty in the character, there will be harmony in the home. If there is harmony in the home, there will be order in society. And if there is order in society, there will be peace in the world.

From the pulpit and public press, even in homes and social circles, we hear discouraging comments on the delinquency of youth.

If there is concern about the recalcitrance of boys and girls, this generation is no exception to those which have preceded it. Our great-grandfathers and their great-grandfathers worried about the forwardness and recklessness of their children, and the bleakness of their future just as we do today.

CONFIDENCE IN YOUNG PEOPLE

Speaking generally, I have confidence in our young people. This confidence springs primarily from my intimate associations with hundreds of returned soldiers and others who have gone on missions, particularly during the last three years. While our young men were in the army, most of them (there were exceptions, of course) conducted themselves creditably. They met as regularly as possible for sacred service. As an illustration: During the war in the Pacific when the conflict was at its height, a chaplain one day accosted a colonel, saying, "Are you going to conference tomorrow?" "What do you mean, conference?" answered the colonel. "The Mormon soldiers in New Britain are holding a conference tomorrow."

I heard that same colonel say, upon his return from the army, "Those soldiers are among the best missionaries that the Church has ever had."

Many of these young men saved their money to pay the expenses of missions which they are now filling in various parts of the world, some of them in lands where they fought as soldiers. One of these, as others of his comrades, sent his savings home, requesting his mother to keep them to pay the expenses of his anticipated mission after his discharge from the army. Then he added, "If I do not return, use my savings to send out some other comrade to preach the gospel." He did not return, but in keeping with his desire, his parents are now using this soldier's savings to support another youth who is fulfilling the dead soldier's request.

I tell you, so long as there is an indication of that spirit among our youth, I am going to uphold them and have confidence in them.

I know that it is hardly fair to judge the group by those especially selected as missionaries, but I have been in touch with other groups whose lives tip the scales against delinquency. Recently there was held in this city a convention of one of the national college fraternities. For dignity, temperance, brotherhood, and other commendable virtues, it was one of the choicest conventions if not the choicest convention ever held by such an organization, and that was said by one who had attended fifty of them. In nearly every detail, it was planned and carried out by our local youth.

A recent outing by that same group, one hundred twenty strong, was characterized by actions most creditable.

That there is a threatening increase in delinquency in our communities, particularly among boys and girls of high-school age, is all too apparent to anyone who will open his eyes to see, and his ears to hear; and steps should be taken to curtail this delinquency.

DELINQUENCY OF ADULTS

It is with this purpose in mind that I refer not to the delinquency of youth, but to the delinquency of adults.

Youth is influenced by example and environment. Dominating groups exerting this influence are the home, the church, the school, social circles, and civic conditions.

There are too many delinquent fathers and mothers. Our homes are the centers that determine the type of our citizenry. To dignify home and parenthood is one of the noblest aims of human society. The greatest responsibility given to women is the divine gift to be a mother. She thus blessed, who has health and opportunity, and shirks the responsibility for social prestige and pleasure, is recreant to her duty as wife and mother. The father, particularly, if he be a member of the Church and holds the priesthood, who fails to set a proper example before his children is a delinquent, and is a contributor to child delinquency.

NEED OF PROPER HOME ENVIRONMENT

Upon the responsibility of parents to have proper home environment, modern revelation is most explicit:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

For this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized.

And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands.

And they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord. (D. & C. 68:25-28.)

Quarreling among parents and children, faultfinding, backbiting, smoking cigarets, drinking intoxicating liquors, using profane language, make a home environment that contributes to delinquency. No parent can consistently teach faith in Christ who profanes the name of Deity. Profanity is never heard in the well-ordered home. Swearing is a vice that bespeaks a low standard of breeding. Blasphemous exclamations drive out all spirit of reverence. Irreverence is always a mark of delinquency.

Wrote General George Washington to his Continental soldiers:

The foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing is a vice so mean and low that every person of sense and character detests and despises it.

Profanity is a vice all too prevalent in America, and though we say it with embarrassment, all too frequently used in the Church.

The great Chinese philosopher, as a minister of crime, is reported to have set free a son who had offended against the canon of filial behavior, on the ground that the father who had so ill-taught him was the one to blame. Said he:

When superiors fail in their duty, should inferiors die? This father never taught his son to be filial. To act upon this charge would be to kill the innocent.

But until the millennium there will be delinquent parents and delinquent homes, and as a result from out of these there will come children inclined to delinquency.

DUTIES OF CHURCH AND SCHOOL

It is the duty of the Church to render such assistance as is possible. First, to find these delinquents, and then to awaken higher ideals in daily living and to inspire faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

But only a small percentage of children and youth ever come in contact with the church. In New York City alone, fifty thousand children are unaffiliated with any church. A potent factor, therefore, in character development is the public school.

To these democratic institutions come children from all kinds of homes, including the delinquent. All I can say this morning is that every teacher in church and in school should realize that he has the moral as well as the assigned responsibility to impress upon his students the true value of the highest and noblest things in life.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE REPORT

More concern, it is now apparent, should be given to the influences outside the home, the church and the school. One of the most important conferences ever held in this country was the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection held during President Hoover's administration. Governor George Dern followed the matter up in Utah. As a result, hundreds of progressive people, forward-looking citizens, participated in the Utah State White House Conference, and considered influences that affect the child. From one of these reports I quote as follows:

The decadence of the old-type home with its wide physical arena of family life, its home with genius industry, its concern in the individual welfare and control over the child, yields to community influences which now have a larger part in the life of the child.

With the great masses of sensationalism and artificial stimulation to which the child of today is subjected in this age of mechanical wonders, it is of the gravest importance that society realize that it is only in the example of sincere living upon the part of the individual members of society that the child finds a dynamic impulse for his own wholesome development.

If we are sincere in our desire to reduce this delinquency among youth, let us look to ourselves as members of the community and as leaders and officials in civic circles. I continue to quote:

A nation that has conquered great material difficulties, and harnessed its physical powers must have some more effective means of combating the cynicism of its youth—the cynicism born of widely flaunted dishonesty of those in high places, insincerity of leadership, and gaudy pageantry of crime.

We have been termed the most lawless nation in the world. This is not merely that we have so many laws that any one enactment loses sanctity. This is not merely that the administration of criminal law has failed to keep pace with our urbanization. This is not merely that we feel that individual rights stand above the law. Deeper than all this lies a form of lawlessness that pervades our whole people, that infects our children—the tragic result of our unlimited natural resources, the facility of their wealth and the apparent omnipotence of our machinery—the heritage in our generation of the vicious belief that somehow more can be gotten out of life than one puts into it. This is truly in its deepest and most devastating sense a belief in lawlessness.

DELINQUENCY IN HOLLYWOOD

Recently a delinquent adult, a prominent movie actor, was caught with others in an illegal "dive." A few days later, a columnist published in the public press, the following:

I don't quite savvy all this sudden bleeding over the plight of a droopy-eyed young movie actor who seems to have been caught by the cops on a reefer binge with a couple of blondes. For one thing, it is not an unusual offense in Hollywood. Dragging the weed ranks roughly in the film colony with taking benzedrine as a substitute for sleep and sobriety.

I ask you, I ask the American public, to consider, what effect such comment would have upon young people who are already inclined to yield to the urge of new experience. More shame to the adult delinquent than to the youth!

WHOLESOME COMMUNITY ENVIRONMENT

It is the duty of every law-abiding citizen to see to it that our children have a wholesome community environment in which to live during their tender and impressive years.

I commend those officers who recently broke up that gambling den out here in our county, where sixteen adults—well, more than that—when the sheriff and his deputy caught them because of the activity of some neighbors . . . sixteen adults who were guilty of gambling and cock-fighting. Eleven were caught, arrested, and fined fifty dollars each. The officers broke it up, but now the gamblers are active in another county, I am informed.

The secret, illegal selling of bawdy literature and obscene pictures, the drinking of intoxicating liquors in public, the harboring of gambling devices, and particularly of "one-armed bandits" in "joints" throughout the state, and I speak advisedly, lure the youth into an atmosphere of criminality. Sale of liquor by the drink would only increase the danger and make more readily accessible to young people a demoralizing environment.

I am throwing out these two thoughts to emphasize the need of keeping our young people, as far as possible, in a wholesome and not a demoralizing environment.

GRATITUDE FOR THE CHURCH

In conclusion, let me say:

Let us here and now express gratitude for the Church of Jesus Christ with quorums and auxiliaries specially organized to combat these evils. It was established by divine revelation of God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. Its glorious mission is to proclaim the truth of the restored gospel; to uplift society that people may mingle more amicably one with another; to create in our communities a wholesome environment in which our children may find strength to resist temptation and encouragement to strive for cultural and spiritual attainment; to make ineffective the influence of designing men who would make profit out of their fellows who are fallen so low as to be slaves to their appetites and passions—and who would fill their purses through the weaknesses of addicts to gambling, and the pitiable courtesan outcasts. The gospel is a rational philosophy that teaches men how to get happiness in this life, and exaltation in the life to come.

The mission of the Church is to establish the kingdom of God upon the earth, which, in the words of Thomas Nixon Carver, is not a mystical but a real kingdom. It is a body of people dominated by ideals of productivity, which is mutual service. We do not strive for the things which satisfy but for the moment and then leave a bad taste. We strive for the things which build us up, and enable us and our children to be strong, to flourish, and to conquer. We strive to make ourselves worthy to receive the world by fitting ourselves to use the world more productively than others. We believe that obedience to God means obedience to the laws of nature, which are but the manifestations of his will; and we try by painstaking study to acquire the most complete and exact knowledge of that will, in order that we may conform ourselves to it.

We believe that reverence for God is respect for these laws, that meekness is teachableness and willingness to learn by observation and experience. By practicing this kind of meekness, or teachableness, we believe that we shall inherit the earth; whereas the unmeek, the unteachable, the pigheaded, who are dominated by pride of tradition, shall not. We offer you hard work, frugal fare, severe discipline, but a share in the conquest of the world for the religion of the productive life.

God help us to discharge our responsibilities to our youth by making an environment in home, in school, in church, and in our communities that will be uplifting, wholesome, faith-inspiring, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

This great conference, my brethren and sisters, has been a most inspirational occasion for all of us. As I heard one good sister remark yesterday, "It is out of this world," and I say to you that all that we have listened to is out of this world, and all of those who spoke to us have been animated by that spirit which is out of this world. All of the counsel and advice that we have listened to during this great conference will go for the salvation of all of us and for the eventual salvation of this world. Then at some future date it will become the celestial kingdom.

This morning President David O. McKay has delivered a most inspired address with reference to youth and particularly with reference to those who are responsible for youth, and I, too, desire to express a few thoughts along the same line and in so doing I may cross the path of President David O. McKay, but I don't know of anyone's path that I would rather follow than a member of the First Presidency.

YOUTH PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH

This past week has been devoted by some of the great youth organizations to the problems of youth. Some of you have listened to the broadcasts that have come from youth organizations. All that I have listened to and all that I have read with reference to this youth movement has been inspiring and is worthy of commendation. But in thinking of youth organizations of the world, the question came to my mind, what about the youth program of the restored Church of the Lord Jesus Christ? As I pondered over that question, there came to my mind the thought that the youth program of the Church of Jesus Christ is founded upon the priesthood of Almighty God. This program had its inception on May 15th, 1829, when two young men who were translating an ancient record ran across a statement that had to do with baptism. A question arose in their minds, so they went out into the woods and upon the bank of a beautiful river, supplicated God that they might have the right interpretation of that ancient scripture. An answer was given in the form of a visitation by a resurrected being who introduced himself as John the Baptist, and in the following words conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the Aaronic Priesthood:

Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. (D. & C. 13.)

The cornerstone of the youth program of this Church is the priesthood of God, and along with it there have come into being other organizations, which have come into existence through the inspiration and revelation of the Lord to the leaders of Israel to organize the great Sunday School, the M.I.A., and the Primary organization. There has been brought into being the great system of religious education and also the Latter-day Saint girls' program. This program of youth, which has been and is being fostered by the Church, is one which comprehends all of the needs of youth and places into the hands of those who are responsible for them, instruments whereby this great program can be implemented in behalf of youth to guide and direct them along the paths of faith, virtue, and service to others.

BLESSINGS OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

When the priesthood of Aaron was first given to the tribe of Levi, it was entrusted to mature men, but in this day and age the Aaronic Priesthood has been given to young men because of the fact that the members of the tribe of Levi are not worthy to hold that priesthood, and hence the heirs of Ephraim are carrying on the work of the Aaronic Priesthood today. We have often been asked the question, "Why is it that the priesthood is bestowed upon boys at the age of twelve?" I don't know whether or not there is on record any definite instructions as to this, but I can say it was a master stroke of inspiration, and I am sure that when the leadership of this Church decided to ordain boys at the age of twelve it came at the direction of our Heavenly Father. I know of no time in the age of any young man when he begins to form impressions and habits more readily than he does at the age of twelve, and in this great program of youth we commence early. These boys at the age of twelve, when they receive the priesthood of God, must be sweet and clean in their bodies. They are taught the law of chastity. They are taught that there is but one standard of virtue in this Church, both for young men and for young women. They are taught to be prayerful, and they are taught that priesthood means service and that where there is no service, and a man or a boy holds the priesthood, it is of little value to him and surely the Lord God will hold such an individual accountable when he fails to use this divine gift of authority in the service of the Master and for the benefit of the Lord's children here upon the earth. Out of priesthood service he is taught to be dependable; he evaluates integrity and honesty highly. He is taught something about the Constitution of the United States. He is taught that the document came to us from the Lord through the instrumentality of great and wise men who were raised up for that very purpose. He is taught that in the Constitution of the United States there is found the great fundamental principle of the gospel, namely that of free agency. And so with these noble qualities of character and the assignments that come to him from time to time, he is taught in a practical way the principles and fundamentals of the gospel of salvation. For example, the deacon is assigned to go out and collect the contributions of the people to the end that those who are in distress might have assistance and relief. He is also taught that he should participate in the great welfare program, for out of these two assignments he is taught what pure and undefiled religion is, namely, to help those who are in need, the aged, the widows, and the orphans. I am sure that no young man participates in these assignments but what he sees the blessings that will come to him and to others because of his willingness to serve.

DUTIES OF DEACONS AND TEACHERS

The deacon has the privilege of assisting in the administration of the sacrament, and no young man could listen to the sacramental prayers and not have a deep and lasting impression of what the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ means and what his great sacrifice on the cross did for all of us. The office of the ordained teacher carries great responsibility. At the age of fifteen he is sent out with a member of the Melchizedek Priesthood to teach Israel the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. In other religious organizations there would be some question with reference to sending out a young man at the tender age of fifteen to teach adults and others the principles of the gospel. I bear personal testimony to you that some of the most impressive ward teaching that I have ever listened to has fallen from the lips of these young servants of God, and we must never forget that they have a promise, a promise that if they will do their duty, they will enjoy that spirit of testimony, namely the Holy Ghost, which will magnify them before the families that they are called upon to visit. These young men have other assignments, and out of all of them there comes a realization that they are engaged in the work of the Lord.

THE OFFICE OF PRIEST

What about the young man just budding into manhood who is called to the office of priest? He has the same authority and the same privilege that John the Baptist had, the forerunner of Christ, in that it is his high privilege and honor to perform the ordinance of baptism; and I would that every priest in this Church may have that opportunity and privilege, for out of it comes the assurance that he holds the priesthood of Almighty God.

When a priest steps into the waters of baptism and brings his arm to the square and repeats the baptismal prayer, it impresses him that he is indeed a servant of God. These are the words he repeats: "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." A short prayer but a prayer wherein he declares without any reservations that he has been commissioned of Jesus Christ to perform the holy ordinance of baptism.

The priest has the right of administering the sacrament, of blessing the water and the bread; and no young man can repeat these blessings thoughtfully and prayerfully but what it strengthens his testimony that the lowly Nazarene who was crucified upon Calvary's Hill was the true and the Living Son of God, and that the Redeemer appeared in the meridian of time to another young man, Joseph Smith, who gave to the world the sweetest story ever told, since the crucifixion, that He lives. There is no doubt but what these experiences in the priesthood affect the lives of these young men to the end that what they do, or think, or say, shall be wholly compatible with the priesthood which they hold. It is as Brigham Young said, if these boys have been guided and directed and taught as they should be, all the acts they perform should be governed by the guidance of the priesthood.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

In 1947, fifty-four thousand members of the Aaronic Priesthood filled 1,403,461 assignments, twenty-six assignments for every one of these young men, which indicates that they would have a priesthood assignment every two weeks throughout the year. There are some of these young men who are not taking full advantage of their priesthood work, which would indicate that some members of the Aaronic Priesthood filled in a year one hundred or one hundred and fifty of these assignments. Out of the filling of these assignments there comes a strengthening of their testimony; there comes that training which guides them into the paths of virtue, of being prayerful and dependable, and a building up of the spiritual side of their lives.

I could go on indefinitely pointing out to you the achievements of these young men. When we speak of the Aaronic Priesthood and this great youth program of the Church, we not only find emphasis on the priesthood, which should come first, but we find the great auxiliary organizations providing a program that inspires them and builds them up in their faith and lays the foundation for a testimony. We are grateful to the great Primary organization for its work with boys under the age of twelve, and giving them instructions on the priesthood that they are about to receive. The Sunday School organization has the responsibility of teaching young men the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Y.M.M.I.A. organization provides for them a fine cultural and recreational program, and in addition to these two, it has fostered a great program for boys, namely, scouting.

The Church educational system affords daily religious education. The Latter-day Saint girls' program has in it all of the same factors and elements that we have for the young men, and it too is proving to be a great success.

FRUITS OF RELIGIOUS LIVING

As we think of these assignments and priesthood training and all that the auxiliary organizations offer to our young people, we wonder what the fruits of their lives will be. President McKay has indicated to you already what the fruits are in some instances. It is best illustrated in the words of the Savior found in Matthew:

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. . . .

Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. (Matt. 7:16-17, 20.)

What are the fruits of the priesthood? Some of them are service, testimony, virtue, honesty, prayerfulness, dependability, respect for authority, and selection of the proper kind of associates. As one of the General Authorities it has been my high privilege to interview many of these young people for missions. Some of these young men have spent several years in the armed forces of our country, and upon returning have expressed a desire to fill a mission. I have invariably asked them the question: "You have been away from home now for three or four years, and you mean to say that you are now anxious to go and spend two more years on a mission?" And without hesitating they have answered, "Yes, that's the thing I would like to do." They saved their money while in the armed forces, to the end that it might be used in preaching the word of God to the nations of the earth.

I learned something else about them. Some of them expressed a desire to return to the lands of the enemy whose guns they had faced. To me that manifested the true spirit of the Christ. That spirit, my brethren, that the Savior taught us to cultivate, to love God and love our neighbor as ourselves, to me is the spirit of the peacemaker.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God. (Matt. 5:9.)

BLESSINGS OF PRIESTHOOD SERVICE

The other fruits of the youth program of the Church have been manifested in other ways. In the fields of business the young men, who have taken full advantage of all of their priesthood opportunities and all the privileges afforded by the youth program of the Church, have received responsible positions without any question and have been successful.

I know of one man whose life's desire was living the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. He took advantage of the opportunities of priesthood service in his boyhood days, and not long ago a great company was searching for a very dependable man to take over one of its institutions, and they let it be known that no one should apply except a member of the Church. This young man applied and received the position at a salary of ten thousand dollars a year. Why was that company particularly anxious to have a member of this Church? They knew that, if they found the right kind of member of this Church, they would have a man with integrity and honesty, dependability, and one who would be an example to those who worked with him.

There are some of our young men who become indifferent for one reason or another, but I want to say that if we have done our part, if we have planted the seeds of faith in their hearts, they cannot get too far away from the Church.

LETTER TO BISHOP

I should like to read to you a few paragraphs of a letter written to one of our fine bishops by one of these boys who had all of the advantages of the youth program of the Church and then became indifferent.

The teachings a fellow receives in his youth have a great effect upon his life which I am just beginning to find out more and more each day. The teachings and blessings I received from my quorum while I was a teacher and a priest have paid off so numerously that I could not begin to quote all of them. Also the instructions I received in seminary have been of great value. The things my parents taught me from the time I could sit up in bed have also made me what I am today. Now, as I stop to look back upon all of the instructions, both large and small, that I received in my past twenty-one years, I have more in the wealth of the better things in life now than a lot of people have in a lifetime.

I want you to listen to this statement in particular.

I am a cross section of all the people that have had an influence on my life here so far. From here on out I am on my own, and it has taken me two years of married life to find it out. The responsibilities of an L.D.S. father are great, and I thank the Lord for the trust that he has put in me to carry out such responsibilities. When we were in our priesthood quorums I heard a lot about a person's being spiritually sick, and I always wondered what it was. The big wonder in my mind is now a reality. I don't wonder what it is now. I know. It has been said that experience is the best teacher, and my mother always said there would be a lot of things I would learn the hard way, and she is so right. To be spiritually sick is a lost feeling. You have your friends, but they seem to have no way of helping you no matter what they say or do. It is something that is lost from inside, and the only way you can get it back is from the inside. I have never really stepped inside an L.D.S. chapel for the past two years with an attitude of real worship of God, until the other night when I went to the nurses' graduation at the Idaho Falls L.D.S. Tabernacle. Elder Moyle spoke that night, and I realized then that I had lost a very valuable gift which I still had in my power to regain if I put my mind to it.

RESPONSIBILITY TO YOUTH

This young man took advantage of the youth program of the Church. For some reason he became indifferent, but as a result of the proper kind of teaching and the impression it made upon his life when he heard a servant of God preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, there was a ready response in his heart, and now that young man is trying to find his way back, I was particularly impressed with his thought, "I am a cross section of all the people that have had an influence upon my life here so far." I wonder if we who are responsible for the youth of Israel realize that they are a cross section of what we teach them, not only by precept but by example. After all, every man or woman, whether a parent, one of the lesser priesthood advisers, or a bishop, is wholly responsible for these young people. As one said, "We stand in the docket with every lost boy and girl. Have we a self that is worth putting into a boy?" That is the question, and should we not examine our inner selves to determine whether or not we have within us the qualities of character which should become a part of the character of every boy and girl to make them the kind of men and women that God wants them to be?

Out of youth there will come in thought and in deed the things that you and I have taught them over the years. If we sow the right kind of seed, it will logically follow that the right kind of fruit will come forth.

May God bless all of us who have this high and glorious privilege of laboring with youth, that out of our testimonies, out of our teachings, and above all, out of our examples, it will be as Brigham Young declared:

An individual who holds a share in the priesthood, and continues faithful to his calling, who delights himself continually in doing the things God requires at his hands, and continues through life in the performance of every duty will secure to himself not only the privilege of receiving, but the knowledge how to receive the things of God, that he may know the mind of God continually; and he will be enabled to discern between right and wrong, between the things of God and the things that are not of God. And the priesthood—the spirit that is within him, will continue to increase until it becomes like a fountain of living water; until it is like the tree of life; until it is one continued source of intelligence and instruction to that individual.

I humbly pray for all of these blessings in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "For the Strength of the Hills," Elder Richard P. Condie directing.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is a blessing to have such a fine demonstration as was just now given by the choir and their leader. When a man is left without accompaniment, it is important that he does get the right pitch, and then how glorious it is for one to feel when one starts to do his best, there comes the strength of a great organ.

I do humbly pray that the Lord will be with me and bless me.

NEED OF LOVE AND UNDERSTANDING

I recently had the pleasure of filling a number of assignments in the East, and I am deeply impressed with one or two simple, yet I feel, great needs. I feel sincerely that among us, as well as among other people we need greater understanding and love of all people.

I once had the privilege of filling an assignment with President Anthony W. Ivins. One of the things that was on the itinerary was a special meeting with a brother who had been in error. When we arrived at our destination, we sat with the president of the stake. President Ivins began to talk and said: "You know, I was coming here, some time ago, and I had an automobile accident and 'Charlie' was the man that stopped to help. Many other cars went by, but he was the man that stopped and stayed with me until my car was running again. Do you remember when that fire broke out down in the valley? The first man there was Charlie, and I remember he was the last man to leave. And a few days later when they started subscriptions to help build that home, I noticed that Charlie was on the top of the list."

The president of the stake now broke in and said: "Say, President Ivins, do you want us to consider this man's conduct?"

"Well, what do you think about it?"

No more was said, but that afternoon in the congregation of the Saints there Charlie was sitting. What a lovely thing really to have understanding and a love of people.

THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE

I want to say a word about the Russian people. I had the good fortune when I was studying in Berlin to live for about a year with a young Russian. He was a great fellow. I did not understand him at first, but he came home one day, and in his enthusiasm he grabbed me and said: "Well, let's go up town. I sold a painting today for four hundred marks."

And we went. When we came back, he placed on the table what remained of his money, and he said: "I want to share this with you."

I think of Tolstoy, a great Russian, who paid one of the loveliest compliments to the life of Christ and his teachings that I have ever read.

I was never so deeply impressed in the great temperance movement as when I heard in Berlin, one night, Gorky's great play, Nights' Lodging, an appeal for temperance. And let me say one word about this play, for it was so great in its simplicity.

The scene was an inn. People were waiting for the coming of a great personality. Finally he arrived, and they applauded him and applauded him and asked him to stand and give them a message. He seemingly had done this many times, at the inn, and he sprang upon the table. He had been drinking, but he started out with his lines. His eloquence was impressive; then, all at once the actor's mind seemed to go; his memory was gone. And all that was done to tell the story was that from his pocket a flask fell and broke upon the floor. Three bells tolled, and the play was over.

I think of Shostakovich, a young Russian in Petrograd, (now Leningrad). When the enemy came, he bravely fought, and after it was over he wrote his great Seventh Symphony which many of the world's critics have said is one of the greatest realistic movements in all the world. I stood with thousands of young men in southern California, a few years ago, out in the desert when the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra played this great symphony. It so thrilled these young men that many climbed up telephone poles that they might see the orchestra, and thousands stood for an hour and fifteen minutes with rapt attention to hear this great music.

Yes, these are voices of the Russian people. I agree that in the Kremlin there are unworthy men to represent them. The papers flood us with the story, but some day out on the plains of the Ukraine, way back in Siberia, our men shall be knocking at doors and bringing the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A moment ago I shook hands with Elder Anastasiou, one of our faithful members, a Russian by birth. We must differentiate between the present leaders and the people. We must love all peoples. That is one of the high purposes of the priesthood of God and the message of our Church as our people go into the world to preach the word of God.

STAND FOR THE RIGHT

I wish to make one other appeal. May God bless us that we may ever know the right and courageously stand for it. One personal application of this principle! I had the pleasure of setting apart a member of the presidency of the Texas-Louisiana Mission. After the ordinance was performed, I asked the brethren if they had something they would like to say, and one of the men, one of the leaders in that mission, said: "One day I sat in a barber shop chair, waiting. The barber took a towel as was his custom and threw it over my face. I reached to straighten it. I felt the cigars in my pocket. I had been seriously thinking about what I had heard about the gospel of Jesus Christ and that moment there flooded through my soul the spirit of courage, and I said: 'Let this be the day.' And he smoked no more. To know what is right and courageously stand for it, this is our opportunity.

I met just last week, in New York, a splendid Christian gentleman whom I have known through the years. He has spoken in this Tabernacle, Dan Poling. He is just home from the great conference of religious leaders at Amsterdam, Holland. He said:

"You know, Kirkham, to summarize that whole thing, there are two words that stand out, as I have also visited Berlin and other places of Europe. These two words are 'courage' and 'calm.'"

I have thought a great deal about that, "courage" and "calm."

"Probably the outstanding address," said Dan Poling, "that was made at that conference was by John Foster Dulles, adviser to Secretary Marshall, now in Paris."

Let me read you just a few words of Dulles as reported by Dan Poling, as given to the religious leaders of the world:

He warned that if their religious sessions resulted merely in theological definitions it would be a colossal failure. He spoke for peace but with words of dynamic realism.

Yes, may God preserve ever among us, throughout the earth, men who know the right and have the courage to stand for it, and may ever preserve the dignity of personality, and the strength of the voice of the people.

FAITH IN GOD

And finally, may God give us that other great need, faith in him. I read these words from the immortal Lincoln, which I treasure:

If it were not for my belief in an overruling Providence it would be difficult for me, in the midst of such complications of affairs, to keep my reason in its seat, but I am confident that the Almighty has his plans and will work them out, and whether we see it or not, they will be the wisest and the best.

In closing I bear my testimony to the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I never bear this testimony but what I feel in my heart I have done something worthy and lovely. God bless us that we may love all peoples, that we may know the right, then courageously stand for it, and may we continue in our faith in God and in the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just listened to Elder Oscar A. Kirkham of the First Council of the Seventy, following him will be Elder Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve, and following Brother Petersen will be Elbert R. Curtis, former secretary of the European Mission, former president of the Western States Mission, president of the Sugar House Stake of Zion and recently sustained as general superintendent of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am very grateful, my brothers and sisters, for the emphasis that has been placed, in this session and in this whole conference, upon the youth of the Church. With you I love the youth with all my soul, and I desire with all my heart that they may love the truth and live it that they may be saved here in the earth. There is nothing that I shall ask more of life than that my children shall love the gospel and serve the Lord, and I know that there is nothing more that you will ask in behalf of yourselves.

CONTRAST AT FUNERAL SERVICE

Yesterday as I listened to Elder Bowen in his masterful way deliver that great address on stability, my mind went to a funeral service I had attended just previously. In that service I saw a lovely Latter-day Saint family bowed down in grief. One of their members had been taken away. She had died in faith. The other members of the family, surrounding that casket, also were filled with faith and that blow of death which had struck in that home was greatly softened because of the faith that those people had the knowledge and the testimony concerning immortality and what the gospel does for us. I saw sitting in the audience a direct contrast to the scene around that casket, for there I saw two men who had once been faithful in the Church, men who had had the pearl of great price within their own hands, and then, because they loved worldliness more than they loved spirituality, they sold their birthright for a mess of pottage. They gave up their membership in the Church. They loved darkness more than they loved light, and there they sat looking at this faithful family. I thought, oh, what a contrast! Oh, what stability in their characters might have done for them! Oh, if they could have been in the position of those faithful ones who, though mourning at the passing of a loved one, had remained true and faithful and stable in the faith. Had they really appreciated their membership in the Church?

Our main object in life is to be good Latter-day Saints. To be good Latter-day Saints means that we work out our salvation here in the earth, through the facilities of the Church, and teach our children to do likewise. In order to obtain that objective we must so plan our affairs that everything we do in life will bring us nearer that goal. We must choose from life those things which will so affect our thoughts and habits as to bring us nearer the Church into closer harmony with it and its program. It is by cooperating with the Church and its program, laboring in its organizations and sustaining its institutions that we work out our salvation here in the earth.

THE RIGHT OF CHOICE

As we choose those things which shall become a part of our daily lives, let us remember that there is an opposition in all things. We have our free agency, as Elder Moyle taught us. We have our right of choice. If we choose certain things in life, they will drag us down and tend to separate us from close affiliation with the Church. Such things become barriers between us and our life's great objective. On the other hand, if we choose those things which will bring us closer to the Church, we will live the gospel better, and we will be better Latter-day Saints. Every day we must make decisions affecting our lives. Some of those decisions may seem small, but nevertheless they affect our thinking and either bring us nearer to God or help to remove us farther away.

GOOD READING HABITS

One of the men who have influenced my life for good and to whom I owe a great debt of gratitude is one of my former bishops, John C. Duncan of the First Ward here in Salt Lake City. I love that man because of his great stability. He measures up to what Elder Bowen was talking about yesterday. I remember his teachings so well. He always has been, and still is, a great advocate of good reading habits. He has always told us that what we read helps to make us what we are. Naturally, what we read affects our thinking, and as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. Bishop Duncan has always taught us that we should read the periodicals of the Church, because of the wholesome influence those periodicals have in our lives.

There are, I suppose, about a quarter of a million Latter-day Saint homes. Every one of those homes would be a better home if the people who live there would read and study and digest the messages that are carried in the periodicals of the Church. There would be in them a greater respect for virtue, better observance of the high standards of the Church; there would be greater love and brotherhood; there would be more spirituality.

Every one of you desires to know the mind of the leaders of the Church, the advice of the First Presidency. We do not often come into their presence. We do not often have the opportunity of hearing what they have to say. But every one of you may feel their influence and receive the messages they have to give if you will take the periodicals of the Church and read those messages.

THE IMPROVEMENT ERA

President Smith is widely loved. When he goes to speak in a meetinghouse, the building is overflowing with people. You love him because of his love for humanity. You love him for what he tells you and the spirit and the influence he carries with him. But you cannot be in his presence every day, nor every month. But President Smith is the editor of The Improvement Era, and every month there is an editorial from him in The Improvement Era, which would do you and your family much good if you would read it. I wouldn't for anything pass by that Era every month. I love it, and I love the messages it carries. I wouldn't for anything miss the editorials that appear there under the name of the President of this Church. I always get great stimulus out of it. I am a better man because I read what he says, because I love the influence he carries. Although I cannot be in his presence every day, I can read what he has said, and through it feel his influence.

President Smith is assisted in the editorship of The Improvement Era by Dr. John A. Widtsoe and President Richard L. Evans. These men are a great inspiration to the Church. You are in excellent company when you are in their presence, and if you want to have their influence about you and the children in your home, then take The Improvement Era.

I do not know what the exact circulation of The Improvement Era is, but I know that it is not what I would like to see it. I think that if we have a quarter of a million homes in this Church we ought to have nearly a quarter of a million circulation for The Improvement Era, because it ought to be in every home for the good it will do to you and to your children.

THE RELIEF SOCIETY MAGAZINE

I feel exactly the same way about the Relief Society Magazine. I do not know anywhere where you can find a magazine that will do you as much good, as a woman and as a mother, as does the Relief Society Magazine. It is published and edited by women of great faith and great spirituality as well as of great mentality. Every woman in this Church should have the Relief Society Magazine and read it. Wherever there is a Latter-day Saint home, there should be the Relief Society Magazine. Wherever there is a Latter-day Saint mother, there should be the Relief Society Magazine.

You will be a better Latter-day Saint, and you will be a better mother if you will take the Relief Society Magazine in your home. Your husband and your children likewise will be benefited by it because it does carry the spirit and the very essence of the gospel of Christ right into your home.

If you want better homes such as President McKay has been talking about here, then you bring into your home these magazines which help you so. I again say that I believe that the Relief Society Magazine should be in every home, and therefore that magazine also should have a circulation in excess of two hundred thousand.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND

And then, we are also interested in our little children. Don't you love your little ones and don't you fast and pray for them, and don't you hope that they will be converted to the gospel of Christ, and don't you hope that they will grow up to be stalwart members of this Church? Then place in their hands every facility that you can to help them to get this faith deep in their hearts and to establish habits and customs which will be in compliance with the teachings of the Church. Do you know one of the greatest and best helps you can get to place in the hands of your children? It is a magazine published by the Primary Association of this Church, and it is called The Children's Friend. It is the grandest, by all odds the best, child's magazine, that I have ever seen anywhere. It will do a great service for your children. The children of the Church love it. It provides wonderful things with which to build faith and character. It also gives them entertainment. It gives to the children of the Church that something which they love and which they need.

It is indeed a mistake to suppose that The Children's Friend is only to go into the homes of those people who happen to be workers in the Primary Association. Every child in this Church is entitled to the benefit that can come to him or her through the use of that wonderful magazine. If you love your children and if you desire to build faith in their hearts and to develop character, put in their hands this valuable child's magazine. Whether you yourself happen to be a Primary worker or not, your children need the increased faith and strength that can come to them through the use of that magazine. Take it. It is one of the helps that God has given to you to assist you in teaching and rearing your children.

Then there is another magazine, The Instructor which is provided by the Sunday School, primarily for teachers. It, too, is designed to build faith and character and stability here in the Church.

THE DESERET NEWS

There is another publication which I love with all my heart, and that is The Deseret News, a publication which is owned and operated entirely by the Church. As President McKay said the other night, The Deseret News is your newspaper. It belongs to you, and you should be interested in it. You should be interested in seeing it grow and develop.

One of the great merchandising experts in the United States is a man named Amos Parrish. I have always enjoyed reading his magazine. One of the things he teaches merchants is that they are to sell their products for what they will do for the people, and he tells the buyers to buy products for what those products will do for them, for the type of service they will render.

What does The Deseret News do for you?

In the first place, The Deseret News brings to you a fine high class news and feature coverage which is in keeping with the very highest traditions of American journalism. That newspaper has been very greatly improved in the recent past. It is a first-class newspaper, one of which you may well be proud, one which will serve you well in your home and one which will serve your children equally well.

What else does The Deseret News do for you? The Deseret News stands for Americanism. Whether you are a member of this Church or not, The Deseret News will help to make you a better American, and everybody needs to be better Americans today. So I commend to you that newspaper which builds patriotism, genuine Americanism in your hearts. It stands for the Constitution of the United States which has been referred to here today, and its editors believe with all their hearts that the Constitution was God-inspired. It promotes greater and finer communities, and better family life. You are all of you interested in cleaner communities, in higher standards of living. You would like to see reduced the vice that is so apparent in so many of our communities. I would like you to know that The Deseret News stands for the high standards of the Church. It stands for clean communities, clean government, and clean living. If you want to be a good citizen and enjoy clean community life, The Deseret News will help you to do so.

Much has been said here about the youth. I tell you that The Deseret News will serve your youth. You know and I know what faith-destroyers cigarets are. You and I know that a cigaret will help to destroy the faith and, if it continues on, the very salvation of your children. You may place The Deseret News with confidence and safety in the hands of your children, because the pages of that newspaper will never tempt your children to take a smoke. Likewise it never will tempt your children to drink beer or hard liquor, because such advertisements are not there. The Deseret News is a clean newspaper, and it will help you and your children to live the gospel better if you have it in your homes.

You come here to these conferences and you want to know what the Authorities of the Church are thinking and talking about. The Deseret News brings to you almost daily the attitude of the leaders of this Church. I would not have you think that they read and study everything before it goes into the newspaper, because, of course, that could not be. But the general policy of The Deseret News is the reflection of the policy of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and if you want to know what the general attitude of this Church is on most subjects, The Deseret News will bring it to you.

The Deseret News also will give you another great service in that it brings to you its Church Section which, in my opinion, is one of the very finest things this Church has ever produced in periodical form. Every Church worker will do his work better if he has that Church Section. Your homes will have more faith if you read that Church Section. Your children will love the gospel better if they read that Church Section. I commend it to you with all my heart and all my soul.

SUPPORT OF CHURCH PUBLICATIONS

There are many other things that I could say about this newspaper, but time is fast going on. My brethren and my sisters, some of you say, "We cannot afford to take all these Church publications." I ask you in all seriousness how can you afford not to take them? An investment in the Church publications costs but very little, but it is an investment in good living. You cannot go to the corner store and buy a dollar's worth of character or a quarter's worth of faith. Yet these are the things above all else for which we strive in life. Are we going to count our dimes so carefully—dimes that so many times otherwise we throw away for far less valuable things—that we are going to keep from our children and our homes these faith-building, character-building influences? How can we afford not to take them?

I remember Paul once said that the eye cannot say to the hand, "I have no need of thee." The head cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee." (See I Corinthians 12:14-25.) Is there one of us knowing the dangers that surround our children in this day of lax morality, in this day of smoking, drinking, and carousing, is there one of us who will say that a single safeguard of the Church is unnecessary?

These publications are safeguards of the Church and I pray that we may have the vision to see them as such, and that we may not say to any one of them, "I have no need of thee," and for this I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER ELBERT R. CURTIS

General Superintendent of Y.M.M.I.A.

I wonder if any of you know how far it is up those stairs. As President Smith referred to some of the past privileges and responsibilities that have been mine, if he had just added, "and presently frightened almost to death," he would have brought you up to date.

This has been a wonderful conference. The spirit of it has been such that it almost takes the fear from my heart. Surely you appreciate that a man may not respond to such a calling as has now come to me without a spirit of humility and a desire to serve the Lord to the utmost of his ability.

In his remarks, Bishop LeGrand Richards suggested that as a man gives of his time and his efforts to the work of the Lord that the Lord makes it up to him, puts thoughts into his mind. In fact, he suggested thoughts that will make money. I have not prayed and do not for the temporal blessings of the earth, but I have prayed sincerely that the Lord will enlarge my thinking, will inspire me that through me as his humble servant the youth of this Church might be blessed.

Was it Daniel Webster who, when asked what is the greatest thought you have ever had, answered, "my responsibility to God." And as I think of the responsibility of leading the youth of this great Church it well nigh takes the courage from me.

I realize that the brethren have not asked me to do this alone. They have blessed me with splendid assistants. There will be an equally fine board I am sure.

Each talk of the brethren during Conference, it seems to me, has been directed toward the problems of youth. They are concerned. Their tender loving care is an inspiration in and of itself. We follow great and grand men who have presided over the Mutuals of the Church and whose work we hope to carry on in a way that will be pleasing to our Father in heaven.

This is God's work. With some fourteen hundred bishops who lead the youth of their respective wards and whose support we know we can count upon, with the many stake presidents and all who love this work as we love it, surely we cannot fail.

May the Lord bless us and help us as we strive to carry out his will for the blessing of his children here in the earth, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just listened to the general superintendent of the Y. M. M. I. A., Elbert R. Curtis, who succeeds Brother George Q. Morris, who is now in the Eastern States Mission presiding over that mission.

The Tabernacle Choir will sing to us: "Give Unto the Meek," and the closing prayer will be offered by President W. Glenn Harmon of the Berkeley Stake, Berkeley, California, after which this Conference will stand adjourned until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of this afternoon's session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour of opening the meeting.

Singing by the Choir: "Give Unto the Meek."

The closing prayer was offered by President W. Glenn Harmon of the Berkeley Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held Sunday afternoon, October 3, at 2:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

Again the great Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, the Assembly Hall was filled with people, who listened to the services as they were broadcast over the loud speaking system and by television, and hundreds of others assembled upon the grounds and listened to the Conference services by means of the loud-speaking system.

The Tabernacle Choir was present and furnished the Choir music for this session.

President George Albert Smith:

I hope that everybody will crowd as close together as they can, giving the people who are standing a seat where possible.

This is the seventh and concluding session of the 119th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah. The house is filled to capacity and hundreds standing. The Assembly Hall is filled, and on the grounds, in the open air, hundreds of people are listening in.

There are present on the stand this afternoon all of the General Authorities of the Church with the exception of Elder Alma Sonne, who is presiding over the European Mission; and President S. Dilworth Young, presiding over the New England Mission.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KDSH at Boise, KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

I take this occasion to express appreciation to these broadcasting stations for carrying our messages to the communities that they serve.

Any messages and calls that come in for persons supposed to be in attendance, if they are important, will be announced over the loud-speaking system on the grounds at the close of the meeting. Everyone would do well to listen for such notices.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin this afternoon's service by the Tabernacle Choir singing: "Almighty God of Our Fathers."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Fred W. Schwendiman of the Wells Stake, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The Choir sang: "Almighty God of Our Fathers."

The opening prayer was offered by Elder Fred W. Schwendiman, President of the Wells Stake.

Singing by the Choir: "My Shepherd Will Supply My Need."

President David O. McKay presented the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, and they were unanimously sustained as follows:

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

George Albert Smith, Prophet, Seer and Revelator, and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency.

David O. McKay, Second Counselor in the First Presidency.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES

George F. Richards

All you who can sustain these brethren and sisters in their respective positions, with the explanation made regarding the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, please manifest it by raising your right hand.

(the hands were raised)

As far as I can see the voting has been unanimous in the affirmative.

President George Albert Smith:

We have just heard President David O. McKay of the First Presidency presenting the General Authorities, general officers and general auxiliary officers of the Church for the sustaining vote of the Conference. It is a magnificent sight from this point of vantage to look over this great audience and see the unanimous vote—not a dissenting vote being apparent.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have been deeply moved by this conference, my brethren and sisters, and my inclination would be to spend my allotted time in lending support and sanction to the great messages which have come to us. I have, however, another obligation that I feel I must discharge.

REPORT OF SOUTH AMERICAN TRIP

My wife and I returned from South America last spring just a day or two too late to attend the April conference. While I have spoken of some of my experiences in a few of the stake conferences, I have thought that I should make a report to the Church on our visits to these missions in the southern continent.

Perhaps it might be well at the outset just to refresh your geographical memories a little. South America is not only south of North America, but it is almost entirely east of the United States, so that during nearly all of the time we spent away we were four hours, or time zones; east of Salt Lake City, and only two time zones west of London. Our travels consumed about eighteen thousand miles, so you see we here at home are a long way from our fellow members in the missions of South America, and because of that difference and the fact that about twenty-two years had elapsed since that country was visited by General Authorities, you will readily understand that we were awaited with a royal welcome.

We left Salt Lake City on the last day of December last year. We spent about two weeks in Washington D.C., and in New York in securing letters of introduction to prominent business people in the south, and also in interviews at the embassies of the countries we intended to visit, where we were introduced through the courtesy of our Congressional representatives. We never did secure time enough to present all of these letters, but we had the satisfaction of making our mission presidents acquainted with some prominent men who may be of some aid in the future.

It was bitter cold when we left New York harbor, with some of the water pipes of the ship frozen, so I assure you it was altogether agreeable, after a few days, to come into a warmer climate. However, we found that you can often get too much of a good thing, and when we reached Rio de Janeiro in the middle of their summer, comparable to our July, in a heat wave more intense than they had had in four years, we longed for the snow and ice we had so recently left. You know you can usually protect yourself against the cold, but you can't against the heat, and I am sure I prolonged my visit to the few air-conditioned offices where I presented letters of introduction, beyond the bounds of strict propriety. I hope it wasn't too obvious. Down in Sao Paulo, the headquarters of the Brazilian Mission, it was a little bit more temperate because that has some elevation above the sea, and Montevideo and Buenos Aires are farther south and in a more temperate zone.

"DIVINE SERVICES" CONDUCTED

Soon after we boarded the ship, we were happy to learn that there were seven missionaries aboard, and one member of the Church in the ship's employ. With the assistance of these good folk, on the request of the ship's command, we conducted what were called "divine services" on the two Sundays of the voyage. The missionaries were all splendid young men. I am sure they made an excellent impression. On the way home, on the same ship and a sister ship, we were asked to conduct three more Sunday services, so that I began to feel that I ought to have been put on the ship's payroll. That hope vanished early, however, when it was learned that we didn't preach for hire. The captain, however, rewarded me somewhat by giving me the rather rare privilege of going on the bridge of the vessel with an officer guide to explain the mysteries of automatic steering and radar, and when I was escorted to the huge engine room where I inspected one of the greatest power plants I have ever seen, I felt quite rewarded for my preaching.

Sunday, October 3

We arrived in Buenos Aires, headquarters of the Argentine Mission, in the morning. We could see from the ship's deck the mission president, and his wife, and the missionaries and Saints gathered to meet us. It was noon, however, before we could greet them. The time consumed in getting baggage through customs and in the inspection of visas and securing medical permits, is very considerable, I assure you.

INCONVENIENCE OF RECEIVING PACKAGES

In this connection I would like to broadcast the counsel throughout the Church to all parents and friends of missionaries in the South American missions, not to send to the missionaries packages at Christmas, or any other time, containing articles which are not essential to them in their work. It often requires many hours and sometimes days of the precious time of missionaries, or the mission staff, to get packages out of customs, and a box of stale cookies which has spent two or three months on the way, even though it carries a lot of love and sentiment from the folk at home isn't worth it. An airmail letter on thin paper with a ten-cent stamp is a far more expeditious and satisfactory message of your affection and encouragement under the circumstances that prevail in South America.

There is a word in frequent use in South America which expresses a quality wholly necessary to peace of mind. It is the word paciencia meaning patience. Everybody takes his time about doing things, the government and its agencies, especially. The sooner you learn this the happier you are.

HOSPITABLE RECEPTION

Well, we finally got through customs to enjoy the welcome and greetings of our patient friends. I will say just a word about our reception at the Laniers Branch of the Argentine Mission in Buenos Aires, because this was typical of the hospitality and greeting of the Saints and missionaries throughout the missions. The Laniers Branch is the largest of all the branches of the Church in South America, and is one of the very few which owns its own place of meeting, which is a very modest one. On this occasion there were gathered about four hundred members of the Church and friends. The hall was crowded. It had been decorated with flowers and streamers, and presented an attractive appearance. An elaborate program had been prepared, with both amateur and professional talent, consisting of speeches, singing, and folk dancing rendered in Spanish and native costume, with some interpretations for our benefit. Children participated liberally. Some of the skits and songs had been specially written, and the whole program represented the expenditure of a large amount of time and effort in preparation. As a climax, Sister Richards was presented with beautiful flowers which grow in profusion in that country. On one occasion the orchids given to her hung from her shoulder almost to her knee. I know the ladies will take note of that.

I was given a beautifully ornamented cake made by some of the good sisters. I am not supposed to eat cake, but I soon discovered that the missionaries have good appetites without many restrictions, and I assure you that none of the cake given to me was wasted.

It was in this welcoming social that we were first made really to feel the sentiment and spirit of our fellow members of the Church in those distant lands. They were respectful and reverent almost to an embarrassing degree. I am not used to having my hand kissed, a custom which is a holdover that some of the older people have kept, from the traditions and practices of their earlier affiliations. They were warm-hearted, and for the most part demonstrative and impulsive. It was apparent that the fellowship promoted by the Church had found a place in their lives, and particularly among the sisters I noted that affectionate regard for each other which we so frequently see at home. It was apparent that nearly all were in humble circumstances, although many were tastefully and somewhat stylishly dressed. Particularly was this true of the girls. They were, however, a little short on the latest fashions. The long skirts had not yet reached them.

MANY NATIONALITIES REPRESENTED

It was evident that many nationalities were represented, with a preponderance of the brunette people from Spain, Italy, and the Mediterranean countries. There were a few of German and English extraction, but far more from southern than from northern Europe. This group of people which we first met were typical in their racial composition, of the groups we met in all the missions. The stocks from southern Europe prevail. Spanish is the national language in Argentina and Uruguay, and in Brazil, the Portuguese. I talked with a number of families in Brazil who prided themselves on pure Portuguese blood. It so happens, however, that our work in both Argentina and Brazil was begun in the German language, among immigrants from Germany. We still have a few German groups of Saints, where German is spoken, but this practice is being discontinued.

It should be said here, for the information of the Church, that our South American missions do substantially no work among the Lamanite people, and so far as I know, we have no Indian members of the Church in these missions. I met a few Indian boys who were attending school at one of the universities in Argentina who had come from Peru. The missionaries had made friends with them, and they took part on one of our programs. They were small-statured, but seemed intelligent and kindly disposed, and some day perhaps our work may be carried to their country.

DISTRUST IN EVIDENCE

My observation that the Latin Americans are predominantly from the southern European stocks led me to wonder how susceptible these people are to the teachings and influence of the gospel. I recalled that in more than one hundred years we have done little or no missionary work in Spain, Italy, Portugal, and adjacent countries. Perhaps this may be the means, in South America, of some day approaching those countries. I thought I could see in the disposition, customs and practices of these South Americans some of the reasons which have impeded gospel work among them. They are people who have suffered many impositions. They have not been trained and nurtured in the kind of freedoms which northern Europeans and North Americans have enjoyed, in consequence of which, perhaps, they have become by nature suspicious and distrustful. American businessmen told me that after many years of business dealings they were unable to build up that mutual confidence and friendship with native South Americans which may be established in a few weeks or months among our own people. The buildings and homes of the people are indicative of this distrust. Everything is walled in. Even a little home is usually surrounded by a wall six, ten, twelve feet in height, almost unscalable, with a locked gate and sometimes broken glass on top of the wall as a protection against neighbors and others who ought to be counted friends.

All this has a bearing on our missionary work, as you will readily see. Homes are not easily accessible. Interviews are difficult and it takes a long time to build up that confidence which is essential to friendship and mutual understanding. Tracting is attended with difficulties, not only because of walls and locked gates, but because customs are new and strange to our missionaries. During the day-time men folk are not at home, except perhaps for the siesta period, when they are not to be disturbed. This siesta takes a big portion out of a day. Places of business close from twelve to three o'clock, and our missionaries are greatly limited in their opportunities to make contacts. In some sections they were beginning evening tracting in the hope of meeting the families at what would seem to us late hours. I have not heard yet what success attended these experiments.

In the main our missionary work is prosecuted through the medium of locales. A local is usually a small rented building which serves as a home for the missionaries and a place of meeting in carrying forward Church activities for the groups who attend. One room in the local is fitted out to serve as a little church modestly equipped with a pulpit, a small organ and benches. Owing to the housing shortage which prevails in South America as it does with us, it has been very difficult to secure locales in good locations of the cities, and we have often been forced to take places in poor localities.

CIVILIZATION CENTERS IN CITIES

It should be noted that all civilized life in South America centers in the big cities. There is very little agricultural or rural life, as we know it. The vast livestock ranches of Argentina, and the coffee plantations of Brazil are owned by wealthy families who live in the big cities and who dominate the whole agricultural field. The independent farm owner and operator is almost unknown. This situation is material to our missionary work. We do no country work. Our missionaries visit no farm homes so productive of investigators and converts in other countries. They are not allowed, without permits, even to enter the great ranches and plantations. One of the greatest needs apparent in the countries we visited is a division of the lands for a far greater productivity and realization of the vast resources of the countries, and more importantly, for the establishment of an independent, vigorous middle class of land-owners and workers.

South America is a land of violent contrasts—the very beautiful and the very ugly; the very rich and the very poor; the very intellectual and sophisticated, and the very ignorant. Of course, countries differ in these respects, but everywhere there is conspicuously lacking that strong middle class which is the backbone of our own and other progressive countries. I saw some indications that this class may be growing. In some industrial centers, such as Sao Paulo in Brazil, when and if it grows, our missionary work will have more assurance of success. It takes humility and intelligence to understand and receive the restored gospel. The aristocracy lack the humility, and the poor and destitute often lack in good measure the intelligence.

PROMISING PROSPECTS AMONG YOUTH

Our most promising prospects are among the youth in all the countries. They are forward-looking, and they are emerging from some of the distrust and suspicion which has so retarded the progress of their elders. These young people have admiration for many things in America. They learn about us largely through the picture shows. Unfortunately, through this medium they do not always get correct impressions of the best part of our North American life. It's a shame that we have to be advertised by the most effective advertising there is, for our gangsterism, infidelity, frivolity, and cheap wit. These young people, however, see our automobiles, our clothes, our fine homes in the pictures, and they think they would like to have some of these things. They want to learn English and our missionaries capitalize on this desire and teach many of them English. English classes are held in the locales. The young people who come in contact with our missionaries develop a great admiration for them—for their fine, clean manhood, their friendliness and their serious work. Mutual Improvement Associations are begun, and gradually the gospel plan unfolds before these people, and they are given an entirely new vision of abundant and rich living with purpose and incentive, even in their poverty.

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

I saw some branches of the mission made up and carried forward entirely by young people. Of course, there are older people, too, who have proved susceptible to gospel teaching, but in the main I feel that our hope lies with the youth.

South America desperately needs the restored gospel. The nations of that land need, more than anything else, the true concepts of liberty which arise out of a correct understanding of the relationship of man to God and his fellow man. They need a comprehension of justice, equity, and equality. They need to understand more perfectly the dignity of work, and, of course, they need the enlightenment of education. As one man said who gave me a letter of introduction to business associates in South America: "South America needs what the Mormon Church has to offer."

Our missionaries are trying hard to give these things to the people who so sorely need them. Their work is conducted at great expense. It costs more than one thousand dollars in transportation alone to put a missionary in one of these missions and bring him home. Living costs are very high, even in American money, which sells at a premium. The language is difficult, particularly the Portuguese, and many months pass before a missionary can adequately express himself before the people. However, they, our missionaries, carry with them a spirit, and the testimony of truth which, even imperfectly expressed in the language of the people, touches the hearts of many who hear them.

MISSIONARIES AND SAINTS FAITHFUL

Now I found in all the missions a great enthusiasm among the missionaries for their work. They have developed a love for the people, which lies at the base of all good missionary labors, and they, under the direction of their mission presidents, are organizing and planning to meet the conditions. We also have some very faithful Saints who are great aids in promoting our work. I saw some very good work being carried forward by small branches of the missions—Sunday Schools and Primaries where little children are being taught; priesthood classes where men and boys are learning their duties; Relief Societies and welfare workers are carrying forward commendable projects. Generally, the groups were small and largely dependent upon the missionaries, but there was promise in them. Perhaps the most stimulating of any exercises I saw were the baptismal ceremonies. We had the privilege of being present at two, one in Argentina and one in the interior of Brazil. Nothing is more encouraging to missionaries and to members of the Church than to see the fruits of their labors and the happiness which comes to those who ally themselves with the work of the Lord. In each service, six to ten were baptized into the Church.

If time permitted, I would tell you some rather interesting aspects of these baptismal services, but it does not. After all, this is the great encouragement to our missionaries. The realization of knowing that they may have been the means of bringing peace—peace of mind and peace to the heart and soul of some one of God's children who has humbled himself to seek the truth. I am not able to say how many in South America will respond to the spirit and message we bear, but I am sure we are doing our duty, fulfilling divine command, when we carry the word of our Lord to all lands and peoples.

GRATITUDE FOR VISIT

I acknowledge my gratitude to the First Presidency in extending to me the opportunity of making this visit, and I also acknowledge the innumerable courtesies and kindnesses shown to my wife and me by the mission presidents and their wives, the missionaries, and Saints, and friends of the South American missions. It was an unforgettable experience. If any good to the noble cause, which I love, shall come of it, I shall be very grateful.

I pray that the Lord may bless our missionaries in all lands and the Saints who are scattered over the earth. I trust that they may all feel as we tried to make them feel in South America, that we are all one in the Church of Christ, that even though we may be widely separated, we can reach out over the lands and the oceans and extend the handclasp of fellowship and good brotherhood to our members throughout the globe. I think this was the message which they, in the southern hemisphere, appreciated more than any other. They wanted to be assured that they were one with us and we with them. The day will come, my brothers and sisters, when the mighty cause with which we have the honor to be associated, will bring to pass that unity in a divided and stricken world. God grant it may come soon. I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITHOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

I seek the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord.

I am not going to give you anything new. Everything that pertains to the gospel is new, but I shall not present anything that has not already been considered, either at this conference or at some other time, and I may, in the course of my remarks, repeat and emphasize some things that have already been said.

LIGHT AND TRUTH

First, I shall read to you from section nine-three of the Doctrine and Covenants where the Lord says, speaking of light and truth which is the Spirit of Christ:

Light and truth forsake that evil one.

Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God.

And that wicked one cometh and taketh away light and truth, through disobedience, from the children of men, and because of the tradition of their fathers.

But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth. (D. & C. 93:37-40.)

I know we were all very deeply impressed with the remarks of President McKay this morning, and others of the brethren who have spoken, in relation to the care of our children in the home. I wish to continue, perhaps treating this matter from a little different viewpoint, but nevertheless calling the attention of the members of the Church, of fathers and mothers, to their responsibility in regard to the training of their children.

THE FAMILY UNIT

There is no substitute for a righteous home. That may not be so considered in the world, but it is and ought to be in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The family is the unit in the kingdom of God. That we believe, and if we are fortunate enough, through the keeping of the commandments of the Lord, to go back and re-enter the celestial kingdom to dwell with him, we will find that we are his sons and his daughters, that he is in very deed our Father. As Paul has stated it, we are his offspring, and through obedience to every principle of eternal truth we will go back to be his sons and his daughters.

Paul has said and prayed, speaking of the mission of Christ and his obedience to him:

For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named. (Eph. 3:14-15.)

If we get back into that great kingdom after the earth is re-deemed, we will find ourselves members of the great family of God, and he will be our Father.

He said, you know, to John:

He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I shall be his God, and he shall be my son. (Rev. 21:7.)

We should remember, as Latter-day Saints, that outside of the celestial kingdom, there is no family organization. That organization is reserved for those who are willing to abide in every covenant and every obligation which we are called upon to receive while we sojourn here in this mortal life.

DUTIES OF PARENTS

Now, let me take up where these brethren left off. Of course there should be prayer and faith and love and obedience to God in the home. It is the duty of parents to teach their children these saving principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, so that they will know why they are to be baptized and that they may be impressed in their hearts with a desire to continue to keep the commandments of God after they are baptized, that they may come back into his presence. Do you, my good brethren and sisters, want your families, your children; do you want to be sealed to your fathers and your mothers before you, do you want to have this family unit perfect when you, if you are permitted, shall enter the celestial kingdom of God? If so, then you must begin by teaching at the cradle-side. You are to teach by example as well as precept. You are to kneel with your children in prayer. You are to teach them, in all humility, of the mission of our Savior, Jesus Christ. You have to show them the way, and the father who shows his son the way will not say to him:

"Son, go to Sunday School, or go to Mutual, or go to the priesthood meeting," but he will say: "Come and go with me." He will teach by example.

Family prayer will be in the home. In the morning when the family arises for the day, the father will gather his family, kneel in prayer, and thank the Lord for his blessings. At night he will have them assemble again, and in the family unit they will kneel again to pray. And all these things will be taught in the home, because we want to have that home intact. We do not want it destroyed when we cross to the other side.

FAMILY ORGANIZATION IN THE HEREAFTER

I have a great deal of pity in my heart for the world, this so-called Christian world, professing to believe in the mission of Jesus Christ, and in sincerity, many of them, I am sure. They think they are on the right course; but they have been misled by false teachers into thinking that the family comes to an end at death, that husband and wife are separated eternally, and that there is no more claim for them upon their children. And that is true for them, according to their belief. That is the condition that will prevail in the terrestrial kingdom and in the telestial kingdom, because there will be no marriage there, and there will be no family order there. Do you want that? I say I feel sorry for these people that have been misled into these false notions in regard to the hereafter and the family organization.

Why do we go into the temples to be sealed, husbands and wives, and children to parents, and why are we commanded to have this work done, not only for ourselves, but also to be sealed to our fathers and mothers, and their fathers and mothers before them, back as far as we can go? Because we want to belong to that great family of God which is in heaven, and, so far as the Church is concerned, on earth. That is why.

Eventually, when this work is perfected, and Christ delivers up to his Father the keys and makes his report, and death is destroyed, then that great family from the days of Adam down, of all the righteous, those who have kept the commandments of God, will find that they are one family, the family of God, entitled to all the blessings that pertain to the exaltation.

RESPONSIBILITY TO TEACH CHILDREN

Are you teaching your children these truths, my brothers, my sisters? Are you training them so that when they are married they will want to go to the house of the Lord? Are you teaching them so that they will want to receive the great endowment which the Lord has in store for them? Have you impressed upon them the fact that they can be sealed as husbands and wives and have bestowed upon them every gift and every blessing that pertains to the celestial kingdom, and thus they shall become the sons and the daughters of God, and have you impressed upon them that great truth that if they are not married for time and eternity that they will come forth in the resurrection of the dead separately and singly, to be servants for those who belong to the family of God. Have you done that? Are you doing that?

Time will not permit me to say anything more, but I want to leave this impression with you, in continuation of our responsibilities as parents to each other and to our children, and as the Patriarch declared yesterday, if we will do these things, keep these commandments and live as we ought to, there will be no divorce in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Lord bless you, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Choir and congregation will now sing: "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go," after which we will hear from Elder Matthew Cowley, also of the Council of the Twelve.

As I announce that hymn, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," I can imagine there are many of the thousands of people in this congregation who have in mind a man who used to sing it so beautifully, who traveled all over the Church as a missionary of the Church, Elder Melvin J. Ballard. I always think of him when we sing this hymn.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn—"I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go."

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters, it is good to be back from wandering to and fro in the earth. I have long needed the inspiration of a general conference, and I have not been disappointed.

When we sustained this day, as the custodians of the kingdom, the men and women whose names were read, I was convinced within my heart that as long as men and women such as these are the custodians of the kingdom, the ordinances will never be changed, and the everlasting covenants will never be broken.

It is my privilege to serve as a missionary in some of the far-flung areas of the earth and in the islands of the sea. I am reminded of the last commission which the Master gave to his disciples and said unto them:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.
He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. (Mark 16:15.)

SIGNS TO FOLLOW BELIEVERS

And certain signs were to follow those who believed. Among those signs were these, that they should speak with new tongues, that they would lay their hands upon the sick, and they would be healed. About these two signs I would like to speak for just a moment while I visit with you.

On Friday evening I attended the reunion of the New Zealand missionary society, and as I stood before that group I could see more men who could speak the Maori language of New Zealand than there are among the million and a half white people residing in New Zealand who can speak the native language of their native people.

I attended the Tahitian missionary reunion, and I am sure that the same could be said of those men at that reunion. I believe there are here in this city more white men who can speak the Hawaiian language than there are in all the islands of Hawaii. I am sure that there are more white people here who speak the Samoan language than there are among the white residents of Samoa, and the same is true of the other islands of the Pacific.

Sunday, October 3

Third Day

They do speak with new languages, my brothers and sisters, when they accept the call to go into the world to preach the gospel to all creatures.

MISSIONARY LABORS IN NEW ZEALAND

I am reminded of President McKay's beautiful tribute to youth, the confidence he has in youth. I am personally grateful for the confidence this Church had in me in my extreme youth. I was just turning seventeen when I was called to go to New Zealand as a missionary. My first appointment there was to a little place called Judea, a wonderful place to go, for a young missionary. At the first meeting I attended in Judea, I could not understand the words that were being said, and after the meeting a sister who could speak English said to me: "Do you know what they said in there, and what they did?" I said: "I could not understand a word."

She said: "Well, you were called and sustained as the secretary of the Relief Society of the Judea Branch."

I made up my mind right there and then that the Relief Society was not going to take any liberty with my time as a missionary, without my knowing something about it; and so I determined to get the gift of the Maori language, even if I had to work for it, and I did have to work for it.

GIFT OF TONGUES

I studied eleven hours every day for several weeks. I read the Book of Mormon in Maori, and my studies were punctuated with fasting and with prayer; and on my twelfth Sunday I delivered my first sermon in the Maori language. They do speak with new tongues, those who accept the call to the ministry of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I have seen young missionaries in Samoa and in Tonga and in New Zealand and in Hawaii who, within six months' time, could deliver sermons in the languages of the people among whom they were laboring — young men and women who did not have much scholastic training before they were called into the mission fields, but these young men and women, placed in the hands of God, and molded like clay in the hands of the potter, received the gifts which they had been promised.

I had a shoemaker on one occasion down in New Zealand say to me. "Oh, you Mormon missionaries think you are smart. You come out here and learn to speak the Maori language in two or three years." He said: "I was only here six weeks, and I could say "Kaore au moriorio ki te korio Maori," which means absolutely nothing in the Maori language. What he was trying to say was that he did not know how to speak the Maori language, and he did not. I saw him three or four years later, and he was still trying to say he did not know how to speak the Maori language.

I have seen our young men in Hawaii, in the Central Pacific Mission, learn to teach the gospel in Japanese.

RESULTS OF ADMINISTRATION

Brothers and sisters, with the restoration of this gospel came the reiteration of Christ's commission: "... these signs shall follow them that believe." (D. & C. 84:65.) There is no question about it in my mind. "Lay your hands upon the sick, and they shall recover." (Ibid., 66:9.)

In Tonga last year there came to the mission home a couple who had been married for twenty-seven years, and they had never been blessed with children. This couple wanted to have children, and so they requested us to lay our hands upon them and bless them that they might have children. And so President Huntsman and I laid our hands upon that couple, and we blessed them. They had the gift of being healed. They had the gift of receiving these blessings.

When my wife and I visited Tonga, I think it was last May, the child had been born.

Last year I went from Tonga to Samoa. Another couple who had been married for years and had had no children came to the mission home there to be blessed that they might have this greatest of all blessings. And incidently, brothers and sisters, the greatest calamity that can come to the home of a Polynesian is not to have children. It is such a great calamity when they do not have children that they go out and borrow their neighbor's children and rear them.

Well, we blessed this young couple, and when my wife and I were there in May, they brought the child to me to be christened and blessed, and asked that it might be given the name of my wife.

A lady came to me in the mission home suffering from what the Samoans call mu mu — or elephantiasis — her legs swollen out of all proportion. She said: "Brother Cowley, bless me and remove from me this dread disease." A month ago in Samoa she came to the mission home and she said: "Do you remember me?" I said, "Yes, you are Sister Purcell who was suffering from mu mu when I was here before." She showed me her ankles, and they were entirely normal. Then she said: "Now, I want the cataracts to drop from my eyes. Bless me now that I may receive this blessing through the priesthood of God, from God who has all power to heal."

FAITH OF POLYNESIANS

Down in New Zealand during my last mission—and incidentally I have not reported my last mission to New Zealand when I was president there. I will wait six or seven years to do that and be in line with some of you other mission presidents. But I went to a place there one day. It was during the war years. A young man brought his child, an eight-month-old child to me, and he said: President Cowley, I want you to christen our baby." I said: "It looks like quite an old child to be blessed. Why have you not brought it before?"

"Oh," he said, "I just have not gotten around to it."

So I said, "All right, what is the name?" And he told me the name, and I was just about to bless the child and he said: "While you are giving it a name, please give it its vision. It was born blind."

Just like that—just as a matter of fact! "You have the authority to give this child a name and a blessing and you have the authority to give it its vision."

I was overwhelmed. I was doubtful, but I knew that within the being of that Polynesian there was the simple faith of a child, a faith not beclouded by psychology or any of the learning of men but a simple faith in God and the promises he had made through his Son Jesus Christ. I gave that child its name, and eventually I mustered up enough courage to bless it with its vision.

President Halversen knows the little boy. I saw it a few months ago. He is now six or seven years old, running all over the place, and he can see as well as I can see this day. "Lay your hands upon the sick, and they shall recover."

STORY OF PEARL SHELL DIVER

I would like to add a story or two here to those which have been related by Bishop Richards. Down in Tahiti where I have recently visited—and I could tell some stories about traveling on ships down there—our people down there have a seasonal occupation of pearl shell diving, and our men are the best pearl shell divers in the islands of French Oceania. Why are they the best divers? Because they keep the Word of Wisdom, and they can stay under the water longer than the others who do not. They stay under the water at a depth of ninety feet for upwards of two minutes and forty seconds. They dive to that depth and bring up the pearl shell which gives them part of their means of support for the remainder of the year until the next season approaches.

This one young Latter-day Saint placed his pearl shell on the shore in two piles, one was a large one and one a rather small one, and when the trader came around with whom he had the contract to sell his pearl shell the trader asked him about the small pile. He said: "Is that yours?" He said: "No, that is not mine."

The trader said: "Where did it come from?"

He said: "Oh, I dove for it."

"Well, why is it not yours?"

He said: "That is God's pearl shell."

"Who has the right to sell it?"

He said: "I can sell it."

"Well then, I will buy it."

"Yes, you may buy it, but not at the contract price. You will have to pay the market price for God's pearl shell"; because the market price had gone up since he had signed the contract.

And so he sold God's pearl shell at the market price and his own at the price for which he had contracted. And when I inquired what he would have done had the price gone down instead of up, he said: "I would not have segregated God's pearl shell. I would have left it with mine. I would always see to it that God gets the top price for his pearl shell."

How would you like to have a partner like that, brothers and sisters? When you men are dividing up your pearl shell what consideration do you give to the price which should be paid for God's pearl shell? I have a sneaking idea that if the price had changed as it did in that instance that some of us would have tried in some way to have obtained the market price rather than the contract price for our own.

HONESTY IN TITHE-PAYING

I had a little mother, and I still have her down in New Zealand. I knew her on my first mission when I was just a young boy. In those days she called me her son. When I went back to preside, she called me her father. I am fearfully and wonderfully made.

Now, on one occasion I called in as I always did when I visited that vicinity, to see this grand little woman, then in her eighties, and blind. She did not live in an organized branch, had no contact with the priesthood except as the missionaries visited there. We had no missionaries in those days. They were away at war.

I went in and greeted her in the Maori fashion. She was out in her back yard by her little fire. I reached forth my hand to shake hands with her, and I was going to rub noses with her and she said: "Do not shake hands with me, Father."

I said: "Oh, that is clean dirt on your hands. I am willing to shake hands with you. I am glad to. I want to."

She said: "Not yet." Then she got on her hands and knees and crawled over to her little house. At the corner of the house there was a spade. She lifted up that spade and crawled off in another direction, measuring the distance as she went. She finally arrived at a spot and started digging down into the soil with that spade. It finally struck something hard. She took out the soil with her hands and lifted out a fruit jar. She opened that fruit jar and reached down in it, took something out and handed it to me, and it turned out to be New Zealand money. In American money it would have been equivalent to one hundred dollars.

She said: "There is my tithing. Now I can shake hands with the priesthood of God."

I said: "You do not owe that much tithing."

She said: "I know it. I do not owe it now, but I am paying some in advance, for I do not know when the priesthood of God will get around this way again."

And then I leaned over and pressed my nose and forehead against hers, and the tears from my eyes ran down her cheeks, and as I left her, I asked God in my heart to bring down upon me a curse if from that day henceforth and forever I did not return to God his pearl shell, one-tenth of all that should ever come into my hands.

I love this work, my brothers and sisters. I thank God for my missionary companions. The traveling which I do is sometimes hazardous, but I love it; I feel the protection of the Almighty God.

DIVINE PROTECTION IN TRAVELS

We left New Zealand three or four weeks ago, and I was on one of those fine clippers of the air. Two hours out of New Zealand we struck a violent storm. The first thing I realized was that we had struck something. As a matter of fact, we had been struck by lightning. The lightning had penetrated the nose of the ship, and that lightning ball bounced around the plane. How it missed the propellers, I do not know. It destroyed one stabilizer on the plane. We continued on our way. I believe from that moment until we landed at Nandi, Fiji, God was the pilot of that plane, and I was his servant, praying that we might be landed safely at our destination.

I had no fear in my heart. I know that God looks after his own.

I was on a little ship in Tahiti, a little submarine chaser of about fifty tons, a converted submarine chaser. The way that thing acted I am sure it had not been converted; not properly so. Eight days I was on that submarine chaser, and there was never a calm moment. There were a hundred and ten live pigs on the deck space, and they were closed in by crates containing chickens. I think Tahiti is the only place in the world where roosters crow all night. And then just ahead in front of these porcine quadrupeds and the fowl, were thirty-eight seasick natives.

President Mitchell and I were in a tiny cabin. That ship tossed and rolled. We never had our clothes off for six days. I had to lie on my bunk and hang on to some pipes overhead to keep from being catapulted out into whatever space there was there, and I have never heard such a symphony in my life. I will never forget it. Pigs squealing, roosters crowing, sick natives retching, and me hanging on for dear life. But I was not seasick. Never have I been seasick or plane sick or car sick or train sick. I have been sick, but it has never been caused by vehicles of transportation.

GOD OPENS THE WAY

I left Tahiti in a freight ship. I was a member of the crew of that freight ship. It was the only way I could get on the ship. I had to go to the captain and ask him if he would take me on as a passenger, and he said: "No, we are not allowed to take passengers."

I said: "May I sign on as a member of the crew?"

He said: "I think that can be arranged."

And so I signed on as a member of the crew, and I went from there to New Zealand. I never did find out what my duties were on that ship as a member of the crew. I thought for a time that I might be the chaplain, but we crossed the international date line Saturday night, and when I woke up it was Monday, so Sunday was scratched right out, and I could not even perform my duties as a chaplain.

When we arrived at Samoa, I was called to the bridge of the ship. The captain said to me: "Do you know where Apia, Samoa, is?"

I said: "Yes, you are just passing it."

He had passed our port of destination so we turned back and went into Apia. From there, we went on to New Zealand, and before they started doing the heavy work of unloading the ship, I signed off as a member of the crew.

God opens up the way, brothers and sisters, for his servants to accomplish their work.

LOVE ALL PEOPLE

I see sitting before me now one or two of our good Japanese members from the Central Pacific Mission. Some of the finest Saints we have in this Church are our Japanese Saints. I think sixty-five percent of them pay a full tithing. Most of them keep the Word of Wisdom, and so our erstwhile enemies are indeed among our best Saints. As President Kirkham said, let us love all people.

I love the people of my missions with all my heart. I love my missionary companions. They are doing a great work. They are the servants of God. Way down in far-off Australia, that great commonwealth, over in New Zealand and back up into the Polynesian Islands, your sons and your daughters are those who have gone into the world in answer to the commission of our Lord and Savior.

God bless you all. I leave my testimony with you that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, and these are men of God, endowed with the power from on high to be the leaders of God's children in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. May we sustain them as such I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

You have just listened to Elder Matthew Cowley of the Quorum of the Twelve. I was not aware when Brother Cowley was called to preside over the missions of the South Seas that he could not be seasick. I think he is the only one of the Brethren, probably, who could have gone through what he went through and come back reporting as well as he has done.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

You have listened to Elder Matthew Cowley of the Quorum of the Twelve. I was not aware when Brother Cowley was called to preside over the missions of the South Seas that he couldn't be seasick. I think he is probably the only one of the brethren that could have gone through what he went through and come back reporting as well as he has.

We are nearing the close of a delightful conference, the end of the third day, and as I stand here for just a few moments, I crave an interest in your faith and prayers that I may be able to say something that will be helpful.

BLESSINGS OF CONFERENCE

I am sure if nothing more were said, this great congregation could go back to their homes and truthfully say, "We waited upon the Lord, and we were not disappointed." The influence in this house and in the adjoining properties where people are at worship at this hour is such that with all my heart I feel to express my gratitude to the Lord that he has heard and answered the prayers that have been offered and that he has fed us the bread of life.

This congregation is made up of members from many parts of the world. When conference adjourns, no doubt you will return to your homes. I would like to take this opportunity to caution you that if you are driving on the highways that you be as careful as possible, and if you are walking on the streets of Salt Lake City that you likewise be careful.

The Lord has blessed us thus far, and I trust that as we finish our conference and go to our various fields of labor, we may know that his preserving hand has been over us, and when we go to our homes, we may bow in thanksgiving and gratitude to him for his many blessings.

Do you realize, my brethren and sisters, that you are only a small speck in the great universe of the population of this world—so few in number that by comparison we are insignificant? However, you will find no other place in the world this day where there will be a congregation so large as this congregation, most of whom can testify that they know that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, and that we are his children. That is a marvelous blessing when we contemplate the predicament that many countries are in at the present time while here we are at peace; here we are enjoying the companionship of one another, different nationalities and the descendants of those nationalities meeting here as sons and daughters of the Living God. Surely not anything else that we can think of in the way of a blessing would take the place of the assurance we enjoy.

THE GIFT OF LANGUAGE

It has been my privilege to travel in many parts of the world. I, too, was down in New Zealand where Elder Cowley filled his first mission, and I witnessed the affection those people have for him. I remember one experience. Elder Cowley had not been there for twenty years, and yet the first meeting that we attended at their huitau, he talked fluently to the people in their own language. There was present an educated Irishman who was the secretary of the Princess Tepueeta. When the meeting was over, he took me off to one side and said:

"How do you account for this? That man hasn't been down here for all these years. I've been here for three years trying to learn this language, and he stands there and talks better than the natives talk in their own tongue."

The Lord does bless us, and I am glad to have Elder Cowley call attention to the fact that many of our missionaries need to acquire the languages of the natives in the countries where they are called to labor. The native people prefer to hear the gospel in their own tongue. I hope we will not neglect our opportunities to become proficient in speaking the languages of the peoples among whom we do missionary work. I hope we will give the Lord a chance to help us learn to speak the tongue of the people to whom we have been sent as servants of the living God.

BLESSING OF ETERNAL LIFE

If you were to take from the world today the membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants were wiped out, we would have a world without any hope of eternal life in the celestial kingdom. The people of the world wouldn't even know what it means. I don't say that disparagingly, but I am trying to say it so we will appreciate the blessings that the Lord has given to us. We not only have the Holy Bible, that great volume of scripture that the Lord has preserved all these centuries and handed down from generation to generation so that his children could know about him and his desires for us, but we also have these other great books. And yet the larger proportion of the population of this world do not now know the contents of the Bible. Most of those who have read it and are familiar more or less with its text do not know after all these years how to interpret it. The Lord has given to us the power to interpret it. He gave to the Prophet Joseph Smith the privilege of retranslating it, if I may use that term.

LATTER-DAY SCRIPTURES

I hold in my hand the American volume of scripture called the Book of Mormon, containing approximately five hundred pages translated from gold plates. We have all that the world has, the scripture that came from the old world, but we have the scripture of the new world which is the Book of Mormon added to that; and then, in addition, I hold in my hand another book of approximately three hundred pages containing the revelations of our Heavenly Father given in these latter-days. We also have the Pearl of Great Price containing other information that the Lord has revealed, including in it the Book of Abraham translated from papyri found buried with mummies in the catacombs of Egypt, and the Book of Moses, revealed by the power of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith. This also constitutes part of the scripture we possess. These latter scriptures assist the reader to understand the Holy Bible. There is the greatest library to be found in all the world. There isn't anything else like it. What does it contain? It contains what your Father and mine has thought of enough importance to preserve and give to the children of men and make accessible in many languages of the World. These scriptures are all important and should be understood by the Latter-day Saints. I am not going to ask you to hold up your hands to ascertain how many here assembled have ever read these books, but I desire to call your attention to the fact that these are precious truths, and they contain the revealed word of the Lord printed and published to the world for the purpose of preparing his children for a place in the celestial kingdom. That is why I say they are so valuable. Other books contain copies, extracts, from some of these books, but these are the originals as far as the Lord is concerned, and he has given them to us. How thankful we ought to be that we live in a day and age when we can read his advice and counsel and have things explained that otherwise might be obscure and uncertain to us.

IMPORTANCE OF REVEALED WORD OF GOD

I am not concerned whether or not you have the books of the great libraries of the world in your home, provided you do have these books. Think of the millions of volumes that there are in our own Congressional Library at Washington, in the British Library, and in the libraries of other countries, millions of volumes—and yet all that God has revealed and published to the children of men that is necessary to prepare them for a place in the celestial kingdom is contained within the covers of these sacred books. How many of us know what they contain? I frequently go into homes where I see all the latest magazines. I find the books that are advertised as best sellers on the bookshelves. If you were to throw them all away and retain only these sacred scriptures, you wouldn't lose what the Lord has caused to be written and made available for us all to enjoy. So, brethren and sisters, among our other blessings let us not forget that the Lord has made it possible for us to have, enjoy, and understand the scriptures and to have his word that has been given down through the ages for the salvation of his children.

Our missionaries are out in the world today trying to explain these things to the learned and other men of the world, and there are many learned men who have access to all of these books who do not believe in God, who do not know that we are living eternal lives, but have an idea that when we die that is the end of everything. Yet in the comparatively small organization known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, there are thousands of men and women and some children who know that we are the children of our Heavenly Father, that we are here and now living eternal lives, that the gospel, the power of God unto salvation to all those who will believe and obey, is on the earth.

Surely we ought to be grateful for our blessings. Brethren and sisters; keep this library where you can find it, and where your children will find it, and then have enough interest in the eternal salvation of those boys and girls that are in your home that you will find ways and means to interest them in what these books contain, that they may know how precious they are in the sight of their Heavenly Father.

ASSURANCE OF ETERNAL LIFE

We have been taught during this conference, among other things, the importance of family prayers, of asking a blessing upon the food, of the importance and sacredness of eternal wedlock. We have been taught the necessity and desirability of honoring the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and so I might go on through the advice and counsel that the Lord has given. Today we are seated in a house that the Lord provided for us that we might come together and consider all these blessings under the influence of his spirit. I fear sometimes that we pay little attention to the seriousness of this life, and that we take it too much for granted until it is too late. I remember being on a train one day with a man who was born and reared in the Church. We were returning from California, and I made myself known to him. As we visited, I talked to him about the gospel of Jesus Christ. He told me that his people were members of the Church, but he didn't understand anything about it. And he said as we discussed the principles of the gospel, "These things interest me." We visited quite a long time, and when we finished, that good man, I believe he was a good man, said to me, "I would give all that I possess to have the assurance that you have of eternal life." I said, "My brother, you don't have to give all that you possess to have that assurance. All you have to do is to search the scriptures prayerfully. Go where they may be explained to you. Seek the truth, and the beauty of the truth will appeal to you, and perhaps without much of an effort on your part, and I am sure without giving away all your property, you can know as I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the Living God, and that we are living eternal lives."

TEACHING OF GOSPEL PRINCIPLES

Don't let your children grow up without teaching them the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Don't wait to send them into the mission field to learn what the gospel means. I remember when I was in the South fifty-five or sixty years ago, a man who came from a large family said, "I don't know what to say. I don't know what to tell these people."

"Why," one of the brethren said, "teach them the Bible. Go and get your Bible and read Genesis." He said, "I don't know where Genesis is in the Bible," and yet he had gone from a Latter-day Saint community, and from a Latter-day Saint home to carry the message of life and salvation to those people in the South. However, it was not very long after that until his mind was changed. He had received a testimony of the truth through study and prayer, and he knew that the gospel was here, and he was able to stand on his feet and freely bear testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the truth.

Now, fathers and mothers, appreciate your children. Don't turn them over to somebody else to train and educate in regard to matters of eternal life. That is your privilege, and it is a privilege. Teach them to pray and walk uprightly before the Lord, and then in time of need they can go to him, and he will answer their prayers. It will be astonishing to you the great happiness that will come into your home that you theretofore have not enjoyed, if you will follow this counsel.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation in the celestial kingdom to all those who will believe and obey it. There are some who seem to have the idea that if they believe it and their names are on the records that is sufficient, but that isn't sufficient. Don't let them go on in that blind thoughtlessness. Reach out after those who are in the Church and those who are out of it, and seek in every way to share the blessings of the gospel of our Lord with them, his children. That is what we are expected to do. Freely we have received, and freely we should give. When we return to our various places of abode, let our homes from now on be sanctified by prayer and with gratitude and thanksgiving, so that those who come there might feel the influence and the Spirit of the Lord and be prepared to bear testimony of the truth of the gospel of our Lord.

NAME OF THE CHURCH

This is our Father's Church. He gave it its name. Only today a good sister handed me a paper, something that she herself had prepared. Among the things that were written there was her testimony of the true name of this Church, the Church of Jesus Christ. She wanted to know why we don't pay attention to what the Lord has said about its name. We sometimes call ourselves Mormons, not members of the Church of Jesus Christ, and she wanted to know why. "Why," she says, "the Lord has made it just as plain as can be what his Church should be called. He called it by the name of his Son, Jesus Christ." In another place he said that if it was the church of some other man it would bear his name, the name of the other man. She wrote it out in her own thoughtful, simple way. And so, brethren and sisters, when you go away from here, you may be associating with various denominations of the world, but remember that there is only one Church in all the world that by divine command bears the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. I am sure we will show our appreciation of that great and wonderful name by respecting it, and not be found calling ourselves Mormons as the world nicknames us. The name Mormon to many people in the world means anything but the gospel of Jesus Christ. In fact they do not know what it means. I congratulate you as members of the Church, that you belong to the Church of Jesus Christ; live in the age when his Church has been organized and has been given his name. If we are faithful and devoted to the end of our lives, when we go to the other side we will find we shall not belong to some other Church such as the Church of St. John or St. Peter or St. Paul or Mormon, or that of any of the Apostles or great men who have lived upon the earth, but we will find that we belong to the Church of the Son of God, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Let us remember that, and let us respect it, brethren and sisters, and not be careless about it.

PRAYER AND BLESSING

Now, in conclusion, I pray that the blessings of our Heavenly Father may be in our lives, in our hearts, and in our homes, that each of us may go from here with a renewed determination that we will be worthy of the great honor that has come to us of being members of this great organization, grateful for all of our blessings, and for this wonderful house we worship in, this great choir that sings for us and has sung so many years for the world, and grateful for the privilege of associating together in our wards and branches in the Church under the influence of the spirit of the Lord.

I pray that the love of the gospel of our Lord will burn in our souls and enrich our lives, that it will cause husbands to be kinder to wives, and wives to be kinder to husbands, parents to children, and children to parents because of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is a gospel of love and kindness. It will cause us, if we are living as we should, to love our neighbors as ourselves, and go out of our way, if possible, to help them understand better the purpose of life. These are some of our privileges.

Now, I pray that the blessings of the Lord may be with you, and as far as I have power and the authority of the priesthood I bless you, my brethren and sisters, that the power of the Lord may be and go with you, and that his peace and his love may abide with you, and that you will so live that you will be worthy of these blessings as long as you live upon the earth, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir will sing "The Hallelujah Chorus," and the closing prayer will be offered by President Newel P. Baker of the Burley Stake, Burley, Idaho, after which this Conference will adjourn.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

I want to take this opportunity to express appreciation and gratitude to these people who come and sing for us, and not only for us but who sing for the world, week after week and year after year. I am sure they are appreciated by millions of people not members of the Church.

Tonight at 7:00 o'clock in this building the Deseret Sunday School Union will hold its service. You are all invited to be present, and I am sure you will enjoy being here.

The choir will now sing, and we will draw our meeting to a close.

The Tabernacle Choir sang "The Hallelujah Chorus," after which President Newel P. Baker, President of the Burley Stake, offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, October 2, at 7:00.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

The men of the Tabernacle Choir furnished musical numbers for this session, Elder Spencer Cornwall conducting. Elder Alexander Schreiner was at the organ console.

The Choir and congregation joined in singing: "Do What Is Right."

President A. George Raymond of the Mount Logan Stake offered the opening prayer.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus sang: "A Poor Wayfaring Man of Grief."

President Smith:

I am sure there is a large number of members of the Aaronic Priesthood present tonight, and I feel to call the Presiding Bishop to come to the stand and say to them what may be in his heart. I realize that the Presiding Bishopric had their meeting last night with the bishops and others, but I see a good many members of the Aaronic Priesthood here and I am sure they would like to hear this fine Presiding Bishop of the Church, Bishop LeGrand Richards.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

Brethren, I need not tell you that this is a great surprise. I had my turn at conference and last night I had an opportunity to talk to the Bishops and the day before to the Relief Society, but there is no one I would rather talk to than the boys of the Aaronic Priesthood, if there were not so many of the dads here and so many of the brethren sitting here on the stand. But I do appreciate the privilege of being here and being invited to say a few words in this Priesthood meeting for I cannot help but feel that if every man and every boy who is honored of the Lord to bear the Holy Priesthood could just realize the responsibility resting upon his shoulders in that respect, it would be marvelous thing.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD"

I would like to preface what I say tonight by reading a few words from the 5th chapter of St. Matthew and I will commence with the 13th verse, for the Lord said:

Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

I cannot think of anyone in the Church who has a greater responsibility to let his light so shine before men that they seeing his good works may glorify our Father in Heaven than the brethren who hold the priesthood, both the Melchizedek and the Aaronic.

It was Peter of old, who in addressing the Saints of his day, made this declaration:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.

A ROYAL PRIESTHOOD

Now, brethren, we are just as much a royal priesthood today as the priesthood was in the days of Peter. The Lord has called us out of the world that we might show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light and there is not a day of our lives, that we do not have an opportunity to show forth his praises because the world looks upon us, they expect more of us than from those who are not members of our Church, and we can hardly stoop to do the things that others do. To illustrate what I mean along this line: When I was attending a conference in San Diego during the war we had about 35 boys in uniform present. We called some of them to speak and one lieutenant made a statement something like this. He said: "When I first entered the service I went back East to attend an officers' training school" and he said, "one day when we were sitting in the reception room, the boys started telling dirty stories, and when my turn came I told one too. That night when I went to go to bed my companion, not a member of the Church, turned to me and said 'I didn't think you would do it.'" He kept that in his heart all day long since he had heard that companion of his tell the dirty story because he knew that he was a Mormon boy and no doubt this lieutenant had already told him something about the Church, therefore, he did not think he would do it; and that lieutenant as he stood there in that stake conference said "That was the best sermon I have listened to for many a day and it just keeps ringing in my ears until the present, 'I did not think you would do it' and I'll tell you, I have not done it since that time."

EXEMPLARY SERVICEMAN

Illustrating another case. We have heard so many lovely things about our boys who have been away in the service and returned to us that have not hid their light under a bushel. The Lord has called us out of the world to be a light unto the world and in all man's sight we cannot afford to let our light go out. I received a letter, it was published in the Church Section of the Deseret News, so you may have read it, from a missionary in California. He said he and his wife were laboring in this particular town and he said the attitude of the people had literally changed toward the Mormons because there had been so many Mormon boys there in uniform and they had lived such fine lives they had attracted the attention of the people. Then he gave one specific illustration. He said one of the ladies clubs in the town was giving a luncheon at the hotel and the hostess had an extra plate placed at the table and when the guests came she said we will invite the first soldier who comes along to occupy this extra place at the table. It happened to be a Mormon boy, and thank the Lord he was a good one; the Lord had called him out of the world to be a light unto the world and he did not hide his light under a bushel, and when the women passed the coffee around he would not touch it. I do not think he thought of the harm a cup of coffee would do his body, just one cup, the bishop wasn't there to see what he was going to do, whether he took it or not, his mother and father were not there to see whether he would turn it away; neither was his best girl, but he knew that the all-seeing eye of God was upon him, he knew he bore the priesthood of God, he knew the Lord looked to him as the salt of the earth and if the salt has lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted, and he would not touch it. They offered him tea and he would not touch tea. They asked him where he was raised, and finally when they were through eating they passed the cigarettes around, imagine women doing this—shame on the women—but this boy would not touch the cigarettes, and one of these women said, "I resolved that if ever a Mormon elder called at my door I would let him in, I would like to know more about a people that could raise a boy like that young man who sat at our table." And when that letter was written that very woman was a very earnest investigator of the Church.

I told that story in the Assembly Hall sometime back and at the close of the meeting a young man walked up to me and said, "Bishop, I am that young man." I said, "No kidding?" He said, "No sir, I am that young man." I would not be surprised if he's in this audience tonight. I said, "Is the story correct?" He said, "Just exactly." I said, "What are you doing in the Church now?"

"Why, I'm bishop of such-and-such ward."

That is the kind of men the Lord wants to do his work among the people, not the kind that go with the crowd and do what the crowd does, but the kind that have the courage to let their light shine before men, because the Lord has called us out of the world to be a light unto the world.

REPUTATION FOR HONESTY

I would like to say a word that comes out of my experience at a conference last week. I met a new convert to the Church. He had served in a branch presidency in the East before coming West, and I said, "How are you enjoying living among us?" He said, "Very much, but I have been disappointed." I said, "Why?" He said, "I have found that some of the brethren are not very careful what kind of financial deals they make and how well they treat friends that come within their midst." That made me feel bad because "ye are the salt of the earth and if the salt hath lost its savour, wherewith shall the earth be salted?" Imagine how I felt to get that report as compared with the one I received down in Miami when I was president of the Southern States Mission. I was invited into the home of one of our brethren who stood high in financial and social circles. He said, "If you will stay over night I will invite my friends into my home and let you tell them why I am a member of the Church." Of course, I could not run away from an opportunity like that; so when the crowd was gathered, about 35 prominent business people of Miami, he stood up and said, "You all know I am a Mormon, but," he said, "you don't know why I am a Mormon. I have invited President Richards tonight to tell you why I am a Mormon and I want to tell you that my membership in the Mormon Church means more to me than anything else."

At the close of the meeting a man came up by the name of Knowlton and said, "My first experience with the Mormons was when I went out to Arizona. There," he said, "I worked in an implement house, a cash store that never gave time on anything. One day a man came in and wanted $200 credit for about 60 days, and I said, 'No, we don't do any credit business' and the man said, 'would you mind asking the boss?' So I went to the owner of the store and the owner said, 'Who is this man?' When I gave him the name, 'Oh,' he said, 'he is a Mormon bishop, let him have anything he wants,' and he gave him the credit." He said: "After that whenever a Mormon came into the store and wanted anything I did not even bother the boss about it."

Wouldn't it be marvelous if every Latter-day Saint could be trusted like that?

You've heard President Grant's story about how the Consolidated Wagon & Machine Co. used to sell the paper of the Mormon farmers to a non-Mormon banker here in Salt Lake at 100 cents on the dollar because the farmers never defaulted, but somehow or other, there are those among us who think that if they can do a shrewd thing and outwit their neighbors and their friends with whom they do business, that it is good business, and they classify it as business. I want to tell you one more story:

THE EFFECT OF CONVERSION

When I was president of the Southern States Mission I was crossing the state of Florida one day with one of our brethren who went there from the West, a grand character. He said, "Brother Richards, there is a new convert living over here. He would be thrilled if we would visit him." I said, "Let us call on him." And we did. This was his story:

He said, "I used to be a fruit merchant in these parts. I bought up the entire product of these fruit farmers and sold it on the New York fruit market." He said, "When I heard of Mormonism and met the elders I joined the Church and began to think of all the shrewd deals I had made as a fruit merchant." He said, "One day I left my home and took my check book in my pocket, and when I returned" he said, "I had spent $3,000 just among my neighbors and friends, to try to even up some of the shrewd deals I had made."

He said, "I felt like I could then look my neighbors in the face and tell them that I was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints."

"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people that ye should show forth the praise of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light," and may your light never go out in the presence of your fellowmen no matter where you go, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

While listening to Bishop Richards I was reminded of an incident in the life of Superintendent Nelson, formerly Utah State Superintendent of Public Instruction. During the latter part of his life he was sorely afflicted, and went back East to have performed a very difficult, indeed dangerous, operation. His affliction was so serious that doctors hesitated about operating on him. While considering the matter they asked him several questions relating to his private life. They inquired whether he was addicted to the use of tobacco. He answered: "No." Whether he indulged in intoxicants. He said: "No." Then they touched more vitally upon his life and asked him whether he had had any venereal disease. Superintendent Nelson said, "Why no, doctor, I am a Mormon."

"Well," said the doctor, "what the h—— does that matter?"

"Well, that means that we do not indulge in these things. It means that I never have used tobacco, that I never have indulged in whiskey, and that I have lived a virtuous life and have known only one woman and she is my wife."

The doctor was surprised. He used the word astonished and said: "If you have lived that kind of life we are going to operate on you."

They did so, and Superintendent Nelson returned home and continued his service here as State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Tonight President Raymond, in his opening prayer, expressed two very important thoughts. One was an invocation that God would enable us to appreciate our responsibilities; and the other, an appeal that we may set proper examples, "that we might be a light to others." I hope the Lord will answer that invocation, and that we as men who hold the priesthood may realize its value.

THE VALUE OF THE PRIESTHOOD

I have told you before of a little incident that happened in front of the Japanese Emperor's palace in Tokyo. Three or four of us, Mormon missionaries, were there, and with us a Japanese convert, a carver of ivory, wearing the cloak of the ordinary working man.

As we stood there, I noticed the obeisance this Japanese, though a member of the Church, paid the grounds and particularly the palace. I turned to him and said: "Do you know, Brother Watanabe, that you have something which is of more value than all the wealth you are looking at, and something which the Emperor cannot have unless he follows the same road that you have followed?"

The man looked up in surprise to think that he, a humble carver, would have something which was of more value than the Emperor's palace or all his possessions. And through the interpreter, Brother Stimpson, he said: "What is it?"

"Why," I said, "it is the priesthood of Almighty. You are an Elder in the Church of Christ and that is of more worth to you than all the wealth you are now looking at."

I pray that we may so sense the value of the priesthood, and that every deacon in this Church will realize that when he is given the Aaronic Priesthood he is set apart among his fellows, that he is different from others. He cannot with impunity swear as other boys may swear, he cannot participate in pranks in the neighborhood as other boys may participate, he stands apart. That is what it means to a twelve year old boy, and, bishops, that is just what you should explain to them when you choose them to be deacons. Do not just call them up and ordain them, but have a talk with them and let them realize what it means to be given the Aaronic Priesthood. In the boyhood area these boys so chosen and instructed should exert an influence for good.

OBLIGATION TO SET WORTHY EXAMPLES

The second part was example. It is our obligation when we accept the priesthood to set an example worthy of imitation by our fellows. It is not what we say that will influence them. It is what we do. It is what we are. One reputed to be the wisest American said: "What you are thunders so loud in my ears I cannot hear what you say," referring to the radiation of character from each of us.

As I have sat here, thrilled with this inspiring audience, and "thrilled" is the word, my mind wandered out to as many more in our wards, stakes, who never come here, and many who do not care to come. It is our duty to reach them, kindly, as neighbors, officially, as ward teachers, officially, as members of quorums and officers in quorums. That is our obligation.

REOPENING OF JAPANESE MISSION

But that is not the message which I have for you tonight. In giving it I am not going to occupy much time. I have just a few words to say regarding our missionary work. And may I report for your information and satisfaction, I am sure, that recently five native Japanese missionaries left Honolulu, properly set apart to go back to Japan and preach the gospel in their native tongue. We have come some distance, have we not, since that Japanese mission was opened? And in addition to the elders, two Japanese sisters have accepted their calls and are going over there to help President Clissold in that great work.

Let me say in passing that Brother Watanabe remained true all through the time that the Church was absent from there and he died holding his priesthood; and his daughter, I believe is over there now, active in the Church.

"GO YE THEREFORE AND TEACH ALL NATIONS"

You will be pleased to hear also that we recently received a cable from President Stover in Germany that we may have a few missionaries now in East Germany. The way is opening up in all the world and now, as perhaps never before, those who hold the priesthood may fulfill the injunction given by the Savior to his Twelve when he said: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

It is most inspiring to see how eagerly our young men and young women are seeking the opportunity to fulfill that injunction, but brethren, in missionary work the power of example is most important. It is a glorious thing for a young man to be sent into the mission field. It is a great opportunity for him. At the dinner table today friends commented upon the number of our missionaries in different parts of the world. What a culture they bring into our community! One guest had two sons in Germany. He mentioned another in France, and another in one of the missions in the United States. Another guest mentioned two in Norway, one in France, one in Argentine, and so they are in different parts of the world.

WORTHINESS OF MISSIONARIES

What a wonderful thing it is; but, brethren, missionaries are called not for individual blessings. They are called to preach the gospel, to represent the Church. The blessings come inevitably as they do their duty, and it is most unfortunate if a young man leaves your ward to represent the Church who does so unworthily. It injures him, breaks his parents' hearts, reflects upon the ward, and it might blight some souls who otherwise would come into the Church.

And so, I am asked tonight to plead with you bishops and presidents of the stakes to be more careful in your inquiries into the worthiness of the missionaries whom you recommend. Will you, before calling them or interviewing them, just look over the missionary recommendation which you are going to sign? Do not just put it in the hand of the missionary and let him fill the blanks, but you note the significance of these questions. If he is married, please inquire into the condition of his family. Is he divorced or is she divorced? Please state why and see whether or not he or she is worthy to go out and preach the sacredness of the marriage covenant and the ideals of the Church in regard to homebuilding.

STANDARDS OF MORALITY

Under morality, answer sincerely before you put this in the hands of the member of the Council of the Twelve. Are you satisfied, after thorough investigation, that he or she conforms to Church standards, aye, in chastity. The world has difficulty in believing that young men in our Church grow to manhood as chaste and pure as virgins. I have had them say they did not believe it; they did not believe that any young men could do that. But I tell them such is the fact, and that it is the standard of the Church for young men as well as for young women to keep themselves unspotted from the world. In the Church there is but the single standard of morality and that applies to young men as well as to young women. See to it that prospective missionaries realize what this means, no matter what false teaching they have had in psychology or in other classes about "inhibitions" and so on. The standard of the Church is right; it is divine; it contributes to manhood and virtuous womanhood, happy homes, perpetuity of the nation.

Are you satisfied through investigation that he or she conforms to the Church in the observance of the Word of Wisdom? And note this, in integrity. Is there anybody in the ward who will say: "Well, he has cheated me. He is not worthy. If that is the kind of men they have to send out, well then, I am done with the Church."

These pointed questions are put in the recommend purposely, and they mean something, because those who go out to represent the Church are chosen. They are set apart. They are leaders. They are teachers. They are ambassadors of truth. Please, when you bring these young men and young women to the members of the Council of the Twelve and place in the hands of the Council of the Twelve this written recommendation with your signature, be sure that you have made a thorough investigation, because it is embarrassing, very embarrassing, to the young man to be rejected as a representative.

SELECTIVE SERVICE REQUIREMENTS

Another point. From questions received in person and in writing it is evident that there are some problems in the minds of bishops and the stake presidents as to whom they should recommend for missionary service in the light of the recent selective service. In answer to these inquiries we offer the following suggestions, without going into many details. Young men may continue to be recommended for missionary service as follows:

Those who have reached the age of twenty years, or approximately that age, or, young men under twenty years of age who have had either previous military service or two years of college.

If a young man receives his notice of induction from the selective service before he enters the missionary home, the Church will excuse him from missionary service. In other words, if the young man receives his call in November to enter the missionary home, let us say, in the following May, if he will register in his regular vocation as a mechanic, a student, a farmer, or whatever it may be, and if, during that interim, between the time of his call and his entrance into the home, he is selected in the draft, he is to respond. If, however, he enters the missionary home before he is drafted his status changes. He is then recognized as being an ordained minister and the government will excuse him. He will be deferred by the Selective board for military service for the duration of the term he is to serve as an ordained minister. Following his release, I believe it is within five days after he is home, he is to report to his local draft board.

For the present bishops and presidents of stakes will govern themselves accordingly.

REQUIREMENTS FOR YOUNG WOMEN MISSIONARIES

The age of young women is set at twenty-three. Young women under twenty-three years of age, preferably twenty-one, who are engaged to young men who are in the field, may be considered as prospective missionaries, provided they can go and serve a regular term mission and be home in time to meet their sweethearts. Some requests are made that they may go out and spend a few months, some a year. Now, it is evident, if you give that a thought, this cannot be done for the good of the service. Presidents of missions will make certain appointments, assignments. Those assignments will be broken up and it is not advantageous to send young missionaries out for less than the regular term missions.

Brethren, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." We are heeding that call.

God bless the young men and the young women who are responding, and God bless the parents, the fathers and mothers, who in pride are sacrificing where necessary to pay the expenses of these choice young men and women.

That the blessings of the Lord may continue to be poured out upon the priesthood of this Church, that we may in every way be honorable representatives of the Master, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus then sang "The Holy City," after which the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir and the congregation sang the hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.First Counselor in the First Presidency*

This is an awe-inspiring view, this great body of priesthood again. As we sing in unison I can picture in my mind the scene before Jericho, when the priesthood of Aaron marched around the walls and blew the trumpets and the walls fell. God was with Israel and his priesthood.

CRUSADE OF PETER THE HERMIT

That incident reminds me that during the great crusade into the Holy Land, known as the Crusade of Peter the Hermit, when the crusaders finally reached the walls of Jerusalem, they tried to repeat the miracle of Jericho but failed. The crusaders had gone to the Holy Land with a plenary indulgence from the Pope of Rome, which promised every man who went into this crusade forgiveness, as it was popularly understood, for all the crimes he ever had committed and all that he ever might commit. Their criminal excesses astounded even the infidels.

The next day or two after the trial for the miracle, the walls of Jerusalem were stormed and the crusaders entered. The accounts say that as they went up those narrow streets toward Mount Zion, the blood running down from the men, women, and children who had been massacred, was up to the horses knees. As the crusaders pushed into the city they took children by the heels and dashed out their brains against the walls. Some who were particularly dexterous, took children by the heels and tried to throw them over the walls.

Godfrey, the head of the crusaders, went into the temple and got down on his knees and thanked God for this day of achievement, and the representative of the Pope, the papal legate, was heard in the streets thanking God for what had happened. But God refused to give the priesthoodless Crusaders the approval he gave to Joshua and his priesthood in the ancient day at Jericho.

PRIESTHOOD AN EVERLASTING ENDOWMENT

This body of priesthood here to-night holds the priesthood of the Son of God; it is a holy priesthood.

We have had much said about the priesthood today and I endorse all of it. Brother Benson talked about it at length this afternoon. Bishop Richards referred to it tonight; President McKay also spoke of it. And I hope they will excuse me if I carry the matter just a little farther.

The priesthood is an everlasting endowment. Some, at least, who have come to the earth had it before they came here. The Prophet Joseph said: "Every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of Heaven before the world was. I suppose," says he, "I was ordained to this very office in that Grand Council." The priesthood of God is from everlasting to everlasting, and the thought that I would like to leave with you will be suggested by a number of semi-questions I shall ask.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS

Do you know of any way in which you can lay your priesthood aside? Do you suppose that after you get through with this conference you can go home and lay it off like a suit and go forward with your avocations without the priesthood? Do you suppose that you can lay your priesthood aside if you should wish to do a dishonest thing, and then pick it up again afterwards and put it on and go on as if nothing had happened? Can you lay your priesthood aside while you go into a saloon and take a drink, or when you take a smoke? Can you lay your priesthood aside if you begin an immoral act? Can you lay your priesthood aside if you undertake any crime or any transgression?

And to the young men who are here I would like particularly to ask them, do you think you can lay your priesthood aside if you shall undertake to make immoral advances to some girl that you had taken out, or could you lay it aside while you committed, completed the immoral act? The priesthood you hold is with you every second of your lives until it is taken from you.

But how about honoring it and how about so living that when you have occasion to use its powers they are at your command.

If a man had given you a commission to do something which required that you walk down the straight and narrow path, do you think you would be honoring that commission if you were to go off on detours, do things that you ought not to do outside of and contrary to your commission?

OBLIGATION TO HONOR PRIESTHOOD

Those of us who have been in the temple of course know of the obligations we take there. But there are obligations which are taken by every man who bears the priesthood, from the office of deacon up. Do not dishonor your priesthood, brethren, and do not any of you let your life so shape itself that you will lose the powers which the priesthood gives.

I return again to the theme that I have always mentioned in these priesthood meetings since I came into the Council, to the question of unity. Brethren, if we could act as united and in unison as we can sing and have sung in unison, there is no power that could withstand anything that we sought to do in righteousness.

May God give us the strength and the power and the will and the desire to honor our priesthood, to remember that we cannot lay it aside as a cloak; it is always with us to be dishonored and disgraced if we shall so act. May he give to us the will and the determination always so to honor our priesthood, that we may be indeed the agents of our Heavenly Father, to perform his will,—to the end that ultimately righteousness may rule the earth, as it will ultimately through the priesthood, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I wonder sometimes if as fathers we take pains to explain to our boys the seriousness of the obligation assumed when a boy becomes a deacon. I wonder if when the boy is ordained a deacon the father lets him feel that he has something now that is eternally important.

CONTRASTING WARD SITUATIONS

I remember hearing upon one occasion of two wards, side by side, with about an equal population. One of the bishops made it a point to visit the homes of the members of his flock when a child was born, and when the time came for it to be blessed in the fast meeting he was on hand to encourage the parents that their child might receive a blessing. As the children grew a little older he taught both the girls and the boys that there would be a blessing come to them if they would go to Primary and to Sunday School.

He made them want to be baptized when they were eight years of age, both the boys and the girls. When the boys were nearly old enough to be ordained deacons he had talked with them and made them feel that they could be ordained deacons. He was another father. He followed all those families through life and it was said of the ward that every boy and every girl were married in the temple and many of them went on missions.

The ward that adjoined this one had another kind of bishop. He was busy. He did not have time to follow up. He let his counselors do that. It was proper that his counselors should do part of it but the difference was noted by the stake presidency, that in the one ward all of the young people, almost without exception, were faithful, took advantage of their opportunities, were prepared and taught beforehand the importance of what they were to receive, while in the other ward if the parents did not teach the children they were not taught except in a mediocre way, and the result was that the majority of those young people grew up, not particularly interested in the church.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF A BISHOP

Now, I mention this because a father of a ward, a bishop, has a great responsibility. I do not mean that the father of the child and the mother of the child do not have a responsibility. It is their duty and their responsibility, but what a wonderful addition to the life of these young people when they feel that the bishop recognizes them on the street, goes out of his way to encourage them to do what they ought to do. There is not anything that the children will not do for a bishop of that kind.

I remember, as if it were yesterday, when John Tingey placed his hands on my head and ordained me a deacon. I had the matter so presented to me and the importance of it, that I felt it was a great honor. The result was, it was a blessing to me, and then after awhile other ordinations came to me. But in each case the foundation was laid in my mind that here was an opportunity for another blessing, and I want to suggest to you fathers who are here tonight, there is no time that you can spend, no way in which you can utilize your time that will be of greater advantage than training your boys and your girls to be worthy of the blessings of our Heavenly Father.

FAILURE OF PARENTS

Only a few weeks ago a good woman came into my office, a daughter of one of the most prominent men that ever has been in the church. She said: "I cannot understand why my children do not have any interest in the church." She continued, "I have talked to them and explained to them what they ought to do."

I went back in my mind, and I was not unkind enough to say to her, "What did you do with them when they were younger?" I did not read to her that scripture, Section 68 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which says:

"Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes, which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents."

I do not know all the facts in regard to that family but I do know that they spent considerable of their time unmindful of their growing children, and I am wondering if by now, (the father is gone and the mother is still living), I am wondering now if she looked back and took into account what the father and mother did if it would not explain why these children now do not have much faith.

And so, brethren, as fathers, as brothers, as associates, as neighbors, why not lay up treasures in heaven by going out of our way and encouraging these young people to do what the Lord would have them do, so that as they grow up it will be natural for them to do the things that our Heavenly Father would like them to do.

HISTORY OF JERUSALEM

Reference has been made tonight to Jerusalem. I think the story of Jerusalem is one of the most pathetic of all the stories we hear. A city that had every advantage; a city that had within its walls those that the Lord himself claimed. They were his children and he still claims them. But a city that was so selfish, and the leadership of which was so careless, that the population of the city grew up in wickedness, not one group, but generation after generation, and the city was destroyed repeatedly although the Lord did everything he could by means of his prophets to train them that they could have been preserved.

There was one time when they were preserved. It showed how the power of the Lord could be made manifest. The city was surrounded and the plans were being made, and the Army outside made its threat, but a prophet went to the Lord and said, "These people need your help. They are repentant and will you not help them. They are helpless. They are surrounded by their enemy," and the next morning when daylight came a very large portion of the army outside was dead. The power of the Lord had been made manifest in that case and the city was preserved.

It is marvelous what the Lord has done in that regard, but I am thinking of Jerusalem today. After all these years and experience after experience, it is a battleground, and one of the most undesirable places to be living that you can think of in all the world. But there will come a change. Repentance will come and when that repentance comes and is accepted by the Lord, Jerusalem will be redeemed.

It was redeemed once, you will remember, after being in bondage seventy years. The Lord had told the prophet Jeremiah that Jerusalem would be destroyed and its people would be in bondage seventy years.

FREEDOM FROM BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY

One hundred years before Cyrus, the general who captured Babylon, was born, the Lord revealed to the Prophet Isaiah that Cyrus should be his servant and say unto Jerusalem that it should be rebuilt. Babylon at that time was the greatest city in all the world, and was thought to be impregnable. Cyrus was not a Jew. Cyrus did not understand the old Testament, nor did he know of the part he was to play in the freeing of the captive Jews and rebuilding Jerusalem.

While Cyrus was besieging the city of Babylon the great king, Belshazzar of Babylon and his associates were using the sacred vessels that had been taken from the house of the Lord in Jerusalem to drink from. It was a great debauch, and suddenly in the midst of it was seen a hand writing on the wall these words, "Me-ne, Me-ne, Tekel, U-phar-sin," and they could not read it.

The Queen said to the King, "There is a Hebrew prophet among us. He can tell you what it means."

And so they went out and brought Daniel in and when Daniel saw the handwriting on the wall he could read it. It was not difficult for him. He was the servant of the Lord. He had the priesthood and he had honored it in a most marvelous way all down through his life.

The king and others felt perfectly secure, feeling that with food and provisions, and a river of water running through the city, not anything could come in to disturb them, and yet on that wall were written the words which, when interpreted, read, "You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting, and your kingdom will be divided among the Medes and the Persians." At that very hour "my servant Cyrus" had diverted the river that went through the city from its channel and his army entered under the wall, which wall was so high that it could not be scaled or destroyed with any means or weapons that they had, and so wide that several chariots could ride abreast on the top.

When that gentile, if we may use that term, that alien to those that had had the priesthood and the blessings of the Lord, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, realized that the Lord had given him Babylon, he issued a proclamation freeing the Jewish captives and returning them to rebuild their city of Jerusalem. He not only took his own army and his own people but he gave them means to use in payment to the workers.

PRESENT CONDITION OF JEWS

I mention this because of the predicament Jerusalem is in tonight. Think of the condition the Jews find themselves in, wherever they are in all the world. I want to say to you that some of the best people that have ever lived were the Hebrew race and they were examples in many instances but they, in some cases, lost their faith and turned away. I want to say that some of the best men and women that we have had in Salt Lake City were Jews. I hope that the Latter-day Saints will not forget, will not fall into the habit that people have who hate the Jews because of their prosperity, and sometimes hate them for other reasons; that they will not fall into the habit of condemning a nation, condemning all those people, without remembering a circumstance that happened in the British Parliament.

DISRAELI'S ANSWER

There was an argument going on between a great Hebrew, Benjamin Disraeli, who was the Prime Minister of England, and a man who was a noted arguer in the House of Lords, and when he could no longer answer the Jew, then he began to taunt him with being a Jew. He said: "Yes, you are only a Jew anyhow."

And then Disraeli arose and said: "This man has taunted me with being a Jew. I am a Jew and I am proud of it. And when the forebears of this man were fighting like wild beasts for their mates, my people were laying the foundation for the literature of the world." That was his answer.

And then one more, and I hope we will all remember it. "When this man and those he loves bow in prayer, everything they ask for, they ask for in the name of Jesus Christ, a Jew."

I am stressing that tonight, although I did not expect to when I got on my feet because of the hatred that sometimes grows in men's hearts and we fail to see the virtues of others. Brethren, in the midst of these political campaigns such as we are having now, for goodness' sake do not stoop to criticising and finding fault unfairly and unjustly with those who do not believe the same as you do in politics. Let us be real Latter-day Saints,—not make believes—and see the virtues of the others. There is virtue in both camps.

Think of Jerusalem, tonight. Think of the predicament of that great people who have maintained their integrity as a nation, as individuals, as a race, as few others in the world have done. It has been marvelous to me, but see how pitiable their situation is now, and if all the people of the world were righteous and they were in transgression, there would be hope for them because our Heavenly Father has insisted, in his advice and counsel to the world, that "Jerusalem shall be redeemed."

BLESSINGS PREDICATED ON RIGHTEOUSNESS

We do not have to go so far away. What about America? I was in a meeting, not very long ago, where a group of Boy Scouts stood and sang, "God Bless America," and they sang it beautifully, and all the time they were singing I asked myself the question, "How can he bless America until America repents?" Every great blessing that we desire is promised us by our Heavenly Father on condition that we honor him and keep his commandments. Praying is not sufficient. Not only must we pray but we must live to be worthy of the blessing.

In the midst of the upheavals of the world—I almost hesitate to open the newspaper and see the headlines of all the articles because so many of them are in large type and so often they indicate that the danger of another war confronts us.

Brethren, why did the Lord gather us out from the nations of the earth. Why did he not leave us in all the other lands. Why did he call our forebears to leave the comforts of home and the opportunities and blessings of civilization, such as it was, to come way out here into the tops of these everlasting hills, to settle these sterile desert plains, in many cases. Why? He knew what we needed. He knew that his people would have to keep his commandments if they were to endure, and like the time when the crickets came and were about to devour the crops, and starvation stared our people in the face, there were those among them who knew there was a way out. They did not know what it was, but then they began to pray. They had done everything else to destroy the pests, but when they began to pray there came into the western sky big flocks of seagulls, and they came in and began to devour the crickets.

Do you suppose that would have happened if those people had been wicked, if they had been immoral, if they had been drunken, if they had been violators of the commandments of God? I cannot believe it would have occurred, but I believe that among those people were some of the finest men and women that have ever lived upon the earth, and for that reason the Lord preserved their crops.

FAITH REWARDED IN BEAR RIVER

Then there was a circumstance up here on the Bear River. For ten years the frost had taken their crops every year. People had to go out of the valley for their breadstuffs. They could raise hay and cattle but they could not mature their food crops. And the President of the Church and his brethren went up there to hold conference. And when they were coming, O how the people prayed that the President of the Church, the prophet of the Lord, would rebuke the curse that seemed to be upon that land, that they might raise their harvest.

There may be quite a number of people from that stake here tonight because there are a lot of fine people who live there now.

And their conference was held—two days of conference. And the brethren had all talked. Not a word was said about their distress; not anything was said to them to encourage them that conditions would be better. The benediction was pronounced and the people were going out, and all at once the President stood up and he said: "Call the people back. I have something to say to them."

They came back and took their seats, and he said: "Now, you people have been faithful. You have not run away from here. You stayed. You have tilled the ground. You have done your best and every year you have lost your harvest of grain. The Lord knows what you need, and I can say to you that from this time forth you shall raise your crop."

Imagine after ten years, but they have raised a crop in that valley ever since.

These things are not accidents, my brethren. The authority of the priesthood, properly exercised, brings to our minds the fact that we are not very far from the Lord and he is all-powerful and he is all-merciful. If we repent of our foolishness and turn to him, he will hear and answer our prayers.

Brethren, bishops, I was sorry that I could not be with you last night. Bishop Richards, I think I owe an apology right from the stand here. I went home last night after the meeting and went to bed just as soon as I could get there after the afternoon meeting, because I wanted to come down to your meeting. But when the time came to dress and come down, I got up and I was so weak I did not dare to come. I did not dress. I went back to bed, and I missed your fine meeting. But I wanted to be there and I am sure you had a happy time.

OFFICE OF A BISHOP

I want to say this to the bishops. There is no position in the Church that will bring a greater blessing to any man than the office of a bishop, if he will honor that office and be a real father to the flock over whom he is called to preside. Do not forget that. He can go into the home, not to scold and find fault and criticize, but he can go like a loving grandfather, if I may use that term, and the family will pay attention, if he is wise, and he can gather them around him. And if he can only get his ward teachers to help him, there could be a great change in some of the wards of this church.

I am pleading with you, my brethren. Do not be satisfied with just going to the door and saying: "We want to know if everything is all right," and go your way. That is not the duty. That is not the way a ward teacher should operate, but every bishop should have under his direction men, young men, middle-aged men and old men, who will go into the homes, not apologizing for breaking into the house, but going as ward teachers.

WARD TEACHING

Rodney Badger was a teacher in my father's home for years, and a great man. Whenever he came the family met and he sat and asked us questions and told us the things that he thought we ought to understand. And I want to tell you that when he came into our home he brought the spirit of the Lord with him. And when he went out we felt we had had a visit from a servant of the Lord.

Let us try and see if we cannot improve our ward teaching, brethren. Surely, in some cases, it is pitiable, because the Lord has given us all the power and authority and the ability to go into the homes and draw his sons and daughters nearer to him. But we often feel that we are so busy with other things we cannot do it.

BLESSINGS PROMISED BISHOPS

I am not complaining. I know what a difficult thing it is to be a bishop. I have been in the homes of many bishops and I have ordained a good many, and I have followed them and seen what their experiences were; they have a very great responsibility, and it takes a lot of their time. But I want to say to you that there is no bishop, nor has there been a bishop in the Church, who has given the time that the Lord expected him to give in looking after the flock and teaching his people and preparing them to do the work, that has not received one hundred percent of the blessings that he labored for, and they will extend to him throughout the ages of eternity.

He may not have had wealth, may not have had distinction. He may not have had the honor of presiding over clubs and things of that kind, but if he has done his duty as a bishop, he has been hand in hand with the Father of us all, and everything that he has done to bless his kind is laid up as a treasure in heaven and nobody can take the blessing from him.

Let us see if we cannot improve that, brethren. As well as some of us have done, let us see if we cannot do better.

FALSE TEACHERS

There is one little item here that has been called to our attention. In some of our wards, in order to draw the congregations and bring more people out, our bishops, and in some cases, our auxiliary organization leaders, go out and find somebody to come and deliver a lecture in the Sunday night meeting. Sometimes men are invited they do not know anything about and sometimes those men say things that are not what should be said in the meeting.

There are two Indians that are working now among our people and they are being invited from ward to ward and they are going in and telling stories, and they dress up with their feathers and costumes that are attractive to young people, and we are informed that they teach things that are foreign to what we believe and what the Lord wants us to have our people believe.

Bishops, and leaders of organizations, protect your people from those who would teach them things that would be harmful to them. There are some of the finest people in the world that are Indians. Those men that I am talking about now may have many good traits of character, but right now they are going among our people and saying and doing things that will do harm and will all have to be set aside, because they are not telling that which is true. So, we would like you tonight to pass that on in your wards, and stakes, you stake presidents and the bishops that are here, and in whatever you do, protect your people in the ward from those that you do not know anything about and who will seek an opportunity to come in and talk to the people when they should not be permitted to do so, because they are not teaching that which would be helpful to the people.

HONOR THE SABBATH

Another thing, brethren, our bishops and our stake presidents can have a tremendous influence in bringing the people of their wards and stakes to feel that they must honor the Sabbath day. Honoring the Sabbath day and keeping it holy is a commandment of our Heavenly Father. Six days he has given us to do about as we please, as long as we do not do wrong, but on the seventh, he said, "The seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord Thy God." He has advised us to do no work, neither our animals, nor the stranger within our gates, and he has promised us blessings if we will do what we ought to do.

Brethren, it is not an insignificant thing to violate the Sabbath day. I want to say that you lose every time you violate the Sabbath day, you lose more than you can gain, no matter what you may think you are going to gain, but your boys and girls sometimes do not understand that. Teach it to them. Teach them that their homes may be the abiding place of prayer.

I remember when I was a child, living right across the street from here and the boys would come over to our place on Sunday after Sunday School, and I was like the boys, I thought it would be lots of fun to play ball and to play other games. But I had a wonderful mother. She did not say, "You cannot do it," but she did say: "Son, you will be happier if you do not do that. Let the boys go home and read a good book."

HOME TRAINING

I want to tell you I am grateful for that kind of training in the home, but there are places where the children are turned loose and they are not guarded and they are not protected and they are not trained, and the result is, not only do they lose the blessing that would be eternally advantageous to them, but they cross to the devil's side of the line, and the first thing you know they do things that they should not do.

I want to say that just as soon as we go into the devil's territory we are in his power, and our safety is on the Lord's side of the line, and the Lord's side of the line is on the side of the Ten Commandments and the other commandments that the Lord has given, and we can easily tell what they are.

PROTECTION OF YOUNG WOMEN

Quite a number of our young people are leaving home in the country settlements and coming here to Salt Lake City. Our young girls are coming, and when they come if they are not in homes that will protect them, not under the supervision of good women, they are in great danger. If I were living in some of the outlying settlements, knowing what I know, if I had a precious daughter I never would let her come to Salt Lake City without a guardian, no matter how good she was. If I let her come at all I would be sure that she was properly safeguarded and chaperoned and helped.

Brethren, pass that word around. It is such an attractive thing for these girls to come where the bright lights are, and the papers are always telling what is going on here, but their eternal happiness may be destroyed by falling into the hands of some wicked, careless boy or man. And when they are ruined it is too late then to begin to say, "I wish we had not done it." Safeguard them, please, as far as you can, and when they come to the city and you know they are coming, you bishops send word here. You can send word or find out what ward they go into and you can write the bishops direct. If there is no other way, write the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association and give the addresses of these girls, and they will help to take care of them. They will do a wonderful job for you and help to save those that are more precious than gold.

WATCHCARE NEEDED

A great effort is being made right now to break into the ranks of this people. Others who are not members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are building churches, building houses of amusement among us, and those who are skillful in attracting young people are gathering them in, and some of our young people have asked to have their names taken from the records of the church. They come out of good homes, but in some cases have not been taught properly and are easily misled by strangers.

Brethren, watch your people. You may have cattle and sheep on a thousand hills and all the hay and grain and potatoes and other things, you may own stocks and bonds and houses and banks and everything, but if you, by reason of your own carelessness and indifference, lose one of those young sons or daughters that God has given to you, you will be repenting of it a long time, and your repentance may not accomplish what you desire.

There is a lot I might say but there is not time. I have talked so long now.

It is lovely to be here with you. I am happy to be with a group of men like this, so many young men and boys here. Remember boys, every one of you, is a child of our Heavenly Father. Every one of you is living eternal life. Each of you boys and men, if you live properly, has a right to the priesthood of the living God. Do not lose that blessing and that privilege. And fathers, with your wives, teach your children the beauty of the things that the Lord has given to us as the gospel of Jesus Christ, and they will be happy and you will be happy, and your families will not be broken up by those who mislead them, many times wilfully and maliciously.

THE LORD'S HELP NEEDED

This is a day and age of the world when we need the Lord's help, every one of us. I am grateful that we have almost everywhere now, in our schools, in our congress, in our stakes in different parts of the world, good men and good women that are not only teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ but they are living it. Wonderful helps they are in the various places that they are in, and we need it all. All those who have faith and live to be worthy of the inspiration of the Lord will be guided and inspired and helped in times of distress. He is not so far away. He is our Father. He loves us and wants us to be worthy to be called his children. This great body of men here tonight, this marvelous group, every one of you is a son of our Heavenly Father. This great group of men, every one is living eternal life, and the gospel of Jesus Christ was given to our forbears and now to us, to prepare us to live with him eternally on this earth when it becomes the celestial kingdom. Can you think of anything more wonderful?

BLESSINGS AND TESTIMONY

May the Lord add his blessing. I pray that he will bless every one of you fine men, you teachers in the schools, you men in the wards and stakes, those of you who are working in companionship with men and boys and women in different parts of the world, I pray the Lord to bless you that you will not lose an opportunity to help uplift and develop and bring them to be what our Father would have them to be, and they will be your companions, then, throughout the ages of eternity.

God lives. Jesus is the Christ. Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Living God. The Lord gave to him the priesthood that we hold and it will continue to be passed on to our descendants as it came from our forbears, if we will do our part.

God bless you brethren, I am so grateful to be with you.

Think of what it means to be a royal priesthood, not a make-believe, but a royal priesthood, everyone having contact, if we will, with the power of our Heavenly Father, the great King of kings and Lord of lords.

This is his work and I bear my testimony to you that I know it as I know that I live, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Singing by the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus: "Prayer at Evening."

The closing prayer was offered by President John Whitaker Taylor, of the Lyman Stake.

The congregational singing of the Conference was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Saturday afternoon and Sunday sessions and furnished the choral music for those sessions. J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Choir.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Salt Lake Region, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, director, furnished the choral music for the Friday meetings.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:00, as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Frank W. Asper was at the organ console, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

The music for the General Priesthood meeting was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir men's chorus, under the direction of Spencer Cornwall.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper, and Roy M. Darley.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

The One Hundred Nineteenth Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Nineteenth Annual Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints convened in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Sunday, Monday and Wednesday, April 3, 4, and 6, 1949.

General sessions of the conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Sunday, Monday and Wednesday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened Monday evening, April 4 at 7:00.

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, April 3, at 8:30 over Radio Station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System, a report thereof appearing in this record.

The Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, which was presented over KSL and through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting Company's system, throughout the United States, on Sunday morning at 9:30 is also made a part of this report.

By means of Television equipment, many who were unable to find accommodation in the Tabernacle assembled in the Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle where they were enabled to see and hear the speakers as well as those who presented musical numbers. Large numbers of others who could not be accommodated in either of these buildings listened to the services by means of amplifying equipment upon the grounds.

President George Albert Smith having recently passed through an illness, from which he was still convalescing, was unable to be present at all the sessions. He was in attendance at the Sunday morning, Monday morning, Wednesday morning and Wednesday afternoon sessions. He was also present at the General Priesthood meeting Monday evening.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

This broadcast, which was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City. It was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew" and on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with a majestic chorus from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The text, taken from 1st Kings, contrasts the commotion of violent physical forces with the quiet whisperings of the still small voice: "Behold! God the Lord passed by!—And a mighty wind rent the mountains—the sea was upheaved, the earth was shaken. . . . But yet the Lord was not in the tempest, but . . . in that still small voice, onward came the Lord." "Behold, God the Lord Passed By."

(Choir sang "Behold, God the Lord Passed By"—Mendelssohn)

Announcer: With Dr. Frank W. Asper at the Tabernacle Organ, we recall "The Lost Chord" by Sir Arthur Sullivan. It is a song of the searching for once familiar sights and sounds and scenes, now masked from memory, but which men shall once more behold. "It may be that death's bright angel will speak in that chord again. It may be that only in heaven I shall hear that grand Amen."

(Organ presented "The Lost Chord"—Sullivan)

Announcer: Eliza R. Snow's hymn of man's eternal march is sung now by the men's chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, to the music of James McGranahan, as arranged by Mr. Cornwall: "O My Father."

("Men's chorus sang "O My Father"—Arr. Cornwall)

Announcer: There are some fine distinctions to be found in the now immortal phrase, "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Life is an eternal fact; liberty, an inalienable right. But with happiness—we are offered only the right to pursue it! We can give a man his liberty. He may not use it well or keep it long, but we can give it to him. But not so his happiness. We can help, but ultimately he has to help himself to happiness. But this all men have in common: we are all looking for it. No one wants to be unhappy; no one deliberately sets out to try to make a muddle of his life. But some of us may be so hotly in pursuit of some counterfeit kind that the real thing isn't recognized. Some of us may be looking for the right thing in the wrong way. And among the many misconceptions concerning this thing so much pursued are these: (One) That money makes happiness. False. It may help or it may hinder. Some men have sold their happiness, but no one was ever able to buy it. (Two) That pleasure is the same as happiness. False. You can wear yourself ragged in pursuit of pleasure — and still wake up in dull despair. (Three) That fame brings happiness. False. The record eloquently indicates otherwise. (Four) That happiness must be found in far places. False again. We carry it with us—or we don't have it. And sometimes after we've pursued it in far places we find that we have left our happiness behind. There is a long list of things that have helped to make men happy—from which we mention these: A quiet conscience; useful work well and willingly done; an awareness of being wanted and needed; an earnest appreciation of other people; conformity to the laws of honor and of honesty, to the laws of the land and the laws of God. If there were no reasonable chance of finding happiness, we had just as well ring down the curtain on time and eternity, for happiness is properly the chief business and ultimate aim of life. "Men are that they might have joy." But there is no point in pursuing it where it never was and never will be found. No one ever overtook anything—including happiness — by pursuing it on the wrong road. If we want it, we had better look for it where it is.

Sunday, April 3

First Day

(Without announcement organ presented "Beside the Still Waters"—Marsh)

Announcer: Dr. Asper has presented a sacred song by C. H. Marsh which takes its title from the 23rd Psalm: "Beside the Still Waters."

And now there is time to hear from the organ a hymn by George Careless, "He Died, the Great Redeemer Died."

(Organ presented "He Died, the Great Redeemer Died")

Announcer: We close this day from Temple Square with a thoughtful theme from Wagner's Tannhauser: The choir recalls the "Pilgrim's Chorus."

(Choir sang "Pilgrim's Chorus" — Wagner)

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day — and always.

This concludes the one thousand and twenty-fourth presentation continuing the 20th year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Frank W. Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The first session of the Conference convened in the great Tabernacle at 10:00 a.m., Sunday, April 3, 1949.

Every available space in the Tabernacle auditorium and galleries was occupied; as many as could be accommodated in the large Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle listened to and watched the proceedings by means of television, and during the Choir and Organ Broadcast and the regular Conference meeting, thousands of people assembled on the grounds where they listened to the services by means of amplifying equipment that had been installed.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. At his request President J. Reuben, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services. The meeting commenced promptly at 10:00 a.m.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the opening session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

We are greatly blessed by the presence here this morning of President George Albert Smith, the presiding high priest of the Church, and we are blessed because the Lord, responsive to the prayers of the Saints has blessed him. He will preside at this session and he has asked the speaker, President Clark, to conduct the services.

Of the General Authorities Elder Matthew Cowley is absent visiting the Pacific missions and Elder Alma Sonne is in Europe in charge of the European missions. President George F. Richards is resting at home at the suggestion of his doctor.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the Clerk of the Conference.

Our broadcasts over other stations than KSL are constantly increasing. This time, all or part of the service will be broadcast over eight stations as follows: Over KSL (as will all the services of this Conference); by arrangement through KSL these same sessions will be broadcast over the following stations: KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription. The services this morning, this afternoon, and tomorrow, Monday, morning over KEXO at Grand Junction, Colorado, by transcription. These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud speaking system on the grounds. Every one would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

We have received notice from the Fire Department of Salt Lake City calling our attention to an ordinance of the City which requires that aisles shall be kept clear and likewise doorways. These doorways are very large and those who are there, in case of accident, should immediately, of course, retire. I hope you will cooperate with the ushers so that we may obey this city ordinance. We speak of "honoring, obeying, and sustaining the law" and we should give an example of it.

Sunday, April 3First Day

The flowers which you see here, the calla lilies, came to us through the thoughtful kindness of the good Saints of Berkeley Stake.

We will begin the morning session by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing "Redeemer of Israel," Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Herman C. Goates, president of Lehi Stake.

---

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Redeemer of Israel."

The opening prayer was offered by President Herman C. Goates, President of Lehi Stake.

The Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "Come, Come Ye Saints."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

You look mighty good to me. I wonder if any of you are as happy as I am, to be at this conference. I started praying about two and a half months ago that I might be here, and I am grateful to the Lord that he has heard not only my prayers, but also your prayers, and I take this occasion to thank every one of you for the interest you have had in me and for the kind words that have been written, and the prayers that have been offered.

GRATITUDE FOR RETURN

I would like at this time to thank all those who, out of the kindness of their hearts, have sent cards of greeting and letters of encouragement. It isn't possible for me to answer them all, but I am sure that those who have sent them will receive comfort because of what they have done.

I have just come back from California. We have a large congregation of people there and particularly in the place where I have just been, the Los Angeles area. It is remarkable how many kind people there are there, people who are not members of the Church, but who are interested in what we are seeking to do.

LOS ANGELES TEMPLE

My visit to California this time was in the interest of building another temple. There are many people down there who didn't know what it meant. They thought it was just another meetinghouse. They didn't realize that while a meetinghouse serves a small community, a temple serves a larger community for a different purpose. We were anxious to have everything adjusted so everybody would be happy.

May I say that we have received excellent cooperation from people who are down there. Our own brethren who live there have made such a fine record that, when they visited individuals in regard to the matter, they have been received with consideration and kindness, and I want to take this occasion to thank them, particularly, Brother Preston D. Richards, who spent so much of his time doing the thing that I went down to do and visiting those who would be of importance in helping us to make our adjustments.

The word comes from the missionary field that the Lord has opened our way in numerous places. It is marvelous what a change there has been in many cases. The magazines and newspapers of the world are going out of their way now to be complimentary to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They sometimes don't understand the beauty of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but they have discovered that we have some of the best basketball players in all the world. And that draws us a little nearer. The great Choir and Organ advertise us in the world, and it's a joy to many who are away to listen in to this great Choir.

MET TO WORSHIP

We are met here this morning not just to talk and visit. We have come together to worship in the most earnest manner. We are here in the Lord's house to wait upon him. Many of you have come thousands of miles just to be present. If each of us today is here to worship, if we have come for that purpose and will exercise our faith, the Lord will not fail us, and we will conclude this conference feeling that he has blessed us marvelously.

I wish that many more of our people could be present on an occasion of this kind. Our house is not large enough. Even now we have to begin to think of a larger place for our general conferences, but today we are thankful to him who gave us this house and these surroundings.

We are thankful to him who is the Author of our being, and grateful that he came down to earth and brought with him his Beloved Son to begin a new dispensation—the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times. This is not the Church of Joseph Smith or of any other leader who followed him. This is the Church of Jesus Christ, and it was our Heavenly Father who gave it its name.

PRIVILEGE OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

I wonder sometimes if we realize what an honor it is to have membership in this great organization. Even in our business affairs and in our social affairs we should carry with us the feeling, "I am a part of the work of the Lord, and I desire to be worthy of the blessings that have come to me." There has never been a time in the history of the world when the opportunity of disseminating the truth has been so great as now.

In our own land people are glad to hear our missionaries, pleased to learn something more of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Some people have worshiped the sun; some have worshiped other luminaries; and some have worshiped mountains and other things, with the thought that it was worship. But the worship in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a devoted life, a desire to be worthy of him in whose image we have been created and who has given us all that the world has that is worth while—the gospel of Jesus Christ.

CONTRIBUTION OF SCHOOLS

When I think of the fine development that is being made in our schools, I am grateful. I refer particularly to the Church schools (and I wouldn't overlook the public schools). There are many teachers in the public schools who have done their best to teach our sons and daughters concerning correct principles. But there are many people identified with the education of the youth of this great land who do not have any faith in God.

We are fortunate to have so many who not only have the education that comes from the universities, not only have the benefits that are derived from science, but in addition to that, also have a testimony that God lives and that we are his children. It hasn't been very long since I saw a letter written by an educated man who concluded his letter with a suggestion that all religion was a myth. All of it! And yet that man has a position teaching the children of the Latter-day Saints.

OBLIGATION OF PARENTS

Brothers and sisters, we must depend not only upon the institutions of learning, but also we must follow the admonition of our Heavenly Father when he says that it is our duty to teach our children when eight years of age, faith in God, repentance, and baptism.

He refers there to parents. He doesn't turn that over to school teachers.

If parents in Zion or any of her stakes which are organized fail to teach their children these things when eight years of age—not waiting until they're grown—but when they are eight years of age, the sin be upon the heads of the parents.

And, my, how grateful I am, that there are so many of the members of this Church who believe that, and who prize the children who have come into their homes, and devote themselves to teaching them.

EXAMPLE OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS

When I observe as I travel and as I mingle among the people at home and abroad, the character of the Latter-day Saints, the fine example that they set, the manner in which they live, I wonder sometimes if we appreciate that our boys and girls are among the greatest missionaries that this Church has—if they have been properly taught. They love to share the gospel with others when they understand it, and they desire to understand it. We have just had a great conference here of the Primary Association of this Church. I was unable to be present with them in this house, but I understand it was filled with those who work with the young people, as well as some of the young folk themselves. Nobody will ever realize the great worth of the Primary Association unless he familiarizes himself with what it has done in this Church through the fine leadership of God-fearing women.

These organizations add to what we should teach in our homes other things that our children should know and inspire in them a desire to do what the Lord would have them do.

Brethren and sisters, it is a joy to be here. I thank my Heavenly Father for this privilege. I am grateful for your companionship, and I would like to cooperate with you, from this time forth, realizing that we have special blessings from our Heavenly Father, and that if we will be unselfish with those blessings and share them with those who do not understand and who do not enjoy what we appreciate, great will be our joy.

MISSIONARY EFFORTS

This is the Church of Jesus Christ. Millions of our Father's children do not know anything about it, but they are his children just the same, and he expects us to do our very best. Since the close of the war, we have had as many as five thousand missionaries in the world. Many of them have done wonderful work. They have found the hearts of people softened and ready to hear the message.

Many of our missions have used the singers in their groups, and they have held concerts among the people where they could sing the gospel as well as teach it by other means. Many of you brethren and sisters are in charge of institutions of learning and are teachers of these young people. I pray that not only may you have the joy of feeling that your intellectual opportunities have been better than many, but also that you may draw near enough to the Lord that you will feel his presence and the inspiration of his spirit while you teach the most precious of all his gifts to man, the sons and daughters who come into our homes. I feel to bless these men and women who are giving their time in the mission field and in the schools and among the auxiliary organizations outside of their regular ordinary work of life. I feel like blessing them and asking God to bless them for their faithfulness.

LOVE FOR NEIGHBOR

This is the Lord's house. We are his guests today. It is he who made it possible for us to be here, and now, while we are assembled together and while we are mingled during the conference, let us evidence by our conduct, by our gentleness, by our love, by our faith, that we do keep that great commandment that the Savior said was like unto the first great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

I can say to you, my brethren and sisters, the happiest people in this world are those who love their neighbors as themselves and manifest their appreciation of God's blessings by their conduct in life. May the Lord add his blessing, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who has again addressed us with his admonitions that we should love our neighbors and share our blessings with them.

We shall now hear from President David O. McKay of the First Presidency.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

Choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. (Joshua 24:15.)

Sensing keenly, brethren and sisters, the responsibility of this moment, facing this vast audience, seen and unseen, I ask for your sympathetic attitude and for your prayers.

I was just thinking how quickly time has passed since we met six months ago under similar circumstances. We could very appropriately sing this morning that old hymn now eliminated from our hymn books "... how swift the months have passed away; 'tis conference again, and Zion's untold thousands come to sing the joyful strain."

PROGRESS OF THE CHURCH

With you I rejoice in the presence of President Smith at this conference. I am grateful with you for the progress of the Church. Its growth in the organized stakes and in the missions is most satisfactory. As President Smith has already indicated, among thinking men and women throughout the world, the purposes of the Church are now better understood with the resultant lessening of prejudice. Its means are more adequate for the promulgation throughout the world of the restored gospel of peace and love and universal brotherhood.

But the enemy is active also. He is cunning and wily and seeks every opportunity to undermine the foundations of this Church and strikes wherever it is possible to weaken or to destroy.

A WISE CHOICE

The scripture I read by way of introduction you will recognize as the avowed and unalterable resolution of Joshua whose nobility of character and outstanding leadership won for him the title "the servant of the Lord." Just before his death he called upon Israel "to put away the strange gods" that were among them, and to be faithful and obedient to the God of Israel. The people in Joshua's day evidently made a wise choice, for, we are told, that Israel

... served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua. ... (Joshua 24:31.)

To every normal person God has given "the freedom of choice." Our moral and spiritual progress depends upon the use we make of that freedom.

THE REAL TEST

The real test of any church or religion is the kind of men it makes. I am very happy and deeply grateful for the high type of young manhood and womanhood being reared in the Church as indicated recently by a report of 6,556 prospective missionaries in their medical examination including serological tests preparatory to their going on missions.

In 1946 there were 2,263 so examined. In 1947, 2,134; likewise in 1948, 2,159, or a total, as I say, of 6,556, 6,554 showed negative tests; only one in 1946 and one in 1947 were positive—one in more than three thousand.

FALSE IDEALS

But as I said, there are other reports which are more disquieting—reports of the influence of false ideals. I think it is what Joshua had in mind, in a way, when he spoke about false gods. False ideals, if accepted, are even more destructive of spirituality than was the worship of the Amorite gods.

These reports pertain to wild parties held by young people in the Church, of objectionable, not to say lewd clubs, organized among a certain group; of actions of girls whose parents permit them to come to the city unchaperoned to attend sport contests. Such reports lead us to believe that not a few parents and some of our young people need to be warned against enticing evil practices, indulgences in which end only in disillusionment and sorrow.

There can be little doubt that war and materialistic science have had a deadening effect upon the moral sensibilities of too many of our youth. One critic goes so far as to say: "Self-interest alone remains as a motive, and pleasure as the sole end of life."

I commend President Richard L. Evans in his excellent sermon over the air this morning about choosing the wrong way in seeking happiness.

It is the duty of parents and of the Church not only to teach but also to demonstrate to young people that living a life of truth and moral purity brings joy and happiness, while violations of moral and social laws result only in dissatisfaction, sorrow, and, when carried to extreme, in degradation.

AN OLD STORY

There is an old story, which I think many of you read in a recent magazine, which told of the experience of a great artist who was engaged to paint a mural for the cathedral in a Sicilian town. The subject was the life of Christ. For many years the artist labored diligently, and finally the painting was finished except for the two most important figures, the Christ Child and Judas Iscariot. He searched far and wide for models for those two figures.

One day while walking in an old part of the city he came upon some children playing in the street. Among them was a twelve-year-old boy whose face stirred the painter's heart. It was the face of an angel—a very dirty one, perhaps, but the face he needed.

The artist took the child home with him, and day after day the boy sat patiently until the face of the Christ Child was finished.

But the painter failed to find a model for Judas. For years, haunted by the fear that his masterpiece would remain unfinished, he continued his search.

One afternoon, in a tavern, the painter saw a gaunt and tattered figure stagger across the threshold and fall to the floor, begging for a glass of wine. The painter lifted him up and looked into a face that startled him. It seemed to bear the marks of every sin of mankind.

"Come with me," the painter said, "I will give you wine, food, and clothing."

Here at last was his model for Judas. For many days and parts of many nights the painter worked feverishly to complete his masterpiece.

As the work went on, a change came over the model. A strange tension replaced the stuporous languor, and his bloodshot eyes were fixed with horror on the painted likeness of himself. One day, perceiving his subject's agitation, the painter paused in his work, saying, "My son, I'd like to help you. What troubles you so?"

The model sobbed and buried his face in his hands. After a long moment he lifted pleading eyes to the old painter's face.

"Do you not then remember me? Years ago I was your model for the Christ Child!"

Well, the story may be fact or fiction, but the lesson it teaches is true to life.

The dissipated man made a wrong choice in his youth, and in seeking gratification in indulgence sank ever lower and lower until he wallowed in the gutter.

Brothers and sisters, only recently I met this unfortunate man's counterpart—a man with bleary eyes and dissipated features whom I knew years ago as a brilliant, open-countenanced youth with a promising future.

DUAL NATURE OF MAN

Man has a dual nature; one, related to the earthly or animal life; the other, akin to the divine. Whether a man remains satisfied within what we designate the animal world, satisfied with what the animal world will give him, yielding without effort to the whim of his appetites and passions and slipping farther and farther into the realm of indulgence, or whether, through self-mastery, he rises toward intellectual, moral, and spiritual enjoyments depends upon the kind of choice he makes every day, nay, every hour of his life.

"Man has two creators," says William George Jordan, "his God and himself. This first creator furnishes him the raw material of his life—the laws in conformity with which he can make that life what he will. The second creator—himself—has marvelous powers he rarely realizes. It is what a man makes of himself that counts."

THE STRAIT GATE

We need not shut our eyes to the fact that too many of our young folk respond to the call of the physical, because it seems the easy and natural thing to do. Too many are vainly seeking shortcuts to happiness. It should always be kept in mind that that which is most worth while in life requires strenuous effort.

Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat.

Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. (Matthew 7:13-14.)

As in the days of old, so there are today some who prefer to revel in what I have heard President George Albert Smith designate as "the devil's territory" rather than to strive for the higher and better things of life. Persons who condemn their will to the service of their appetites, suffer the penalties. In the words of Charles Wagner:

Let your needs rule you, pamper them—you will see them multiply like insects in the sun. The more you give them, the more they demand. He is senseless who seeks for happiness in material prosperity alone.

THE BASER SIDE

It is said that one Roman emperor offered a reward to anybody who would invent a new pleasure. Nero set Rome on fire for the mere pleasure of a new form of diversion. Rome fell because of extravagance, luxury, and dissipation. In personal, as in national life, these are unfailing signs of decline and decay. Truly,

. . . he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption;
but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.
(Gal. 6:8.)

In their yearning for a good time, young people are often tempted to indulge in the things which appeal only to the baser side of humanity, five of the most common of which are: First, vulgarity and obscenity; second, drinking and petting parties; third, unchastity; fourth, disloyalty; and fifth, irreverence.

VULGARITY

Vulgarity is often the first step down the road to indulgence. To be vulgar is to give offense to good taste or refined feelings. A young man who would tell a vulgar joke in the presence of ladies discloses a nature leaning towards that which is low and coarse. A girl who would encourage it and laugh at it is taking a step toward that which is crude and unrefined.

Most of you have read David Starr Jordan's denunciation of this vice. He concludes it by saying:

We find the corrosion of vulgarity everywhere, and its poison enters every home. The billboards of our cities are covered with its evidence; our newspapers are redolent with it; our story books reek with it; our schools are tainted by it; and we cannot keep it out of our homes, or our churches, or our colleges.

It is only a step from vulgarity to obscenity. The executive secretary of a committee appointed to curtail the distribution of obscene literature put on my desk only recently a most vile plaque, covertly cast reportedly here in our city, and sold to our young people at a nominal price. The best way to rid society of such baseness is for parents, businessmen, and especially every decent young person, to refuse to tolerate it and to report the vendors to the officers of the law.

DRINKING AND PETTING PARTIES

It is right, indeed essential, to the happiness of our young people that they meet in social parties, but it is an indication of low morals when for entertainment they must resort to physical stimulation and debasement. Such indulgence weakens your character; discredits your family name; robs your future wife or husband of a priceless treasure, and sows seed that may ripen into bitter fruit of marital suspicion, unhappiness, and divorce. A girl who sacrifices self-respect for social popularity debases true womanhood.

A spotless character, founded upon the ability to say no in the presence of those who mock and jeer, wins the respect and love of men and women whose opinion is most worth while. Drinking and petting parties form an environment in which the moral sense becomes dulled, and unbridled passion holds sway. It then becomes easy to take the final step downward in moral disgrace.

CHASTITY

The test of true womanhood comes when woman stands innocent at the court of chastity. All qualities are crowned by this most precious virtue of beautiful womanhood. It is the most vital part of the foundation of a happy married life. There is a general idea throughout the world that young men may sow their wild oats, but that young women should be chaperoned and guarded. But even in this matter of chaperonage, there is too much laxity on the part of parents, if recent reports are to be relied upon.

In the Church of Jesus Christ there is but one standard of morality. No young man has any more right to sow his wild oats in youth than has a young girl. He who comes to his bishop to ask for a recommend to take a pure girl to the altar is expected to give the same purity that he hopes to receive.

A woman crowned with virtue is the "highest, holiest, most precious gift to man," excepting only salvation offered in the gospel, and that forms part of it. But a woman who barter her virtue "is not one of the least of man's shames."

DISLOYALTY

When, instead of high moral principles, a life of immoral indulgence is chosen, and man or woman gets far down in the scale of

Sunday, April 3

First Day

degeneracy, disloyalty is an inevitable part of his or her nature. Loyalty to parents becomes quenched; obedience to their teachings and ideals abandoned; loyalty to wife and children smothered in base gratification; loyalty to Church impossible, and is often supplanted by sneers at its teachings, and that means the perpetrator is "left to himself to kick against the pricks and to fight against God."

At this stage, irreverence is an inevitable consequence, a pretty sure sign of moral weakness. No man will rise high who jeers at sacred things. It is said that when Mr. Melville D. Landon (Eli Perkins) was preparing his volume on Kings of the Platform and Pulpit, he wrote to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll for a copy of his most famous lecture. In a letter which accompanied the manuscript, Mr. Ingersoll said:

Whatever you do, do not put anything into the book against Christ. I may have said silly things about him when a boy in Peoria, Illinois, but I now regard him as the one Perfect Man.

IMPORTANCE OF SPIRITUALITY

I said in the beginning that man is a dual being—a physical and spiritual entity, but his spiritual side is the all-important part. The real tragedy of following false ideals is that by so doing we stifle and sometimes choke out spirituality completely. Rudolph Eucken truly asserts that without a consciousness of a spiritual relation to the Infinite—note this—that without a consciousness of a spiritual relation

No true civilization is possible. A civilization declining all contact with a supernatural life and refusing to establish those mysterious inner relations, gradually degenerates into a mere human civilization, and becomes a parody of civilization.

The body with its five or more senses, with its appetites and passions, is essential to life and happiness, but in the ultimate analysis it is only a means to a higher end. When man makes its gratification an end in itself, he frustrates the purpose and descends to sensuality. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."

John P. Altgeld expresses more than mere imagination when he says:

Young man, life is before you. Two voices are calling you—one coming out from the swamps of selfishness and force, where success means death; and the other from the hilltops of justice and progress, where even failure brings glory. . . . Two ways lie open to you—one leading to an ever lower and lower plain, where are heard the cries of despair and the curses of the poor, where manhood shrivels and possession rots down the possessor; and the other leading to the highlands of the morning, where are heard the glad shouts of humanity and where honest effort is rewarded with immortality.

EXPANDING THE SOUL

Brethren and sisters, spirituality is the consciousness of victory over self, and of communion with the Infinite. Spirituality impels one to conquer difficulties and acquire more and more strength. To feel one's faculties unfolding and truth expanding the soul is one of life's sublime experiences.

Being "honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men," are attributes which contribute to spirituality, the highest acquisition of the soul. It is "the divine in man, the supreme, crowning gift that makes him king of all created things, the one final quality that makes him tower above all other animals.

Divine is that admonition and promise given to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

"... let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly;"—a wonderful statement—

... then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God; and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven.

The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth; and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee forever and ever. (D. & C. 121:45-46.)

God help us to keep that admonition and to follow the ideals of the Church of Jesus Christ established by direct revelation in this day, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation joined in singing the hymn: "Come, O Thou King of Kings," Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

The young men and women in our schools and colleges are confronted with many conflicting ideas concerning religion and life. They become unsettled in their minds as they study our present-day problems. Attacks are made on their religious beliefs which have been held sacred by them ever since they were children in their homes. They often come to wonder about the teachings of the Holy Bible, particularly the belief in God and the gospel of Jesus Christ. They often become indifferent to what is right in their daily living. They have just cause to wonder! The fires of revolution are burning everywhere—I fear even at our very doors. In America, and of course in the whole world, we are in need of a spiritual awakening,

Sunday, April 3

First Day

an awakening that makes men respect old truths, the finer lessons of history, and the word of God; a realization that a man owes a lot more to his country, than his country owes him: a return to the old standards of character that makes it easy for a man to become indignant over corruption, and to hate sin and wrong. A study of the word of God, faith, and prayer will bring about a better feeling in the minds of the youth, and it is up to the fathers and mothers to be patient with their children, for they are living in a new age.

THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA

Every household should keep in mind the two divinely appointed events in modern history around which must be centered our future lives as a people. The discovery of America was for a divine purpose, and the formation of this Republic was an event ordered of God for a glorious new day. The Prophet Nephi some six centuries before the birth of the Savior wrote:

And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land.

And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters. (1 Nephi 13:12-13.)

How deeply did Christopher Columbus feel that inspired directive purpose of God when he wrote of his discovery of America:

But these great and marvelous results are not to be attributed to any merit of mine, but to the holy Christian faith, for that which the unaided intellect of man could not compass, the Spirit of God has granted to human exertions. For God is wont to hear the prayers of his servants who live his precepts even to the performance of apparent impossibilities. . . . Let Christ rejoice on earth, as he rejoices in heaven in the prospect of the salvation of the souls of so many nations hitherto lost.

With what inspired knowledge did John Winthrop, one of the old Puritan fathers, write:

It will be a service to the Church of great consequence to carry the gospel into those parts of the world to help on the coming of the fulness of the Gentiles.

WASHINGTON'S ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In his first inaugural address, Washington said:

Such being the impressions under which I have, in obedience to the public summons, repaired to the present station, it would be peculiarly improper to omit, in this first official act, my fervent supplications to that

Almighty Being who rules over the universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aids can supply every human defect, that his benediction may consecrate to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States a government instituted by themselves for these essential purposes, and may enable every instrument employed in its administration to execute with success the functions allotted to his charge. In tendering this homage to the great Author of every public and private good, I assure myself that it expresses your sentiments not less than my own; nor those of my fellow-citizens at large, less than either. No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men, more than the people of the United States.

The people whom Columbus found in America, and to whom Washington was the means of bringing a knowledge of an Old World, were a deeply religious people. In a recent visit to the Maricopa Stake, I was impressed with the group of Indians that was present. Noble-looking people, they were. Some of them were Navajos, some Zunis, and a few Apaches. In speaking to them, I recalled a visit, made to Boston many years ago, of some Zunis. We are told that they were taken down the harbor, that they might worship. Landing on an island, the Indians disappeared for a time, and on their return they walked into the sea, and, with deep solemnity, sang their mystic chant. They then threw out upon the air from their uplifted hands the grain they offered to the god of waters, and let it float away as a thanks offering. That was worship of the Great Spirit.

AMBASSADORS OF TRUTH

When Jesus sent forth the Twelve and Seventy as his ambassadors of the divine truths which he was teaching, he charged them to reproduce the miracles of his own personal ministry. Such an extension of his work was a part of his original project of evangelizing the country roundabout Palestine and eventually the world.

After these things, the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

Therefore said he unto them, the harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest.

Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

And into whatever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. (Luke 10:1-3, 5.)

Some days afterward, we read in the gospel of St. Luke:

And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.

And he turned . . . unto his disciples, and said privately, Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see. (Ibid., 10:17, 23.)

To Jesus it was a provocation of purest happiness that God had chosen these men, unlearned and simple men, in preference to intellectual and aristocratic leaders. Throughout his ministry, peasants and fishermen, the unlearned and landless were called and he rejoiced that their mission had been sealed by God: that through the faith of the Twelve and the Seventy they had been invested with mysterious gifts of his Spirit. Jesus lifted up the ideal of life in the kingdom of God to inspire his disciples to heightened aspirations and endeavor. He did not lay down a rigid legalism, but as one English writer, Dr. Church, in his Essays and Reviews has written:

He wooed his pupils by persuasive ideals. He transferred the source of happiness and the understanding of the gospel from external circumstances to the inward life of man. Goodness, morals, ideals depend upon one's attitude toward God. It was fundamental to the ethic of Jesus. For this reason the Beatitudes are conjoined with purity of heart. It denotes simplicity, a singleness of aim in allegiance to the divine teachings of the Master. The ethical and religious teachings pervading Christ's instructions to these first Christian missionaries has become the foundation of the inner light of the Seventies of today. Their lives exhale the aroma of complete consecration. They are the salt of the earth, the Light of the world.

GOD'S SERVANTS

God's first demands of his servants are pure hearts, upright lives, truthfulness, mercy, and honesty. Good manners were regarded as matters of religion and morality. Boasting, ostentation, conceit, were of old considered the patent evidence of vulgarity. These are condemned by the scriptures. The Seventies must always keep in mind the grandeur of the First Article of Faith, which is the greatest statement of Truth since the days of Christ our Redeemer. They must keep in mind the supreme test of religion, which is revelation. No religion can be persuasive unless it relies on the principle of revelation. All true men reveal God, but the completest carrier of revelation can be no other, or less than a chosen personality. This is the Christian conception. The nobler the person, the truer the revelation.

It will be a noble resolution for every Seventy to say to himself: "I shall read more diligently and more deeply the Holy Scriptures than ever before." The Holy Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price are not intended for the few. Their subject-matter constitutes truth, necessary for us all. Every quorum of seventy will from now on become a study group, where vital truths are discussed. It is within such a group that men are stimulated to think and to converse in preparation for the teaching of the gospel. At a time when so much of our world literature is strangely blind to the glory and excellence of human nature at best, we should dedicate ourselves again to the study of the truths and the beauties and holiness of the sacred word of God.

MISSION OF SEVENTIES

The Seventies, because of their calling, have a high mission set before them. They should resolve that they will develop their mental and spiritual powers toward maturity and learn to have communion with great souls through the reading of their messages of truth. The habit of reading must be formed as early in life as possible. A few minutes every day will soon be a great many hours. Do not miss the thoughts of men who have lived in former times. Broaden your understanding, enliven your sympathy for other peoples and their ways of living. Make your own lives richer and deeper by learning other ideas and visions of people. Read good books. Read them again and again until you have drawn the essence of thought and feeling from them. These are some of the reasons why the Prophet Joseph Smith wrote:

... seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith, (D. & C. 88:118.)

Joy will be the characteristic of the quorums of Seventy so long as they are growing, expanding, and creating healthfully. When they cease to grow, they cease to live. God sent us into the world to create and to enrich our own personality in the process. Yet we have to rely on God's help to make anything worth making. If we devote ourselves to God, we must see to it that we have ourselves to devote. "Self consecration is not a negative thing: it is a very positive thing," says a noted evangelist. This leads us to the knowledge that what we are is more important than what we do or say. If we are really wise in our concepts of God, then our thoughts lie deeply, though often misunderstood. It takes deep thoughts to understand the depths of the message of divine truth. For this reason the brethren can hear God speak, and those whose hearts God has touched can find their way easily to the hearts of others.

TRUE TO REVEALED WORD

In the difficult times that surround us today, the brethren holding the priesthood of God must, above all things, be true to the word of God as revealed by the Master and as revealed today. The words of truth are ever the same. Love, joy, peace, faith, humility; these are the characteristic Christian ideas. How beautiful are the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith when he said:

... O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day. * * *

And faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualify him for the work.

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. (D. & C. 4:2, 5-6.)

Herein is the Prophet conveying the charm of his teachings and an heroic conception of the good in life. His concept of the Christian virtues and graces is noble and comprehensive. He exalted and glorified the principles of morals as given by the Savior of the world, and aroused the adoration of men for the gospel which is the only road to peace. It is the mission of the Seventies and all who hold the priesthood to stimulate healthy and majestic ideals through self-discipline and the knowledge that in "pure religion and undefiled," is life eternal.

A testimony, my brethren, of the truthfulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ is a sacred trust. It can come only to one who has opened his heart and mind to hallowed living with earnest prayer and deep faith in the Living God. It is the most divine gift of all. "For it is faith and not wisdom which carrieth the key to the kingdom of heaven," says Sholem Asch.

Sir Francis Drake in admonishing his men, said:

Men pass away, but people abide. See that ye hold fast the heritage we leave you, yea, and teach your children its value, that never in the coming centuries their hearts may fail them, or their hands grow weak. Hitherto we have been too much afraid. Henceforth, we will fear only God.

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

As President McKay indicated in his opening remarks, at times these conferences seem to come rather close together, and this is one of those times. I earnestly hope and pray to be given utterance on this occasion. I feel at home within these walls, but the impact of this congregation is something for which I am never quite prepared. It has been my privilege for many years to frequent this building and these grounds, and I have a growing love of them and a growing feeling of peace and appreciation here. They speak of great things of the past and of great things of the future—and I have great faith in the future. I have great faith in the ultimate accomplishment of the purposes of Providence, in spite of the foolishness of men. It is a glorious world in spite of many man-made troubles.

ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES

One of the things that happens in this world every day of which I think we are not too well aware is the going and coming of tens of thousands of people—the arrivals of newcomers and the departures of those who have finished their sojourn here, for a time at least. It is an ever-startling fact to me that about one hundred fifty thousand people arrive in this world every day, and that more than eighty thousand leave this world every day, leaving a total increase in world population every day of some seventy thousand.*

President Smith has spoken this morning of the number of people we have in the southern California area. There are more than that who are added (increase in population, that is), to this scene every day, and more than three times that, maybe four times that, who are newcomers. Think what that means in terms of reaching and teaching some hundred and fifty thousand new arrivals every day!

I am reminded of another physical fact to which I invited the attention of some of my brethren a few weeks ago: Hendrick Van Loon has dramatized the fact that physically, in bulk at least, men don't amount to much. Mr. Van Loon invites our attention to the fact that if someone were to make a crate measuring one-half mile in all dimensions, in other words, a one-half mile hollow cube, all the human family now living could be put into it, and it could be dropped into the Grand Canyon and wouldn't be noticed very much.

If someone had actually done that, this world would have been saved a good deal of trouble; but we also would have been deprived of much glorious living and accomplishment and achievement in accordance with the plans and purposes of our Father in heaven. It is his declared purpose to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man, and he has been patient with our imperfections, and long-suffering, and has given us the ever-present possibility of repentance. I hope we shall all be as patient and understanding with the imperfections of one another as our Father has been with us.

TIME IS THE ESSENCE

There is another physical fact that comes to mind, and that is that time is the essence of all our opportunities. It is the dimension in which we live. We can't speed it up, and we can't slow it down. We can't save it, and we can't hoard it. It is, in a sense, like manna from heaven. The Lord allots us a day's supply at a time; and in the ordinary course of life, allowing man his traditional scriptural three score and ten, we may calculate that each of us might expect on an average about twenty-five thousand days. I think when we reduce our life-span and our opportunities here to twenty-five thousand days, we may think more seriously of some of the things to which we give our time. We can spend it doing one thing or doing another, reading some things or reading other things, with some people or with other people, and I earnestly hope that we may give the time test to all we do and to all we think and to all our goings and comings.

*Some authorities put these figures higher and some lower. These are estimated by Claron E. Nelson, University of Utah, from the United Nations Monthly Bulletin of Statistics, April 1949, and from other sources.

THE USE OF TRUTH

Another fact that I should like to speak of in passing is that there is no assurance of superiority so far as I know, to any person or to any people, except on the basis of a superior performance. I know of no assured blessings except on conditions of obedience, and I hope we shan't take undue pride in the mere possession of truth. Our pride should come, if indeed it should come at all, and our gratitude likewise, in the use of truth, and not merely in its possession.

I am reminded of a story that President Grant frequently told, quoting from old Bishop Hunter: "Don't get the bighead. The bighead has ruined more people in this Church than any one thing—except sin." There is no more virtue in the mere possession of truth than there is in the mere possession of food. Neither will save a man unless he uses it, and uses it wisely, and I earnestly pray that we may, as a people, with the knowledge that we have, demonstrate that we know what to do with it by living a superior way of life, individually and as a group.

I earnestly hope, in closing, that our young people may be encouraged as they go forth to live their lives. I repeat that I have great faith in the future and in the ultimate purposes of our Father in heaven and in the future accomplishments of our young people. As Thomas Carlyle wrote one time: "The crash of the whole solar and stellar systems could only kill you once"—but we certainly don't want to sit around waiting for it to happen!

I hope that our young people will go forth and prepare and plan and live their lives and make their homes and rear their families with faith in God and with faith in the future. No doubt men will make more trouble (to paraphrase an old saying, "People are more trouble than anyone"), but no doubt also, we will gain much always by living our lives, by building on a solid basis, and keeping our houses in order and preparing solidly for all future events; and whatever the eventualities are, we can accept them with faith and confidence in the promises and purposes of our Father in heaven.

May God help us so to do, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren, sisters, and radio listeners: It is unlikely that any of you listening to addresses made in this conference expect to hear any new doctrine announced at this time; yet we do teach that God "will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" (Ninth Article of Faith) when it suits his purpose. We already have doctrines, principles, and policies enough to challenge the best and ablest among us to learn and live in harmony with them.

But we need to be reminded of them frequently and encouraged to be more diligent in implementing them in our lives. The Lord well knew this need when he required us to attend sacrament meetings frequently and renew our covenants. I pray that the Lord will help me in an effort to stir us up to remembrance.

CHARACTERISTIC DOCTRINES

As is generally known, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is set off from all other churches—Christian and non-Christian alike—by many characteristic doctrines and teachings. We hold firmly to the doctrine that the Holy Trinity is made up of three separate and distinct personal Beings—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—in whose image we ourselves are created, as declared in Genesis 1:27. Notwithstanding the vast majority of civilized people, including nearly all Christians, reject the teaching that God is a personal Being, the truth of the matter is not in the least affected by this rejection.

In the fifteenth century the world believed the earth was flat, Columbus, that it was round. Who was right? The claim that Joseph Smith, a fourteen-year-old boy actually saw and heard two glorious personal Beings—the Father and the Son, who appeared in answer to his humble prayer for wisdom—is a basic truth in Mormonism, the validity of which is not affected even though disbelieved by the vast majority of civilized men. Can any unbiased, intelligent mind, untouched in the matter by the teachings of others, reading the Bible from cover to cover, get any other idea of God than that he is a personal Being in the image of which we ourselves were created? Yet I quote the following from a book that aims to teach a worldwide accepted view:

God is spirit, or the creative energy which is the cause of all visible things. God as spirit is the invisible life and intelligence underlying all physical things. . . . God is not a being or person having life, intelligence, love power. God is that invisible, intangible, something we call life. . . . Childlike, untrained minds say God is a personal being. The statement that God is principle chills them, and in terror they cry out, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him!" Broader and more learned minds are always cramped by the thought of God as a person, for personality limits to place and time. God is the name we give to that unchangeable, inexorable principle at the source of all existence. (Lessons in Truth, H. Emilie Cady.)

NEW REVELATION GIVEN

Between this idea of God and that taught by Joseph Smith, there is the wide difference that exists between fancy and fact, between the false and the true. And because the modern world was engulfed in this stupefying fancy and falsehood, it was absolutely necessary that God should give a new revelation of himself that his children here in mortality might have a true and solid basis for their faith in him. But why did he not give this revelation through some world-renowned scholar instead of an obscure, worldly-ignorant fourteen-year-old boy—to one whom the world would accept rather than reject? Was there such a scholar who could qualify as to the statement of the Apostle James which says:

Sunday, April 3

First Day

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him?

However, there was a condition attached:

But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

For let not that man think he shall receive any thing of the Lord. (James 1:5-7.)

The humble, unspoiled boy Joseph, could qualify. What renowned scholar could? The Lord said to Joseph:

... I raised you up, that I might show forth my wisdom through the weak things of the earth." (D. & C. 124:1.)

Yes, as I have formerly said in this pulpit, in answer to his humble prayer, Joseph Smith received, so far as the records indicate, the most glorious vision ever given to man in mortality. For, looking up in the pillar of light enveloping him, he both saw and heard the Father and the Son, two highly glorious Personages, in the very image in which we are created. This is a fact; this is the truth, the world to the contrary notwithstanding. In great humility and extreme thankfulness we accept of these things and testify most sincerely of their reality.

KNOWLEDGE OF TRUTH

But how may we know? the doubter may ask. When in answer to the Master's question, Peter replied, "... Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," what did Jesus say?

... Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. (Matt. 16:16-17.)

And Moroni wrote in the last chapter of the Book of Mormon:

And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. (Moroni 10:4-5; see also I Cor. 2:11-13.)

It is by the power of the Holy Ghost that great multitudes of Church members testify that they really know that God lives. And I am one of that number. Did not Jesus have this method of knowing in mind when he said:

... My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.
If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. (John 7:16-17.)

SATAN THE DEVIL

Now there is another personality of which I desire to speak, one that the world calls by a name, but in whose reality as a personal Being it does not believe and that person is Satan, the Devil. But according to our understanding and teaching, Satan is a person with a spirit body, in form like that of all other men. He is a spirit brother of ours and of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is our Elder Brother in the spirit world. The earth was in course of development for the abode of man in mortality. A Redeemer was to be sent down and make it possible for the Father's children to return to him. Lucifer, a son of the morning, a bright and certainly very ambitious individual, said to the Father:

... here I am, send me ... and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost ... ; wherefore give me time honor [power].

Lucifer's offer was rejected; it involved taking from man his God-given free agency which is granted to everyone born into mortality. Jesus said to the Father, send me,

... thy will be done and the glory be thine forever. (Moses 4:1-2.)

And Jesus became our Redeemer. Lucifer, his name was changed to Satan, the Devil, and his sympathizers rebelled and were cast out down to earth where they have been ever since. (See Rev. 12:7-9.)

Now, the means Lucifer proposed to use to get all the Father's children returned to him—force—has been the means he has used ever since, whenever he has had the power. But of course he operates through those whom he can influence. An Omaha evening paper carried a lead editorial in its issue, of the last Saturday in August, 1941, entitled "Hitler, the Devil Incarnate." Hitler, as all the world now know, taught and believed in the use of power whenever it was necessary to reach his objectives. Satan, through his agents, has always done and is doing the same thing today. We see it being done in many different places and in various ways—locally, nationally, and internationally. Struggles for power and staying in positions of power are everywhere in evidence. And when power is obtained it is commonly used to force obedience to unrighteous, if not positively wicked, demands. Needless to specify, for we see cases in evidence somewhere every day, in this country, as well as abroad. But wherever they exist they will generally be found on close examination to stem from sources where selfish, greedy, and unrighteous motives dominate—to sources, therefore, that are Satan inspired. And the agencies operating under this wicked influence are steadily growing more numerous and more powerful, making the future of America more dark and precarious. Unless this rapidly developing tendency changes for the better, the time is probably not far away when the America of the fathers, the America where free enterprise with all its associated blessings of personal freedom and liberty for its citizens, will have been relegated to the pages of history. And is it not strange, very strange, from the standpoint of reason and logic, that the means and the conditions by which and under which America has grown to be the greatest, the most powerful, and the most prosperous nation on earth have become odious to vast numbers of our people, who therefore are scheming, planning, working, hoping, even praying, for changes that would put an end to America as "the land of the free and the home of the brave"? Among all the unrighteous organized agencies now working in the world to further the cause of Satan, perhaps the largest and most wicked are those given to the cause of communism. Communism is organized wickedness and crime of the blackest type. Harsh terms, certainly! Its objectives are confiscation of property, robbery of those who have, slavery of its productive workers, and death to its opponents. Its beneficiaries are ne'er-do-wells, those who own nothing, but want everything, especially power and its emoluments.

Sunday, April 3First Day

SATAN'S PURPOSE

What is the explanation of all this? I think that it lies in the fact that Satan has more influence and power in the world today than ever before. And Satan's purpose is to overcome righteousness, to entice God's children into ways of sin, misery, and suffering, to handicap those who would do good, and to darken the minds of those who would like to know what is best in the great confusion of conflicting ideas. And so struggles and conflicts multiply with the result that men's hearts are failing them. Selfishness is growing. Demands are increasing for more and more for less and less—more pay, less work—for more privileges, but fewer responsibilities. Merit as a condition for reward is disappearing and Satan is riding high.

Now Latter-day Saints, what shall we do, conditions being what they are? Shall we compromise our principles and standards, give up the struggle against sin and evil and let life move on more smoothly in this sinful world? No, never. Our faith is immovably based upon truth and reality—a living, personal God, who through Joseph Smith and his associates, set up his Church, gave it principles, laws, standards, and his priesthood (authority to act for him), thus qualifying it to work for him and his righteous ways for the good, benefit, and blessing of his children. But we need more faith in these realities, more devotion to the cause which we are privileged to represent, stronger wills to resist the allurements of evil, and more persistent, unselfish efforts to live righteously every day. I repeat, our religion is a very practical thing, for it must enter into every phase of our daily lives if we would live in harmony with its teachings and receive the rewards of obedience. And failing to do this, we more or less forfeit God's promise of blessings; for he has said:

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise. (D. & C. 82:10.)

MORAL STANDARDS

We must ever keep in mind the moral standards of the Church as expressed in articles eleven, twelve, and thirteen of our faith which require us to be tolerant (Article 11), loyal to the country under the flag of which we live, to obey, honor, and sustain the law (Article 12), and to be ... honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men. (Article 13.)

Indeed the moral standards of the Church require us to set up the Golden Rule as an ideal which we should diligently try to live in all of our relations with our fellow men. These are not things of which we just talk on Sunday, but things we are required to implement in our daily lives.

Now I warn again that Satan, a personal being, is very alert and with a mighty host of his angels—spirit relatives of ours—in trying to overcome us and all others who would serve God and live righteously. As examples of yielding to evil influences, we have desecration of the Sabbath day, the use of harmful narcotics, failure to live sexual moral standards and indulgence in other wicked ways—all on the increase among us. Latter-day Saints may not go on Sunday to movies, to baseball, football, or basketball games, or to any other kind of commercial entertainments, or engage in avoidable commercial activities, or go hunting, fishing, golfing, or skiing on this day without violating the holiness of the Sabbath. Who said so? The First Presidency of the Church. They said so in an editorial published in The Deseret News, September 1, 1928. And when the First Presidency speak unitedly on any question of our religious doctrines, or how we should live in harmony with these doctrines, that is the voice of the Church, the voice of authority. To loyal Latter-day Saints, it is, in a sense, the voice of God; for he has said "if ye are not one ye are not mine." (D. & C. 38:27.)

Brethren and sisters, let us be honest with ourselves and with our God and strive with more determination and persistence to do his will that life may be more full and happy, with righteous living more in evidence. I pray that God will help us to do these things in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This afternoon's session will be broadcast over the same stations that I named this morning as carrying the full day's sessions. We should like the audience to be seated not later than ten minutes before the session begins this afternoon. We would like to caution all of you, and particularly those of you who come from out of town, drive carefully. Winter has left its ravages in our streets. They are being repaired as rapidly as possible but you are likely to come upon places that are in bad condition unawares and so drive carefully so as to avoid accidents.

Messages that have come during the conference will be broadcast over the air on the grounds at the conclusion of these services.

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing "The Lord's Prayer." The closing prayer will be offered by President Whitaker, president of the Pocatello Stake.

---

The Choir sang "The Lord's Prayer."

President William P. Whitaker of the Pocatello Stake offered the closing prayer.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

FIRST DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

Conference reconvened at 2:00 p.m., Sunday, April 3, 1949.

Again the Tabernacle was crowded to capacity, and as was the condition at the morning meeting, the Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle was crowded with people who listened to and watched the services in the Tabernacle as they were broadcast and televised. Thousands of others assembled on the grounds and enjoyed the services by means of amplifying equipment that had been installed.

President George Albert Smith was at home, resting. President David O. McKay, second counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

President David O. McKay:

This is the second session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

President Smith thinks it wise for him to rest this afternoon and has asked his second counselor to conduct the exercises.

Of the General Authorities Elder Matthew Cowley is absent in New Zealand at the present time; Elder Alma Sonne is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; President George F. Richards is resting at home at the suggestion of his doctor.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangements with KSL over the following stations: KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KVNU at Logan, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa and KEXO at Grand Junction, by transcription.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loudspeaking system on the grounds. Everyone will do well to listen carefully to such announcements and may I call your attention particularly to the announcement regarding "The Vigil," a very appropriate play for this season, being presented Tuesday afternoon and evening at Kingsbury Hall by the University Players. It pertains to the resurrection of Christ.

The singing for this session will be by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner will be at the organ.

We shall begin these services by the Tabernacle Choir rendering "Halleluja."

Following that the opening prayer will be offered by President George M. Anderson of the Moroni Stake.

---

Singing "Halleluja" by the Choir.

Elder George M. Anderson, president of Moroni Stake offered the invocation.

Singing by the Choir "Hosanna."

ELDER THOMAS E. McKAY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

Such inspirational music as our wonderful choir always furnishes brings us near to our Father in heaven.

I was impressed also, as were you, with the opening prayer. I trust it may be answered, especially in my behalf. I believe in prayer, the power of prayer; and I sincerely desire, my brethren and sisters, and would appreciate a silent prayer at this time by all of you in my behalf.

I am happy that the mission presidents and their wives are with us in this conference. The mission presidents depend so much upon their wives that I am sure they are all happy that their wives were also invited to come to this conference. The more I associate with you mission presidents and you stake presidencies, the more convinced I am that the leaders who are responsible for calling you are inspired of God.

MEXICAN MISSION

Sister McKay and I just recently returned from a tour of the Mexican Mission where President Arwell L. Pierce and his lovely wife are in charge. They have done and are doing a wonderful work. It was one delightful surprise after another to go through their mission with them. We were delighted to meet so many fine missionaries there—142 of them—and twenty of those 142 we were glad to find were native Mexicans, full-time missionaries, and doing a splendid work. With the experience that these young people are getting, I am sure they will be future leaders, not only of the Church but will also perhaps occupy state and federal positions.

We were delighted also to find several very fine meetinghouses with chapels not too large, commodious recreation halls, classrooms, baptismal font, Relief Society rooms with modern kitchens adjoining. The architecture is Spanish and with the red-tiled roofs and the white walls these meetinghouses stand out as monuments of good fellowship. The new chapel at Cuautla dedicated last year by President McKay has now been parked with a hedge, shrubbery, trees, and lawn, under the direction of Brother Abegg, who has supervision of the buildings and grounds, and it is now referred to proudly by the citizens as the "House Beautiful." Splendid progress is being made especially by applying the program of the M.I.A., supervised recreation. The Spanish people love to sing and to dance. Their Gold and Green balls are outstanding, as are also their quartets, their choruses, and their athletics. Basketball has swept into the Mexican republic, and our missionaries are leading in that sport. They have played in two leagues and won the championship in both. The last one was in Mexico City. The final game of the series was being played. The score had been tied several times; and now with only four minutes to play, our team was behind. The captain, a sweet character, called time out. He said, "We got our heads together, Brother McKay, and we prayed." God bless him. They won the game by one point. They are making many friends also with their English classes. In Morelia, for example, a college town where they have been working less than a year, a meeting was arranged, and a program given by investigators. We have only two members there. They have an advanced English class and a beginners class. There were sixty-two at that meeting so they are making fine progress.

The mission home is a credit to the Church, beautifully located in a new residential section. It is what I call an ideal mission home, not just a place for the mission president and his wife, but a place where the missionaries are made to feel at home. Sister Pierce in her quiet, generous way, looking after everybody, can always make room for one more. When missionaries are ailing, they are brought to the home and nursed back to health. They are made to feel welcome. Each morning at seven o'clock a class in Spanish is held for the office force and those who are there recuperating. At eight o'clock the gong sounds; they come to breakfast; they sing a song around the piano and stand in a circle, and each one repeats in Spanish a passage of scripture he must learn by heart, then they kneel in a circle in prayer. I think that prayer circle does more for these missionaries who are recuperating and probably a little discouraged and homesick, maybe lovesick, than almost anything else.

POWER IN PRAYER

Yes, there is power in prayer. I thought while participating in the fine spirit of those mission home prayers of an evil that has been referred to here already—the divorce evil. A menace to the very foundation of our government, of our civilization; it seems that the devil is using this weapon of divorce overtime, and I believe that if a survey were made, very few, if any; of those thousands of couples who are applying for divorce would be found praying together, or who are having family prayer. I think prayer is a remedy for divorce.

One writer, in speaking of prayer, puts it this way, and I like it:

The most unused resource in the world today is prayer. The greatest undeveloped resource is faith and the greatest unused resource is prayer.

I like that, referring to faith and prayer as resources. I hope, in our Church, that is not true, but that prayer as a resource is used, and I am sure it is. Quite a number of articles are being written in our leading magazines and even books on "Back to God," "The Need of Religion," etc. I think it is a wholesome indication. I received something the other day from one of my very dear friends, who calls on me occasionally and always brings me something worth while; he is ninety-two years old now. He said he has had ninety-two birthdays but is not nearly that old. He said, "I have here something, Brother McKay, that I think you will like on prayer." He said, "It is a clipping from one of our local papers." It is from Dr. Alexis Carrel, who is famed the world over after thirty-three years of biological research work in the famous Rockefeller Institute.

QUOTATIONS ON PRAYER

He says:

Prayer is not only worship, but it is also the most powerful form of energy that one can generate. The influence of prayer on the human mind and body is as demonstrable as that of secreting glands. Its results can be measured in terms of increased physical buoyancy, greater intellectual vigor, moral stamina, and a deeper understanding of the realities underlying human relations.

If you make a habit of sincere prayer your life will be very noticeably and profoundly altered. Prayer stamps with its indelible mark our actions and demeanor. A tranquility of bearing, a facial and bodily repose are observed in those whose inner lives are thus enriched. Within the depths of his consciousness a flame kindles, and man sees himself—his selfishness, his silly pride, his fear, his blunders. He develops a sense of moral obligation, intellectual humility. Thus begins a journey of the soul toward the realm of peace.

Prayer is a force as real as terrestrial gravity. As a physician I have seen men, after all other therapy had failed, lifted out of disease and melancholy by the serene effort of prayer.

Prayer is the effort of man to reach God, to commune with an invisible being, creator of all things, supreme wisdom, truth, beauty and strength, father and redeemer.

Today as never before, prayer is a binding necessity in the lives of men and nations. The lack of emphasis on the religious sense has brought the world to the edge of destruction. Our deepest sense of power and perfection has been left miserably undeveloped. Prayer, the basic exercise of the spirit, must be actively practiced in our lives. The neglected soul of man must be made strong enough to assert itself once more. For if the power of prayer is again released and used in the lives of common men and women, if the spirit declares its aims clearly and boldly, there is yet hope that our prayers for a better world may be answered.

That from a scientist, brothers and sisters.

This same dear friend of mine called my attention to an article, in the December number, I think, of the Arizona Highways on "Look to the Skies." It is a very well-written article, well worth reading, and in speaking of the skies, it reminded me of a poem that I read and used just at the close of the war. It is a poem that was found on the body of a dead soldier. He wrote it just before the zero hour. It refers to the skies and to the power of prayer in taking away fear.

... And God Was There

Look, God, I have never spoken to you,
But now I want to say, "How do you do?"
You see, God, they told me you didn't exist,
And, like a fool, I believed all this.

Last night from the shell hole I saw your sky—
I figured right then they had told me a lie.
Had I taken time to see things you made,
I'd have known they weren't calling a spade a spade.

I wonder, God, if you'd shake my hand.
Somehow I feel that you will understand.
Funny I had to come to this hellish place
Before I had time to see your face.

Well, I guess there isn't much more to say,
But I'm sure glad, God, I met you today
I guess the "zero hour" will soon be here,
But I'm not afraid since I know you're near.

The signal! Well, God I'll have to go;
I like you lots, this I want you to know.
Look, now, this will be a horrible fight—
Who knows, I may come to your house tonight.

Though I wasn't friendly to you before,
 I wonder, God, if you'd wait at your door.
 Look, I'm crying! Me! Shedding tears—
 I wish I had known you these many years

Well, I have to go now, God, good-bye!
 Strange, since I met you, I'm not afraid to die.

THE MASTER'S PRAYER

Our Master, just before his zero hour, spent the night in the garden in prayer. We are told that he shed drops of blood, but the concluding words of that prayer show that he received his strength. ". . . not my will, but thine, be done" (Luke 22:42) were his concluding words and then on the cross:

Father forgive them; for they know not what they do. (Ibid., 23:-34.)

We are here today, brethren and sisters, because this great Church of ours has been organized—a wonderful organization—established for the last time, never to be taken away from the earth or given to another people, and all in answer to a prayer, a prayer in a garden, the Sacred Grove. Yes, there is power in prayer, and I trust that we will look up brethren and sisters, look up to the skies, that from now on that statement that prayer is the most unused resource of the world will not, at least, apply to Latter-day Saints and also the saying that people use their prayers very much as a spare tire, only in times of emergency, when we are sick or have trouble. May that also not be true of us, but may we pray always and live, as we pray so that we, too, can say, "Not my will, O Lord, but thine be done," I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

In 1832, in what is designated a revelation on priesthood, the Lord spoke rather sharply, referring to the whole Church as being under condemnation because of their unbelief and because they had treated lightly the things they had received; and this condemnation he said,

. . . resteth upon the children of Zion, even all.
 And they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written. (D. & C. 84:56-57.)

GOSPEL FUNDAMENTALS

Brother Merrill's statement this morning that he was not going to teach anything new, recalled to my mind a conversation he and

Sunday, April 3First Day

I had on the way home from a conference assignment a few weeks ago. I said, "Brother Merrill, have you a subject for me to discuss at the general conference?"

"Well, Brother Romney," he answered, "I can tell you this, that neither you nor I are under any responsibility to teach any new doctrine. I am going to talk about some fundamental principle of the gospel."

In thinking over the fundamentals of the gospel, the fundamentals of the restoration, I remembered that in point of time the first great fundamental received was the vision of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Following that vision came the Book of Mormon, given to the world as a revelation from God. I remembered, too, that six months ago President George Albert Smith, speaking to the General Authorities of the Church and mentioning some subjects that might be discussed at conference time, referred to the Book of Mormon. It is about the Book of Mormon I want to talk today. I do so with just one objective in mind: To get you to read it.

I have read it a little, I believe in it, and I love it. I recommend that every person within the sound of my voice read the Book of Mormon. I can testify, as did Nephi, that the things written therein persuadeth all men to do good. It will enrich the life of every person who will read it, unless he is in rebellion against the truth; and in that event it will advise him of his awful fate unless he changes his ways.

Very early in my life I became somewhat acquainted with the Book of Mormon. The other day while going through some old records, I found a notebook I had used while in high school in one of the Church academies. In it I had written a short outline of each chapter in the Book of Mormon. I appreciate that training.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

A few years ago as I began to practice law, members of my family were a little uneasy. They were afraid I would lose my faith. I wanted to practice law, but I had an even greater desire to keep my testimony, and so I decided upon a little procedure which I recommend to you. For thirty minutes each morning before I began the day's work I read from the Book of Mormon—I read also from all the other standard works of the Church, but I am talking now about the Book of Mormon—and in just a few minutes a day I read the Book of Mormon through, every year, for nine years. I know that it kept me in harmony, so far as I did keep in harmony, with the Spirit of the Lord.

Now I want to tell you a few reasons why I think you and I should read the Book of Mormon. I hope that while doing so, I shall enjoy the spirit of the Book of Mormon.

I do not know any single verse which impresses the spirit of the Book of Mormon on me more than the first verse of the last chapter of Second Nephi. As that great prophet approached the close of his record, he said:

And now I, Nephi, cannot write all the things which were taught among my people; neither am I mighty in writing, like unto speaking;

My, how I would have enjoyed hearing him speak! When I read his writings, they well-nigh overcome me. In the following words he gives the key to his powerful speaking:

... for when a man speaketh by the power of the Holy Ghost the power of the Holy Ghost carrieth it unto the hearts of the children of men, (II Nephi 33:1.)

I pray that while I speak I shall have the spirit of the Holy Ghost, and I pray that you will have the same spirit, that we may all be edified.

The first reason for reading the Book of Mormon which I want to mention is that it is approved by the highest authority in the universe, the Lord himself. He said to the Prophet Joseph Smith, "Behold, thou wast called and chosen to write the Book of Mormon." (D. & C. 24: 1.) Later on, when the Prophet Joseph Smith received the record, the Lord said that he was given

... power to translate through the mercy of God, by the power of God, the Book of Mormon. (Ibid., 1:29.)

After the Prophet Joseph had translated that part of the record which he had been told to translate, the Lord said: "... and as your Lord and Your God liveth it is true," (Ibid., 17:6) and "... contains the truth and the word of God." (Ibid., 19:26.)

Here are some more things the Lord said about it:

... a record of a fallen people, and the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles and to the Jews also. (Ibid., 20:9.)

And the Book of Mormon and the holy scriptures are given of me for your instruction. (Ibid., 33:16.)

... the elders, priests and teachers of this Church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon. (Ibid., 42:12.)

WITNESS FOR BIBLE

Another reason I like the Book of Mormon and want you to read it is that it will sustain you against attacks being made by the modernists against that other great scripture, the Bible. The Book of Mormon is not only a new witness for God; it is also a witness to the truth of the Bible. If I had the time, I could give you many specific instances on that point. The Book of Mormon accepts the Bible unreservedly as the word of God. It accepts the five books of Moses as having been written by Moses. This the modernists deny. It accepts the great prophecies of Isaiah as the prophecies of the son of Amos. The resurrected Lord himself said, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, "Great are the words of Isaiah," and he advises us to read them. Further, this Book of Mormon, the doctrines in it will sustain you against many false doctrines that are current in the world today.

Sunday, April 3First Day

MAN'S MORAL RESPONSIBILITY

About two weeks ago, I sat in a group where a learned man was directing a discussion. He presented the modern doctrine that there is no personal responsibility for wrongdoing. I have heard that doctrine pressed so far as to hold that if a man commits a crime—lies, steals, commits adultery, or even murders—he has no personal responsibility for his act, but that it is the responsibility of society. I compared that evil doctrine with the teachings Lehi gave to his sons as he was about to go down into his grave. I remember how he taught his sons that men were placed upon the earth between good and evil, that they were sufficiently taught to know the difference between them, that they were endowed by their Creator with power to act for themselves, and that they are held responsible for their decisions and actions. And as the Lord liveth, that doctrine is true. Lehi carefully instructed his sons on these important principles under which they were to live and under which all people on the earth are to live. He taught them that there was an opposition in all things, as Brother Merrill explained this morning, the power of evil and the power of good. He told them that they were

... free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life; ... or to choose captivity and death. (11 Nephi 2:27.)

This doctrine that man is not morally responsible for his own acts, which is gaining wide acceptance in the world today, is the doctrine of the evil one. If you will read the Book of Mormon, you will be convinced of that, and you will have a defense against it if you will accept the Book of Mormon.

GREAT AMERICAN BOOK

Now, I like the Book of Mormon, and you will like it, because it is a great American book. It was written in America, by Americans, for Americans. It has peculiar application to America. It is not full of foreign ideologies and uninspired interpretations of men. I believe that I am within the mark when I say that between the pages of that great book there is more ultimate truth about the overall history of America than there is in any other book and, I will go so far as to say, more than in all the libraries of the world where there isn't a Book of Mormon.

In it the history of this great land of America is foretold. Up until 420 A.D. the coming to pass of the history as it was foretold was faithfully recorded by the historians who witnessed it. We who are acquainted with the Book of Mormon know that the history of America from 421 A.D. to the present time is clearly foretold therein—the long withholding of the knowledge of the land from the Gentiles, the coming of Columbus as referred to by President Levi Edgar Young this morning, the coming of the Pilgrim fathers, the establishment of this great nation, the ushering in of this great last dispensation. All these things are there foretold as clearly as anyone can write them now after they have transpired. The coming to pass of these great prophecies of the Book of Mormon is an evidence of its divinity which the world cannot destroy.

Of the future of America the Book of Mormon gives some wonderful views. I have not time to go into them in detail, but I would to our Father in heaven that the people who have the management of this nation would become acquainted with them. The Book of Mormon advises us that Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, is the God of this land and that he has said some very definite things about the future of America. Our own nation has a great stake in that future. If we will live the laws that the God of this land teaches in the Book of Mormon, we can participate in the realization of the marvelous promises made for the future of America. Here the New Jerusalem shall arise, and Christ shall come and bring peace to the earth.

INSPIRATION OF TEACHING

Now, I like the Book of Mormon, and you will like it, too, for the courage and the strength it inspires in times of discouragement and stress. Consider as an example a few incidents from the life of Nephi, whom I love and whom you will love, too, I'm sure, if you become well acquainted with him.

You will recall how, when he came down from the mountain where he had been praying to the Lord, he found his elder brothers whining because the Lord had told them to go up to Jerusalem and get the brass plates. He did not join in their whining. When he learned of the commandment, he said unto his father:

... I will go and do the things which the Lord hath commanded, for I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commanded them. (1 Nephi 3:7.)

When they reached Jerusalem, Laman was chosen to go into the city and get the record from Laban. He did not get it, however, because he knew he could not get it. When Laban said to him, "You are a robber, and I will slay thee," he ran. Arriving outside the city walls, Laman, with Lemuel, wanted to go down into the wilderness to their father without the record, but Nephi said:

Sunday, April 3

First Day

... As the Lord liveth, and as we live, we will not go down unto our father in the wilderness until we have accomplished the thing which the Lord hath commanded us, (Ibid., 3:15.)

Yielding to Nephi, they went to their former home and gathered up their precious possessions which they offered for the records. Pursued by Laban's guard, they abandoned their wealth and fled for their lives. Again the elder brothers desired to return to their father in the wilderness. They spoke harsh words to Nephi and so severely whipped him that an angel came and corrected them. After the angel had departed, Laman and Lemuel continued to murmur, saying:

... How is it possible that the Lord will deliver Laban into our hands? Behold, he is a mighty man, and he can command fifty, yea, even he can slay fifty; then why not us?

And it came to pass that I [Nephi] spake unto my brethren, saying: Let us go up again unto Jerusalem, and let us be faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord; for behold he is mightier than all the earth, then why not mightier than Laban and his fifty, yea, or even than his tens of thousands. (Ibid., 3:31; 4:1.)

Nephi finally went in alone and came back with the plates. He had faith; he had courage; and with the help of Almighty God he accomplished the thing which he had been sent to do.

One of the most outstanding faith-promoting statements of Nephi was made when they reached the border of the sea after they had been in the wilderness for eight years. The Lord told him to build a ship. He did not have any ore or tools or material with which to build the ship but, nothing daunting, he went into the mountain and dug out the required ore. From the skins of animals he made a bellows with which to blow the fire, which he started by striking two stones together. As he made preparations to build the ship, his brothers said of him:

... Our brother is a fool, for he thinketh that he can build a ship; yea, and he also thinketh that he can cross these great waters. (Ibid., 17:17.)

Mistaking his sorrowing over their misconduct for discouragement, they taunted him. He then stood up in the power of the spirit and said unto them:

... If God had commanded me to do all things I could do them. If he should command me that I should say unto this water, be thou earth, it should be earth; and if I should say it, it would be done. (Ibid., 17:-50.)

Here is an example of faith and courage which, if we can emulate, will do much to help us through our doubting and discouragement, for we serve the same God that Nephi served, and He will sustain us even as he sustained Nephi if we will serve him even as Nephi served him.

READING ENJOINED

I urge you to get acquainted with this great book. Read it to your children; they are not too young to understand it. I remember reading it with one of my lads when he was very young. On one occasion I lay in the lower bunk and he in the upper bunk. We were each reading aloud alternate paragraphs of those last three marvelous chapters of Second Nephi. I heard his voice breaking and thought he had a cold, but we went on to the end of the three chapters. As we finished he said to me, "Daddy, do you ever cry when you read the Book of Mormon?"

"Yes, Son," I answered. "Sometimes the Spirit of the Lord so witnesses to my soul that the Book of Mormon is true that I do cry."

"Well," he said, "that is what happened to me tonight."

I know not all of them will respond like that, but I know that some of them will, and I tell you this book was given to us of God to read and to live by, and it will hold us as close to the Spirit of the Lord as anything I know. Won't you please read it?

God bless you. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

I wish to acknowledge all that has been said so far in this conference and ask that I shall also have a portion of your faith and prayers in my behalf, as has been requested in the prayers of this conference.

I am sure there is no happier gathering than we have here today, for I don't think there are any happier people than those who are active, faithful members of the Church. Inasmuch as we have gathered here together to receive of more encouragement and help in performing our responsibilities in the work of the Lord, I am sure the Lord will answer that prayer for us.

I am happy in my testimony of the gospel, in the knowledge of the gospel with which the Lord has blessed me.

GOAL OF HAPPINESS

As has been said, happiness has been the goal of man since the beginning of time, for man is that he might have joy. When Moses reached the age of 120 and it was time for him to depart this life, he commanded that all the children of Israel be gathered together that he might speak to them. He said, "Come, therefore, let me suggest to you by what means you may be happy."

Moses had been an instrument in the hands of the Lord, to bring many blessings to the children of Israel. Through Moses they had been released from bondage and delivered from Egypt. He had traveled with them for forty years in the wilderness, teaching them the will of the Lord. He had gone through many trials and hardships with them and for them. Together they had suffered hunger, thirst, and had fled before their enemy. Now at the end of his life, when men are most serious, he called them together to give them instructions. Uppermost in his mind for the hosts of Israel was their happiness. He continued:

O children of Israel! There is but one source of happiness for all mankind, the favor of God; for he alone is able to give good things to those that deserve them, and to deprive those of them that sin against him; towards whom, if you behave yourselves according to his will, and according to what I, who well understand his mind, do exhort you to, you will both be esteemed blessed, and will be admired by all men; and will never come into misfortunes, nor cease to be happy . . . (Josephus, Book 4:8.)

OBEDIENCE INSURES HAPPINESS

After standing the test of thousands of years, it is still just as true today for all mankind; for true happiness and joy come from the favor of God. How can we obtain the favor of God in our everyday walks of life? The Lord has given us commandments, obedience to which will insure our happiness, if we will only heed them. First and foremost, ". . . love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." (Deut. 6:5.) If our hearts are filled with love for God, then they are also filled with love for our fellow men. We will be glad to lend a helping hand or give a cheering word to a neighbor. And right here let me say, that love, like charity, begins at home. If you are fortunate enough to have a home and a family, your chances for happiness are unlimited. But it takes love—plenty of love to make a home happy. The more we give in understanding, sympathy, and service to others, the happier we are. And love is kind—it is ready to overlook failures and try again. If we could only keep our hearts filled with love, this earth would be a heaven of happiness. Do you remember the song in our hymn book—"Love at Home"? It is such a beautiful song. Next time you are tempted to let something other than love creep into your heart, sing it and see if it doesn't help. There is a sure method of keeping in the favor of the Lord. When we are in constant communication, we cannot go far astray. Each morning, throughout the day, and at night, we ask God to let his Spirit be with us to guide us in all that we do. It is like the beam that guides the pilot of an airplane. As long as he is on the beam, he knows that everything is all right, but he must not stray too far or he loses the beam. We have a conscience, each of us, that will tell us if we are not on the beam. There is no surer way to unhappiness than to carry a guilty conscience constantly for a companion. Don't do it. Get on the beam. There are many other things which contribute to our happiness, and God has given us instruction concerning these things. Our capacity for enjoying life is greater if our health is good. It is hard to be happy if we are always tired. The Lord told us how to keep from being weary and keep our minds invigorated. He said:

. . . retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated. (D. & C. 88:124.)

With every blessing, however, the Lord has put a price or a law upon which each blessing is predicated. For keeping the Word of Wisdom he promises:

And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones;

And shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures;

And shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint.
And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. (D. & C. 89:18-21.)

The nineteenth verse is to me most important. They "shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures." Is there any greater happiness that can be given to man than the testimony of the divinity of this gospel and the plan of life and salvation? That knowledge comes only from the Holy Ghost. Again the Lord promises, ". . . prove me now herewith, . . . if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." For the price of this source of happiness, the Lord says:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, . . . (Mal. 3:10.)

THE PRICE OF PROSPERITY

The Book of Mormon records the promises of prosperity to those who live in this the promised land. The price for prosperity is keeping the commandments of the Lord. There were many times when Israel of old was not in the favor of the Lord. Then the Lord withdrew his blessings, and they became humbled again, and the blessings of the Lord were again given to the people. We find the same repetition among the descendants of Lehi on this continent.

What about us? Can we profit by their experience?

The Lord also promised, "All that my Father hath shall be given, . . ." To whom? And why?

And also all they who receive this priesthood receive me, saith the Lord;

For he that receiveth my servants receiveth me;

And he that receiveth me receiveth my Father;

And he that receiveth my Father, receiveth my Father's kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him. (D. & C. 84:35-38.)

The reward for keeping the commandments of the Lord is happiness.

Happiness certainly does not come from just idle goodness. The Savior said, "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." (Matt. 23:11.) He could have said, "He that is happiest among you shall be your servant." Active service to others is serving God. That missionary is happiest who is truly seeking to serve his fellow man by declaring to him the message of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Active members of the Church everywhere experience the same happiness. Nor does happiness stop with this life. For those who keep the commandments of the Lord to the full, and enter into the new and everlasting covenant, and are sealed together as husband and wife for time and all eternity, shall enjoy the greatest degree of happiness.

Thus, as Moses declared: "The source of happiness for all mankind," in this life and the life to come throughout all eternity, "is the favour of God."

May the Lord help us to obtain it, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "High On the Mountain Top," Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I would like to introduce the few remarks that I shall make by recalling a few scriptures, one of which has been repeated by two previous speakers today.

The Lord declared:

All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also; otherwise there is no existence. (D. & C. 93:30.)

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

And the other, quoted by Elder Romney as one of the great teachings from the Book of Mormon, was Father Lehi's explanation of this same great principle to his son Jacob:

And to bring about his eternal purposes in the end of man, after he had created our first parents, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and in fine, all things which are created, it must needs be that there was an opposition; even the forbidden fruit in opposition to the tree of life; the one being sweet and the other bitter.

Wherefore, the Lord God gave unto man that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other. (II Nephi 2:15-16.)

There were those who seemingly, as evidenced by their conduct, think of this principle of free agency as a matter of license to do what they please to do. But again Father Lehi explains this matter to his son:

Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things shall be given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great mediation of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil; for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself. (Idem 27.)

We must teach men everywhere that liberty and freedom are to be obtained only by yielding obedience to truth. We must teach Latter-day Saints the meaning of the words of the Savior:

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.
(John 8:32.)

Anyone who looks about him and thinks about this matter will see great evidence of the power of evil enticing men to do evil. It must be understood by us as a Church that if we are to build a force that will nullify the power of evil, we must develop the God-given agencies placed in his Church to entice men to seek the paths that lead to eternal life.

GENERAL SERVICEMEN'S COMMITTEE

I have recalled these scriptures I have quoted many times during the last few years because of the feeling and weight of responsibility that has rested upon me in the assignment of the First Presidency as a member of the general servicemen's committee directing the work of the Church among our Latter-day Saint boys in military service and as a member of the general priesthood committee. It was with a prayer of relief that we thanked the Lord that we had come through the war with as few casualties, spiritually speaking, as we did, but it was with considerable anxiety that we again saw marshaled into the ranks of the military, our young, untrained boys, many of them without experience and with not too much faith developed, in a so-called peacetime draft. We came soon to see and learn, to our dismay, that the moral hazards in such a situation were even greater than during the fighting part of the war. Then there was something of a moral discipline that boys had when ahead of them there was the prospect of imminent death.

It is true today that the draft situation has eased somewhat, but we view with fear and anxiety the forces that are at work which would have a universal military draft of all able-bodied young men in this country, which will come except God in his mercy shall deliver us therefrom. It is because of that anxiety and that possibility and the fact that we still have many of our young men in service that have caused me to think of these matters which the Lord has called to our attention.

VIEWS OF CHAPLAIN

With respect to the matter of war and the processes of war, a chaplain who served in two wars and longer, writes this:

War (and by inference the training for it) makes for few conversions. War only makes people more strongly what they were when the struggle began. If they were intemperate when they went into uniform, they will usually have become much harder drinkers by the time they come back home. If they were careless in sex morality, they are almost sure to have become more slimy in that respect. If they were noisy braggarts, you may expect them to return intolerable boasters. If they were selfish, their selfishness will have increased. If they were honest, decent, modest men, the war will usually have improved those qualities. If they despised God, they will have come out more sure in scorn; if they loved God a little, they will have learned to love him a lot. But there will be no more conversions than in peacetime, rather less. All history shows it true that no religious revival ever began or was fostered by battle.

What is said here by this chaplain about those away from their homes in military service might in part be said about all who are away from their homes and away from the influence of the Church.

As we scan the priesthood reports from quarter to quarter, there is evidence that there are many of our priesthood members not in military service but likewise away from home and away from the ties and influences of the Church. There are also reports of many girls who are away from their homes at school and at work and, therefore, shorn of the influences that otherwise would tie them close to the influence of the Church.

PLACE OF REFUGE

When the Lord revealed the name by which his Church was to be called, he gave some other instructions as to what that Church was to do. He said:

And that the gathering together upon the land of Zion, and upon her stakes, may be for a defense, and for a refuge from the storm, and from wrath when it shall be poured out without mixture upon the whole earth. (D. & C. 115:6.)

As I have thought of that refuge which the Lord designed his organization to be, I have thought of those agencies within it, one of which Elder Benson spoke so eloquently about in his Church of the Air address this morning, the home. He quoted the scripture which we have had repeated time and time again as a quotation from the revelation of the Lord. After the Lord had declared it a sin upon the heads of the parents if they failed to teach the law of repentance and have their children baptized when eight years of age, he said:

And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.

And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

And the inhabitants of Zion also shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord. (D. & C. 68:28-30.)

PURPOSES OF CHURCH ORGANIZATION

The Apostle Paul has defined another one of the purposes of the Church organization in his writings to the Ephesians. He declared that the Lord gave this organization "... to edify the body of the church," (or, in other words to educate the members of the Church until they would) "all come unto a unity of faith." (See Ephesians 4:12-13.)

Clearly the Apostle Paul saw the importance of the teacher and those who would instruct our members in the doctrines of the Church as another of those divine agencies in the Church to entice against the power of evil. It would be well if all the teachers would understand what the Apostle Paul meant when he said to the Corinthians:

And I . . . came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. (1 Cor. 2:1-2.)

OBJECTIVE OF TEACHERS

That should be the only objective of instructors and teachers in this Church to teach "Jesus Christ, and him crucified." We need not the "excellency of speech nor of wisdom," but we need the testimony of God, as Paul said. And then this warning came in his later writings:

For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? (Ibid., 14:8.)

President Joseph F. Smith, in commenting about this and decrying the fact that there were some apparently trying to confuse our people and lead them away by destroying faith rather than by building a testimony of God, said:

Among the Latter-day Saints the preaching of false doctrine disguised as truths of the gospel may be expected from people of two classes and practically from these only; they are: First, the hopelessly ignorant, whose lack of intelligence is due to their indolence and sloth, who make but feeble effort, if indeed any at all, to better themselves, by reading and study; those who are afflicted with a dread disease that may develop into an incurable malady—laziness.

Second, the proud and self-vaunting ones, who read by the lamp of their own conceit; who interpret by rules of their own contriving; who have become a law unto themselves, and so pose as the sole judges of their own doings, more dangerously ignorant than the first.

Beware of the lazy and the proud; their infection in each case is contagious; better for them and for all when they are compelled to display the yellow flag of warning, that the clean and uninfected may be protected.

I wish that we could have in all our classes and meetings the spirit which characterized one of our missionary meetings down at

Sunday, April 3First Day

Ventura, California, where I visited recently with President Oscar W. McConkie, of the California Mission, when a woman who had sat in one of our Latter-day Saint meetings for the first time in her life made this comment at the close of the meeting:

I have studied the scriptures all my life, but today the words of the scriptures have been made to live.

So can be all the instructions of inspired teachers of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

DUTIES OF THE PRIESTHOOD

And now there is a third agency in the Church to entice men away from evil.

The Lord has set up the priesthood, and to them he gave the injunction to elders, priests, teachers, deacons, that they were to "watch over the Church"—and in more detailed explanation to the teachers—"to see that there is no iniquity, no evil speaking, and that all Church members do their duty." (See D. & C. 20:54.)

But, even after instructions have gone out from the General Authorities, concerning the servicemen, to our bishops and stake presidents as how the boys away from home may be contacted and directed; and after our instructions have gone out about the girls who likewise are away from home, and how we ought to shepherd them and keep in touch with them; and how the quorums should look after their absent members, we regret to say our reports indicate that sometimes quorum leaders take too lightly the exercise of those agencies which our Heavenly Father has caused to be set up here for the enticement to do good of those who otherwise are being enticed by evil.

At the beginning of the war there was an interesting newspaper account of a boy flying in from a training trip over the air field who suddenly shouted through his radio device to the man in the control tower below: "I can't see. I've lost my eyesight."

And the man in the control tower said: "Now, Son, you get a grip on yourself, and I will tell you what to do."

Quietly the man in the control tower guided him and had him circle the field many times, losing altitude by manipulating the controls, and finally the pilot rolled to a stop safely in front of the control tower on the ground.

It is that kind of calm wisdom and counsel that we need so much today. I would like to illustrate what I mean by bringing you parts of two letters from two of our boys who came through a period of spiritual "blindness" because of the steadying influence of wise counselors in the Church. One of these boys wrote a letter just recently and began his letter by saying:

EXPERIENCE OF SERVICEMAN

"My bishop is the best bishop in this Church." He then explained that when he became a priest, his bishop taught him, among the first things, that God answered prayer. So the bishop instructed him before he went away into military service, and he went away strengthened by these teachings, but when he got out there, he learned to his dismay that some of those who claim membership in the Church did not act as the servants of the Lord should. They were rowdy. There was irreverence. And he got to thinking, "Could it be the Church of Jesus Christ if they don't reverence his name and are irreverent in his house?" He went to visit other churches and found a spirit of worship that sometimes was not to be found in his own. In his own way he formed the conclusion that therefore the Church must be wrong. He wrote home to his bishop and said: "Bishop, I have decided to join another church. I feel that this must be wrong or our people would be more reverent in their meetings."

His bishop wrote back and said: "Well, my boy, do not act too hastily. You study about this matter, and think about it. You pray to your Heavenly Father, and everything will be all right."

The boy then wrote this:

"On Thanksgiving night, I was very tired as I had just come off a watch at night, and when I had gone to bed, all I wanted to do was sleep. That night God answered my prayer. It was late, and what to me was a vision and to the common people would be a dream came to me. I saw a beautiful garden, and in the middle of this garden was a golden path. Coming down the path was my grandfather who had died in 1937. On the other side was my uncle who had died on a mission in 1939.

"Now I had gone to bed very tired, and I had never thought of my uncle or my grandfather as they had died when I was still under ten years of age.

"But that was not all. In the middle of them was Joseph Smith. They all talked to me, and the final thing that I can remember distinctly as being said was Joseph Smith telling me to stick to the truth, no matter what the other people said or did and to listen to the truth even though others did not listen to it.

"Then he said that there was still work to be done there as I had work to do here, and they faded away, and it seemed that I was in the garden alone until the garden began to fade, and I seemed to fall.

"When I awoke, it was still the middle of the night, and it was also cold, yet I had a feeling of warmth within me, and I knew that God had answered my prayers. I finished the night in restful sleep.

"Now you may think I was dreaming, too, but I still feel and know that I had an answer to my prayer."

I recalled that boy's letter when we heard a group of missionaries down in the California Mission say: "When we get discouraged and downcast and blue, we have made a practice to go away fasting into the mountains before daylight and stay there all day and return after dark at night, and we have never failed to come from that experience strengthened by the power of God."

WOUNDED MAN REMEMBERED

Another of our men coming back from combat service overseas was thrown into the middle of the ocean when his ship was torpedoed. He was seriously burned and was sent to a sanitarium, with his mind greatly disturbed and upset. He writes this testimony:

"While in the hospital, word came to me that my son had been gravely wounded in the South Pacific. I could not go to him. My world had collapsed. No, again, it is not the usual story. I did not remain steadfast in the faith. I became rebellious. I blamed my Heavenly Father for all of the misery and distress which was mine. I concluded that he had let me down. I turned away from him. I even got to the point where I could no longer pray. It seemed as if my line of communication had been broken, and I had lost all contact with God. That was the depth of human misery. Utter futility and resentment were mine. There is no destitution like that of being out of contact with our Heavenly Father. It is like receiving a busy signal when you call your doctor in an emergency.

"But then a miracle happened! My friends in the Church had not forgotten me! They prayed with faith for my recovery. My name was placed in the temples of our Lord where prayer was said in my behalf. My children continued to pray even as I had taught them to do. My parents prayed with an unwavering faith.

"The elders of the Church sought me out and gave me a blessing. I had little faith in them, but God had not forgotten me. He heard those prayers, and he turned not away. And health soon returned to my body."

I ask you members and leaders of the Church: Suppose that the bishop had been too busy to write to his boy who was disturbed by the irreverence of many who attended meetings where he had been. Suppose that he had not been taught as a priest the things which the bishop had taught him about prayer and how he could get an answer to his problems. Suppose that this other man's elders' quorum had failed, and they had forgotten to pray back home. I ask you to consider the seriousness of our responsibility in these matters.

DAY OF DECEPTION

Today is a day of clever deception, a day when the Master declared one of the signs of his coming should be that even the very elect, according to the covenant, would be deceived.

One of our boys now studying in a large university on the coast declared that the "thing that had kept him from losing faith in the Bible which the higher critics have decimated almost to a point of non-recognition," he said, "the thing that has kept my faith is that I know the Book of Mormon is true, and because of that testimony I know that what they are saying about the Bible is false and not the truth."

The Lord has given us a sure guide as to how we might discern truth from error. He said:

And that which doth not edify is not of God, . . .

That which is of God is light; and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light; and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day. (D. & C. 50:22-24.)

KEEP GOD'S COMMANDMENTS

I wish we could take a lesson from the testimony of a man in this city who conducts a business here, who wrote and told me about a little experience he had when during the so-called depression of the past years, he thought he was going to lose everything that he had, and so he fasted and prayed that the Lord would show him how to save his business, and he said: "One morning just as it was breaking daylight I felt the still small voice which said to me: 'If you will only but keep God's commandments, you will be given all the wisdom necessary to save your business.'"

Simple, but a great powerful truth—if we will only keep God's commandments, the wisdom sufficient to our needs will be given us!

In the words of one, may we not forget the great truth which he has put in these words:

Isn't it strange that princes and kings
And clowns that caper in sawdust rings
And just plain folks like you and me
Are builders for eternity?

To each is given a bag of tools,
A shapeless mass and a book of rules,
And each must build ere life has flown,
A stumbling-block or a steppingstone.
("Stumbling-Block or Stepping Stone," by R. L. Sharpe.)

God grant us strength. May we rise to our responsibilities, to do our job, to entice the membership of this Church and the world to seek the things that bring eternal life and happiness here and in the world to come, I pray humbly, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

I am very happy, brothers and sisters, to have the privilege of attending this conference with you. I am sure we have all rejoiced in the testimonies and the instructions of our brethren, and I thank the Lord for them and for my association with them, and I am very grateful, as you are, that he has permitted President Smith to be here with us today and to instruct us as he has done.

I humbly pray that, in the few moments that are mine, I may leave some thought with you that will help inspire you and help you feel compensated for the great work you are doing in the Church of our Father in heaven.

THE THINGS THAT MATTER

It has been said that there are two kinds of things in this world, the things that matter and then the other things, and I believe that if any people have learned to know the things that matter, it is the Latter-day Saints.

You will recall that a teacher among the Jews went to Jesus by night, the Great Teacher, to learn from him the things that matter, and when he met the Savior, he said:

... Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.
(John 3:2.)

Jesus did not reply with some great philosophy of men, but said to Nicodemus: "... Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

And of course Nicodemus did not understand, and said: "How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?"

And Jesus replied: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

A great many people, as Jesus instructed the teacher of the Jews, have been born again. Take as an illustration the Apostle Paul.

There was a man who did not understand the truth. On the way to Damascus, our Savior appeared to him and informed him of the mistake he was making, and said: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?"

"... it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." (Acts 9:4-5.)

PAUL AND PETER

And you know the life of Paul, from that time forward until he went to Rome and there appeared before Festus and King Agrippa. When he bore his testimony to them he told them how he had seen a light and heard the voice of the Savior speak unto him, but they just could not understand it. And Festus said with a loud voice: "... Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad." (Acts 26:24.)

To which Paul replied: "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness."

And then Agrippa said: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

And while Paul stood before them in chains, he said: "I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds."

Paul had found the thing that mattered in this world, and he was willing to give his life for it.

And Peter, that great exponent of truth, after he had received the gift of the Holy Ghost, was commanded that he should no longer preach Christ and him crucified in the streets of Jerusalem, but he replied: "Whom shall men obey, God or man?"

And he went on about his work as he had been commanded, because he had been born again and he knew the thing that was really worth while.

ALMA'S CONVERSION

Now consider Alma, the son of Alma, who went about persecuting the Saints, until the angel of the Lord appeared to him and told him of his error, and the earth trembled as the angel spake to him, but after that, when Alma went forth to preach the gospel, he just could not take unto himself the power that he would like in order that he might be able to cry repentance to all the world. And he said: "O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people" (Alma 29:1), because he knew that when the angel spake to him it literally did shake the earth.

And so Alma found the thing that was really worth while, the thing that mattered, and that was the thing to which he devoted his life; and so it was with the prophets of that day and this day.

JOSEPH SMITH'S TESTIMONY

When the Prophet Joseph wrote his own story he said that he marveled that a boy, obscure as he was, a farmer boy without education, should become the subject of such discussion and concern by the great men of his community, and he said:

I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak to me; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was led to say in my heart: "Why persecute me for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision; and who am I that I can withstand God, or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen?" For I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dared I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God, and come under condemnation.

And so, being born again, as the Prophet was, and learning the thing that mattered and was really worth while, his whole life was devoted to his testimony, until he sealed his testimony with his blood.

BRIGHAM YOUNG

It took Brigham Young about two years to make up his mind to join the Church after he first heard the gospel, and then for the next ten years, we are told, he spent almost his entire time in the missionary service of the Lord. And when he went on his first mission he did not even have an overcoat, and he took a quilt from the trundle bed, and his wife made him a cap out of a pair of old pantaloons, and at the end of ten years, he said, all he had ever had as a reward of his service was the half of a small pig that the Prophet Joseph had received from one of the brethren and divided with him. And then, in this great Tabernacle later he said that he had studied the gospel as any student of science had studied any branch of science for thirty years as he traveled by day and by night, by land and by sea, and he had only reached the ABC's: his study lead him into the eternities.

That is what it does for a man when he finds the thing that matters and is really worth while in this life, and it marks the life of that man just as the lives of you, my brethren, have been marked because of the testimony that has come to you.

I like the statement that President Clark made from this stand, I think about a year ago, when he said that a testimony is the mortar that holds this Church together, and if we did not have a testimony we would not be doing the things we are doing today.

All of you, as you look back over the history of your own people and your own families, are no doubt proud of your forebears and the sacrifices they have made, and their integrity and devotion to the faith, and if you will pardon me for being a bit personal, I would like to refer to some of mine.

FAITH IN OWN FAMILY

My grandfather, Franklin D. Richards, recorded in his diary, after he had been a member of the Church for nine years, that he had come up in that time through the grades of the priesthood to the office of high priest, that he had received his endowments in the Nauvoo Temple, that he had filled five missions in the United States, and he was then serving as counselor in the Presidency of the British Mission with a membership of over sixteen thousand. Then he states:

Most of all things, this day, I desire the Holy Spirit, which giveth life, yea life more abundantly to both body and spirit.

He traded his home in Nauvoo, as many of the other brethren did, for a team of horses and a wagon; loaded on it all his possessions he could take with him; took his two wives (that was permissible in those days) and one little girl, and went to join the Saints at Winter Quarters. When he arrived there, the Prophet Brigham Young sent him back to England. And while he was there again in the mission field, one of his wives died, his little girl died, and his brother who was with the Mormon Battalion died. Previously he had lost a brother in the Haun's Mill Massacre, and he wrote in his journal something like this:

I hope that no matter what sacrifice may be required at my hands that God will give me the strength to stand so that when the battle is fought and the race is run I may come out not one whit behind my brethren.

You know, that is when we know the things that matter and the other things, when we have been born again with the spirit of this great latter-day work.

I would like also to refer to Grandfather Willard Richards, cousin Stephen L's grandfather. He was in jail in Carthage with the Prophet Joseph and his brother Hyrum, and John Taylor. Grandfather Willard did not have to go there, there was no subpoena for him or warrant of arrest. The Prophet Joseph turned to him and said: "If we go into the cell, will you go with us?"

Dr. Richards replied: "Brother Joseph, you did not ask me to cross the river with you; you did not ask me to come to Carthage with you; you did not ask me to come to jail with you. Do you think I would forsake you now? I will tell you what I will do. If you are condemned to be hanged for treason, I will be hanged in your stead, and you shall go free."

The Prophet replied: "You cannot do that."

Dr. Richards replied: "But I will."

That is the kind of faith and testimony that has built this kingdom of God, because they have known the things that matter, and the other things have been of little consequence to them.

I would like to be pardoned for referring to my own father who is deprived of the privilege of being here today because of illness, President George F. Richards of the Council of the Twelve. A few weeks ago I sat by his side when he was in great pain and distress and I sympathized with him and he said: "My son, it does not matter what happens to me as long as the kingdom of God can go forward."

And I felt grateful for a father with that kind of faith.

To these testimonies, many of you brethren can add experiences of your own and your forebears. I remember when I was a boy I said to my father: "Father, how is a person to know when he gets a testimony?"

"Well," he said, "my boy, you just keep going the way you have been; you will not need to worry about that."

There is not time today to relate my own experiences but I want to tell you that a testimony of the divinity of this work is the most treasured gift of my life, and I would rather have it burn in the hearts and souls of my children and my grandchildren than any other thing in all the world.

TESTIMONY OF INDIAN SISTER

Could I be excused for reading a testimony of an Indian sister, that appeared in the Church section of The Deseret News, a few weeks ago, to show you that the Lord gives to the poor and the humble of the earth just as well as he does to any others:

I joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I have never had any doubt in my heart but that I have joined the right Church. Before I joined the Latter-day Saint Church, everything that was pure and sweet seemed so far away, as if there were a deep gap, and I could never get the edges together. But when the elders came and I heard the real truth, everything seemed so clear and beautiful. I wanted to be sure, and I would pray nights for God to guide me and show me the right thing to do. He showed me the right way, and I just cannot explain the wonderful feeling I had. I was at peace with the world. I keep thanking God for the privilege of being able to be a member of the true Church. I want to bear my testimony in the name of Jesus Christ.

I had the privilege of meeting that dear sister not long ago, and she was just like an angel from heaven to me. I learned that she had taken the beads and little trinkets that her mother bequeathed to her, amounting in value to a few hundred dollars, and sold them in order that she might erect a room in which the elders could hold meetings in the vicinity where she lives.

In closing, I would like to read the words of Nephi:

And the angel said unto me: Behold the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father! Knowest thou the meaning of the tree which thy father saw?

And I answered him, saying: Yea, it is the love of God, which sheddeth itself abroad in the hearts of the children of men; wherefore, it is the most desirable of all things.

And he [the angel] spake unto me saying: Yea, and the most joyous to the soul. (1 Nephi 11:21-23.)

I bear you my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that there is nothing in this world to compare with the love of God and the testimony of the truth that comes through being born again and knowing the things that matter and are worth while, and then you will not need to worry about the other things.

God bless you all, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER DESLA S. BENNION

Formerly President of the Northwestern States Mission

I suppose that this is an honor that every missionary, every elder, should aspire to, and again I suppose that any of you who have been called up as I have been will understand the prayer that has been running through my heart for the past few moments when I was asked to "be on deck." I realize that unless I enjoy in that prayer the spirit which Brother Romney talked about, that you will not be able to hear or remember the things which I might say.

In all humility, I do want to bear my testimony, my brethren and sisters, that God lives and that we have the truth. The Lord does hear and answer our prayers and gives us strength when we are called upon to do something by those in authority over us.

I was greatly thrilled last night at our missionary reunion when President Joel Richards told of the splendid missionary efforts that are being put forth and the number of baptisms per missionary that are being accomplished in the Northwestern States Mission. The thought came to me as I listened to Brother Merrill this morning, and it comes to me very often, that when these many people that are listening to the gospel today have been baptized into our church and been born again, we as members have a great responsibility. The Prophet Mosiah told us that when we went into the waters of baptism that we did have that responsibility towards those members who had accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ, that we were to bear with them in their sorrows and in their troubles, and we were commanded to teach them.

Most of my life I have spent away from the Church, out in the world, and I have seen these people who are being baptized into the Church, and many of those who have drifted out into the world or out into the mission fields, get lost and drift away and become inactive and finally lost entirely. I do not believe the Lord is pleased with waste. We have a great responsibility to conserve our membership. We listen to and know about national conservation but still when these, our brethren and sisters, accept the gospel it is just the same as the top soil, which very often is taken from the top of the earth and washed away to the sea. They become lost and much of the responsibility is ours, because we do owe them our helping hand. As Mosiah said, we must bear their burdens with them, and only in bearing their burdens and knowing that we have the truth can we discharge that covenant which we have made. Most of us who are here listening to these services today made a covenant that we would do anything for the Gospel, even to the giving up our lives, if we were called upon to do so, and we do need to carry this truth, which I bear witness and testimony of today. We have the responsibility to carry that truth to the hearts of the membership of our Church.

Sunday, April 3First Day

So many of our people come into the world and they drift away; they come away from the stakes of Zion, get a good job, become part of the world and forget that the greatest honor they can have is membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

I bear witness to you that the greatest inheritance that I have and the biggest blessing that I have is the Gospel of Jesus Christ and my membership in the Church.

The Lord bless us, my brethren and sisters, all of us, that we may do our part to conserve the membership of our Church, to keep our sons and our daughters from drifting away, and these people who are coming into the Church each day, on whom our missionaries spend so much time and effort, with such great success, to bring into the Church. May we do our part to keep them faithful in the Church and to teach them the Gospel. This I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

President David O. McKay:

After singing by the Tabernacle Choir and benediction by President Walter R. Holdaway of the Orem Stake, this Conference will stand adjourned until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

We take pleasure in announcing that the Deseret Sunday School Union's Centennial Conference will be held this evening at 7:00 o'clock here in this building.

The choir music for the session and this morning's session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ this morning and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the console this afternoon.

Tomorrow morning the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the time of beginning.

The Choir will now sing: "And Then Shall Your Light Break Forth," after which President Walter R. Holdaway will offer the benediction.

---

Singing by the Choir, "And Then Shall Your Light Break Forth."

Elder Walter R. Holdaway, president of the Orem Stake offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned until Monday morning, April 4, at 10:00 a.m.

SECOND DAY

MORNING MEETING

The third session of the Conference convened Monday morning, April 4, at 10:00.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. conducted the services.

The Choir singing for this meeting was by the Ricks College Choir, Elder Alma Dittmer, conducting.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the third session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City.

We are blessed again this morning with the presence of President George Albert Smith, President of the Church and presiding high priest of the Church, and I am sure that all those of us who are here and those who are listening on the air would like to wish him, on this his birthday, many happy returns and offer a prayer that he will be spared to bless us with his presence and his counsel for yet many years to come.

Of the General Authorities Elder Matthew Cowley is absent visiting the Pacific missions and Elder Alma Sonne is in Europe in charge of the European missions. President Richards is again resting at home at the suggestion of his doctor.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL, over the following stations: KSUB at Cedar City KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal and over KEXO at Grand Junction and KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over the loud speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

I wish to say to you that the Assembly Hall, if you cannot get seats in here, provides a very comfortable place in which to see and hear the Conference.

The choir singing during this morning's session will be by the Ricks College Choir, Elder Alma Dittmer conducting and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We will begin the morning services by the Ricks College Choir singing "How Beauteous Are Their Feet."

The opening prayer will be offered by President William Bliss Daniels of South Sevier Stake, Utah.

---

The Ricks College Choir sang "How Beauteous Are Their Feet."

Elder William Bliss Daniels, president of the South Sevier Stake offered the opening prayer.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

I apologize for my failure to announce a fact that is apparent to you here, namely, that President George Albert Smith is presiding and that he has asked me, President Clark, to conduct the services.

The Ricks College Choir will now sing "Come, Holy Spirit," after which Elder Henry D. Moyle of the Council of the Twelve will speak to us.

---

The Ricks College Choir sang: "Come, Thou Holy Spirit."

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brethren and sisters, I wish it were possible this morning for me to express to my Heavenly Father the gratitude there is in my heart for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in these latter days. I am sure that if we serve all the days of our life and render to this work the utmost of our ability in furthering its progress, that we will not have shown fully the appreciation which I know we all hold. It is glorious for me to contemplate the possibilities that the gospel gives to us in life, the blessings that it has bestowed upon us thus far in our lives. I marvel as I go through the Church and receive of your kindness and your hospitality and your faith and prayers in my ministry, at the growth and the development which I, in turn, see in you, who are faithful to the offices and callings which you fill and who are rendering the service that you do render to the children of our Heavenly Father. I am certain that I can never do enough in my life to compensate my Heavenly Father for the testimony that he has given me of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged. More priceless than all else is the knowledge that I have that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and that he called upon the boy Joseph Smith to be his prophet in these latter days and to restore to this earth his gospel for the salvation, and, through our obedience, the exaltation of mankind.

ADVERSARY AT WORK

We may sometimes feel that this work is purely spiritual but there is no phase of life that we can afford to overlook in fulfilling our obligations to our Heavenly Father and to the priesthood which we hold. We must be conscious of the fact that the adversary is at work, utilizing every agency of which he can conceive. I am sure we are all agreed that his imagination is almost limitless, to bring about the downfall of the work of truth and righteousness here upon this earth. Where he finds us to be vulnerable either in our thinking or in our lives, there is where he is going to get in his work most effectively. He is causing us in our thinking to be led to adopt the philosophies of the world. We are easily led. I am sure that flattery is one of the greatest implements or tools that the adversary has at his command. You and I, today, must fortify ourselves against unrighteous flattery, in fact, I feel to say, any kind of flattery at all, to keep our feet on the ground and our thinking clear and to see to it that we devote our spare time to studying the principles of the gospel, that no philosophies of men will have any room in our thinking, nor shall we have time to devote to the reading of such.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP

We are called upon in our daily lives, in this great country in which we live, to exercise our rights of citizenship. I wonder sometimes if all of us are conscious of the power that we possess in this respect. We have had a great deal said at this conference, to which I can very happily say amen, concerning the family. I wish we could all take to heart every word that Elder Ezra Taft Benson said in his address on the "Church of the Air." I rejoice in his courage to tell the people of the world that which is destroying the home. To point out to them the way in which the home can be built up and strengthened. What I want to emphasize today, if I may, is the fact that the home in which we live and in which we rear our children is located in a community or vicinity, or city. We cannot keep out of our home the influences which we find in these centers in which we live. We need to call upon our Heavenly Father to give us the inspiration and the foresight, first of all, to know what to do and then the courage to accomplish it.

STATE LEGISLATURE

I want to say a commendatory word to those who sat in our last state legislature. May the Lord bless them for their efforts to make of our state and of our communities a better place in which to live and a better place in which to rear our families. I owe a debt of gratitude beyond measure to my parents, to my brethren and sisters who lived in this state when I was a boy for the fact that they kept the town in which I was reared as clean as it was kept. It is now our duty to keep the youth of Zion from as many temptations as possible and to give them the same opportunity that many of us have had to develop faith and to grow in righteousness and to overcome the weakness of the flesh in an atmosphere peculiarly adapted to such purposes. I feel to commend all of the Latter-day Saints today for the efforts that they have extended to make of their communities, in a civic sense, a proper place to live. But I am certain that you will all agree with me that we still have a great work to perform in this connection, and we cannot delay nor overlook the slightest opportunity.

COMMUNITY LIFE

We sometimes permit ourselves, around election time, to become concerned with politics. We should always be active. Now is the time to prepare for the next election. It is upon politics we must rely in large measure for the kind of government that we have. In turn we must rely upon that government for the protection of our rights, for the enforcement of our laws, and for the protection of our principles. Now these things go to the very root of life itself and of our growth and development in the gospel. We cannot afford to neglect to do our duty as citizens of this great United States and as citizens of the state in which we live. Those of you, my brethren and sisters, who come from the countries outside the United States, so far as the laws of those countries permit, should exercise the same influence there as we undertake to exercise here under our laws. We have the power, we have the leadership and the strength in this Church to make our views known. Even though we may be a minority, in some places, we have the power to convert every person who thinks right and who desires the right, to our cause. I have the abiding conviction within me that there are none of us living in any communities anywhere but what the great majority of the people—our friends, our neighbors, our associates—even though they be not of our faith, nevertheless they, the majority, desire righteousness rather than evil to predominate in the communities in which they live. And so it is up to you and me, where we are minorities, to make ourselves majorities by converting those who need converting to these specific programs, programs which we have in mind to bring about the kind of suitable conditions under which we can establish our homes and rear our children. Our efforts should not be confined to the times of political elections. We should be on duty always.

I want to say again, I commend the legislature from the bottom of my heart. Our fine stalwart brethren stood in this last state legislature and raised their voices under the inspiration of their priesthood to uphold and sustain righteousness in the enactment of laws. We had a conflict, in our own legislature here last time, which I want to mention for a moment, on two or three issues, specifically which came before them. We should have them in mind as we go back to our homes and begin to devise ways and means by which we can accomplish our righteous purposes. I might say at the outset that what we undertake to do for ourselves is not with any selfish purpose in mind. It is not to obtain any power or dominion over others. It is to bring to them, in effect, the same blessings that we seek for ourselves, those God-given rights secured to us by the laws of this great nation. And so we can go forward. If any of us have any doubts as to our rights in this matter, we need only to read the 134th section of the Doctrine and Covenants to find all of the instruction and inspiration that any righteous man needs to go forth and do his duty. We must all strengthen the community in which we live, from a civic and political as well as a religious standpoint. I tell you, my brethren and sisters, that when we exercise this kind of faith and courage in behalf of our neighbors as well as our own members we will accomplish a great missionary work in this world. There will be men and women brought to investigate the principles of the gospel because they will see the kind of fruits in us which this gospel has borne. Their doors will be opened to us through our civic activities to preach the gospel of the restored kingdom and to bring the same joy and happiness into the hearts of our neighbors with which the Lord has blessed us all our lives.

OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH

We had a conflict up there in the legislature about the Sabbath day. I would like to go into some of the things that have been said about the Sabbath day from the time of Adam on. So far as I know the Lord has never changed the law of the Sabbath. In the days of early Israel with all of Israel's faults they kept the Sabbath day holy, and they did the Lord's work on the Sabbath day. They literally closed the gates of Jerusalem. They did not permit vendors to bring their wares to the gates to be sold on the Sabbath day. We have had the gospel of the Sabbath day proclaimed to us through all generations of time. Should there be any doubt in our minds as to what course the Latter-day Saints should take with reference to the Sabbath day? Are we to open our stores, are we to carry on our commercial transactions on the Sabbath day the same as we do on a weekday, or are we to close our establishments? Well, the answer is obvious. Now, why isn't any law which has for its purpose the maintaining of the Sabbath day sacred, a law which we should uphold and sustain and support and vote for on every occasion that we have a legal right so to do? To hold otherwise would be to tell us that we have not the right to use our own free agency so far as the affairs of government are concerned.

LIQUOR LAW

We've had another law on our books with reference to liquor, and there was an effort made to expand the present liquor law to the detriment of the people. Nobody had to ask anybody any questions as to where the right and the wrong were to be found. If there are any Latter-day Saints today who think that the old open saloon is uplifting or would help us build a better community, it must be because they are not old enough to remember the days when we had those institutions in our midst and saw from actual experience the results and the evils, the deterioration that set in, the sorrow and the hardships, that such places of vice brought. So I feel again to commend those in our state legislature who saw fit to vote against any act which had for its purpose the bringing back of the open saloon. They do not call it that now, but that is what it would have been had we had sale of liquor by the drink, and do not let any of us forget that. Let us raise our voices whenever we have the opportunity, and create the opportunity, my brothers and sisters. Let us elect men to office who will be opposed to the institution in our midst of such places of vice as the open saloon. It is bad enough to have to traffic in liquor at all. We certainly should not go farther than we have. If it is necessary, in order to fight this evil, to meet the opposition on the other side, why, then I say to you from the bottom of my heart, let us start fighting for prohibition, for after all, that is what we ought to have to maintain the kind of communities our Heavenly Father would have us maintain in this world, and on this continent, and in this land of his. We cannot hope to receive the blessings of our Heavenly Father here, in as rich abundance as he is willing to give them to us if we do not exercise every power that we have to make this a land choice above all others. Prohibition would help to make it that, and the open saloon would make it the contrary.

Monday, April 4Second Day

HORSE RACING BILL

We had one other bill that I would like to speak about in conclusion and that is the horse racing bill. I suppose there is no harm in horse racing, but there is no more insidious vice on earth than gambling. It is destructive of the morals. The man does not live who is strong enough in the faith, I do not care what his past record has been, to start in gambling and continue therein and keep the faith. If there are any people in this state who desire horse racing and the gambling that is incident thereto, we invite them to leave and to go to places where those things can be had. We do not have to have them in our midst. I feel to say that no man can maintain his full standing in this Church and keep his faith and at the same time have anything to do with horse racing and gambling.

Now, brethren, let us take this seriously. In those communities, in this state, where horse racing and gambling have become more or less of an institution, let us use our faith and our courage to eradicate them as such and to elect men to the legislature who will not open the doors to the element that follows horse racing with all the vice and corruption that would come into this state.

Well, now, my brethren and sisters, I hope that you will accept this admonition in the spirit in which it has been given. I love the Latter-day Saints; I am indebted to all of you for your faith and prayers and the support that you have given me as I have gone through the Church attending your quarterly conferences. I have learned to love you. I look forward with the greatest of pleasure every week of my life to coming into your stakes and into your homes and enjoying your spirit. I want our communities, in which we live, to be maintained in keeping with the spirit which we have here in these conferences and in our quarterly conferences and the spirit that we can have in our homes if we will say our prayers daily. May the Lord bless us to this end, I humbly pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

It is indeed a sobering experience, my brethren and sisters, to occupy this position and to look into the faces of this vast multitude of Latter-day Saints who have come here to worship the Lord. I humbly trust and pray that the Spirit of the Lord will attend me in what I say this morning.

I, like the other brethren who have spoken, have a testimony of this great work. I appreciate the privilege I have of being a member of the Church of Jesus Christ. It is my one great desire in life to serve the Lord to the best of my ability and always to do what he wants me to do.

IMMORTALITY OF MAN

Deep in the heart of practically every person who has lived in this world, God has implanted a hope—yes, more than that—even a strong desire, that he will live on after death. The immortality of man is a universal concept. The study of ancient religions reveals the fact that any religion that was popular with its devotees and became a religion of prominence attained that popularity and prominence as a result of assuring its members that following their sojourn on this earth they would experience a happy, glorious, and blessed immortality. The same fact holds true today.

When Father Adam and Eve were upon this earth, through his Only Begotten Son, God revealed to them the gospel of Jesus Christ; and as one of the most important doctrines in that gospel he gave them the assurance that if they and their posterity would live in accordance with all the teachings, doctrine, and ordinances revealed to them that some day they would be able to come back into his presence. There they would not only experience immortality but they would also enjoy the great blessing of eternal life.

Throughout the various ages when God has revealed gospel principles to his holy prophets, he has always given them that one great idea that men will live on throughout the eternities.

A little over a hundred years ago when the gospel plan of salvation was being restored to the Prophet Joseph Smith in our dispensation, the various Christian denominations held the concept that men would live on after death, and yet their understanding of the unseen world was very hazy and vague. They had little, if any, information regarding our pre-mortal life, and their post-mortal life concepts were very erroneous in many respects. It became necessary, therefore, for our Father in heaven to reveal again to earth an abundance of knowledge relative to the immortality of man and point out the pathway to follow in order to gain eternal life. As a result of God's concern over his children, the Prophet Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon. It contains much doctrine pertaining especially to post-mortal life. He also received the wonderful revelations recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. Section seventy-six is the greatest revelation regarding post-mortal life to be found recorded in any book in the world. Joseph received the Pearl of Great Price in which we find much information on the council of the gods and our pre-mortal existence.

RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST

We not only have the teachings of the prophets and revelation regarding the immortality of man, but we have a lot of absolute evidence. The greatest of all evidence that you and I are immortal, that we will live on after we leave this life, is the fact that Jesus Christ, following his crucifixion, rose from the grave. He appeared to many people in and around Jerusalem, thereby establishing the fact that he was immortal and extending the promise to humanity that as he had risen from the grave so would all men.

We read in the book of Matthew that at the time of the Savior's resurrection the graves of saints who had lived godly lives while in mortality were opened, and they appeared to many people in and around Jerusalem. These saints could have been such characters as Father Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Noah, and the other holy prophets and their wives who belonged to "the Church of the Firstborn."

Following his resurrection, Jesus Christ also appeared to the Nephites who lived in this land. On one of those occasions he told them to bring their records to him. As he read that record, he asked them if Samuel the Lamanite had not prophesied that when Christ was resurrected the graves of the ancient saints would be opened and that they would appear to these Nephite people. He was informed that such had been the prophecies and that those prophecies have been fulfilled. Thereupon he instructed the Nephite historian to write that great prophecy and its fulfilment in their records in order that you and I in the latter days might know for a surety that we would live on after death; that we are immortal beings as well as mortal.

LATTER-DAY TESTIMONY

Over one hundred years ago Jesus Christ appeared to Joseph Smith on several occasions. Christ was a resurrected, glorified celestialized God when he made those appearances. Interspersed among those visitations, other beings who had lived upon this earth in ancient days appeared to the Prophet Joseph. Such persons as the Angel Moroni, Peter, James, and John, John the Baptist, Moses, Elias, Elijah, Michael, Raphael, and others visited Joseph Smith. Each appearance, of course, added testimony upon testimony regarding the immortality of man and the eternal life that the righteous ones who live upon this earth will eventually attain.

In the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints we have a rather comprehensive understanding of our pre-mortal life. We are taught that you and I are brothers and sisters; in fact, all the men, women, and children who have ever come into this world are brothers and sisters, and they were all sons and daughters of God the Eternal Father and our Eternal Mother in that celestial spirit realm before we came into mortality. We are taught that we were born into that spirit realm as babies, and that we grew to maturity there, undergoing the various experiences which were there for us prior to our coming to mortality. Also through revelation we have learned that the gods held a council preparatory to the peopling of this earth in which the plans for mortality were discussed and proclaimed.

OUR DESTINATION

Probably of all the human beings who have lived upon this earth, at least a vast majority of them have asked this question of themselves: "Where do we go when we die?" I would say to all Latter-day Saints on this occasion that the place to which you and I go when we die will be determined, to a great extent, upon how we live while we are here—I mean our ultimate destination, the goal that we are striving for. We have the true plan of salvation, the gospel of Jesus Christ, with all the ordinances of the gospel, all the teachings, including the Holy Priesthood after the Order of the Son of God. All of these things which are necessary to bring us back into the presence of God and exalt us in celestial glory are ours. We know, therefore, what will be our destination as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints if we will live by every word that comes from the mouth of God. On the other hand, with all the power, priesthood, ordinances, doctrines, opportunities, and blessings that are ours, we also know that if we sin sufficiently, we have the power to condemn ourselves to the greatest of depths, even to cast our souls down to hell. The prophets have proclaimed that where much is given much is required at our hands.

To the Latter-day Saints death is not such a serious thing. It doesn't make a lot of difference how long we live in this world. The thing which is of vital importance, however, to you and me is how we live. Are we prepared to meet the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son? If death should come upon us any minute, are we prepared to go into the other world and eventually come into the celestial kingdom of God? That should be your goal and that should be my goal. We should live such a clean and pure life each day, rendering obedience to all the principles and ordinances of the gospel to such an extent that we would be ready to die whenever death comes upon us.

SPIRIT WORLD

Every person who dies will go into a world known as the spirit world. Those who have lived righteous lives here in mortality will find there a paradise, a heaven, a place of peace, of joy, of opportunities, of progression. On the other hand, those who have lived wicked lives will find themselves in the spirit world somewhat as if they were in prison. In fact, the prophets speak of that world as a prison. We read in Second Peter that at the time the Savior's body lay in the tomb, his spirit went to the spirit world and opened the doors of the gospel to those who were drowned in the flood at Noah's time. Those people had been detained from hearing the gospel, being in prison during that long period of time of more than two thousand years.

Some people that I have talked to have the concept that when they die that suddenly, their sins will all be washed away, and they will become white and glorious, pure and clean, in somewhat of an automatic or miraculous way. Such is not the case. According to the ancient prophets, especially the Book of Mormon, sustained by modern revelation, when we die, if we are filthy, we are filthy still. The fact that we die doesn't change us one iota. You and I are dual personages, possessing a spirit body which dwells in a physical body. Death is the separation of that spiritual body from the physical body. All of our good deeds, our bad deeds; the knowledge we have attained; our habits, our evil and good inclinations, are resident in the spirit. The spirit personage contains the personality, or, in other words, the spirit is the real individual. Having an understanding of this doctrine, therefore, we know that when we die we take with us to the other world exactly what we have made of ourselves while living in mortality. There is only one way that I know whereby you and I can purify ourselves, and that one way is through repentance. The things that we should repent of here in mortality will probably be easier to repent of now instead of putting them off until we go to the other world and have to overcome those handicaps at that time; and so I would say, "today is the day to prepare to meet God. Permit me to quote the words of an ancient Nephite prophet on that subject:

For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God; yea, behold the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors. . . . if we do not improve our time while in this life, then cometh the night of darkness wherein there can be no labor performed. (Book of Mormon, Alma 34:32-33.)

A PROBATIONARY STATE

Every person after he or she leaves this life will stay in the spirit world a certain length of time in order to continue to prepare himself to come into the presence of God. In that spirit world there is a lot of activity. The gospel of Jesus Christ is being taught to those who have not received the plan of salvation here in mortality, and especially to those who previously have not had opportunity. When those people in the spirit world have received the gospel, the temple work that mortals do for them consummates the work for their acceptance of Jesus Christ and the plan of salvation there in the spirit world. The spirit world, then, is another probationary state in order that the sons and daughters of God who will might prepare themselves to meet him.

UNIVERSAL RESURRECTION

Following our sojourn in the spirit world comes the resurrection. There will be a universal resurrection of every man, woman, and child. Just as we all die, so must we all rise from the grave. Amulek declared:

. . . I say unto you that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body, that is from death, even from the first death unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption. (Ibid. 11:45.)

Jesus Christ came into the world and died for the sins of the world. He broke the bands of death and was resurrected, being the first fruits of the resurrection. He set into operation the law of resurrection and thereby gave as a free gift to every man, woman, and child, resurrection, or, in other words, immortality. Thus we will all, the wicked as well as the righteous, enjoy immortality.

THE GREAT JUDGMENT

Following the resurrection comes the great judgment. Every person who has lived and shall live in this world—every man, woman, and child—shall stand before the judgment seat of God to answer for the life he or she lived here in mortality, and also to answer for the life lived in the spirit world.

Alma, that great Nephite prophet, was preaching this doctrine one day to his people. He explained to them that every man, woman, and child, "both bond and free, . . . both the wicked and the righteous," would be resurrected and required to stand before the judgment seat of God. There they would be held accountable for the lives they lived while in mortality, for every act they committed, yea for every word they spoke, and for every thought that they thought.

You and I are responsible beings, accountable for the things that we think. To quote:

For our words will condemn us, yea, all our works will condemn us; we shall not be found spotless; and our thoughts will condemn us. (Ibid. 12:14.)

Alma also explained on that occasion that God would divide the people into two groups. He would look upon the members of one group and smile. They are the righteous. He would proclaim to them that they could enter into his presence. Great would be their joy. And then he would look upon those who composed the other group, and they should be so ashamed because of the lives they had lived in mortality that they would cry to the mountains to come down and hide them from the presence of God. But such would not be the case. They would have to stay in his presence while being judged, and every knee would bow and every tongue would confess that he was the Christ; that his judgments were true and just. And then they would hear the voice of God tell them to depart from him because of the sinful lives that they had lived. This is the group spoken of in the scripture, declaring that they would weep and wail and gnash their teeth because they had lost the great blessing of celestial and eternal life.

THREE DEGREES OF GLORY

Following the judgment, according to modern revelation, a vast majority of the inhabitants of this earth will be assigned to one or another of three kingdoms, worlds, or degrees of glory. These are termed the telestial, the terrestrial, and the celestial. The law by which we are quickened at the time of resurrection will determine the world to which we shall be assigned. Let us hear the word of the Lord on that subject:

For notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again, a spiritual body.

They who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was a natural body; even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened.

Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory shall then receive of the same, even a fulness.

And they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory shall then receive of the same, even a fulness.

And also they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory shall then receive of the same, even a fulness.

And they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received. (D. & C. 88:27-32.)

CELESTIAL GLORY

To the Latter-day Saints our interests lie in the celestial glory. In fact, we don't have much interest in the other two degrees because we are assured through revelation that those who go to the celestial degree of glory and receive exaltation are members of the Church of the Firstborn who have lived by every word that has come from the mouth of God, being humble, and faithful in all of their activities here in life. We are heirs, therefore, of celestial glory. The gateway into celestial glory is faith, repentance, baptism, and confirmation; and then, of course, as the Saints enter the kingdom of God by compliance with the foregoing requirements, they make their calling and election sure by rendering obedience to all the ordinances and doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ from day to day throughout the entire course of this mortal life. These are they who shall dwell in the presence of God.

EXALTATION

In the celestial degree of glory there are three kingdoms or three degrees. The highest of these constitutes those who receive exaltation or eternal life. They are they who live the law of the priesthood or the new and everlasting covenant of marriage, known as celestial marriage. The Latter-day Saints, as well as the people throughout the various ages of the world who have belonged to the true Church of Jesus Christ, who have been married by the power of the priesthood and have obeyed all the priesthood covenants that they have entered into, having lived in accordance with all the teachings of the gospel, these are they who shall be exalted in the celestial realm. The Lord has given his law on this doctrine as follows:

. . . verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, and it is sealed unto them by the Holy Spirit of promise, by him who is anointed, unto whom I have appointed this power and the keys of this priesthood; [and if they commit no sin to break that seal]; . . . they shall pass by the angels and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things, as hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.

Then shall they be gods. (Ibid., 132:19-20.)

The Prophet Joseph Smith explained that this continuation of "the seeds" forever and ever, meant the power of procreation; in other words, the power to beget spirit children on the same principle as we were born to our Heavenly Parents, God the Eternal Father and our Eternal Mother. Therefore, a man cannot receive the highest exaltation without a woman, his wife, nor can a woman be exalted without her husband. That is the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the plan of salvation. Eternal life is the greatest gift that God has in store for those who love him and keep his commandments, and you and I know how it can be attained.

In the celestial degree of glory there are two other divisions. They are occupied by angels of God. These angels are the ones who did not abide by the law of celestial marriage; however; they accepted Christ and lived good lives, but they did not accept all the gospel ordinances. This is the word of the Lord on that subject:

For these angels did not abide my law; therefore, they cannot be enlarged, but remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity; and from henceforth are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever. (Ibid., 132:17.)

ETERNAL LIFE

My brethren and sisters, where do we go when we die? As Latter-day Saints we hope some day to go not only to the celestial degree of glory but also to receive exaltation in his kingdom, i.e., to receive eternal life. If we accept all the ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ and obey all of the teachings of the gospel; if we abide by the law of celestial marriage; if we pay our tithes and offerings to the Lord; if we are clean and pure in thought and habit, thereby keeping our bodies as temples of God, clean and pure as he wants us to do; if we live virtuously and in every way serve him, then at the great judgment day we will hear the voice of God say to us, words to this effect: "Well done, my beloved servants. You were faithful in the few, small things that I gave you to do in mortality, you may, therefore, now come into my presence." And to continue to paraphrase the Doctrine and Covenants, "Then shall they pass by the angels and gods who are stationed there to their exaltation, and they shall become priests and kings to the Most High God. They shall become as he is." In other words, they shall have eternal life. Then shall the oath and covenant of the priesthood be brought into effect which you and I have made, each of us who holds the Melchizedek Priesthood. All that God has will be ours. He will share with us.

May this be the lot of the Latter-day Saints, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

I think the time is far spent. We will change the order and will ask the choir now and the congregation to sing "O, Say What is Truth?" Elder J. Spencer Cornwall will conduct the singing.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

I cannot tell you how grateful I feel this morning for the privilege of being here and associating with you, my brethren and sisters, in this great conference.

For the past three months I have not participated actively in the work that is usually assigned to us and I come to you this morning expressing my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the degree of health that I enjoy. There is something so uplifting in the association of the Latter-day Saints and when one misses it for a time he feels that great void that otherwise would not be there, and so I rejoice this morning with you in the privilege of being here.

I would like to direct my remarks this morning to something that has been on my mind for some time, prompted by some of the things that have happened in our nation, things that to me are serious and reflect rather a serious trend.

ATTITUDE OF HATE

Not long ago there came to our shores one of the greatest pianists of our time, perhaps the greatest since Paderewski. He was not permitted to remain here and was told to go back to the country from whence he came, the reason being given that he had performed under the Hitler regime in Germany. And then, too, we had a great singer come, one who had been here before but because she had joined her husband in Norway she, too, would have been barred except for the fact that she went to Canada where she was permitted to land and then she finally was admitted into our country. We were to have a great symphony leader come as a guest artist, just temporarily but we said "No." When the recent revolution in China took place and the great leader of the Chinese forces was deposed, the sentiment was immediately expressed that he should be brought to trial—they didn't say for what crime—they had in mind, no doubt, the war trials that we have been reading about. All of these things are disturbing because they reflect an attitude of hate.

This attitude of hate, this spirit of revenge is not in harmony with the teachings of the gospel of Christ. The gospel is a message of love and tolerance and does not foster the spirit of hate or intolerance.

Intolerance is an evil that has plagued the Latter-day Saints since the organization of the Church, founded in many instances on the fact that the motives of the leaders of the Church have been misunderstood.

ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS

I recently read a statement by one of our statesmen in which he said, "Every man has a right to his opinion, but no man has a right to be wrong in his facts." Recently it was my privilege to visit the Chicago Historical Association with my daughter. There they have a number of documents pertaining to the Mormons, both favorable and unfavorable, many of them are anti-Mormon, and in looking them over, almost without exception, they are based on a book that was written by an apostate in the days of the Prophet Joseph, a book written and published by John C. Bennett. He had enjoyed the Prophet's confidence. He had enjoyed the confidence of the Saints and then had committed himself, had violated the laws of the Church and the laws of the gospel of Jesus Christ and was excommunicated. He then impugned the motives of the Prophet Joseph. He immediately began to fortify himself. He questioned the motives of the leaders of the Church and wrote a book that has been the basis of practically all anti-Mormon books that have been written since. He is quoted freely and these documents that we had the privilege of inspecting reflect this spirit of hate, the spirit of questioning motives. In early days, in the days of Nauvoo, it was a time when people did question motives.

James G. Randall in his life of Lincoln has given us a very vivid picture of the conditions that existed in Illinois during the period from 1840 to 1850. This covered the period when the Latter-day Saints resided in Nauvoo. I quote from Dr. Randall's book:

Incredible quantities of liquor were consumed. Everybody, women and preachers included, were drinking liquor. Men were quick to fight and combats were brutal. Profanity was general and emphatic.

MOTIVES IMPUGNED

Men impugned other people's motives. As an example Professor Randall tells of Lincoln being employed one time as a storekeeper. In those days liquor was sold over the counter as were groceries and other necessities and because of this some of Lincoln's enemies charged that he was a liquor seller, carrying with it the imputation that he was a young man of questionable standards. As a matter of fact, Lincoln was known to be a young man of unquestioned integrity, and he advocated and stood for temperance, and it is said that when they came to notify him officially of his nomination to the presidency at his home in Springfield, he served water instead of liquor. That reflected his attitude, and yet his motives were questioned. I mentioned this because our people in the days of Nauvoo were the victims of hate, and motives were questioned and much of the persecution resulted from this unfortunate spirit of the times of which Doctor Randall speaks.

Now I would like to apply this thought on motives to our present day. We have just heard from Brother Moyle and yesterday we received from Brother Benson some sound counsel and from others, of course, in this conference, but I have in mind these two addresses. What are we going to do about it? Are we going to say, "Well, conditions are different. We are living under different circumstances. Our environment is different. We can't do these things." My brothers and sisters, the laws of God do not change. We can live just as righteously today as could the children of Israel under the mandate that came from God our Father to the Prophet Moses. They haven't changed. The words and the counsels of Jesus Christ have not changed.

FOLLOWING DIVINE COUNSEL

The Word of Wisdom was given one hundred and sixteen years ago and yet we have reservations in our minds as to whether or not we should keep that divine law. As Brother Moyle pointed out to us this morning, when the issue came before our legislature there was a question in the minds of some of us as to what stand we should take. Should there be any question as to the stand that Latter-day Saints should take on these matters? If just the Latter-day Saints would observe that part of the Word of Wisdom that has to do with liquor, think of the heartaches, the broken homes, the delinquencies of both children and adults, that would be prevented, we would in very deed be as a light upon a hill.

Now, one other matter. Thirteen years ago we were advised what we should do with reference to meeting the economical problems of our people and the spiritual problems for that matter. The depression had left serious scars and wounds everywhere. The Lord pointed the way, one hundred years ago, his way, as to what we should do relative to taking care of our own. Economic conditions had changed, membership increased, so that it became necessary for this plan that the Lord had given a century ago, to be enlarged so that it could meet the increased membership and changing conditions, and so the Prophet of the Lord from this stand gave us directions. Subsequently there followed other instructions as to what we should do. Well, I remember when President Grant spoke in this tabernacle, I was president of a stake and sitting next to me was a man from my stake, a good man, and as we walked out after President Grant had spoken and had told us that we should stand on our own, he said, "Well, that was a good political talk." And so, it has gone—questioning motives—we have not learned, as I see it, to conform. It seems that it takes us a long time to learn. In some stakes of Zion where the welfare program has been taken hold of wholeheartedly it has not been difficult, and the men and women of those stakes bear testimony of the divinity of the thing that they have done and are doing, but in some stakes where we have half-heartedly undertaken to carry out the instructions and the counsel, whereby our people may stand independently upon their own we have met with difficulties.

WAY OF LIFE AND SALVATION

I would like to add this in conclusion. It is said that President Brigham Young, many years ago, made this statement:

When the Constitution of the United States hangs, as it were, upon a single thread, they will have to call for Mormon elders to save it from

Monday, April 4

Second Day

utter destruction: and they will step forth and do it. (Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, 2:182, Feb. 18, 1855.)

This is recorded in the Journal of Discourses and I presume it is accurate, but however it may be, is it not a possibility, that this Church, in its great leadership and in the power that will come to it in advocating the things that are divine and are right and true as for example the great welfare program, is not possible that when we as a nation shall have exhausted our resources—and we can well do that if we do not turn about—when we have reached that point is it not possible that to us will those who are not of us look for guidance and we will be held up as a people who are pointing an economic way that will mean for the economic and spiritual salvation and blessing of our people.

I see in this great program, my brethren and sisters, as I see in all of the programs of this Church, the way of life and the way of salvation and these things are open to you and me and they are for our blessing and for our benefit and God has given them to us. They have not come from man. May we not question the source and when the counsel is given to us from time to time may we at least recognize not only the motives back of the counsel and advice but also the spirit and the revelation that prompt the advice and counsel. May God so bless us, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I will need your faith and prayers, my brethren and sisters, if I am able to say anything that will be helpful to any of us today. I realize, I believe, the responsibility under which I labor at present in taking your time as you have come here, so many of you, to give of your spirit and to receive of ours.

A DAILY PROGRAM

We all belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints I presume. We all hold dear the gospel of Jesus Christ. Some of us apply it rather narrowly in our lives but it is a broad, general plan for the development of mankind in the earth. The thing I like about it most is that I am able to, or should be able to apply its principles in every activity of my life. It is not a thing to be practiced once a week, but it is a daily program for the development and upbuilding of men. It is a positive thing in its actions and in its results. There are some prohibitions and some negations to it, it is true, but every prohibition has come about because men have not seen fit to follow its positive admonitions.

There has been reference made to the fact that there is good and evil in the world, and that is true. It is much like it is with this body of ours. Every muscle in the body has an opposing one, but I call to your attention the fact that every bit of work that the body does is the result of a positively acting muscle, and no work whatever is ever done by a relaxing one. We should be that way in our lives. We should interpret the gospel into daily activities. I believe I have told you before of a remark that was made by a friend of mine and a friend of my father's, who was a very wonderful man, not of our faith, however, and who was a banker. He said, "You know, Antoine, your father came as nearly applying his religion in his business, combining the two, as anybody I have known." He said, "You know, I can't do that, because I am a banker and I have to be hard-boiled."

Now, if my religion doesn't come to my aid and tell me how to be a banker, then I don't want to be one.

POSITIVE TEACHINGS

I believe that there are in the positive teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ all the principles that are necessary for the proper conduct of a banking business, and likewise I believe that there are those things, positive instructions for the proper guidance of my relationship as a landlord with my tenants. I believe, furthermore, that there are in the gospel those things which should govern me as a police officer in enforcing the laws of the land and the city in which I live. In other words, I believe that there are positive instructions in the gospel of Jesus Christ which will enable us, if we look for them and find them, and apply them in our lives, to meet every daily emergency that may present itself to us. I believe that those of us who have the responsibility to teach will have better success if we emphasize the advantages of the positive side of the gospel over the negative side. It is my belief also that when we come to teach the various principles of the gospel as we understand them, if we search, we will find sufficient and valid reasons for every principle that we advocate.

PRODUCTIVE SERVICE

We come here, as President Hunter has said, to gain experience, and in order to gain experience we must work. The Lord said when he cast Adam out of the Garden of Eden, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and that is a positive command, that man shall work. God knew what he meant and what he said when he gave that commandment, for I think that no man ever grew in power and strength, virtue and leadership in absolute idleness. We should work every day of our lives at some productive effort in order to make the maximum progress that we are entitled to.

It is true that out of every day we have to sleep a certain time to recover, but nonetheless our waking hours should be productive hours. We should never allow ourselves, if we can help it, to become a burden on society. I grant you that there are conditions which develop in the lives of some people which prevent their using their faculties with which they were originally endowed for their own sustenance, and when people fall into that unhappy situation it is the burden and obligation of the rest of society to take care of them, but I feel that it is my duty as long as I am able to, in order that I may gain the maximum from my experience in life, that I should be busily and actively engaged in some productive service.

The Church is an active, vigorous Church. The Prophet said the first great principle of the Church is faith in God our Eternal Father. Let us not limit that principle of faith as some might think they should in that statement, for faith is an active, vigorous, productive power. Faith without works is dead. The reason that was said is that there is no faith where there is no action. Faith is the underlying principle of all our activities. It is the thing that makes life go. Of course in its sublimest and highest sense, it is faith in God our Heavenly Father, but we must also have faith in ourselves and faith in each other or we can do nothing of value.

ETERNAL PROGRESS

Then we believe in the principle of progress, eternal progress, if you will, and that means that as I find better ways of doing the things my faith teaches me to do, that I will give up the poor ways and use the better, and that again presents positive reaction to the exigencies of life. If we are going to get the most out of our experience here we will be constantly looking for improved and better ways of doing the things that we have to do in our daily conduct of life. We will try to find better ways of meeting our fellows in our business transactions, ways which will better recognize their rights as well as ours. We will strive for better ways of handling the boys and girls that God gives into our care, so that we may bring them closer to him and make them better servants of him. Think what a grave responsibility it is to father a son or a daughter, for that son may be the head of a family eventually, if he is fortunate and then from him there may stem forth a progeny that will fan out in a period of time until it includes thousands and thousands of people. Think what a responsibility it is for you, the father, to start that son out on an evil path, for he may pass that on to his progeny, and it may go on indefinitely; and it affects so many people. And think what a wonderful beneficiary you may be to future generations of people if you start that son out with a full faith in God, our Heavenly Father, with an active understanding of the positive side of his duty, if you have trained him in the good things that he should do, steered him away from the bad ones so that he will pass those good traits on to his posterity. What a blessing you will have been to those unborn generations that are yet to come.

POSITIVE VALUES

I believe that every waiting spirit has the right to expect those opportunities, has the right to expect a body when he comes into the world that will be free from disturbing elements that would prevent his full realization and development. I believe that in teaching the law of chastity to our boys and girls, we should teach them the positive values of it, for they are there, and it is our duty to search them out and understand them so that we can pass them on to our boys and girls and they in turn to theirs. Those values are there.

That law of chastity is not a negative proposition, but it is a positive one, because in its observance there are spiritual values that far outweigh the physical dangers that we often emphasize to the neglect of the others. I believe the chances are that our children will respond to the positive attitude quicker and more thoroughly than they do to the negative. Let's show them the values that there are in that law. Let's show them the values there are in the law of the Word of Wisdom. Let's show them the values there are in the law of tithing and all those laws which we hold up as standards of the Church. They have their positive side. They are not negative in their nature, and neither is the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is a thing that today and tomorrow and the next day, this week and next week and next month, the months of April, May, and June and on through the years, we should apply in our lives constantly and daily, not sit idly by and choose to do the things we ought not to do, but to be active, not in those forbidden things, but active and vigorous in building up the kingdom of God; in blessing and benefiting our fellow men.

"... inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25-40.) That is a positive command, and we must be constantly and busily engaged in an effort to serve our fellows and teach them the positive side of the gospel of Jesus Christ to be most effective, I believe, as teachers in Israel. There are many men under my voice today who have that responsibility either in schools or in wards or in stakes or in quorums, and it is our duty to be positive in our teachings. I call to your attention the fact that our teaching will have far greater effect if we are positive in applying those teachings in our lives so that men who listen to us can see the effect of those principles when they are lived by a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or any other, for that matter. Let us, as teachers, let us as leaders, be positive, militantly positive, in teaching these things and living them, and God will bless our efforts, and may he bless you and me and those who are near and dear to us who are not here today, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER WILLIAM L. KILLPACK

Former President of the North Central States Mission

I should have had sufficient time to get my composure. This is a great day for me. I have been coming for many years now, sitting at the fountain of inspiration and counsel, but little did I ever think that I would occupy this position.

I think in the few moments that I speak I shall tell you something of a personal nature which has been a testimony to me in guiding my spiritual activities in life. I filled a mission a number of years ago in the California Mission, returned home, was fortunate enough to meet a lovely girl, we were married, parents of four lovely children, worked in the Mutual, the Sunday School, thought we were getting along fine and doing a good job. One day the president of the stake came to me and said, "Brother Killpack, the High Council and the Stake Presidency have been considering you and your name has been sent by us to the First Presidency. We want you to serve as the bishop of a ward. "Well," I said, "President," and this fine man is in this audience today, "I will go on a mission, and I will go anywhere you want me to go," (I think I said I would go to China, China, of course, wasn't open then) "but for heaven's sake, don't ask me to be a bishop." That good man said, "You think it over for a day or two and I will come back for your answer," and of course I thought it over very seriously. I had been taught as you have been taught never to turn down a position in the Church, and I accepted it, and I want to tell you that those seven years that I served as a bishop were some of the happiest years of my life. I had heard great criticism about our bishops, as we hear them today, and I felt that I could not take it but when I got into the spirit of it and got to working with the people that I thought would probably give me some trouble they were the finest people that I had ever met and it was really a joy and a pleasure.

We left that stake and went into another stake and had been there only a short while and that good president said the same thing to me in that stake: "We want you to serve as a bishop." Having had one experience that was enjoyable I couldn't very well refuse another one and I consented, and I served in that capacity until I was called as President of the North Central States Mission.

I mention this to show you brethren that so far as I am concerned the greatest happiness and the greatest joy that has come into my life has been as the result of Church service. All of these other things are lovely and fine, but they do not give you the satisfaction that serving in the Church gives.

As we come back from the North Central States Mission after spending five years in one of the greatest and most enjoyable services of the Church, we bring greetings from those fine young men and young women to the First Presidency and to the General Authorities and to the parents, and we wish to tell you that those boys and girls are magnifying their callings and they are representing the Church and their families in an admirable way. We have served with approximately four hundred young men and women. Each of them has come to the mission office, the mission home, and incidentally I would like to say that my good wife has been overzealous in carrying the work in cooperation with me and in extending a welcome hand to those missionaries, trying to make them feel that the mission home was their home. When we have knelt with them in prayer and associated with them in our class work and in our council meetings and visited with them in their district meetings and testimony, report and missionary meetings from time to time, I want to tell you it has been a glorious experience. We are proud of them. They are wonderful missionaries and they certainly are doing a splendid work.

We were privileged last summer to have a visit of a few days from President Smith in the city of Minneapolis. The people were overwhelmed when they were given this great blessing. President Smith was very busy attending a convention and couldn't stay at the mission home. He stayed at one of the hotels. We had him there for a meal or two and I had the opportunity to associate with him in his convention, and I want to tell you, brothers and sisters, that President Smith is the greatest missionary we have in the Church. It wasn't uncommon to see twenty and thirty men around him most of the time and he was telling them about the Book of Mormon and about the Church, and in many instances he had his secretary send the Improvement Era and the Book of Mormon to these men in the various places where they live. He did us a great amount of good in the city of Minneapolis.

Things are opening up in that mission. In the past five years I have seen considerable progress and advancement in the matter of teaching the gospel, which I would like to mention. The radio is one means. It was very difficult a number of years ago to get an opportunity to present the message over the radio. "Yes, we can give you the time if you will pay the regular price that is required, you can have all the time you like." Of course we are counseled not to spend money for radio programs. I advised the missionaries to go back and explain the gospel plan to these people and to tell the men who operated the various broadcasting stations that they were working in the missionary field devoting their time and their talents for the spreading of the gospel. It was not long before these stations began to give them the use of their facilities and at the present time we have fifteen or twenty stations that give us liberal time and in many instances the missionaries tell me they receive fan mail from all over the country complimenting them upon the splendid programs that they are giving.

In the city of Minneapolis and in St. Paul it isn't uncommon to have a request for missionaries to come to the great University of Minnesota to speak to the various classes of students regarding the Church. We have gone into several churches in a few cities by request to speak to their congregations and we have had congregations headed by their ministers come to the branches in the twin cities to visit our Church. So, brothers and sisters, it is a great privilege and a great opportunity that is coming to us in that great country.

Monday, April 4Second Day

In conclusion, I would like to say I feel that there is a great undercurrent in the mission field, I can feel it to some extent there and I have felt it considerably since coming home, in the matter of criticism of some of the plans that the General Authorities have instituted, notably the welfare plan, and of the General Authorities themselves, and I would like to comment for just a second on that. I would like to read a scripture from Second Nephi.

"Yea, and there shall also be many which shall say: Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God—he will justify in committing a little sin; yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this; and do all these things, for tomorrow we die; and if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God."

And then further: "And others will he pacify and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell."

I think that is the condition that is coming over many of our people in the Church today. Very often people from the mission field come to Salt Lake City and these other western cities, and they come in contact with members of the Church who have been born in the Church, they see things that are not very complimentary to the Church, and they come back into the mission field very much disheartened. And occasionally our Elders in various sections of the field have much difficulty in preaching the gospel because of the actions of some member of the Church who is living in that community who isn't living as he should live. So, brothers and sisters, if I say nothing else today, let me emphasize and warn you and myself that we should live exemplary lives if we do nothing else. We can preach the gospel if we will just live as we should live and be what we are supposed to be. If you want to help spread the word of the Lord in the mission field you live as you should live if you happen to go out into those sections, and that applies to us at home.

The things that have been said here this morning and throughout this conference I certainly am in accord with and I want to thank the Presidency of the Church, the General Authorities—we have had the opportunity of visiting with five of them and their wives as they have come to the mission, and I have had the opportunity of meeting with the General Authorities in the Mission President's meeting, and it has been a glorious experience. I thank the Lord for it. And now this new call and responsibility that has come to me,

I certainly pray, and I want an interest in your faith and prayers, that we will be able to measure up to this great responsibility. I thank the Lord for the testimony that I have and the spirit that has come to me and I do it humbly in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

President William L. Killpack, formerly president of the North Central States Mission and, as he intimated in his concluding remarks, soon to be president of the Idaho Falls Temple, has just completed his address to us.

This is President Smith's birthday and he has indicated his willingness to say something to us and to the Saints on this occasion. May the Lord bless him that he may be able to say what he wishes to say and give us the inspiration and wisdom which he alone can give and he alone has the right to give.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

Seventy-nine years ago today, a baby boy came to earth across the street from where I stand. There was snow on the ground. The boy's parents were living in very humble circumstances. I was that boy, and here in your presence today, I praise my Maker and thank him with all my heart for sending me into a home of real Latter-day Saints.

EARLY LIFE

I grew up in this community. When eight years of age, I was baptized in City Creek just a block from here. I was confirmed a member of the Church in fast meeting in the Seventeenth Ward, and with the encouragement of one of my dear aunts, Lucy M. Smith, I stood up and bore my testimony. I told that audience that I was glad to belong to the Church of Jesus Christ, for I believed it was the true Church, and I wanted to be worthy of my membership in it.

Many things have happened since then. I wish I could give you a picture of what has passed before my eyes and through my mind since I began life here on earth. I was privileged to go to school. I attended the Sunday School and the Mutual Improvement Association in the Seventeenth Ward. I attended fast meeting and used to come to this building on Sunday to hear sermons delivered by the great leaders of the Church. I was permitted to go to Provo and attend Brigham Young Academy under Superintendent Karl G. Maeser for one year; and the influence of that good man on my life was so great that I am sure it will endure for eternity.

I was ordained a deacon and was president of my quorum. When I was about fourteen years of age, I read the fortieth chapter of Alma in the Book of Mormon in our Sunday School class. It made an impression on my mind that has been helpful when death has taken loved ones away. I will not take time now to read it, but it is one place in the scriptures that tells us where our spirits go when they leave this body, and I have wanted to go to that place called paradise ever since.

MISSION IN SOUTHERN STATES

I was called on a mission to the Southern States in the days when great bitterness motivated some of the people who lived there. The most of them were good men and women, but there were a few who objected to the gospel of Jesus Christ being taught as the Lord desires us to teach it. Some of our missionaries were brutally whipped. During the period of time before I went there, several were killed. I had the experience myself of lying in bed while the bullets whistled overhead. A mob surrounded the building where we were sleeping and fired into the four corners. Splinters fell over us, but nobody was hurt. I labored under the direction of Elder J. Golden Kimball. He was a great mission president. I came home and continued my life work, having been benefited by the experience of my missionary career.

There were saloons and gambling houses in Salt Lake City in my youth—not very many—but some, but I never had occasion to go into them. I always felt it would not please my father and mother if I did, and I was happy to do the things that they wanted me to do.

FURTHER ACTIVITIES

After my mission to the Southern States, I was called to work in the auxiliary organizations at home, in both the Sunday School and the Mutual Improvement Association, and later became one of the stake superintendents of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association. I was also a ward teacher and stake home missionary. I also served as a member of the general board of M.I.A.

The President of the United States, William McKinley, sent word to me by Governor Arthur L. Thomas that he felt that a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was entitled to a federal appointment. We had not had one up to that time, and he offered me the position in the Land Office of Receiver of Public Monies and Special Disbursing Agent. Before that I had worked for the Grant-Odell Company in the yard putting up wagons and other equipment, and when I was offered the position of Receiver in the United States Land Office. I was working for Z.C.M.I. My first appointment came from President William McKinley, and the next one came from President Theodore Roosevelt.

I attended the general conferences that were held semi-annually in this building. I used to edge my way in and sit down on the stairs at the left. The house would be full, and there weren't seats for everybody. On the particular occasion to which I refer, I came in, as usual, and worked my way through the crowd and finally got a seat down near the bottom of the stairs. (At that time I was a married man with a family, living across the street, and may I say that having a fine Latter day Saint wife was one of the greatest blessings that ever came to me.) Presiding Bishop Charles W. Nibley, who was my neighbor, touched me on the shoulder and said, "Come and sit by me." "I said, "There is plenty of room here." Again he said, "Come and sit by me. It is more comfortable here." If I had known what was going to happen during that conference, you could not have pried me into that seat.

CALL TO APOSTLESHIP

That was on Sunday. I had to be at my work in the land office because people were there from all over, and I could not go to the meetings except on Sunday. The following Tuesday, I came home from the land office to take my children down to the fair at four o'clock, and Sister Nellie Colebrook Taylor came across the street and said, "Oh, Brother Smith, I congratulate you."

I said, "What are you congratulating me about?"

She said, "Don't you know?"

I replied, "I don't know what you are talking about."

"Why, she said, "you have just been sustained as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve." And I talked her out of it.

She apologized and said, "I am sorry. I hope you will forgive me." Knowing what my father's experiences had been, and having such a nice position at the land office, I was not looking for a place such as father had. It took all his time and kept him away from home so much.

I turned to my wife and said, "I'll take the children now and go down to the fair." But before I could get to the buggy, back came Sister Taylor, and she rushed up to me and said, "It was you! It was you! Everybody heard it."

I will never forget how I felt. I turned to my wife, and she was in tears. That is the way I received my notice that I had been sustained as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve.

These are some of the experiences of a short life; and I want to say to you brethren and sisters, it is a good deal better to be seventy-nine years young than it is to be fifty years old.

SHARING THE GOSPEL

I came into my place as humble as a man could be. It took me about three weeks before I could feel comfortable, and that would be another interesting story if I had the time to tell it. During the period of time I have held the priesthood, I have traveled more than a million miles in the world, seeking to share the gospel of Jesus Christ that is so precious to me. It has never been difficult for me to tell men about the fine things that we have. Sometimes when men belonging to other churches have said, "We have this and this," I have said, "Keep all the truth that you have, and then let me explain to you some of the things that you do not possess that have made my life rich, and I am sure would make you happy."

I was secretary of the Southern States Mission, and I presided over the European Mission for a term, and I have been associated with you, my brethren and sisters, and many of your fathers and mothers who have passed to the other side, in this marvelous gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord. I would like to say there has never been one hour in my life that I can remember that I have had any doubt about this being the work of our Heavenly Father. It has been a joy to me. People have been kind to me wherever I have been—almost everyone. I cannot imagine that I could have lived a richer life if I had planned what I wanted to do during these seventy-nine years.

I take this occasion now to thank the General Authorities of the Church, the stake authorities, ward authorities, members of the Church, to thank you for your kindness, your love, your help, and willingness to enable me to do my work, especially at times when it has been somewhat difficult.

BLESSINGS TO BE EARNED

We have a great responsibility resting upon us in the various positions we occupy. I say to you men who are in this audience, who are elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and who have no official position, the Lord expects just as much from you. If you expect your blessings in the hereafter, you will have to earn them in the same way that the men who are ward and stake and General authorities are earning theirs.

It is a wonderful thing to look into the faces of a group like this. I do not know how soon the time may come that I will be called from this sphere of action, but when that time comes, I hope that I will have earned the right to continue my associations with just such men and women as are here today, and those who are scattered throughout the world who are living the gospel of Jesus Christ.

To this marvelous choir of young people, from Ricks College of Rexburg, Idaho, I say: Keep the commandments of the Lord. There isn't any happiness worthy the name if you fail to do that. All happiness is on the Lord's side of the line. We thank you for coming here to sing to us. We hope that wherever you go you will keep in mind that our Heavenly Father loves you and has offered you and continues to offer you opportunity to develop to be such men and women as will be entitled to a place in the celestial kingdom to have the association with those whom you love throughout the ages of eternity.

GRATITUDE FOR PRESERVATION

I had no idea when I came this morning that I was going to talk to you like this. I am grateful for the preservation of my life. Many times when I have been apparently ready to go to the other side, I have been kept for some other work to be done. I want every one of you to know that I do not have an enemy, that is, there is no one in the world that I have any enmity towards. All men and all women are my Father's children, and I have sought during my life to observe the wise direction of the Redeemer of mankind, to love my neighbor as myself. I have had much happiness in life, so much that I would not exchange with anybody who has ever lived, and I do not say that boastfully but gratefully. All the happiness that has come to me and mine has been the result of trying to keep the commandments of God and of living to be worthy of the blessings that he has promised those who honor him and keep his commandments.

THE LORD'S SIDE

God bless you, my brethren and sisters. Do not make any mistake in these days of uncertainty. Stay on the Lord's side of the line. All righteousness, all happiness is on his side of the line.

In conclusion, I pray that we may all so adjust ourselves as we pass through life's experiences that we can reach out and feel that we hold our Father's hand. This is God's work. This is his Church. It is the way that our Heavenly Father has provided to prepare us for eternal happiness. I pray that we may all be worthy of it.

I would not feel right if I failed now to express to my father's family, my brothers and sisters, my own family who have been so close to me all these years, my gratitude to them for their helpfulness. They have never put anything in the way of my doing my duty. And I take this occasion to say to my brethren, the counselors in the Presidency of the Church, and these other men who are here on this stand: You will never know how much I love you. I have not words to express it. And I want to feel that way toward every son and every daughter of my Heavenly Father, and I can feel that way if I observe his laws and commandments and follow his advice.

That the Lord may enable us all so to adjust ourselves that when the time comes for us to go hence we may find our names enrolled in the Lamb's book of life entitling us to a place in the celestial kingdom in the companionship of the best people that have lived upon the earth, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We have just listened to President Smith, the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are very grateful to him for his message and for his blessing. I repeat, may the Lord richly endow him and bless him with health and strength sufficient to his needs and in accordance with his desires.

Monday, April 4Second Day

After this session has adjourned we will meet again this afternoon at two o'clock.

The proceedings of the afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL and the other stations that I mentioned at the beginning of this meeting.

The audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before two o'clock this afternoon.

Any important messages that have been received will be broadcast over the air on the outside after this meeting.

The Choir singing for this session of the Conference has been by the Ricks College Choir, Elder Alma Dittmer, conductor, Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

The Ricks College Choir will now sing "Let the Nations Praise the Lord." The closing prayer will be offered by President H. Vearle Payne of Mt. Graham Stake, Arizona.

The Ricks College Choir sang "Let All Nations Praise the Lord."

The closing prayer was offered by President H. Vearle Payne of the Mt. Graham Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

SECOND DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference convened in the Tabernacle at 2:00 p.m., Monday, April 4.

President George Albert Smith was at home, resting. President David O. McKay, at the President's request, conducted the exercises of this meeting.

The choir singing for this session was by the Ricks College Choir, Elder Alma Dittmer conducting.

President David O. McKay:

This is the fourth session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square.

President Smith thinks it advisable for him not to come down this afternoon, but to rest, and requests that we proceed and that I conduct the exercises.

Of the General Authorities, Elder Matthew Cowley is absent visiting the Pacific Missions. He is in New Zealand and will attend the Hui Tau, that is, the great conference of the New Zealand Mission. Elder Alma Sonne, as you know, is in Europe. President George F. Richards is at home on the advice of his physician.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL and other stations as announced this morning. However, as the President of the United States is scheduled to speak over the radio network of the nation from approximately 2:30 to 3:00 o'clock this afternoon, this conference will not be broadcast during that period.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loudspeaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The singing for this occasion is furnished by the Ricks College Choir, Elder Alma Dittmer conducting and Elder Roy M. Darley, assistant Tabernacle organist, at the organ.

We will begin the services by the choir's singing "O, Gladsome Light," following which the opening prayer will be offered by President Clarence D. Rich of the Morgan Stake.

---

Singing by the choir, "O, Gladsome Light."

President Clarence D. Rich, Morgan Stake, offered the invocation.

The Ricks College Choir sang "Savior, Redeemer of My Soul."

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

Yesterday I had the privilege of standing as a representative of the Lord in the baptism of my eldest son. After I had acted pursuant to the authority that I had, he and I came forth out of the water. Then my father, one of God's high priests, laid his hands upon my son's head and confirmed him a member of the Church of Jesus Christ and gave him the gift of the Holy Ghost. This gift of the Holy Ghost is the right to the constant companionship of that member of the Godhead, based on righteousness.

THE PRIESTHOOD

My father and I each acted in the authority of the priesthood, and pursuant to authorization given by those who hold the keys of the priesthood. Priesthood is one thing; keys another. Priesthood is the power and authority of God delegated to man on earth to act in all things for the salvation of men. Keys are the directing power, the right to preside and govern in the priesthood and in the Church.

These two things, the authority of the priesthood and the directing power that goes with the keys of the priesthood, distinguish us from the world. The power and authority of God are found in the Church of Jesus Christ; they are not found in the churches which are not of Jesus Christ. The churches of the world have a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof. It is in and through the authority of the priesthood that the power of godliness is manifest. And we are the only people on earth who have that priesthood, that power to act in the Lord's name and have our acts approved and acknowledged both on earth and in heaven.

Monday, April 4

Second Day

This is a restored Church. In it is found today, in all essential respects, exactly and precisely what the ancients had. Just as Christ gave Peter and the Apostles of old both the authority of the priesthood and the keys of the kingdom of heaven, or in other words the keys of the kingdom of God on earth, which is the Church, so has he given these things to us in our day. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is in the most real and actual sense the kingdom of God on earth, and it is designed to prepare and qualify men to go to the kingdom of God in heaven which is the celestial kingdom of heaven.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The Prophet Joseph Smith preached a glorious sermon in which he defined the kingdom of God. From it I read these sentences:

Where there is a priest of God—a minister who has power and authority from God to administer in the ordinances of the gospel and officiate in the priesthood of God, there is the kingdom of God, . . . Where there is no kingdom of God there is no salvation. What constitutes the kingdom of God? Where there is a prophet, a priest, or a righteous man unto whom God gives his oracles, there is the kingdom of God; and where the oracles of God are not, there the kingdom of God is not.

. . . If we do not get revelations, we do not have the oracles of God; and if they have not the oracles of God, they are not the people of God.

. . . Jesus in his teachings says, "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What rock? Revelation. . . .

Whenever men can find out the will of God and find an administrator legally authorized from God, there is the kingdom of God; but where these are not, the kingdom of God is not. (D.H.C., vol. 5, pp. 256-259.)

RESTORATION OF GOSPEL

By the grace of God, and through his mercy, we have had restored to us in this day the fulness of the everlasting gospel: all of the laws, ordinances, and principles by obedience to which we can be both saved and exalted in our Father's kingdom. No other peoples have had so much of the light and truths of heaven poured out upon them as we have.

To us has come the Book of Mormon—a record of God's dealings with a people who had the fulness of the everlasting gospel—and it contains, in plain and simple form, the truths of salvation. We have many of the truths of heaven, and if we will accept them and then live them, we can gain the greatest rewards that are available in eternity. But it is not enough to have the truth alone. The mere possession of truth will not save a man. It is not enough to read the doctrines of the kingdom and know what they are. The devils also believe and tremble. It is not enough to take the Book of Mormon and read it and believe it. We must do all these things. But thereafter we must accept the truth by covenant under the hands of a legal administrator, someone who can bind on earth and in heaven.

COVENANT OF BAPTISM

The Prophet Joseph Smith wrote these words in his journal referring to a discussion he had with the Twelve Apostles:

I told the brethren that the Book of Mormon was the most correct of any book on earth, and the keystone of our religion, and a man would get nearer to God by abiding its precepts, than by any other book. (Ibid., vol. 4, p. 461.)

I agree with every word that Brother Marion G. Romney said yesterday. As he has done, I have read the Book of Mormon, prayerfully and carefully, more times than I have fingers; I believe it, sincerely and wholeheartedly. I know that it is a true witness of Christ and an accurate revealer of the Doctrines of Christ.

But after we have found the truth, after we have learned that the Book of Mormon was translated by the gift and power of God and is verily true, after we have obtained the testimony of Christ that comes by hearing the word of God taught by one having authority—and taught in righteousness and with the power of the Spirit—we must then accept that truth by covenant of baptism; and we must do it under the hands of a legal administrator.

Baptism is the gateway to the kingdom of God both on earth and in heaven. And the kind of baptism that you and I want is one which will be recognized both on earth and in heaven. It is one thing to set up a system that will be recognized by men; it is quite another thing to have a system which God will recognize. The Lord said to Peter:

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven. . . . (Matt. 16:19.)

We want a baptism, (and this goes for all ordinances,) that will be binding on earth and in heaven, that will be recognized by the Lord both here and hereafter.

DIVINE AUTHORITY

Now, this sentence from the Prophet's sermon:

All the ordinances, systems, and administrations on the earth are of no use to the children of men, unless they are ordained and authorized

Monday, April 4

Second Day

of God; for nothing will save a man but a legal administrator; for none others will be acknowledged by God or angels. (D.H.C., vol. 5, p. 259.)

Speaking of the new and everlasting covenant, which is the gospel, the Lord said to the Prophet:

... All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations or expectations that are not made and entered into and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, of him who is anointed, both as well for time and for all eternity, and that too most holy, by revelation and commandment through the medium of mine anointed, whom I have appointed on the earth to hold this power, ... are of no efficacy, virtue or force in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts that are not made unto this end have an end when men are dead. (D. & C. 132:7.)

Then the Lord propounds a question to all those who have set up systems of religion on assumed authority, authority claimed from generations dead and gone. It is: "... will I receive at your hands that which I have not appointed?" (Ibid., 10.) Certainly not. His house is a house of order, and not a house of confusion. No man can come unto him or unto his Father except it be by his word which is his law.

And finally, in language so broad and comprehensive as to cover all principles, doctrines, ordinances, and systems, the Lord says:

And everything that is in the world, whether it be ordained of men, by thrones, or principalities, or powers, or things of name, whatsoever they may be, that are not by me or by my word, saith the Lord, shall be thrown down, and shall not remain after men are dead, neither in nor after the resurrection, saith the Lord your God.

For whatsoever things remain are by me; and whatsoever things are not by me shall be shaken and destroyed. (Ibid., 13-14.)

Thus there are only two ways in which anything in this world can be so ordained as to remain with full force and validity in the spirit world and in the resurrection. Either God himself must ordain it or an agent of God, acting under and in accordance with proper authorization from him, must do it. Then and then only will the act be recognized in eternity. There is no other way.

Baptism is the gate to the celestial kingdom of heaven, provided it is performed by a legal administrator, one whose administrations will be recognized by God, and provided also that the candidate has made himself worthy and that the ordinance is sealed upon him by the Holy Ghost.

The same principle applies to all ordinances. The Lord said of the sacrament:

Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. (John 6:54.)

But in order to obtain that blessing we must participate in the ordinance worthily, with the ratifying approval of the Holy Ghost, and as it is performed by a legal administrator.

It is the same with marriage. Men can ordain any system of marriage that suits their pleasure. They can make a man and a woman husband and wife in this life; but when men are dead, that ends the marriage. In order for a man and a woman to be husband and wife in the spirit world and in the resurrection, for the family unit to continue after death, the sealing must be done by God personally or by an authorized agent holding authority from him so to act; and it must be sealed and approved by the Holy Ghost, a condition that is fulfilled only if the participants are worthy.

RESTORATION OF PRIESTHOOD

Now we have received the same power and authority that the ancients had. In May of 1829, John the Baptist came and gave to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery both the Aaronic Priesthood and the keys of that priesthood. Shortly thereafter Peter, James, and John came and gave to those same worthies the Melchizedek Priesthood and the keys of the kingdom of God. Then in 1835, when the first quorum of Apostles was called in this dispensation, those Apostles were given the keys of the kingdom of God on earth.

Thereafter additional keys were given. Elijah came on April the third in 1836. He gave the keys of the sealing power, or in other words, he authorized the use of the priesthood to seal on earth and bind in heaven. Moses came and gave the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north. Elias came and gave the keys of the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham. The Prophet says that divers angels from Michael or Adam on down to the present time all came, declaring their dispensations, their rights, their keys, their honors, their majesty and glory, and the power of their priesthood, until we had in this dispensation, which is the one of the Fulness of Times, all of the power and authority that God had ever given in any dispensation that went before.

KEYS OF THE KINGDOM

Then just a few weeks before Joseph and Hyrum went to Carthage Jail to seal their testimony with their blood, the Prophet, in the Nauvoo Temple, conferred upon the Apostles all of the keys of the kingdom of heaven. After the bestowal of these powers and keys he said:

I have sealed upon your heads all the keys of the kingdom of God. I have sealed upon you every key, power, principle that the God of heaven has revealed to me. Now, no matter where I may go or what I may do, the kingdom rests with you. . . .
 . . . ye apostles of the Lamb of God, my brethren, upon your shoulders this kingdom rests; now you have got to round up your shoulders and bear off the kingdom. (See, The Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, p. 72.)

From that moment to the present time, every man who has been ordained to the holy apostleship has been given the keys of the kingdom of God on earth, or in other words the directive right to preside over this Church and this kingdom. And so, at this time, we have legal administrators, brethren holding both priesthood and keys. We have the truths of heaven to teach; we have the power to seal men up, conditioned on their faithfulness, unto eternal life. Nowhere else in all the world is this found.

This morning, President Smith expressed a sentiment which he has expressed over and over again. In this sermon of the Prophet Joseph Smith from which I have been quoting is the same thought. The sentiment shows the measure, the great capacity, the love that prevails in the hearts of the two men. The Prophet said:

I thank God for preserving me from my enemies; I have no enemies but for the truth's sake. I have no desire but to do all men good. I feel to pray for all men. We don't ask any people to throw away any good they have got; we only ask them to come and get more. What if all the world should embrace this gospel? They would see eye to eye, and the blessings of God would be poured out upon the people, which is the desire of my whole soul. (D.H.C., vol. 5, p. 259.)

As as the Prophet prayed, so pray I in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER S. DILWORTH YOUNG

of the First Council of the Seventy

I think it would be wise for me to report to you a geographical change which has taken place in the New England Mission, so that it will be on the record of this conference.

WORK IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Last summer the First Presidency assigned to our mission the Island of Newfoundland, a large island lying off the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the Atlantic Ocean. Newfoundland is a province of England and has been on its own, so far as government is concerned, for a long time. Until now, it has had its ruling power in the hands of three commissioners. Three weeks ago, the British House of Lords voted affirmatively, and as soon as the King signs the bill, Newfoundland will be a province of Canada. Then all of the rules applying to goods and men entering into the provinces of Canada, will apply to Newfoundland. This is not all, however, of Newfoundland. Included in the province is Labrador, the strip of coast on the northeastern part of the continent. So the boundary of the New England Mission now starts at the lower part of Connecticut, about twenty miles out of New York City, and extends nearly a thousand, five hundred miles to just opposite Greenland. We can give your sons now any type of climate they can endure.

The first two elders to open that land, so far as I know in the history of the Church (and I think it has been checked quite carefully here in Salt Lake City) are Elders Erza C. Page of Payson and John Mayor Scowcroft of Ogden. They went over to the island last fall and began their work. They do not as yet have converts, and Elder Scowcroft has since come back to the mainland, but they are making progress. There are now four elders there. I should like it in the record, so that twenty-five years from now if somebody wants to know who started the work in Newfoundland, those two young men may have the credit.

EXCELLENT MISSIONARIES

I enjoy very much being associated with the young men and the young women who are in the New England Mission. I don't have a great number—about two percent of all the missionaries of the Church are in our mission, but I think they are a good cross-section of all the others, and so I feel as though I know the remainder. They are very much alike, and they are fine boys and girls. They become excellent missionaries.

When I was a missionary in the Central States, I remember President Samuel O. Bennion said that a good many of the boys who came out at that time could just as well have stayed at home for all the good he thought they did. A number of boys loafed away their missions. I think I would be safe in saying that of the 125 missionaries in New England today not more than two could be classed as among those who are not making the most of the effort. I believe this generation of young folk is the finest and the cleanest, the most intelligent, and the best educated group we have had for as long as I know anything about the missionary service. They have their moments. A few days ago one of the elders in one of our cities in Massachusetts walked up to a door with his companion, knocked on the door, and to a maid who came to the door, he said, "Is the lady of the house in?" And she answered, "No, she isn't, she's gone to heaven." He said, "Would you mind giving her this tract when she comes back?"

GAINING A TESTIMONY

If I might have the Spirit of the Lord with me, I should like to talk for a moment about these young missionaries from the viewpoint of you, their parents, who sit in this audience. You send them to us, and the First Presidency gives us instructions concerning them. In their hands lies the awesome responsibility of preaching and teaching to the people of the world the gospel of Jesus Christ and also, too, of warning them, for this is a day of warning. But I am sure that you want these young men and women to get something from their experience besides that. If I detect anything from the letters I received from parents, it is that they have a very great hope that the boys and the girls will come home with sure and abiding testimonies of the truth of the gospel. I have never yet seen parents too poor but what the money they spent to keep their boys and girls in the field is well spent and ungrudgingly spent if the child comes home and looks his folks straight in the eye and tells them that he does have a testimony and knows that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, that the happiest days of his life have been when he has been able to tell people about the gospel.

Those things don't come by chance, my friends. The business of getting a testimony is a growth which must be taken step by step, and it comes rapidly or slowly according to how the person who takes those steps, moves. In the mission field, it is necessary that missionaries take them quite rapidly. They must have their testimony early if they expect to get much done. I don't blame the young folk for saying before they leave for the field that they aren't quite sure; because they don't yet know that a testimony is a relative thing and never can quite be measured; that only as a man feels in his heart and gives service to his Church does that whispering become more and more sure until the final assurance, for which we all hope, comes. They don't know that yet. They come into the field, and we send them out. I believe I know a little about what our Lord and Savior must have felt on that great day when he called seventy to him and told them to go forth, giving them authority to do the things that they had seen him do. I believe that the man side of his nature made him worry about them. He was hopeful they would all measure up to what he told them; and, while I know he had the prophetic view and could see ahead, I like to think that he worried about it, too. When they came back and said those immortal words that even the devils were subject to them because of his name, he must have experienced a thrill of satisfaction. (See Luke 10:17.) I have had something of that kind of sensation when, after I send these young people out, they send me letters and say, "The houses have been opened to us; we have been fed and we have been clothed, and the way has opened for us to preach the gospel far beyond our strength and ability." Then I feel like saying, "Yes, even the devils are subject to you through His name."

LOSING THEIR LIVES

These boys have some rights in this business; and I would like to say that these are as much a bill of rights for a boy going into the mission field as is the one in our Constitution for the people. Every young man in this Church who goes on a mission—and I hope they'll all want to go—has a right to feel and have the sensations which come to him, when he first learns what it means to lose his life for the sake of the gospel. You remember, the Savior said that those who lay down their lives or lose their lives for the gospel's sake shall in no wise lose their reward.

Now, I don't mean these boys are are going to face bloodshed in losing their lives. I mean it in a sense that a boy who goes into the mission field will be no missionary until he learns that he himself is as nothing; that he is the mouthpiece of him who dwells on high, and unless he finds a way to put himself in tune with the Spirit of the Holy Ghost which is within him, he will fail just as surely as he walks. But he learns it very rapidly, and before long there is no amount of fatigue but what he will face it. I smile now as I remember one of the boys, who said to me one day, "Brother Young, there is a family of Saints down the road which hasn't been visited for a long time." Said I, "How far away do they live?" "Oh," he said, "fourteen miles." I said, "Well, that's good. How do you expect to get there to visit them?" "Oh, there isn't any way that I know of." "Isn't there a bus?" "No." I said, "Well, the walking isn't crowded, is it?" He looked at me peculiarly and said, "Well, I hadn't thought of that." And he walked with his companion. In the walking he learned that he didn't count for much. And in the walking, my brethren and sisters, they do learn that they do not count for much except as God gives them guidance. When boys begin to write in to me and say, "Brother Young, we came to a fork in the road and didn't know which way to go, so we knelt down on our knees, and when we arose we felt impressed to go to the left," and then they would say, "and we came to a house where they were willing to hear the gospel." Then, say I, they are learning to know what it means to lose their lives. If they keep that sort of thing up for the two years they are in the mission field and then keep it up after they come home, when the bishop calls them to work they'll remember that they don't count, that the work counts. If they say, "Yes, bishop," then you have a member of the Church who will stand by you till he dies, and be a credit to you. That right every boy has. So does each girl, even though the girls don't quite do it in the same way. They catch the same spirit if they work.

REALIZATION OF GOD'S PROMISE

The second thing which is their right is to learn the truth of some words which appear in the eighty-fourth section of the Doctrine and Covenants. I am sure it's a right. I think it's my right. I'm very happy that I was allowed by my mission president to find it out for myself. I would have been disappointed on my mission if I hadn't been able to prove the truth of these words. I don't believe there is a boy in the Church today who has ever heard a story about his forefathers or about anybody who ever went on a mission and did the job well, who doesn't want to have something happen to him in such a way that he'll know also that verily they are true. And these are the words: "And any man"—and that means you and me, since it hasn't been revoked yet,

And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, nor joint; and a hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry neither athirst.

Therefore, take ye no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed, . . .

For your Father, who is in heaven, knoweth that you have need of all these things.

Therefore, let the morrow take thought for the things of itself.

Neither take ye thought beforehand what ye shall say; but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man. (D. & C. 84:80-81, 83-85.)

I am a proud mission president, my brothers and sisters, when a boy can walk to a cottage meeting with his mind full of the subjects on which he has studied long and hard in the privacy of his room, but who has not made up his mind what he will say at that meeting until, having prayed before he leaves his room that he may be given the words to say, and arriving at the meeting, opens his mind and says to the Lord and to the people, "I pray I may be inspired to say what I should say to you," and then proceeds to say what the Lord puts in his mind. That, to my way of thinking, is one of the finest gifts which can come to a missionary. He has a right to have that experience. I pray to the Lord God of Hosts that all of the missionaries, the four thousand and six hundred fine boys and girls whom President McKay mentioned yesterday, may have had that before they come home.

A TESTIMONY OF JESUS

The third and final right, of course, is the great thing, a testimony of Jesus. I need not say anything about that, because if missionaries have done the first two things I have mentioned, it is as sure as night follows day that the testimony will be theirs. The fervency of it will thrill you when they come home as it thrills me and my colleagues in the United States and in the other nations of the earth, wherever our boys and girls go in the spirit of their calling.

May the Lord bless these great men who are prophets and seers and revelators, who send us forth to do the bidding of God as we are inspired by the Lord through his Holy Spirit. May President Smith's hand be upheld until he lives as long as he cares to with full health and strength. He is loved everywhere. Wherever he goes, men speak of President George Albert Smith with love in their hearts, reciprocative for his great feeling of love for them; men outside the Church, I speak of. I pray that he may be upheld and sustained by the hand of our Father and given that strength which he so much desires to have to continue on his great work. I so pray for all those who preside with him.

My testimony is that God lives and that Jesus is the Christ, and the gospel of Jesus Christ as restored in these last days is true. I bear it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President Smith, President Clark, President McKay, and my other beloved brethren of the General Authorities, and my brothers and sisters: I can assure you that this is indeed a strain and certainly a shock whenever one's name is called who is to speak. President Joel Richards just handed me a note, as my name was called, and I hope you'll all say the same thing silently, and if you'll pardon me, I'll read his note: "Thorpe," he says, "I'm praying for you, and I know God will bless you."

It is always a worry when one is called upon to occupy this position: it is to me, at least. Sometimes, I know I shouldn't envy, but sometimes I do envy my brethren who can come up here and appear so composed and so comfortable, and I only pray that the Lord will help me during the next few moments that I stand here.

I do believe in prayer, and I realize that without the help of the Lord we can do very little. The first time that I was called up here the experience was such that I didn't know how I ever got up those steps. I thought it would get a little easier as experiences came, but it doesn't get any easier for me.

PURPOSES OF CONFERENCE

We are assembled in this great house of the Lord so that we can partake of his Spirit, so that we can be made to feel more humble and more charitable, so that we can truly worship God, our Eternal Father. We are here to bear testimony to the goodness of our Father in heaven to us. We are here to receive inspiration and counsel. We are here to be advised and taught. Surely "the Spirit of God like a fire is burning" here—it has been at every session of this conference. Words of inspiration and words of revelation have been spoken and will be spoken. We are here so that our faith in God our Eternal Father may be increased. There is great inspiration and revelation in the Church today, and I would like to quote from the Doctrine and Covenants just a few words regarding the messages that we have received yesterday and today and that we will receive Wednesday, and every time when we meet in the name of the Lord:

And whatsoever they [our leaders] shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation. (D. & C. 68:4.)

I am sure that as Latter-day Saints when we sustain these prophets, seers, and revelators, we know they are speaking under the inspiration of the Almighty. May our faith be so strong that we will accept this.

IMPORTANCE OF FAITH

Sometimes we are inclined to question whether it is revelation or inspiration, but that's because sometimes our faith may waver. Nothing in the world can take the place of faith. Yes, good, sincere, simple faith. Talent will not—nothing is more common in our world than many unsuccessful men who have great talent. Genius will not—unrewarded genius by the score is almost a proverb. Education will not—the world is full of so-called educated men and even educated derelicts. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and in the mission of his Son is all-powerful. Carlyle has said:

The chief aim of man is to glorify God and enjoy him forever.

We can enjoy the Spirit of the Lord by the gift of the Holy Ghost that we have heard of, just a moment ago, by President McConkie, if we will only draw near unto him and live the commandments of our Father in heaven, and if in our thinking, and we must watch our thinking, and in our study and in our work we can understand the love of our Father in heaven, to that degree only can we partake of that sweet spirit. The Lord has said to us, "If you will seek after me, you shall surely find me," and if we desire to partake of the blessings of the Lord, we can find the Lord. Spirituality is as essential to a man's soul as vitamins are to a man's body.

THE SEARCH FOR GOD

Recently I received a letter from an inactive member of the Church, and, oh, I love those men. I know they have become dilatory and inactive, but if they are given a chance, by the help of God they can be magnified in their calling. Recently a man sent a letter to me, and I would like to read one paragraph:

My activities and ambitions have been directed to the things of the more material nature, but now, as a result, a restlessness disturbs my peace of mind.

Oh, that those men could become active in the Church and do away with that restlessness that disturbs their peace of mind!

For centuries a philosophy has been gnawing at the soul of man, eating into his spiritual fibre, a philosophy that proposes to build a society in which man is sufficient in himself, but a great educator has recently written, and I quote:

The search for God is on. One sees it everywhere, and it is growing. We are coming to know that modern life lacks something. A man may have a bank full of money and a library full of books, but he cannot be happy without the Spirit of God. Man is coming to know that he cannot depend altogether on science. Man has learned at last that science has its limitations and that only God, our Father in heaven, is unlimited. At the point beyond which science cannot go, God stands unchangeable, now and forever.

SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT

I am quoting from an eminent scientist who when he was recently asked: "In what line of research do you expect to see the greatest development in the next fifty years?" answered:

I think the greatest discoveries will be made along spiritual lines. Someday people will learn that material things do not bring happiness and that they are of little use in making men and women creative and powerful. Then the scientists of the world will turn their laboratories over to the study of God and prayer, and the spiritual forces which, as yet, have been hardly scratched. When that day comes, the world will see greater advancement in one generation than it has seen in the last four generations. (Steinmetz.)

Men will come to accept spirituality as part of their soul and part of their living. As President Clark once stated: "God has placed in every man's heart a divine spark which never wholly goes out." Many times it may be dimmed. I am speaking now to some of the good inactive men in the Church. Oh, I would plead with them that they overcome some of the little things that are keeping them out of the Church, and that they will not feel that we who are perhaps spending a lot of our time in the Church are so critical of them that they can't join us in our different functions and activities in the Church. I like to think of Matthew, and to those men who have become inactive, the Lord has said in Matthew:

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls, (Matthew 11:29.)

That is the rest and that is the love and that is the spirit that those men will find when they come back into the Church, and that spirit is waiting for them just as soon as they can realize that they should not absent themselves further from activity.

ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH

Now, I would like to say just a word to the young people, the young married people, not the adolescent people of the Church, but those that are about to be married. You should be careful in your social life today; yes, even in your business circles, that you will not adopt practices which will make you feel as though you cannot become active in the Church. It is so easy for you to absent yourselves from the Church activities when you do little things that you know are contrary to the teachings. My experience with men has been that when they are not active, they are more likely to do things that they wouldn't do if they were active in the Church.

So, to those good men, may I plead with them to seek activity in the Church and the help of the Lord, and the combination of the two will make it possible for them to overcome their shortcomings.

Recently, a man said to me, talking of tithing, "I can't afford to pay tithing under my heavy tax structure to the government and under my heavy expenses," and I wondered if people are beginning to say and to think and to wonder whether or not we can afford to serve the Lord. We cannot afford not to serve the Lord. I have never known a man in my life that paid an honest tithing or that kept the commandments of the Lord that said he was sorry for it. I hope when our young men are thinking of a mission we will not wonder whether or not we can afford to send them on a mission. We cannot afford not to pay our tithing, we cannot afford not to send these young men on missions, we cannot afford not to keep the commandments; and if we will try to become humble and prayerful, the Lord will help us overcome our shortcomings. May each of us be thoughtful and tolerant with the man sitting next to us or to the neighbor or to the man who is inactive in the Church, that we can touch his heart so that he can share some of the blessings that we are privileged to enjoy.

FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

Family relationships—we have heard so many beautiful remarks about the family. I would like to say a word about our wives.

I am very grateful to my wife. I don't know what my life would have been if I did not have a wife and a companion that has stood with me even when I have been discouraged, even when I felt I had no confidence. I am grateful to her. I cannot express to her how much I love her and how much I think of her. A man asked me recently: "Do you love your wife?" I said: "Yes, I love my wife." And he said: "When did you tell your wife you loved her?" Well, it made me think. It was quite a while ago when I told her in all sincerity that I loved her, and I am wondering if we are too busy in this world, and if we leave in the mornings without saying good-bye to our wives, I wonder if we leave without kissing them good-bye, and I wonder if we come home at night and never say a word. I am fearful that we are inclined to be living too fast to pay attention to those beautiful things; and then to the wives, I wonder when you last told your husband that you loved him. Maybe if you would do that a little oftener, it would be a little easier for us to say: "Well, so do I."

WORK IN PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

I am very grateful for the blessing that has come to me in my work with men that I love and honor and respect. My life has been enriched in my association with two of the greatest men that I have ever known. It is a pleasure to partake of their spirit. I couldn't ask for more encouragement than I have received from Bishop Richards and Bishop Wirthlin. Many times I have known they have seen my follies. Many times I have known they have seen my shortcomings, but they have given me a slap on the back, and that made me want to try just a little bit harder, and all the brethren of the General Authorities are great and good men.

I hope that you people will have the faith to accept what they tell you as the word of the Lord, because they are prophets, seers, and revelators, and servants of God the Eternal Father. If our faith ever wavers to the point where we cannot accept their teachings as the word of the Lord, then we should go and humble ourselves and pray to God the Eternal Father to take that kind of feeling away from us.

I want to bear you my testimony that I know God is my Father; I know that Jesus Christ was his Son, our eldest brother; I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; I know there is inspiration in the Church today stronger than perhaps we realize. That inspiration and revelation may be unrecorded, but nevertheless it has been spoken by the prophets of the Lord, and sometimes I wonder if we have the faith and the true spirit to recognize it as inspiration and revelation from our Father in heaven.

May the Lord bless each of you that you may be mindful of those who have not been blessed as you have. I am referring particularly to those who have become inactive in the Church for some reason or another. They, too, are waiting for the blessings that you and I have been privileged to enjoy.

I am grateful for the bishops of this Church. I hope our people can draw near to them. I do not believe there is a bishop in the Church that will give anybody unsound advice. I do not believe there is any bishop in the Church that will steer anybody wrong, and I hope that our people and our inactive men in the Church may get to know our bishops and love them for what they are.

May the Lord bless you this day and during the coming sessions of this conference, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

---

The Ricks College Choir and the congregation joined in singing: "Praise to the Man Who Communed with Jehovah."

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I would be most ungrateful if I did not acknowledge the prayers of the Saints of the Church in my behalf and thank my Heavenly Father for the restoration of my health. It was a great disappointment to be unable to attend all the sessions at the last conference, and I am grateful to be here today.

"WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?"

May I preface my remarks today by referring to the account in Luke of the story told by the Savior to a certain young lawyer who wanted to know what to do "to inherit eternal life."

He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

And he said unto him, Thou has answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him,

And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, go, and do thou likewise. (Luke 10:25-27. Italics speaker's.)

A DESPOILED PEOPLE

May I now speak of a people who went down from Jerusalem to America, and who after many days fell among thieves which stripped them of their raiment and wounded them and left them half dead—a people who were victimized by men considered by them to be gods, stripped of their gold and precious things, dispossessed of their cities, their homes, their soil; robbed of their liberty, enslaved, and branded as cattle—a people who fought their way down the bloody path of civil war into degradation, filth, idleness, idolatry, cannibalism—a people who were stripped of their homeland, their forests, their grazing lands, their game, and their fish, pushed by the invaders into ever-decreasing territory until they were imprisoned in reservations and exploited.

I speak of the children of God, the children of the prophets, the seed of Joseph, the remnant of Israel, the children of the covenant, a branch of the tree of Israel—wanderers, lost in a strange land—the American Indians, the Mexicans, and other mixed bloods whom we generally call Lamanites.

I hope that the eloquent appeal of Brother Romney in this conference will be heeded and that a new fire of enthusiasm for the Book of Mormon has been kindled in each of your hearts. And I hope that you will develop an increased sympathy and affection and brotherhood for these people whom the prophecies concern. Elder Thomas E. McKay spoke of the Lamanites whom he had recently visited in Mexico. There are scores of millions of pure Indians and other scores of millions of mixed bloods in these Americas. We are doing good work in practically every mission in the Americas with the children of the covenant, and now a new program is being introduced in the stakes of Zion.

RACE PREJUDICE

But we still find race prejudice and intolerance on the part of many non-Indians concerning the Lamanites. Often they are excluded from cafes, hotels, schools, and are made to feel unwelcome in church gatherings.

You have read of their weaknesses and sins and crimes. You have seen them languishing under their curse. They have suffered much and endlessly. But have you recalled their virtues, their strengths, and the promises and covenants made to them?

Have they not eaten husks long enough? Has not their day of restoration come? Can we not forgive their trespasses that we might in turn be forgiven?

Intolerant people reproachfully indict these red men saying: But they are illiterate! Yes. They are mostly illiterate, but when the conquerors fulfil solemn treaty obligations and give to the children of the conquered an education equal to that received by the children of the conquerors, illiteracy will be eliminated.

Prejudiced people who enjoy limitless luxuries say: But the Indian is economically a failure. Yes. His economic status is deplorable, but when his education and opportunity parallel our own, he will be independent and self-supporting.

A people surrounded by wealth, hospitals, doctors, and nurses say: But the red man is not sanitary—he lives in filth and disease! Yes. The solitary places given him in exchange for his rich and fertile America, are barren, dry, and not conducive to good living. But give him accredited schooling in our own incomparable educational system, so that he may buy medical service, enjoy modern utilities, live in good homes, and he will not be diseased nor unclean.

People who have inherited the good things of an invaded land say of the victims: They are inferior! Yes. They do suffer from an inferiority complex that is well-nigh annihilating. Prisoners of war, slaves, and downtrodden people usually develop such a complex. But give them comparable education and opportunity with their non-Indian brother, acceptance and brotherly love by him, and they will emerge a rejuvenated people, the equal of the white man.

May I say that if we as a nation and as a people can ever justify our invasions of these Americas, and our conquest of his promised land and the subjugation of the Indian, certainly it will not be by passing by on the other side, as did the superior priest, or the passing by on the other side as did the self-righteous Levite, but by going to the limit as did the good Samaritan, in binding up his wounds, pouring in "oil and wine" setting him on our own beasts, taking him to an inn, paying for his care and revisiting him. The Lord said, "Go and do thou likewise."

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LAMANITES

Again we are asked: "Will the Indian revert even if we do give him education? Yes, he will revert to his former condition if only a few are trained, but let the Indian be given universal and accredited training and opportunity and he will not revert.

The chasm between what he is and what he will be is opportunity. It is ours to give.

Basically the Indian is intelligent, affectionate, responsive, honest, stable, and is of believing blood. There is every reason to be assured that the red man will remain loyal and true to the gospel and the Church, once he is brought into the fold. We have heard of his traditions and superstitions, of his ferocity and wildness, of his degradation and uncleanness, but let us consider his potential, as revealed by a review of his ancestors.

The Lamanites have believing blood, as evidenced by these words from the sixth chapter of Helaman:

And thus we see that the Lord began to pour out his Spirit upon the Lamanites, because of their easiness and willingness to believe in his words. (Helaman 6:36.)

The Lamanites are firm and steady—note the testimony of the prophets concerning them.

. . . the Lamanites had become, the more part of them, a righteous people inasmuch that their righteousness did exceed that of the Nephites, because of their firmness and their steadiness in the faith. (Helaman 6:1.)

. . . in the thirtieth year the church was broken up in all the land save it were among a few of the Lamanites who were converted unto the true faith; and they would not depart from it, for they were firm, and steadfast, and immovable, willing with all diligence to keep the commandments of the Lord. (III Nephi 6:14.)

Jesus said to his disciples:

. . . So great faith have I never seen among all the Jews; wherefore I could not show unto them so great miracles, because of their unbelief.

Verily I say unto you, there are none of them that have seen so great things as ye have seen; neither have they heard so great things as ye have heard [of his people]. (III Nephi 19:35-6.)

After about three-quarters of a century the Lamanites converted by Alma and Ammon and their brethren, were still firm and true, as indicated by the Prophet Samuel who said:

... the more part of them are in the path of their duty, and they do walk circumspectly before God.

... and they are striving with unwearied diligence that they may bring the remainder of their brethren to the knowledge of the truth; . . .

Therefore, as many as have come to this, ye know of yourselves are firm and steadfast in the faith. (Helaman 15:5-6, 8.)

As many as were converted of the Lamanites by Ammon and his brethren never did fall away." (See Alma 23:6.)

It should be noted that the Lamanites were often absorbed by, and were called, Nephites, when they were righteous, and it is true also that the Nephites when they rebelled and became wicked, were oftentimes called Lamanites, and there was undoubtedly a considerable mixture among them.

CHILDREN OF PROMISE

These children of promise were great preachers of righteousness. Under their teaching on numerous occasions, a nation was born in a day. They were so convincing in their proselyting that "... inso-much that they (Gadiantons) have become extinct . . ." from among the Nephites. (See Helaman 6:18.)

Upon one occasion Nephi, who had given up his judgeship, and his brother Lehi, who was a great general, preached with such eloquence and so convincingly that eight thousand converts came into the Church. These men were so righteous and full of faith that though they were encircled by fire they could not be burned. While their mission was yet unfinished and while in this trying ordeal their faces shone like that of Moses when he was speaking to the Lord, and caused that their persecutors should ask, "Who is it with whom these men do converse?" and Aminadab replied, "They do converse with the angels of God."

A nation was born in a day when Ammon and his brethren converted the Lamanite king, Lamoni, and also his father, the chief king, whose entire house was converted and "thousands were brought unto the knowledge of the Lord." Whole cities and lands bowed to the Lord and joined the Church, and in the year 36 A.D., it is stated that all the Lamanites and Nephites in the land were converted.

These children of the prophets, both Lamanites and Nephites, were recognized of God. Great manifestations came to them as an evidence of the love their Father in heaven had for them. The Lamanite king, Lamoni, saw his Redeemer, so near to perfection did his life become after his conversion.

Abinadi was a great prophet and like Moses on Sinai his face shone with radiant lustre as he stood before his persecutors and boldly defied them saying:

I will not recall, . . .
 . . . I will suffer even until death, and I will not recall my words, and they shall stand as a testimony against you. . . . (Mosiah 17:9, 10), and with such fortitude he died, burning at the stake. This was one of the loyal Israelites.

MIGHTY PROPHETS

The first prophet Nephi was great like Moses and Brigham Young. His vision of the immeasurable future was comparable to the one received by Moses, Enoch, and Joseph Smith. He saw the promised land, the population of Lehi's seed as numerous as the sands of the sea. He saw war, slaughter, cities destroyed. In his vision he saw the birth, life, and ministry of the Christ, his coming to the Western Hemisphere and organizing his Church here. He saw three generations of righteousness and then centuries of unrighteousness, with battles culminating in the destruction of millions, followed by centuries of degradation, scattering, persecution, and suffering. He saw nations grow out of the Eastern empires, and the kingdoms of the Gentiles arise. He saw Columbus and other explorers cross the deep, and the puritans and pilgrims settle a new country. He envisioned the Revolutionary War, the total subjugation of the descendants of Lehi, the coming of the Bible, the restoration of the gospel, the organization of the Church, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon—and the balance of his vision was not written.

With undaunted faith he had preserved the brass plates; with the vision and courage of a Noah he builded ships; and with the leadership of the great he led his people to the promised land.

Another of these children of God was Aminadi, who, like Daniel of old, was so in tune with his Lord that he interpreted the writings on the wall of the temple which were written there by the finger of God.

Alma, the American Saul of Tarsus, had manifestations that were awesome. Like Paul, he was transformed from a destructionist to one of the great preachers of all time. An idolater, tearing down the Church with his eloquence, he was stricken and a voice from the clouds said to him:

Alma, arise and stand forth, for why persecutest thou the church of God? . . . This is my church and nothing shall overthrow it, . . . Behold the Lord hath heard the prayers of his people, and also the prayers of his servant Alma, who is thy father; for he has prayed with much faith concerning thee. . . . And I am sent from God—seek to destroy the church no more. . . . (See Mosiah 27.)

After two days and nights of dumbness and helplessness he was healed, and devoted the balance of his life as did Paul, to righteousness and service, taking the gospel to the despised and unclean Lamanites.

Another of the spiritual giants who came from this now persecuted people was General Moroni, who was stalwart like his brethren, Alma, Helaman, and Ammon. "He was a strong and a mighty man; he was a man of a perfect understanding . . . yea, . . . if all man had been, and were, and ever would be, like unto Moroni, behold the very powers of hell would have been shaken forever. . . ."

Has the world ever seen a more classic example of indomitable will, of faith and courage than that displayed by Samuel the Prophet: "One of the Lamanites who did observe strictly to keep the commandments of God. . . ." Visualize, if you can, this despised Lamanite standing on the walls of Zarahemla and while arrows and stones were shot at him, crying out to his white accusers that the sword of justice hung over them. So righteous was he that God sent an angel to visit him. His predictions were fulfilled in due time relating to the early coming of Christ, his ministry, death and resurrection, and the eventual destruction of these Nephite people. So great faith had he that the multitudes could not harm him until his message was delivered and so important was his message that subsequently the Savior required a revision of the records to include his prophecies concerning the resurrection of the Saints.

Few groups of children of all time have been so honored and blessed as were those Lamanite and Nephite little ones who were taken into the arms of our Redeemer and blessed by him. What a privilege! They were encircled by fire and angels ministered to them, but the greatest of all was the actual embrace by the Son of God while their exultant parents watched and prayed and bore record.

CHANGES THROUGH CONVERSION

If you would look for valor, stamina, and steadfastness, recall the experiences of the converts of Ammon and his brethren. Here were red men degenerated, untrained, and primitive who accepted the gospel and quickly changed to sober, industrious, God-fearing people. The transition was soon made from skins and loin cloths, to clothes of linen; from hunting and fishing, to agricultural work; from war and bloodshed, to peaceful pursuits; from paganism and idolatry to the worship of the Living God. They were called the Anti-Nephi-Lehies, and were so devout and sincere in their professions that they buried their weapons and declared unalterably against war. They said: ". . . and if our brethren destroy us behold we shall go to our God, and shall be saved." War continued and they were attacked but they prostrated themselves before their enemies "praising God in the very act of perishing." One thousand five of them were slain, but they went to their death

. . . vouching and covenanting with God, that rather than shed the blood of their brethren, they would give up their own lives; and rather than take away from a brother they would give unto him; and rather than spend their days in idleness they would labor abundantly with their hands.

And thus we see that, when the Lamanites were brought to believe and to know the truth, they were firm, and would suffer even unto death rather than commit sin. . . . (Alma 24:18-19.)

HELAMAN'S SONS

These dark-skinned folk could teach us much. Their faith and strength was transmitted to their children. These Lamanite women spent little of their time in social life and worldliness, but devoted themselves to their families, teaching them to pray and "walk up-rightly before the Lord." When their young boys who had taken no oath were forced to protect their families, and came to battle as "Helaman's sons" they were unconquerable. Their mothers had promised them that "If they did not doubt, God would deliver them." These red men striplings went into battle as Joseph went into the grove, with unwavering faith, and they emerged from many bloody battles and ". . . not one soul of them did perish." One thousand Nephites fighting side by side with them were slain, all the 2,060 were wounded, and two hundred fainted from loss of blood, but their faith was justified and they all lived to return to their sweet Lamanite mothers who praised God for the miracle. The teaching in these God-fearing homes was "That there was a just God and whosoever did not doubt that they should be preserved by his marvelous power."

These faithful braves declared as they met the onslaught of the enemy: "We do not doubt . . . our mothers knew it." In all history is there a parallel? Can any be found since Adam, with such faith and fortitude as these forerunners of the deprived Indian of today?

Again recall the three disciples whose bodies were changed, who could not taste of death—of pain or sorrow. Like John the Revelator, a degree of perfection was reached which brought to them these incomparable blessings. Still ministering to men on earth they will remain until the consummation of the program of God, having supernatural powers to enable them to better serve. "So great faith have I never seen among all the Jews" declared the Master, "Wherefore I could not show unto them so great miracles."

RACE CONSCIOUSNESS

Our redskin brothers are today called unclean and common, but formerly it was we, the Gentile nations, who were the outcasts. Yesterday it was . . . an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company or come unto one of another nation. (Acts 10:28.)

Today we revile the Jew and his brother-Israelite, the Indian. "What fools we mortals be!"

Yesterday the super-race consciousness was so solidly rooted that it was necessary for the Lord to send a vision to his chiefest Apostle before the gospel could go to the Gentile nations. Peter "saw heaven opened and a certain vessel descending unto him." He saw it filled with "all manner of four-footed beasts and filled with creeping things and fowls of the air." And he heard a voice saying: "Rise Peter; kill and eat." "Not so, Lord," he said, "for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean." Though Peter was very hungry, he could not overcome his lifelong prejudice until the command came the third time: "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common."

And also through a vision Cornelius came to Peter, seeking salvation, and the great Church leader declared: "... God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean."

Even after Simon was convinced he had a difficult task to change the thinking of his colleagues, and to them he testified:

Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God? (Acts 11:17.)

There were superior peoples in the days of these Lehighs who were intolerant, and Jacob called them to repentance with boldness:

Wherefore, a commandment I give unto you, which is the word of God, that ye revile no more against them because of the darkness of their skins; neither shall ye revile against them because of their filthiness; but ye shall remember your own filthiness, and remember that their filthiness came because of their fathers. (Jacob 3:9.)

Again he warned:

... I fear that unless ye shall repent of your sins that their skins will be whiter than yours, when ye shall be brought before the throne of God. (Jacob 3:8.)

Mormon knew the weakness of men when he wrote:

... behold who can stand against the works of the Lord? ... Who will despise the children of Christ. ... (Mormon 9:26.)

... wo unto him that shall deny the revelations of the Lord. (III Nephi 29:6.)

Yea, and ye need not any longer hiss nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, nor any remnant of the house of Israel; for behold the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them. ... (III Nephi 29:8. Italics speaker's.)

And Moroni warns against judging:

For behold, the same that judgeth rashly shall be judged rashly again; for according to his works shall his wages be; therefore he that smiteth shall be smitten again, of the Lord. (Mormon 8:19.)

VIRTUES ENUMERATED

Among these children of God were many prophets, and fires would not burn them; stones and arrows could not hit them; prisons could not hold them; pits could not be dug deep enough to imprison them. Among these, the children of the covenant, their lame walked; their blind ones saw; their deaf heard; their dumb spoke; the dead lived again. Among these, the remnant of Jacob, the rich were humble; the poor were provided for; the oppressed were rescued; justice reigned; and freedom was a reality. Among these, the branch of the tree of Israel, the Holy Ghost whispered to them; angels ministered to them; the Creator and Master visited them.

Among us today we find many who abandon their faith and Church position to go into politics. We found children of the Covenant who gave up judgeships, resigned from the high army posts, and even refused to be king over the nation that they might serve on missions and convert souls to righteousness. We find many today who permit wealth to wedge them from things spiritual. We found Lamanites who sacrificed their wealth to become lowly teachers.

See what God hath wrought! He has blessed, honored, and preserved his race. He has predicted and warned through their prophets; angels have ministered to them; miracles have been countless among them; two centuries of continuous righteousness was lived by them; supreme faith was manifested by them; martyrs burned and bled among them; the flesh and the world were overcome by them. Peace of long duration was enjoyed by them and the Son of Man visited them.

A BRIGHTER DAY

Yesterday we of the Gentile nations were the "common and unclean"—today we so call the Indian.

Yesterday we were the persecuted; today we are the persecutors.

Yesterday we were they who went from Jerusalem to Jericho; today we are the priest and the Levite who passed "by on the other side."

But to these children of the prophets, God has made lavish promises. Today is the brighter day—the day of the Lamanite, and we must be the Good Samaritan, and through us with our love, service and providence, must come the rejuvenation of the Indians.

They shall become fair, clean, and worthy. They shall become physically sound, mentally alert, economically secure. They shall plant and harvest and build and inhabit. They shall take their rightful place as peers with us in industry, in business and professions. They shall know their history and believe the truth, they shall know and worship the true and living God.

For the eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on until all his promises shall be fulfilled. (Mormon 8:22.)

May God help us to recognize our duty toward these our brothers and sisters and help us show our love for him by our devotion to the work of bringing all blessings which we enjoy to these our kinsmen.

ELDER ERNEST C. ROSSITER

formerly President of the Tahitian Mission

My dear brothers and sisters, it is with fear and trembling that I stand before you at this time, with much gratitude and appreciation in my heart for the blessings which have come to me through my endeavor to serve the Lord in various capacities as I have gone through life. This is my third appearance on this stand, having reported once as President of the French Mission and twice as President of the Tahitian Mission. Having returned some little time ago from the Tahitian Mission, I shall now make a report of that mission.

I was very happy to hear the remarks of Elder Spencer Kimball because he spoke of the people among whom I have labored some nine years, that is, the Lamanite people in the South Seas, in the Society Islands, Tahiti and the various islands of that group. Of all the people in the world I believe there are no other people who have more faith, more trust in God, than do the people of the South Seas who, we believe, are direct descendants of the Lamanites and the Nephites.

I have often told those people that my love and compassion for them were so great that if the Lord would permit it upon the other side after passing through death, it would be a great pleasure for me to be a missionary to those of that race who had not had the privilege of hearing the gospel and accepting it, in this life.

I love those people. They are a God-fearing people. They are a righteous people and God loves them. I am sure of that because among them many wonderful miracles and manifestations of the Spirit of the Lord are made. In fact, of all my missionary experiences I have seen more wonderful things performed in the Spirit of the Lord among the South Sea people in the land of Tahiti than in any other place in which I have labored.

It is not difficult for the Spirit of the Lord to manifest itself among those people because they have implicit faith. It is either yes or no with them. They have no doctors among them. They have no need for doctors. They have the missionaries and the priesthood. If any of them become ill their faith is so strong that through the power of the Lord many of them are healed from various and divers illnesses. From the most difficult to the simplest, one might say, miracles have thus been performed among those people. The eyes of the blind have been made to see; the ears of the deaf have been made to hear; and those who have taken the path to the other world have been made to come to life again. I have witnessed these things among those people and can bear testimony that they are true.

I was happy to learn that the Church recently is taking a very serious interest in the Tahitian people, since they are now building a very lovely mission home and a tabernacle for those people, which, I am sure, will do a great deal of good for the people there, and as a result many converts will be made, not because of the meetinghouse, not because of the new mission home, but because of the deep interest that the Church is taking in the people of the South Seas.

In the various parts of the South Seas you see new school houses, colleges, and so forth, being built, and now with the deep interest the Church is taking in the American Indians, the time is fast approaching, I believe when prophecy will be fulfilled in its greatest measure.

I am happy to report my missionary experiences in the South Seas. When I left the people there, they were in good condition. They were doing well. They were faithful in the Church. However, there were no missionaries except myself and my wife laboring on the Islands of the Society group, that being at the time of the recent war. It made it rather difficult to get around, but most of the time was spent between Tahiti and the various islands, traveling a distance of from 1600 to 2000 miles on small boats to the various islands.

It was all interesting. The food, of course, was not plentiful, but notwithstanding, when one has the Spirit of the Lord, nothing matters save that you are trying to help the people who are interested in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Therefore, my mission in Tahiti was worthwhile to me and I believe worthwhile to the people of the South Seas.

I have a strong testimony of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. I know that George Albert Smith and his Counselors and the Quorum of the Twelve are the present constituted authorities of the Church, and are inspired men of God and I love to serve them. I love to be obedient to their commandments, and I hope God will give me strength and power to be obedient to them, and to receive, when I have passed beyond this sphere of action, an exaltation in God's presence.

As the other brethren have spoken of their wives, may I just take about two minutes to eulogize my beloved wife. I believe no Mission President has been blessed with a more faithful wife than I have.

When we were called to Tahiti, President McKay asked us if we would go, without consulting Sister Rossiter I said, "Yes." When I returned home I told Sister Rossiter about it and she said: "Did you mention that I had asthma and that it is quite impossible for me to go?"

I said: "I had forgotten." I said, "Shall I return and tell him that it will be impossible to go?"

She said: "No. You have received a call and I will follow."

Well, brethren and sisters, my heart bled for her from the time we left until the time we returned. She had asthma almost constantly. We arrived in San Francisco, and waited there for the President of the California Mission, our late Governor Blood, to return. He gave my wife a blessing. He was in tears when he gave her a blessing and said: "Sister Rossiter, you are in no condition to go on a mission. Return home and tell the brethren."

She said: "I am going on a mission. I have been called and I will go if it is the last thing I do."

We arrived in the Hawaiian Islands, and the Doctor on the ship said: "You cannot go any farther." He said: "I will not take the responsibility. You must get off here and be hospitalized."

My wife said: "I'll not. I will stay on the ship and go to my destination."

We arrived in Samoa and the same thing happened. I talked and counseled with her. She said: "Nothing will dissuade me from going on this mission. I am going and I am going to return safely."

We arrived in Tahiti. She suffered with the asthma. If any of you have had that you know what it is, and I, likewise, suffered with her. She supported me in all my endeavors and without her my mission would have been impossible. I believe she has more faith than anybody that I know of, and I thank God, our Eternal Father, for giving her to me as a helpmate through this life.

I bear you this testimony and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH ANDERSON

Clerk of the Conference and Secretary to the First Presidency

I think I have a good heart. I feel greatly honored and appreciate the opportunity of standing before this great congregation of saints in this historic building.

This is the one hundred nineteenth annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which means that we have held two hundred thirty-eight conferences since the Church was organized.

You know, these conferences never become tiresome. We are always happy to come, and we feel always when the conference is over that we have been fed the bread of life. I recall that at the first conference of the Church, which was held on June 9, 1830, it is reported there were only thirty members present. There were, I suppose, not many more than that number in the Church at that time. Today there is a Church membership of over a million and forty thousand.

At that early time when the Church was first organized the Lord gave a revelation to the people, through the Prophet Joseph Smith, which is recorded in the twentieth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, giving instructions regarding the organization of the Church and the duties of the various officers in the Church. Those instructions are just as valid today and just as important and necessary as they were at that time. Among them was the instruction that conferences should be held at certain intervals among the elders of the Church and among the people.

Certainly, my brothers and sisters, we are a conference-loving people. We hold these general conferences of the Church every six months, there are quarterly conferences held in the stakes of the Church every three months, there are conferences held in the wards every year, there are auxiliary conferences held in the Church from time to time and the people come just as regularly and faithfully to those conferences today as they have ever done, and they go away from them feeling that they have been fed the bread of life. These conferences are held in order that the business of the Church may be transacted and that the people may be built up in their faith. If this were not the true Church of Christ, such a condition could not exist.

Way back in February of 1829, more than a year before the Church was organized, the Lord said through the Prophet Joseph Smith: "Behold a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men." Surely a marvelous work has come forth among the children of men.

A part of the genius of this great Church that appeals to me very greatly is the wonderful organization whereby so many men and women are given opportunity to render service. I marvel at the great responsibility that rests upon the men who stand at the head of this Church, the General Authorities of the Church, and how God has magnified and blessed them. I am thinking of the men who preside over the various stakes and wards in the Church, the presidents of stakes and their counselors, the stake clerks, the bishoprics and their clerks, the high councilmen who help the presidencies of the stakes, and the men who serve as ward teachers in the wards, the one hundred seventy-two presidencies of High Priests' quorums in the Church with their clerks, besides the three hundred thirty-six, I think it is, Seventies' quorums in the Church, each with its presidency of seven men, the ten hundred thirty-six Elders' quorums with their presidencies, to say nothing of the men who are teaching in these various quorums; the auxiliary organizations: the Relief Societies, the Sunday Schools, the Mutual Improvement Associations and the Primaries, each having general organizations, general boards, stake boards, general superintendencies and presidencies, and ward and stake superintendencies and presidencies. Then, too, there are the missions throughout the world with their branch organizations, the mission presidents, and the great body of missionaries in the missions and stakes, all men and women devoted to the gospel of Jesus Christ. What a great army for righteousness! These men and women are supposed to be, and most of them are, exemplary in their walks and talks in life, men and women who observe the Word of Wisdom, who pay their honest tithing, and who keep themselves pure and clean, and all devoting themselves unselfishly to the cause without hope of financial remuneration. Where can one go and find such an organization as this?

Yes, brethren and sisters, this is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This is his Church; certainly, a marvelous work and a wonder has come forth among the children of men. These men and women who have set their hands to the wheel are men and women of faith and hope and charity. Yes, of love, of knowledge, of temperance, of virtue, of brotherly kindness, Godliness and diligence. Certainly the Lord must be pleased with them.

I thank God for the privilege of being a member of this Church, for the privilege of being associated with the men who stand at the head of this Church, for it is in very deed, I bear testimony to you, the true Gospel of Jesus Christ.

I remember that when I was a young man living on the farm we had a pump from which we had to get water to give to our cattle. I suppose you have similar pumps out in the country districts now, but in order for us to get that water we had to put water into the pump. It is the same with these brethren and sisters who are holding positions in the Church today, they are putting water into the pump. They are priming the pump, and one has to give something in this Church, brethren and sisters, in order to get something out of it, and I am sure the more you give the more you get.

The Lord bless us and help us to carry on as He would have us do. May he bless and sustain and heal and strengthen our president, President George Albert Smith, and President George F. Richards. I humbly pray for these and other blessings we stand in need of, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, has just addressed us. Elder Anderson is just as efficient and just as responsive in every duty to which he is assigned as he has been in this unexpected invitation to address you.

The Ricks College Choir will now sing "Thou Light of Life."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Lucian M. Mechem, Jr. of the Mesa Stake, Mesa Arizona, after which this conference will be adjourned until seven o'clock this evening, when in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the priesthood of the Church will be held. Only the priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the priesthood will please not attempt to attend. That session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, April 6, will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and affiliated stations.

A Welfare meeting will be held tomorrow morning in the Tabernacle beginning at 10 o'clock. All interested are invited to be present, but it is requested that all ward and stake welfare committees and the high councils be in attendance.

The Presiding Bishopric will meet the bishoprics of the Church here in the Tabernacle tomorrow, Tuesday night, at 7 o'clock. Members of all bishoprics and their ward clerks are requested to be in attendance. Members of the presidencies of stakes are also invited.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the conference, has been by the Ricks College Choir, which as you know, is made up of the students of the Ricks College in Idaho. Elder Alma Dittmer is conducting and Elder Roy M. Darley has been at the organ. We thank you young folks sincerely for the inspiring singing you have furnished.

At the conclusion of this meeting the general sessions of the Conference will adjourn until 10 o'clock, Wednesday morning, April 6.

The closing prayer was offered by President Lucian M. Mecham, Jr. of the Mesa Stake.

Conference adjourned until Wednesday morning, April 6, 10:00 a.m.

THIRD DAY

MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened Wednesday morning, April 6, at 10:00 a.m.

President George Albert Smith was present and presiding. President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. conducted the services.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen conducting, furnished the choir singing for this session.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the fifth session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City.

Of the General Authorities, Elder Matthew Cowley is absent visiting the Pacific Missions and Elder Alma Sonne is in Europe in charge of the European Missions. President George F. Richards is resting at home at the suggestion of his doctor.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KSUB at Cedar City, KID at Idaho Falls, KEYY at Pocatello, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, and over KTYL at Mesa by transcription.

These services will also be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loudspeaking system and by television. All general sessions of the Conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

The choir singing during today's sessions will be by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the morning service by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus singing, "Oh Be Joyful All Ye Lands."

The opening prayer will be offered by President J. Howard Maughan of the East Cache Stake.

---

Singing by the chorus "Oh Be Joyful All Ye Lands."

The opening prayer was offered by President J. Howard Maughan of the East Cache Stake.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang "My Soul is Athirst for God," (anthem by Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen).

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I thought I would like to stand in the presence of this great audience this morning and congratulate you that you are here in the house of the Lord on the birthday of the Church, the 119th anniversary. And I also hope that the more than a million souls now living that belong to the Church are remembering that this was a wonderful event.

As I saw the blue sky this morning and the glorious sunshine, I thought of Parley P. Pratt's wonderful hymn, "The morning breaks, the shadows flee; Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled, The dawning of a brighter day, Majestic rises on the world." And if this group of people, and those who are associated with the Church who have covenanted with the Lord to do so, will undertake to fulfil that portion of his prayer where he says: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." (Matt. 6:10) the coming of that great day will be hastened. It remains for us to bring that about, brothers and sisters.

The years pass so swiftly! Sixty-six years ago I was attending the same school that these young men and women are now, then called the Brigham Young Academy. Sixty-six years ago! When I think of what a wonderful record that school has made and the blessing it has been to the Church and to the people, I am grateful that their representatives are here this morning to sing for us and to warm our hearts by their presence.

I don't want to take more time, my brethren and sisters, but I just felt I wanted to greet you this morning and say to everyone of you: God bless you; and let us see that every time we hear or read the prayer offered by the Savior as a pattern for all of us to pray, that we keep in mind that it is our privilege to be a part of that program when this earth shall be even as heaven.

The Lord bless you. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

I understood President Smith was going to tell you he had asked me to preside at these services. Such is the fact.

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, read the following reports:

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

I will now read the financial statement of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The ordinary procedure in the expenditures of the Church funds is as follows: The Committee on Distribution of Tithing, consisting of the First Presidency, the Council of the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric, meet and consider the budgets thereunder, submitted by the various departments of the Church. They approve those budgets as they may be modified by them and then the distribution of the budgets is turned over to the Expenditures Committee. Realizing that the costs are rising in almost everything, we provide a cushion of a million dollars which could be added to the budgets of any or all the departments that might need them. I believe that all of them have had to call for help. Nevertheless, we live within our budget.

WELFARE REPORT

The General Church Welfare Committee makes the following further financial report, with a statement indicating the production and distribution of bishops' storehouse commodities during the year 1948 and inventories at the close of the year:

Summary of the Annual Report of the Church Welfare Plan, December 31, 1948.

FINANCIAL REPORT

Present Net Cash Value: (In round numbers)

Current Assets .....	$ 1,670,000.00
Inventories (principally commodities).....	1,000,000.00
Fixed Assets (land, buildings etc.).....	4,930,000.00
Total.....	$ 7,600,000.00

The fixed assets include Deseret Industries; Deseret Mills and Elevator; Deseret Clothing Factory; Deseret Coal Mine; 115 bishops' storehouses, including 58 canneries; farms, ranches, dairies and other production properties, including 23,648 acres of land and improvements. These were acquired with funds from the following sources:

Cash from general Church funds.....	$ 1,400,000.00
Cash from wards, stakes and regions.....	2,900,000.00
Donations of labor and property.....	600,000.00
Total.....	$ 4,930,000.00

Production, Distribution and Inventory of Commodities for Bishops' Storehouses:

Production during the year 1948 amounted to 1,725,000 quarts of canned produce; 8,900,000 pounds of fresh vegetables, fruits, grains and grain products; 780,000 pounds of animal products and other foods; 950,000 pounds of cotton, hay and wool; 8,000 tons of fuel; 270,000 articles of clothing, household supplies and furniture. The production in 1948 was approximately the same as a year ago.

The distribution in the United States and Canada amounted to 1,000,000 quarts of canned produce; 3,900,000 pounds of vegetables, fruits, grains and grain products; 760,000 pounds of animal products and other foods; 9,000 tons of fuel; and 385,000 articles of clothing, household supplies and furniture, etc. The value of the articles distributed is $955,483.00, which is an increase of 20 per cent over 1947.

The Bishops' Storehouse inventories, amounting to 1,500,000 quarts of canned produce, 5,000,000 pounds of grain and fresh vegetables and 800,000 other items, having a total value of $930,000.00, are a little higher than the inventories of a year ago.

In addition to distribution in the United States and Canada, as reported above, there have been sent from welfare stocks to foreign missions, 473,000 quarts of canned produce, 49,000 pounds of meat and lard, 900,000 pounds of grain and grain products, and 10,000 bars of soap and miscellaneous items. The total relief supplies sent to foreign missions to March 15, 1949 (shipments commenced October 29, 1945) amount of 41 freight carloads of clothing and 86 freight carloads of food; a total of 127 cars. The value of these commodities is $1,150,000.00. They were shipped at a cost, including transportation, cartons, insurance, etc. of $500,000.00, a total of $1,650,000.00. They were sent to Austria, Belgium, Great Britain Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, German Netherlands, Norway, Japan, China, and Tahiti.

Assistance Rendered:

There have been from 17,913 to 55,460 persons assisted through the bishops' storehouse program each year since 1938. In 1948, there were 32,779 persons so assisted in the United States. This is an increase over 1947 of 8,321 persons. We also sent to Europe food and clothing to help 17,000 persons or a total of about 50,000 persons assisted in 1948.

During the past eleven years, and outside of Europe, more than 1,543 families have been helped to become self-supporting, and 11,923 persons have been assisted in other ways. In addition to these, $614,523.00 has been paid in wages to persons working at Deseret Industries. These individuals most of whom are handicapped or aged and therefore not able to earn a livelihood in commercial pursuits, have collected and processed $1,012,713.00 of salvage materials from which sales have been made amounting to $956,562.00. During this same period, the Deseret Clothing Factory, another employment furnishing project of the Welfare Plan, has paid $245,185.00 in wages to an average personnel of between twenty and thirty-five employees, many of whom are widows and elderly persons.

Food Processing in Welfare Canneries and Mill and Other Production Projects:

During 1948, 1,700,000 cans of produce and 3,900,000 pounds of flour, cereal and miscellaneous items were processed for the bishops' storehouse program. 21,000 individuals using welfare canneries processed, for their own use, 1,400,000 cans of food.

To produce the 1948 budget, 496 crop projects and 206 livestock projects were operated, on which 70,000 man days of work were donated. For purposes other than the production of the budget, 262 crop projects, 89 livestock projects and 66 manufacturing projects were operated during the year.

Persons Relinquishing Government Relief:

Obedient to the commandment of the Lord that men should be self-supporting, looking to the Church for necessary help, 2,929 persons have, during the past six years relinquished their position on government relief rolls. Of this number, 1,291 have been rehabilitated and are receiving no aid from the Church nor, so far as known, from any other gratuitous source; 1,082 are yet receiving part of their support from the Church; and 556 are receiving all their needs from the Church.

Placement and Counseling Service:

During 1948, 2,964 persons were given occupational counseling resulting in the solution of their employment problems, and 2,805 other persons were placed in remunerative employment.

Emergency Activity:

During 1948 the Welfare Program was again called upon to meet a flood catastrophe similar to the ones in Arizona in 1942, on the avenues in Salt Lake City in 1945 and in Mt. Pleasant in 1946. In May of last year, the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries forced 65 families, consisting of 260 members of the Portland Stake, from their homes and did considerable damage to farms owned by members of the Lewiston Ward of Spokane Stake.

During the afternoon of rescue and evacuation in Van Port, the Portland Stake and University Ward welfare organization acted with such efficiency that they either manned or assisted in manning every rescue craft and conducted such a thorough survey of the rescued and evacuated persons that before nightfall, every known Church member in that area was located and provided for. There was no loss of life. Through the generosity of more fortunate Church members many more homes were opened than were needed. Permanent housing was later supplied for 35 families.

The emergency distribution in the Portland Stake consisted of 8,815 articles of clothing, 2,649 cans of food, 1,076 articles of bedding and 441 miscellaneous household items.

Through the fine efforts of the members of the Portland and Spokane Stakes, little suffering among the Church members resulted from the flood. This is another demonstration of what can be done when production facilities and bishops' storehouses have been set up and the Welfare Organization is put into operation.

During last year we spent on new construction from the General Funds of the Church $5,722,000. There was a local participation in this of $3,710,000 or a total of $9,433,000 for new construction.

We spent all told on our educational program within $2700 of $4,000,000 and thus we have expended for new buildings in the Church and for educational purposes a total of over thirteen millions of dollars.

Now, brethren and sisters, it seems that those figures teach us a lesson. We cannot go on at this rate. We have found that sometimes bishops, in their desire to provide proper quarters, have adopted plans and attempted to carry them out that were way beyond the means of the people and so we have made it a rule in the Expenditures Committee—I suppose more honored in the breach than the observance, but a rule we shall try to enforce—that hereafter no bishop will have his request for a building approved until he has presented the full plan to the members of his ward and has their approval for the expenditure. We have not money for luxuries. We must spend within our income. We are solvent and expect to remain so if we sit on the lid.

President Smith and President McKay remind me that the figures which I have given you here do not include the expenditure by families and the missionaries themselves for their maintenance in the field, which is over $3,000,000, thus making a total expenditure by this people of over $30,000,000 in 1948.

Now, brethren and sisters, we must take a reef in the sails. We are carrying too much sail in a sea that may get pretty rough.

REPORT OF CHURCH AUDITING COMMITTEE

Elder Orval W. Adams read the report of the Church Auditing Committee as follows:

Salt Lake City, Utah
April 1, 1949

President George Albert Smith and Counselors:

Dear Brethren:

Your committee has reviewed the annual financial report of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for the year ending December 31, 1948. The accounting system is modern and we commend those who have the responsibility of keeping the records. Great care has been exercised in the preparation of a comprehensive budget system which provides a control to safeguard the expenditure of the funds of the Church. The funds are being carefully conserved and are being expended only after thoughtful investigation and consideration. Our review of the records discloses the Church to be in strong financial condition and free from debt.

Respectfully submitted,

Orval W. Adams
 Albert E. Bowen
 George S. Spencer
 H. H. Bennett
 Church Auditing Committee

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

We are trying to look after ourselves in the way of having somebody look over the records and see that we are making a proper expenditure of Church funds.

President David O. McKay presented the General Authorities of the Church as also the General Officers and General Auxiliary Officers, and they were unanimously sustained, as follows:

GENERAL AUTHORITIES OF THE CHURCH

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there.
The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?
And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female,
And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh?
Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (Matthew 19:2-6.)

MARRIAGE FOR ETERNITY

I wish to call attention, first, to the fact that the Lord has declared that when a man and a woman are united in marriage, according to the Lord's plan and by his sanction, they become one, one flesh; and there is nothing in this commandment that indicates in the least that that means until death sepearates them. Here the Lord is teaching marriage for eternity, for he says, "... they are no more twain, but one flesh." (Idem.) We ought to keep that in mind.

I wish to read now more of this instruction he gave to these Pharisees:

They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so. (Idem. 7-8.)

Now I want to call your attention to the covenants a man and a woman make when they are married by the Lord, or by a servant of the Lord, acting by his authority. The Lord has revealed this to us, and you will find it recorded in the Scriptures, and I shall read from section seventy-six of the Doctrine and Covenants, verses 54-60.

For the Lord says of those who keep his covenants and are faithful and true and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise:

They are they who are the church of the Firstborn.
They are they into whose hands the Father has given all things—
They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory;

And are priests of the Most High, after the order of Melchizedek, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the Only Begotten Son.

Wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God—
Wherefore, all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

And they shall overcome all things. (D. & C. 76:54-60.)

That is the doctrine the Lord taught to these critical Pharisees. It is the doctrine that was taught by his servants, the prophets. And Paul says, writing to the Roman Saints:

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God:

And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. (Romans 8:13-19.)

BLESSINGS OF TEMPLE MARRIAGE

Now I want to impress upon all my good brethren and sisters who have been married in the temple that they should never forget the great blessings which were bestowed upon them: That the Lord has given unto them, through their faithfulness, the right to become his sons and his daughters, joint heirs with Jesus Christ, possessing, as stated here, all that the Father has.

And yet, there are members of the Church who fail to comprehend this and after they are married for time and all eternity, become members of the Church of the Firstborn, receiving the promise of the fulness of the Father's kingdom, they permit things to come into their lives that bring friction and separate them. And they forget that they have made a covenant for time and all eternity with each other; and not only that, but they have made a covenant with their Father in heaven; and I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, it isn't an easy thing to break a covenant that we make with our Father in heaven. And that is what they do.

Now this is impressed upon my mind at this particular time because I have had so many cases come before me. I haven't time to go into the details in regard to these matters, but I want to call attention to two cases that have come before me recently.

BROKEN HOMES

At the close of a stake conference one time, a brother came up to me for counsel, which he did not follow when he got it. It wasn't counsel he wanted; it was confirmation. He said he and his wife had tired of each other. She was a good woman. She was living her religion. He claimed to be a good man. And the president of his stake, afterwards, when I spoke to him, said he was a good man. How could they be good and want to separate and throw into the discard all these glorious blessings that would bring to them the glory of godhood, as set forth in the revelations which I have read to you? How could they be good?

I want to say to you, my brethren and sisters, there never could be a divorce in this Church if the husband and wife were keeping the commandments of God.

And within the week, my attention was called to another case similar to this, where a man and a woman married in the temple for time and all eternity have tired of each other. They have raised a family. Now he wants to go his way, and she wants to go her way. But they want to be friends. There are no hard feelings between them. They have just got tired. They want a change. Do they have the spirit of the gospel in their hearts? I say to you, no, or they would not be tired of each other. That could not follow. They got tired of living the principles of eternal truth. A man would not get tired of his wife if he had the love of God in his heart. A woman would not get tired of her husband if she had in her heart the love of God, that first of all commandments. They could not do it! And then think of the children. Here you have a broken home. These people get a divorce, and then they want to get a cancelation, perhaps, of their sealing. They want to marry somebody else. And there you have a broken home. What is going to become of the parents? What is going to become of the children? Haven't the children any rights? The parents become separated. Each goes a different way, but they want to be friends. And then they expect to marry again for time and all eternity and enter into the celestial kingdom of God to receive all the blessings of exaltation! Are they entitled to do it? Not as I read these Scriptures—they are not entitled to do it. Of course, we have worse cases than that. We have cases, perhaps, where a woman is justified in seeking relief, to be separated from a brutal husband who lives after the flesh, whose incontinency is such that he makes her life miserable; and they are not keeping the commandments that were given to them when they were married in the temple for time and all eternity, where he is supposed to love and respect and care for his wife with all the humility, in all the faith, and the understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And the gospel of Jesus Christ is not carnal.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S STATEMENT

I have a statement here, from President Brigham Young that I want to read:

I know that you good women get annoyed and provoked and out of patience many times with your husbands, and at times justly. They are not always as considerate of you as they ought to be; but if they provide for you and they are kind to you and otherwise treat you right, stay with them.

That is what President Young has to say. He said:

I think it has been taught by some that as we lay down our bodies they will so rise in the resurrection with all the impediments and imperfections that they have here; and that if a wife does not love her husband in this estate, she cannot love him in the next. This is not so. Those who attain to the blessings of the first or celestial resurrection will be pure and holy, and perfect in body. Every man and woman that reaches to this unspeakable attainment will be as beautiful as the angels that surround the throne of God. If you can, by faithfulness in this life attain the right to come up in the morning of the resurrection, you need entertain no fears that the wife will be dissatisfied with her husband or the husband with the wife, for those of the first resurrection will be free from sin and from the consequences and power of sin. This body is "sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

God has done his part towards putting us in possession of celestial glory and happiness, by providing the means whereby we may attain to it; and if we ever possess it, we must do so by conforming to the means provided. God has given the children of men dominion over the earth and over all things that pertain to it and has commanded them to subdue it, and sanctify themselves before him, and also sanctify and beautify the earth by their industry and by their wisdom and skill which cometh from God. . . . To receive the gospel and believe and enjoy it in the spirit is the simplest part of the work the Latter-day Saints have to learn and perform.

God has made man Lord over all things here below, and it is the labor of man to bring all things unto subjection to God by first subjecting himself to the will of God, and then subjecting all things over which he has control in their time and order. The will of God is eternal life to his people, and to all they control. (Journal of Discourses, 10:24-25.)

The Lord bless you, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters:

I recall an occasion in the life of President Heber J. Grant which brings to me some thoughts for this conference. It was shortly before he became ill and near the close of his administration. He came to the temple one Thursday to meet with the brethren of the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve in the regular weekly meeting. In a thoughtful and reflective mood, he said, in substance:

PRESIDENT GRANT'S CONCLUSION

Brethren, in the natural course of events my administration is nearing its close. I have been wondering what I might do in the time that remains to best promote the welfare of the Church and the people.

For a moment I thought he had some new project to announce, but this was quickly dispelled when he continued by saying that he had reached a very simple conclusion. He said the conclusion he had reached was that he could do nothing that would be of more value and lasting good to the cause of our Father and his people than to devote the remainder of his life and effort to getting the people to keep the commandments. I am sure that all the brethren who heard him were in agreement and deeply impressed by the far-seeing wisdom of his utterance. I was, and I have recalled the incident on many occasions.

We live in a world of sensationalism. "What's new?" is the inquiry on everyone's lips. It often constitutes a form of friendly salutation. There is an insatiable demand for news, and the news to be arresting and intriguing, must be far out of the ordinary, often shocking and tragic, and the "scoops" which usually win the plaudits of the people in the great majority of cases arise out of the perpetration of high crimes, catastrophes, disasters, scandals—public and private—and the doings and antics of notorious people.

KEEPING THE COMMANDMENTS

Keeping the commandments, as President Grant used the phrase, is not news in the modern sense. It is seldom dramatic. It doesn't often arrest attention, and very infrequently wins a place in the headlines for a man or woman, and there are those who look with a measure of contempt and belittlement upon persons who order their "humdrum" lives in strict conformity with all the commandments.

In spite of the prosaic and commonplace aspect of this subject, I have long been convinced, my brethren and sisters, that the most challenging, dramatic, and vital thing in our lives is this "keeping the commandments." It tests every fiber of our beings. It is at once a demonstration of our intelligence, our knowledge, our character, and our wisdom. I will try to show that this is true.

INTELLIGENCE REQUIRED

It takes intelligence, and a high order of intelligence, to worship God truly and understand his commandments and their far-reaching significance. Some of these sophisticates who call the good "dumb" give a very convincing demonstration of their own intellectual limitations. I observe, too, that there are some of our scholars who disparage the intellectual effort put forth in the acquisition of religious and spiritual truth and the science of theology. Out of my own limited exposure to education and my observation of learned men I do not hesitate to assert that it takes just as high an order of intelligence to comprehend and assimilate spiritual truth and divine law as it does to master the equations and formulas in the field of secular education. The great body of divine scripture, although contained in few books, has been, through the centuries, and will continue to be, a challenge to the most profound scholarship and the greatest minds which the world has produced, and it would be well for the cynics and agnostics and sophisticates of the present day to remember that many of the most outstanding institutions of learning had their inception under religious auspices; that churches and church people have been the foster fathers of education and that the Holy Bible has inspired more goodness, high idealism, lofty sentiment, freedom of thought, justice, mercy, and quest for learning than any other book and perhaps all other books ever produced in all the history of the world. Let no man disdain the intellectuality of spiritual learning.

How glorious and satisfying to the inquisitive nature of man is spiritual and religious knowledge and understanding. The intelligence and purpose of God made manifest in the orderly organization of the universe, the place of man in the great design furnish a concept, not only more lofty and idealistic than anything in all literature but one that is also more practical in application to the problems of man and society than any other which has ever been tried and tested.

IGNORANCE OF DIVINE TRUTH

From every quarter of the world we have evidences of a dearth of the knowledge of God and his ways. I think it safe to say that the greater part of all the opposition and enmity to social progress, to liberty, justice, and peace is attributable to lack of understanding, a woeful ignorance of divine concepts and truth. I cannot see how the rank and file of the people who are classed as atheistic communists could accept the godless totalitarianism of Marx and Lenin if they really had a comprehension and knowledge of the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and the eternal plans of the Father for the well-being and exaltation of his children. I can understand how their leaders, lustful for power and domination, and beset by the constant fear of losing their unrighteous dominion will subordinate every decent, honorable, and virtuous principle to the gaining of their ends, but I cannot believe that even their own people would support these avaricious leaders if they had the truth.

REACTIONS OF RUSSIANS

A few years ago I was in San Francisco looking for a publishing house that would print some of our literature in the Russian language. By mistake I went into a printing establishment which I afterwards learned to be communistic. You should have seen the stony stare, and curt dismissal I received, when I asked if they printed religious literature. Afterwards I found a place where I was received by an intelligent Russian man who was sympathetic with my errand. I told him that it was our purpose to make some preparation for missionary work among his people. We discussed the situation for some time, and he made the significant remark: "Only God can save Russia." He published a Russian newspaper, non-communist, with subscribers all across the nation. He gave me the information that there are approximately 15,000 Russian-speaking people around the San Francisco bay area and two million in the United States. He said there are approximately 900,000 displaced Russians in Europe, and he thought our missionaries could begin work among some of these Russians, looking forward to the time when through them there might be an introduction of the gospel into Russia itself. He knew something of our principles and our people and professed admiration for them. I felt that there was some evidence of his sincerity, when, after automatically offering me a cigaret, he immediately withdrew it and said, "Oh, I forgot, your people don't smoke and drink." Well, Russia is not the subject of my remarks, but I think that the present plight of that nation is a pertinent and persuasive illustration of the need of knowledge, spiritual and theological knowledge, as a basis for righteousness and peace.

APPRECIATION FOR KNOWLEDGE

At this point, I wish to voice appreciation for the great body of knowledge which has come to us in the revelations of this dispensation. When I think of the light which the Prophet Joseph Smith has thrown upon the knowledge of his day and our day, his interpretations of Holy Writ for centuries obscure in meaning to the learned of the earth, his enlargement of the vision of man, his incomparable contributions to the understanding of the vital relationships in life, home, family, community, government; his expositions of heaven and earth, salvation, exaltation, and eternity—all stamping him with the unmistakable marks of mighty faith and prophetic vision and understanding, I feel to exclaim with the author of our beloved hymn:

Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah
Jesus anointed that Prophet and Seer.

He was "blessed to open the last dispensation" and "kings shall extol him" and "nations shall revere him" when the knowledge which he brought is disseminated through the earth to the understanding of the people thereof.

REASON BEHIND EVERY COMMANDMENT

So, my brethren and sisters, we need knowledge—knowledge of the things of the Lord. Our Father said in the very beginning of his work, “let every man learn his duty.” It may be that there are a few of the commandments, the reasons for which are not very apparent to us. We accept some on faith as did the prophets of old, but in the main there is a sound discernible reason behind every commandment. A knowledge of the gospel reveals that reason, and gives additional encouragement and strength in keeping it.

For example the man who looks upon tithing as nothing more than a method of gathering money does not understand the law; but he who recognizes in it a great principle of true worship and spiritual growth will find infinitely more satisfaction in complying with its requirements. He will understand that the true test of devotion is the giving of one’s self, and that when a man parts with the proceeds of his labors, giving that which represents the expenditure of his brain power, his muscular strength, and his energy, he not only demonstrates his loyalty to the Lord and his work, but he adds to his own faith and his spiritual resources, his contentment, and his happiness. He builds up loyalty. He attains power to control rebellious and critical thoughts and tendencies. His conscience is clear. He can sleep comfortably with himself. Truly he grows in spiritual power.

Every commandment of God is spiritual in nature. There are no carnal commandments. We have learned this from modern revelation. While the commandments have effect upon the body and temporal things they are all in essence spiritual. The Word of Wisdom is spiritual. It is true that it enjoins the use of deleterious substances and makes provision for the health of the body. But the largest measure of good derived from its observance is in increased faith and the development of more spiritual power and wisdom. Likewise, the most regrettable and damaging effects of its infractions are spiritual, also. Injury to the body may be comparatively trivial to the damage to the soul in the destruction of faith and the retardation of spiritual growth. So I say, every commandment involves a spiritual growth. So I say, every commandment involves a spiritual principle.

COURAGE TO SAY “No”

I mentioned character in connection with keeping the commandments. When I come to think of it, keeping the commandments is about the only yardstick I know in measuring and appraising character, particularly with reference to those who have the knowledge our people have. We commonly refer to character as strong or weak, gentle or harsh, honest or deceitful, charitable or “tight,” and so on all down through the long list of attributes. Perhaps, the classification dreaded most by red-blooded people is that of weakling. That designation seems to be resented more than almost any other, excluding criminal appellations, and, most unfortunately, among these are some who are boastful of sinful records and reputations. Weaklings are those lacking in the necessary stamina, strength, and courage to sustain a position. A person can be helpless physically and still not be a weakling, if he or she has the disposition and inner strength and courage to fight bravely on. It is the moral cowards and the ignorant who corrupt the world. I am aware that none of us has all the strength, resistance, and courage he would like to have, but I am afraid that there are many among us who have permitted their moral strength to be tapped and drained until there may not be much solid character remaining. They wouldn't like to be called weaklings or cowards, but if they will examine themselves thoughtfully and frankly some may well admit that their strength is gone. I think I can tell you how many have come to this misfortune. They have been trying to ape the ways of the world. Many have forgotten that they have been called out of the world and enjoined to keep themselves unspotted from its sins. I suppose some haven't even known what that meant and they have yielded to the sophistry and the sophistication and the practices of worldly-minded institutions and groups. Teddy Roosevelt used to say that it often took more courage to say "no" than it did to face a bear with a pistol. We've had a lot of men and women who unfortunately didn't have the courage to say "no" and who unfortunately also did not have the pride of their great heritage in the Church and kingdom of God. It's a great pity that it has been so. Think of the immeasurable good these men and women might have done if they hadn't been so weak. If they had had the strength of character to stand for the right as they knew it. Think of the admiration they could have commanded for themselves and for their Church by simply declining the cigaret and the glass of beer and participation in indecent stories and tolerance for cheap jokes and witticisms directed at sacred things in their religion. I think of the strength they might have developed in themselves and in the youth who look to them if they had resisted the slot-machine, petty gambling on a golf game, a horse race or cards, and the allurements of the Sunday movie.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

RELIGION AND CONDUCT

I understand that there are organized forces in our communities telling young people that these and other infractions of our moral code have no religious significance and urging them to be free from such restraint. They would disassociate conduct from religion. Well, they can't do it any more than they can separate living from life.

Do you think that weak abandonment of well-recognized standards has commanded even the respect and admiration of new-found friends of the world? What a tragic mistake it is for any man to reach false conclusion that in order to get business or political preferment or social prestige he must compromise the truth. I wish that a hundred or a thousand men of this Church, if there be that many, would withdraw themselves from lodges and secret orders which they were counseled never to join. It is my opinion that most of our men allied with these secret orders had to show some weakness before they were invited. It is my observation that invitations come only to those who do not give wholehearted loyal support to the Church and its standards. The Church needs the undivided allegiance of these men, and they need the Church, as do their families also. Just so sure as they divide their allegiance the world will claim them. I make an earnest appeal to all my brethren who have joined these secret orders to leave them and renew their associations in the quorums of priesthood and the organizations and activities of the Church. I know that every single one who responds will be blessed in so doing.

MAINTENANCE OF STANDARDS

I have a further word to say to my brethren who are members of service clubs, chambers of commerce, and other non-secret business, professional and social organizations. Brethren, you don't need to abandon any principle, any standard or approved practice of the Church to which we have the honor to belong to maintain good standing in these organizations. If you do, you had better get out. Our men can and do win the respect of all if they have the courage of their convictions. There is little respect on the part of any for the weakling. I have found it a great honor to represent this mighty Church of the Lord in many capacities. I have not always felt worthy of the honor, but I trust that the pride of membership in the Church and kingdom of God will never leave me. The Apostle Paul must have looked down through the ages of men and foreseen their weaknesses, when, and giving that famous definition of the gospel, he said:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation. . . . (Romans 1:16.)

It is too bad when men and women become ashamed of the gospel. When they do, they succumb to their weakness, the world soon gets them and they lose the richest things of life. If, therefore, my brethren and sisters, and my other friends who may listen, if you would develop great character, the strength of constant purpose, resistance to evil, nobility in thought and purpose, if you would know the richness of life and experience contentment and its deepest satisfactions, keep the commandments.

NEED OF WISDOM

Just another thought, and I am done. We all prize wisdom. It is said to be the greatest of gifts. It is really the power to apply beneficent knowledge in all the decisions and vicissitudes of life. How we need wisdom in the composition of the troubles and dif-

Wednesday, April 6

Third Day

faculties of the world. How we need wisdom in our own affairs, with our families, our business, and our associations. Almost every day is a day of decision. What to do. What choice to make. I don't know of a better way to secure the wisdom that we need than by keeping the commandments. We are enjoined by the commandments to study, to pray, to work and to serve, and be humble and contrite of spirit. The great promises are to the meek who shall inherit the earth. Wisdom is not to be found among the arrogant, the haughty and self-sufficient, nor among the sinful and the anti-Christians of the world. Wisdom is a gift to the prayerful student, to the faithful and the obedient, to those who repose their trust in the counsels of the spirit and the priesthood of God.

There was great import in those inspiring, simple words of President Grant's uttered in the Holy Temple. They embodied the message that has come down to us through all the presidents of the Church. I know it is the message of our present President and his associates. It has been voiced a thousand times in the words of every true leader. It is not news, but it will never grow old. It is the eternal message for the government of man — keep the commandments. Oh God, grant us the intelligence, the knowledge, the character, and the wisdom to obey, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Five years ago, I stood at this pulpit trembling from head to foot, when I accepted a call to the Council of the Twelve. I have lived now these five years, in close association with the men you sustained today as the leaders of this Church. I have come to know them well. I knew most of them well before I came to this position, but not nearly so well as I now know them.

GREAT MEN

I have discovered that these men are great men—great in the sense of true greatness. I know that in the Presidency of the Church are men who are great in the same sense in which Lincoln was great. I know they are prophets of God in the same sense in which Moses and Jeremiah and Elijah, Peter and Paul were prophets of God. I have discovered that these men do not have any selfish motives, that they are giving of their time and their talents, of their physical and mental and spiritual strength, giving all they have for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. I have discovered that they are honest and true; that they are faithful and devoted; that they love the Lord their God with all their hearts, and with all their souls. I know that they are men of God in the real sense of the word.

And so I was thrilled as you voted here today on these men, thrilled to see this vast ocean of hands come up in a sustaining vote for these men whom you accept as your prophets, seers, and revelators. As I saw those hands, and raised mine with yours, I couldn't help thinking of some of the insulting letters that come to these brethren from men and women who think that these men would lead you astray—letters from men and women who do have selfish motives—letters from people who would trip up the prophets of God if they only could.

GUIDED BY HOLY GHOST

I want to bear you my testimony, and I do it with God as my witness, that these men who lead your Church are honest, true, great men of God; that they do receive the revelation and the inspiration of the Almighty; that they are guided by the Holy Ghost; that this is God's Church; and that if you desire to have guidance from heaven, then you follow the guidance of these men whom you sustain as the prophets of God. They are prophets. They are prophets just as Jeremiah and Moses were prophets. They are Apostles in the same sense in which Peter, James, and John were Apostles, because those three gave the powers of the apostleship to modern men, and those powers have been handed down to the men who stand and sit before you today.

I think it is a very serious thing when anybody raises his hand against the prophets of God. Have you read carefully the story of Jeremiah in the Old Testament and seen there how men and women raised their hands and their voices and their heels against the prophet? I want you to know that it is just as serious for us who live today to raise our hands against these modern prophets as it was for ancient Israel to raise their hands against Jeremiah whom they put in a dungeon and whom they would have been glad to see die.

A GREAT CHURCH

This is a great Church. It is indeed the kingdom of God. We have a great man at the head of the Church. He is the revelator, the seer, and the prophet of God in this day. It is a reality that we walk in the presence of a living prophet of God. Let us be willing to accept him as such. And these others who uphold his hands and sustain him, likewise are the prophets of the Lord.

I am grateful for the experience of the past five years. I have learned a better appreciation of this, the great restored Church, of its principles, of the men who lead it. I humbly submit to you my solemn testimony that Mormonism is true, that the restored Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is God's own Church, and that through it we find salvation.

May we have the courage to live the gospel. May we have the courage to keep the commandments. May we have the loyalty to stand by and follow the leaders, whom God has placed in the earth in these last days, is my humble prayer, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

After this meeting is dismissed the Conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over the stations that I announced at the beginning of this meeting. We will ask you to be in your seats as usual ten minutes before the hour.

Important messages that have been left at the booth will be broadcast as usual over the air on the Temple grounds at the conclusion of this service.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

As I shall not have the opportunity to say it this afternoon, I should like to thank them for the great music which this great organization is bringing to us.

This Mixed Chorus will now sing, "Jerusalem, Turn Thee to the Lord."

The closing prayer will be offered by President Harvey A. Dahl of the Humboldt Stake, Nevada.

---

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang as a closing number, "Jerusalem, Turn Thee to the Lord."

The closing prayer was offered by Elder Harvey A. Dahl, president of the Humboldt Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2:00 p.m.

THIRD DAY

AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held at 2:00 p.m., Wednesday, April 6th.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. President David O. MacKay, at President Smith's request, conducted the services.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, under the leadership of Elder Franklin Madsen, furnished the choir singing for this session.

President David O. McKay:

This is the sixth and closing session of the 119th Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah. This historic building is crowded to overflowing and there is also an audience in the Assembly Hall.

President George Albert Smith is presiding at this session.

Of the General Authorities, Elder Matthew Cowley is absent, in charge of the Pacific Missions, and Elder Alma Sonne is in Europe in charge of the European Missions. President George F. Richards, president of the Council of the Twelve, is resting at home at the suggestion of his doctor. Elder Albert E. Bowen has been with us throughout the Conference but we shall not be privileged to hear from him because his physician advises that we refrain from placing that responsibility upon him. He is recuperating from a recent operation.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL over the stations at Cedar City, Idaho Falls, Pocatello, Richfield, Vernal, and at Mesa by transcription.

As we have heretofore announced, any important messages or calls that come for persons supposed to be in attendance at the Conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loudspeaking system on the grounds.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We shall begin the afternoon services by the Brigham Young University Chorus singing, "Praise Ye the Lord in Heaven."

The opening prayer will be offered by President James H. Walker of the Taylor Stake, Alberta, Canada.

---

The choir sang "Praise Ye the Lord in Heaven."

The opening prayer was offered by President James H. Walker of the Taylor Stake.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang "Lord of All Being."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, it is very customary in the Church to pray for the least and the last in the kingdom of God. I have always felt myself among the least, and this afternoon. I am certain I am very nearly among the last. However that may be, I need your prayers and invite them, so that while I speak to you I may be an instrument in the hands of God to offer something of value to us all.

PROPHECY BEING FULFILLED

This forenoon when the statistics of the Church were read I felt as I always feel on occasions of this kind, that prophecy is being fulfilled. Before the Church was organized the Lord spoke to the Prophet Joseph and said to him that a marvelous work was about to come forth among the children of men. The six young men who sat around the table on April 6, 1830, and under divine instruction organized the Church, believed it to be true that they were setting out, and putting into operation, a marvelous work of the latter days. No prophecy has been more completely fulfilled than that. From six men in an obscure home near a remote village in New York state has grown this great institution. The statistical condition of the Church as outlined to us today is almost beyond the dreams of men.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

I bear my testimony to the reality of this great work, that it is of God, that God instituted it, that he spoke to Joseph Smith, and has spoken to his Church every since, and that we are engaged in the great work of redeeming the human race.

It is good to be with you, good to meet together, knowing our destiny, the work we have to do, and the great reward that the Lord will offer us, in course of time, if, as was said this forenoon, we keep close to the commandments of the Lord.

Those of us who expect to be called upon at these great conferences always have to cast about for some suitable theme to speak upon, some subject of special importance to the people of the Church at the time. I did so myself and finally hit upon a subject that I thought represented a problem of the day of sufficient importance to occupy a part of the time at this great conference. My thoughts were pretty well organized, and I was ready to deliver the message as best I could until last Sunday forenoon when President Smith dropped a remark in his introductory speech, which President McKay also mentioned. One or two other speakers touched upon it also. I was so impressed that I had to change my subject, not because they covered the ground I intended to cover, but because I was impressed to say something in the field that they had mentioned.

EDUCATIONAL ACHIEVEMENTS

President Smith spoke of education among the Latter-day Saints. With proper humility he spoke of our great achievements in the educational field. It is a pardonable pride that we have in our educational achievements. We have the right to feel glad that we have achieved great things educationally. We have always known that we cannot get very far in any worthy endeavor without education. "The glory of God is intelligence," which means knowledge, plus the proper use of knowledge, has been a beacon light of the Church. We have talked about education, we have tried to secure it ever since the beginning of the Church to these days. We do have a remarkable educational history. You see, I spent a good part of my life in the profession of teaching, and whenever the subject is mentioned, I respond much as the old, retired, fire-engine horse responds when the fire bell rings.

The Church had scarcely been organized when our people began to talk about education. They wanted to provide schools and books for schools. In the difficult times of the earliest days, the Prophet wrote a letter to the Church and said that not only were the people to secure schools and schoolbooks, but also if such means were not available, then the fathers and the mothers should act as instructors to the youth in their homes. The Church began its work on the foundation of moral, mental, and spiritual education.

SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS

Later on, when the Church was still young, hard-handed toilers on the farm and in the shop, who had been made converts to the Church, entered the school of the prophets which had been founded for the mature. It is thrilling to look back over our history to the time of the Kirtland Temple. The men left their farms, fields, and shops in the evenings and climbed to the top story, the attic story of the Kirtland Temple, there, in provided classrooms, to study various subjects, languages, mathematics, history, geography, and a variety of subjects. Really our people began there what we call today adult education. It was thought that an older man could not learn; only young people could learn. Since that time the world has come to quite a different conclusion. Today a man is never too old to learn. A woman is never too old to learn. The power to assimilate knowledge remains with us to the last day. Somehow these forebears of ours in the Church understood that.

UNIVERSITIES ESTABLISHED

Then a little later they came to Nauvoo and organized a university. I am not certain for I have not looked it up, but I suspect that the University of the City of Nauvoo was one of the first city tax-supported universities in America. The Church made educational history there.

In time we came here, to Utah, to a barren wilderness. There was work to be done here. Roads, irrigation ditches were to be made; crops were to be raised. A living was to be won from the desert. It was a difficult time. Yet one of the first acts of our territorial legislature was to found a great university, the University of Deseret (now the University of Utah), making it the first university founded west of the Missouri River.

The Church has a noble educational history. We all know that.

What I want to say is something about education itself. It will not take me long. Education may or may not be a good thing. It depends on what we learn. Education is really the accumulated knowledge of mankind, passed on from generation to generation. Each teacher passes on to his pupils that which the world knows. In that way we all benefit from that knowledge and we preserve that knowledge for those who come after us. This accumulated knowledge of mankind, the knowledge of the world, falls into several distinct parts. Two of the major parts I would like to mention.

FACTUAL KNOWLEDGE

All knowledge falls first into a part or division or group that we call factual. Sometimes we call it truth, which amounts to the same thing. Facts of observation, that which we hear with our ears, see with our eyes, that we recognize through the various senses that the Lord has bestowed upon us make up the first and most important part of knowledge. That kind of knowledge is everlasting, unchanging. Under the same conditions a fact will appear the same throughout the countless coming ages.

HUMAN INTERPRETATIONS

The other division of human knowledge, speaking of the major divisions only, is made up of the human interpretations, explanations, and inferences of the observed facts, the truths in our possession. These inferences, explanations, and theories, interpretations of truth, may or may not be correct. They usually change as more knowledge is acquired by humanity. If education consists chiefly of learning what men have said or thought about the facts of nature and existence, it may mislead students, may lead them into difficult places, often into places of untruth. It is only when education confines itself primarily as to truth, to facts, as observed, it becomes worth while. That is not saying anything against the interpretations of truth. We have the scriptures as an example. We have the right to interpret them as we see fit, but we have no right to teach them as we see fit. We must teach truth as it is given us, whether it be in the domain of revelation or of science or any other field of human activity.

OBLIGATION OF TEACHERS

Therein lies a tremendous danger to our young people and the coming generations. An honest teacher, unless he is ignorant will place before his students—I speak both of students in the Church schools and in state schools, I draw no distinctions—the truth as discovered by many, or revealed by God, and when interpretations are taught, he will label them as such, and say, “This is an interpretation by man of existing truth.” That should be done in our priesthood quorums, in auxiliary organizations and in all schools of learning attended by our young people. This is important, of the greatest importance, in the building of happy lives, in a world of peace. President Smith said something last Sunday that pointed in that direction, and it has clung to my mind until I had to speak of it this afternoon.

We have also the field of speculation, very closely related to the field of interpreting truth. If one wants to see how absolutely confusing and useless and untruthful the field of speculation is, let him go to the philosophers of the ages. Begin with the old philosophers and go down to the philosophers of today. Every one has tried to explain or describe God. Not one has failed to try his hand at it. Every one has set up his own explanation and presented his own kind of God. As you read after them, you find yourself in a state of confusion. Great minds, great thinkers, have tried throughout the ages to solve the same problem and have failed utterly to agree. That is because they have not begun with truth. Therein we are strong. Joseph Smith, on his knees in the grove, saw God and spoke to him. There is no question about the beginnings of this work. God does live, a personal being. We are made in his image. We are carrying out his purposes.

The distinction between a fact and an inference is, or should be, pretty generally understood. I bear you my testimony here this afternoon that in all of our teachings we must discriminate, distinguish between the facts of human knowledge and the interpretation of the facts. Interpretations change from day to day. Once in a great while an interpretation of a great truth becomes a truth itself, but very seldom. Usually there is too much of the humanity of us, mixed in with explained truth. So that we can not well trust our interpretations.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS

I do not like to have my taxes spent, or my tithing spent, for that matter, in the support of a teacher who does not understand the difference here discussed and who will not be honest enough as he stands before classes to say, "This is a fact, as far as we understand it, and this is but an attempted inference of the fact which may or may not be right." I have no objection to a man who is an atheist, teaching outside of the Church. His faith is his concern, not mine. I would like to convert him to a knowledge of God. But, when he stands before his classes and talks about God and his own atheism, he is going beyond his rights. He is not employed for that purpose. As a citizen I have rights. It is my money and your money used to support the schools whether in our out of the Church.

This may be a schoolroom talk this afternoon, but if so, blame it on President Smith and President McKay. It was their remarks Sunday that started my mind thinking about this very important subject. We have truth. We are not concerned much with interpretation of truth. The sorrows of the world may be traced back, now or in the past to false interpretations of eternal truth. I hope you will also think about the applications of knowledge to daily life, but that is another subject.

My time is up. I am very happy, may I say again, to be in this conference. Not the words alone have made this a great conference,

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

but the spirit which has been present and which has touched our hearts. I do not remember all that has been said; I shall read the sermons when they are printed; but I have felt the spirit of the Church and its people who are building the kingdom of God, and in so doing are moving on toward the completion of the great plan of salvation laid out by the Father himself in the pre-existent state.

God bless us, keep us faithful and true, helpful in this great work, and may we be given the blessings of health and strength, the things we need to carry on this work, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I humbly pray that I may enjoy the blessings of this hour. This has been a great conference in my personal life. I have greatly enjoyed the sessions that have taken place between the conference sessions, when great groups of friends have met on these lovely grounds. I purposely walked up to five or six groups to hear what might be the conversation and in all but one it reflected the preaching services. I rejoice in that.

APPRECIATION OF CONFERENCE

I want to express personally a word of appreciation for the centennial celebration of the Sabbath schools held Sunday evening. I was sitting by my grandson—a little fellow. When they opened the treasure box, he suddenly woke up and said, "Boy, this is now going to be good." I guess he was reflecting his grandfather's spirit. One letter from the box which Brother Royall read impressed me. Brother George Q. Cannon expressed the wish that he might be here when it was opened, and when I heard his grandson pray, I said in my heart, George Q. Cannon is here.

Also during conference time, when I visited the fine reunions of missionaries—two of which I attended—I saw two young men in one reunion meet after not having seen each other for years. They couldn't express their feeling in a handshake. They couldn't express it in words. They embraced as they met. It was beautiful to see. I went to another reunion where the place was crowded with returned missionaries, and I had another experience that greatly delighted me. Missionaries were chatting about their companionship in the missionary field, but their own tongue couldn't quite tell it, and away they went into the Maori tongue, the language of the people where they had labored as missionaries. These things have greatly impressed me: the great spirit of this occasion, the glorious sermons that have been uttered, the testimony of our President, and the narrative of his life which deeply impressed me.

"The welfare plan is here to stay." I love that sentence. I enjoyed the words of President McKay when he outlined the opportunities for quorums in the welfare work.

MISSIONARY SERVICE

And now, if I may have the inspiration of the Lord, I'll say just a word about our greatest duty. We have forty-two hundred missionaries—fine young men and women who are out in the mission field. As one of the things that you are taking home, I humbly appeal that it will be fastened upon your heart that we must hold that line of forty-two hundred missionaries. After the World War II this number grew up to five thousand. The mission presidents extended their missionary efforts, out into little Sunday schools, into little branches. They were pressed to put into service anyone, everyone, they could find. If we don't hold that extended line, then the Sunday schools and small branches will fold up. You who have had experience in missionary service know that if something isn't coming to feed and encourage these people that have accepted the gospel, although they have faith and hope in it, they require aid until they are established in the Church and until the priesthood of God can be conferred upon their leadership. I humbly pray that you will take with you an earnest desire to hold that line of glorious missionary service, for on this day when we celebrate the birth of the Church, we recall that the Prophet Joseph said, "The greatest duty we have to perform is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ." So may I, in just a few words, try to tie that in to our daily lives as we leave this conference, to do our part.

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE

On the lawn next to my home, a little fellow, four years old, was playing. His mother turned to me one day and said, "Brother Kirkham, there is our future missionary." Then I saw the little rascal go and pull his sister's hair; she started to cry; and I said, "Yes, he's the future missionary." Ruskin, the great English writer, has said, "Evil is good gone wrong. That's all it is." We must start somewhere down the line with little fellows, in our preparation for this missionary service. It is unfair to your boy to have him called suddenly, not having had your guidance and care in his preparation for missionary service. I appeal to you that you will see that he is kept physically fit; that he has a sound body. George Mayo of the great Mayo clinic said to me one day, "The place where spirit ends and body begins, or vice versa, I do not know. It's all together." We must see that our prospective missionaries are kept physically fit. One of the most interesting letters we received in our home was a letter from one of our boys who wrote from far-off Africa to his mother and said, "Mother, please tell me how to make 'Mormon gravy.'" So it is with many of your fine fellows who go out; they just try to keep themselves going on simple, plain foods since they have to do some of their own cooking. You mothers, show them how to make a stew. Show them to poach an egg; how to prepare a simple meal. Am I talking of spiritual things? Yes, for many a fine sermon and many a day of tracting have been spoiled because your boy was ill at ease physically.

Wednesday, April 6

Third Day

Help him in his study. Recently I went to interview a young man for a mission. I found him in the field where he was plowing, and I saw one of the finest things I have witnessed in a young man's life. He was on the sulky plow, but near the front where he could constantly see it, he had fastened a passage of scripture with a clothes-pin. When I came up to greet him, I said, "What's this?" pointing to the paper. "Oh," he said, "ever since the bishop spoke to me, I have been studying the scriptures, Brother Kirkham." This young man was preparing so that when he arrives in his field of labor he may stand and defend his faith intelligently and be grateful for the suggestions of his father and mother.

Start to save now. What a lovely thing it is to know that through the war years and other years, these young men kept their savings that they might go on a mission. Start, after this conference, if you haven't already done so, with your son. "Here, son, I'll put ten dollars away for a missionary fund, will you join me?" "Well, I'll put in a dollar," your son will say. He will do his share as far as he can. That's the practical thing, for in the Latter-day Saint Church the whole family goes on the mission, if we get the full benefits out of it.

PARTICIPATION IN ACTIVITIES

May I say one other word? See that the boy gets a chance to participate in the activities of the Church, especially the priesthood activities. Here is a fine example. I went to visit a father one evening. He was a member of the bishopric. His boy had persuaded him to go to a basketball game with him, and all at once the telephone rang. The father turned to his son and said, "Son, I am sorry. There is a call." He named the sick person who had asked him to come to administer to him. "Well," the boy said, "what's the matter with my going with you?" "We'll see the last of the game, perhaps," and off went the father with his son to bless a brother who was sick, to stand by, if not to officiate in the administration. That's what we must do with our sons that they may rise to the glorious opportunities that are theirs later in the missionary world. Let them have the opportunity that is theirs later in the mission field. Let them have opportunities. Give them the chance. Save them from embarrassments.

HOUSE IN ORDER

Is your house in order, brothers and sisters? Are you ready if the Lord should call you or your son tomorrow? Have you trained your family that you can say to your eldest son, "Well, they've called me, son, to go on a mission." Will your son answer, "That's all right, father. Mother and I will get along all right, because you have trained us to do so?"

May God bless us that these ways may be ours. If they are, then let me read you what some young men have said to me as they reported their missions. Here are their words, I copied them from a report book:

I am at peace with myself. I know the way I want to go. Now I know the true way to happiness. I have learned to love all people. I have seen a life changed.

Then one boy said to me, making his report of his mission:

I heard a father bear his testimony in the mission field. He had had a serious sickness over a long period of time, and he bore his testimony in grateful appreciation to the Lord for his recovery, and then a miracle happened. His boy, his deaf son who hadn't heard a voice for fourteen years, arose and said, "I have heard my father's voice for the first time."

God bless us that we may prepare and do our part for the great days ahead in missionary service. May we be true to those we love that they may be a pride and a joy to us, to the Church, and to their Father in heaven, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that I might enjoy an interest in your faith and prayers.

This great conference has been a most impressive one. As I listened to the addresses of our beloved President George Albert Smith, President Clark, and President McKay, members of the Council of the Twelve, and all who have addressed us, and listened to the most inspiring music, the thought came into my mind, "Count your many blessings, count them one by one, and see what the Lord has done."

A BLESSED PEOPLE

We are a blessed people. We have the blessing of membership in the restored Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. We enjoy a divinely authorized leadership who receive the mind and will of our Heavenly Father. We have the privilege of enjoying citizenship in a great republic. We have the privilege of associating with one another as brethren and sisters in the true sense of the term. We have our families. We have so many blessings that time does not permit to enumerate them all.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

But have we ever stopped to think that all of these blessings have come to us because of someone else's faith, someone else's work, someone else's prayers? I never think of this Church and its organization but what there comes to my mind the story of a boy who was confused as to which church he should join. And in studying the scriptures, he came upon that memorable admonition found in James, wherein the Lord said this:

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. (James 1:5-6.)

This fourteen-year-old boy took this admonition to heart, and going out into the woods, he supplicated God with a faith that was implicit; and in answer to that prayer, God the Eternal Father and his Son appeared to him—that same God that Adam knew, the God of Moses, and Abraham, and Jacob, and all of the other ancient servants of the Lord—that same God who spoke from the heavens when his Son, Jesus Christ, was being baptized in the River Jordan, and the voice of God was heard saying:

Behold, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:17.)

And so, out of the supplication, and the prayers, and the works of a humble boy, used as the instrument in the hands of God, the Church of Jesus Christ was restored to the earth, and the gospel in its fulness and simplicity was returned for the salvation and exaltation of the Lord's children.

And along with the restoration, there came the priesthood of God whereby we might enjoy leadership inspired by revelation; men who are humble and men who have but one desire, and that is to serve God in such a way that they might do the most good for his people and for the world.

FAITH OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

When I think of the founders of this great republic, I think of George Washington. There is no question but what he was an instrument of God in the founding of a nation where the Church might be restored and where the gospel might be returned to mankind, because this nation is founded upon the great cornerstone of the gospel, namely that of free agency. But, unfortunately, there are those among us who would have us believe that George Washington was an unbeliever; but I want to tell you that if a man ever had the help of Almighty God, that man was the Father of our country.

I think of him at Valley Forge, standing at the head of a hungry, ragged, cold army—discouraged, many of them returning to their homes. George Washington had to work with a Continental Congress that was unable to supply him with the sinews of war. I am sure that George Washington, in that hour, realized that in and of himself he could never gain victory; and being a God-fearing man, there is no question but what he sought wisdom from on high; and he received it, because thereafter, this same ragged army defeated the haughty Cornwallis at Yorktown and made it possible to open up the way whereby this great republic in which you and I enjoy citizenship was founded.

And I think of those who framed the Constitution of the United States. They were prayerful men; for the Lord make it known to the Prophet Joseph that he permitted the Constitution to be established by good and wise men. It is true that when the members of that assembly came together there was some dissension, some differences of opinion, but one day there arose among them an old patriot who made the suggestion that as the assembly open each day they supplicate God for his help to the end that they might have wisdom. And God was supplicated, and as the great Gladstone said:

The Constitution of the United States is the greatest document ever stricken off by the hand of man in a given period of time.

PRAYERS OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

And there was another man who sought wisdom from God. That great leader who preserved the Union, namely, Abraham Lincoln, a man who was scorned and held in disdain even by those who were closely associated with him. And when the day of the battle of Gettysburg came, he was composed, he was calm. After the battle was over and the victory had been won, General Sickles asked him the question: "How was it that you seemed to be so calm and composed when the rest of us were worried?" And here is the answer of that great man to the general. Said he:

In the pinch of your campaign up there, when everybody seemed panic-stricken and nobody could tell what was going to happen, oppressed by the gravity of our affairs, I went to my room one day and locked the door and got down upon my knees before Almighty God and prayed to him mightily for victory at Gettysburg. I told him that this war was his, and our cause his cause, that we could not stand another Fredericksburg or Chancellorsville. Then and there I made a solemn vow to Almighty God that if he would stand by our boys at Gettysburg, I would stand by him, and he did stand by you boys, and I will stand by him. And after that, I don't know how it was, and I cannot explain it, soon a sweet comfort crept into my soul. The feeling came that God had taken the whole business into his own hands, and that things would go right at Gettysburg, and that was why I had no fears about you.

This great man followed the admonition of James, too, and sought wisdom from on high; and as a result of his faith and his prayers, the army at Gettysburg was able to achieve the final victory.

And then, too I think of the pioneers, as they made the great trek across the plains and through the rugged defiles of these mighty mountains. It is said in the diaries of some of them at the close of each day, "Brigham Young and his associates went to the highest hill and there supplicated God for direction." It seemed that they liked to pray on the heights, on the mountains, and the hills. I have sometimes thought that the reason for that was that they not only wanted to get close to God spiritually, but they also wanted to get near to him physically. And so out of their prayers and seeking divine wisdom from on high, it was possible for them to find this place in the West that God had reserved for them; and out of their work, prayers, and divine wisdom you and I today are living in one of the grandest places upon the whole earth.

DIVINE GUIDANCE NEEDED

We are now facing another day with more problems. We have now come to the time when this nation stands at the crossroads. A road, which, if we continue to follow it without question will take us down the path of socialism and communism. Let me say to you that once we are in the shackles of either one of these, we will lose our free agency and merely become the pawns of lustful, godless leaders. This is the day and time when the leaders of this nation and all of us as citizens of this great country should follow the admonition of James, seek wisdom from on high, divine guidance that we may be able to solve our national problems and preserve for unborn generations the same blessings of citizenship and freedom that you and I have enjoyed.

I was thrilled some few years ago when I heard a United States senator say that every morning he and a few of his companions went into a small room in the Capitol Building, and there they supplicated God for direction. I would that every one of our representatives in the national assembly would supplicate God every day. Just as surely as they would do that, there would come to them that wisdom, that divine direction, which would preserve this nation as a great republic and also the principles for which it stands.

RESPONSIBILITY, TO BE PRAYERFUL

Now, you and I have some definite responsibilities too—the responsibility of being prayerful, that we will remember in our prayers those who guide and direct the destiny of this nation to the end that God will touch their hearts and out of it all we will be able to follow that path laid down by George Washington, and the path of Abraham Lincoln, to the end that we may follow it for our own happiness and joy and for those who shall follow after us.

Of all the people in the world, we should be the most prayerful; we should follow the admonition of James and seek God continually for wisdom from on high. For the Lord has said to us through his Prophet:

Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing; and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God. (D. & C. 88:119.)

And there is no reason why every Latter-day Saint home should not be a house of God; for, in most instances, there stands at the head of every Latter-day Saint home a servant of Almighty God holding the priesthood and having the right to call upon God and supplicate him for the benefit and the blessings and the good of those who reside within his household.

The Lord has made it plain to us that if we are not a prayerful people, if we fail to remember the king of this land, Jesus Christ, we can lose all of these blessings. We should harken to the words of Amulek when he said to his people:

Yea, I say unto you that if it were not for the prayers of the righteous, who are now in the land that ye would even now be visited with utter destruction; yet it would not be by flood, as were the people in the days of Noah, but it would be by famine, and by pestilence, and the sword.

But it is by the prayers of the righteous that ye are spared; now therefore, if ye will cast out the righteous from among you then will not the Lord stay his hand; but in his fierce anger he will come out against you; then ye shall be smitten by famine, and by pestilence, and by the sword; and the time is soon at hand except ye repent. (Alma 10:22-23.)

And so it seems to me that what we need in this fair land of ours is a shining example of prayerfulness, and the Latter-day Saints are the people who are chosen to exemplify to the world the power of prayer. Every Latter-day Saint home should be a house of God, where the altar of prayer is ever in use and where the proper example is set to our children in supplicating God for divine guidance in all of our endeavors. For the Lord has again said to us:

And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. . . .

And a commandment I give unto them—that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people. (D. & C. 68:28, 33.)

PRAYER IN THE HOME

Only a short time ago I was in a home in which an aged grandmother said to me: "I am most unhappy. In this home we have nothing but the spirit of disunity. We do not seem to be able to agree upon anything. There is a negative spirit here, and I can tell you why we have that spirit. We have it because we cannot get together and pray and ask the Lord for his direction in solving our problems."

On the other hand, I have a remembrance of a home where the children were taught to pray. That little mother taught them how they should pray—giving them the proper concept of God. She told them the story of the appearance of God, the Father, and his Son to Joseph Smith. That gave the children the proper concept of God. They knew that they were praying to a God with body, parts, and passions. He was real to them. He was a God of love; he was a God who could hear and answer prayers. In later years this little mother became very ill. Her children stood outside of the house beside her bedroom window, and they heard her screams. Finally, one said to the other: "Let us pray for Mother." They couldn't go into the house because the house was filled with older people who were trying to help, and the only place left was the coal shed. These two youngsters, one eleven and the other thirteen, went into the coal shed, and kneeling down among the lumps of coal, supplicated God to the end that their mother would be restored. And before night came on, that little mother was restored. She was healed. What does all of this mean? It means that because of the fact that a mother had taught her children to pray, in the hour of her extremity, with full faith in God, her children called upon him to bless their mother and preserve her, and God heard that prayer, and it was answered.

PRAYER A PRIVILEGE

We should teach our children that prayer is a privilege and not a duty. We should teach them to pray from their hearts and not from their lips and not to pray by rote. We should teach them to utter prayers of gratitude to God for all the blessings that we enjoy—prayers of generosity, not thinking so much about the things we want or need, but praying for those who are in distress. Prayers need not be long; they should be rather short and to the point and well thought out.

If we will establish houses of prayer, there is no question that they will become houses of faith; houses of glory; houses of God; because his holy Spirit will come and abide in such homes in rich abundance. And in these homes we will find the spirit of unity, the spirit of cooperation, the spirit of sympathy, the spirit of kindness, and the spirit of love.

Brethren and sisters, in these dark hours, I am sure if we supplicate God as James indicated centuries ago, in full faith, we can be instrumental in preserving all of the rights and privileges given to us in this great government of ours. We can further the cause of the Master. We can teach the gospel of peace, and help Almighty God to consummate his plans before the coming of the King of kings.

I pray we will follow the advice of the Lord given to us again through the Prophet Joseph, wherein he said:

Pray always, that you may come off conqueror; yea, that you may conquer Satan, and that you may escape the hands of the servants of Satan that do uphold his work. (D. & C. 10:5.)

May God bless us that we will be prayerful. May God bless us that we will establish houses of prayer, houses of glory, houses of faith, and houses of God, I humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus and the congregation joined in singing the hymn: "Now, Let Us Rejoice In The Day Of Salvation."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

My brethren and sisters, I ask that you be good enough to help me with your prayers that what I may say today may be in accordance with the mind and the will of the Lord, and then it will be of benefit and blessing to all of us.

I should like to refer to the fine instructions given us last night by President McKay, in which he told us that the duty of the elder is to teach and to warn, and if the Lord leads me along the line that I have thought I might talk about, I want to say something by way of warning.

I want to follow along the thought that was expressed and the situation that was referred to by Elder Stephen L. Richards this morning, when he called attention to certain influences that are at work amongst us.

FREEDOM OF WORSHIP

One of our Articles of Faith says:

We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.

That is the expression of a great principle, a principle that has been operative among the children of God from the earliest period of which we have any record. It was pursuant to that principle, and in the exercise of the rights guaranteed thereby, that a third of the hosts of heaven revolted, in an effort to overcome the plan which God adopted.

Personally, I would not in any way, and in the lightest or slightest degree, hamper anyone's free agency. Literally, I feel and believe that men should worship how, where, or what they may. That is the spirit of the priesthood, the priesthood which we hold. The priesthood never compels. God himself does not compel the intellect, nor does he attempt to overthrow it.

If I might be specific, I would like to say how different is that principle from the principle of a great church which says, or has its presiding officers say in the oaths that they take, that they will attack and follow up all heretics, and over the centuries they have made good that oath.

TWO CHURCHES

The Lord has told us in the scriptures that in the last days there will be two churches. John the Revelator spoke of the great church with worldly power that had under its dominion and leadership the kings of the earth—he spoke of it as Babylon, the Mother of Harlots; and Nephi spoke of it as the great and abominable church. I am not going to say what that church is, though I have a very definite and clear idea. But I want to say that those scriptures also tell us that the other church is a weak church, a church to whose assistance God has to come in order to preserve it. We certainly are not the great church, for no kings are tied to the chariot wheels of our Church. We are the other church.

SCRIPTURAL WARNINGS

Now, our enemies are seeking to attack and are attacking our Church. Time does not permit me to read all the scriptures that I have here, telling of the things that are to come in the last days. But I might call your attention to the fact that the Savior in the Sermon on the Mount said,

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. (Matt. 7:15.)

To the people on this hemisphere he made the self-same statement.

I also call your attention to the words of Paul in his farewell to the elders of Ephesus. He said,

For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.

Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. (Acts 20:29-30.)

I would like to read what Paul said to Timothy, but time forbids. But I will read what Moroni said to Mormon. I might read just one paragraph of the latter. It is the thirty-second verse in the eighth chapter of Mormon:

Yea, it shall come in a day when there shall be churches built up that shall say: Come unto me, and for your money you shall be forgiven of your sins.

The ravening wolves are amongst us, from our own membership, and they, more than any others, are clothed in sheep's clothing, because they wear the habiliments of the priesthood; they are they to whom Brother Widtsoe referred, as distorting the truth. We should be careful of them, and I endorse every word that Brother Widtsoe said, as to the obligations of those who instruct the youth.

EFFORTS TO LEAD ASTRAY

Now, I want to say just a word or two about the church and secular organizations that are amongst us, and that are doing all they can to lead our young people astray. I say there are both church organizations and secular organizations. Their method of approach—or approaches—becomes rather clear.

They begin by making friends with our young people and also with members of that body of priesthood, as to which we have so much concern, the adult Aaronic Priesthood. They cultivate the friendship of these members of ours, then they invite them to their homes, then they take them to their socials, then to their classes of instruction, and before the members knew it, before we know it, this priesthood membership and the youth are gone from us.

What do they say? What I am about to say is not mere supposition. I am quoting or telling of actual incidents. They say, "Do you not find when you go into your church, that you are embarrassed sometimes because you smoke, or because you drink beer?" "Oh, yes," the man says. "Well, in our church, that makes no difference. Those things have nothing to do with religion. Come and join us."

So they take into their socials our members; our members drink a little and smoke as much as they wish. Finally the Rubicon is crossed, and the members are lost to us. These propaganda organizations are building, in some places, halls of amusement. In one of our mission fields, they have built next door to one of our own churches, where they carry on these amusements, not in accordance with our standards, at the same time that we are holding services. That is an extreme case, but there is such a situation, and there are many other places where they are providing amusement under the same conditions and to the same import.

PRINCIPLES ATTACKED

They tell our people that the Word of Wisdom has nothing to do with real religion—nothing at all. Then they tell them that if you sin, you come and confess and pay some penance, the sin is forgiven.

They attack, among other things, baptism for the dead, and are finally bringing themselves around to the position of atheistic scholars who have said that that wonderful passage in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all?" (verse 29) was addressed to pagans, and not to the early Saints; that the practice referred to was a pagan practice.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

Well, read how the epistle to the Corinthians is introduced, and read how the fifteenth chapter is introduced, then you will have no doubts that the epistle was addressed to the Saints, and that the early Saints baptized for the dead.

TOO HARD TO LIVE

On the principle that the wish may be the father to the thought, they say that our religion cannot last because it is too hard for the individual to live, and therefore our religion will fade away and become extinct. Of course, their present feverish activity belies that thought. But as I think of that statement, it seems to me that among the many answers that might be given to it, one of them is that our Church has been set up never to be thrown down, and that this gospel is never to be given to another people. Another is that the restored gospel is more than what they mean by religion. When they talk of religion, they speak merely of a relationship between God and man; all questions of the relationship of man to man have passed out of their religion. But our plan is a plan of life and salvation, including, not only the relationship of man to God, but also as I have said, the relationship of man to man, throughout the eternities, and the divine destiny God has planned for his righteous children.

HERESY AMONGST US

There is a heresy which is amongst us now in some degree and which has existed since the early Christian days, which declares that the God of the Old Testament is not the God of the New, that the Old Testament God has disappeared. I have never quite been able to see how the proponents of this idea could square it with the statement which the Savior made repeatedly, that he did only what he had seen the Father do, and he taught only what the Father had taught him. Thus those who would drive out the God of the Old Testament must deny the Christ in order to do it. These other churches seem to regard God as a God of vengeance, seeking to destroy his children. We know that our God is a God of love, because he was the Father, and as I have said, Jesus said he taught what his Father had taught, and he did what he had seen his Father do.

OBLIGATION TO PRESERVE TRUTH

My brothers and sisters, if there ever was a time in our history when we must be on guard against the insidious influences and propaganda of the churches of the world and the atheists of the world, that time is today. We must not be asleep. We have the truth; we must preserve it and ourselves in it.

After Jesus had returned from the wilderness following his baptism, he came to the River Jordan where John was still baptizing. As John stood there, seeing the Savior, he said, "Behold the Lamb of God," and apparently replying to somebody who wanted to flatter him and tell him how great he was, he added, "... whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose." (John 1:27.)

The next day Jesus came again to the group on the banks where John was baptizing, and again John said, "Behold the Lamb of God." Andrew and some others who were the disciples of John, followed Jesus, who took them to his room and there taught them. Then Andrew went out and found Peter, and declared with joy, "We have found the Messias," the Christ.

We of the Church have found the Messiah, the Christ. He authorized and directed the building of this Church. We must not let the error and the evil which knock at our doors, cross the threshold and enter therein to rob us of the greatest things that God has to give us—our children.

May we be as wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves. May we protect our youth and those of ours who do not see as clearly as they should these dangers which threaten them, and against which I am warning you, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President David O. McKay

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. of the First Presidency has just concluded speaking, and now, brethren and sisters, we are to be blessed with a benediction and concluding message from our beloved President, President George Albert Smith.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

This is a solemn occasion. We are met in the concluding session of a great conference. Representatives are here from many parts of the world. We have been privileged to listen to the counsel and admonition and encouragement of those who have been called to direct in Israel.

I am sure everyone who has attended these sessions has been edified, and our minds have been directed to him who is the Author of our being. I have rejoiced in the delightful music we have had, and take this occasion to thank this splendid chorus that comes from, what to me, is the greatest university in all the world. [Brigham Young University, Provo Utah.] I know you will pardon me for referring to it that way, because it was where I went to school. I hope these young people, members of the chorus from Brigham Young University, have rejoiced in meeting with us as much as we have in listening to them.

PERILOUS TIMES

We are living in perilous times. We are approaching the evening of the sixth day. All the world is in confusion, and unfortunately, as has been the case before, the majority of the men and women who live upon the earth are in darkness, because they do not have the gospel of Jesus Christ, the gospel of light.

I trust that the few moments I occupy I may have the benefit of your faith and prayers, that I may be led to say that which will be a source of encouragement and blessing to us all.

We live in a wonderful land, choice above all other lands, blessed as no other nation is blessed, and yet we are in danger. Our Heavenly Father has told us that there is a law irrevocably decreed in heaven from before the foundation of this world upon which every blessing is predicated. If we observe the law, we will obtain the blessing. If we fail to observe the law, we have no promise.

LOSS OF BLESSINGS

As my mind goes back to the beginning as recorded in Genesis, and follows down through the centuries that have since elapsed, I realize that many people have lost the truth and turned to falsehood, thereby losing their blessings.

The Lord has been mindful of his children all the time. He has never punished them, but he has taught them so that they might not be punished by their own conduct. Those who would not listen to God's representatives were destroyed. On one occasion the whole population of the world was wiped out with the exception of a few who listened to Noah, a servant of God, who for more than a hundred years had called the people to repentance. Only those who were in the ark were preserved.

SODOM AND GOMORRAH

We have the instance of Sodom and Gormorrah. Abraham learned that the cities of the plains were to be destroyed because of the wickedness of the people. He pleaded for those who were righteous, saying to the Lord, "Surely, you are not going to destroy all of them. There must be some people who are worthy to live." The reply to him was, "If there are fifty righteous people in those cities, they will all be preserved from destruction."

Then Abraham asked, "Well, what if there are forty?" "Yes, if there are forty," was the answer. "Then if thirty?" "Yes, if thirty." "If twenty? If ten?" "Yes," ten would be sufficient to hold off the destruction of the cities, but there were not ten people in those two great cities who were worthy to live. Lot and the members of his own family fled, then the whole community was consumed by fire.

Prophets of the Old Testament warned the various communities from time to time. They were fully warned before destruction came, but notwithstanding that warning, Jerusalem, one of the great cities of the world, was repeatedly destroyed. Babylon, the greatest of all nations at one time, had been warned of its wickedness, but the people would not do what the Lord wanted them to, and they were destroyed.

SONS OF HELAMAN

In our own country when the Nephites and the Lamanites were warring among themselves, they were given certain promises if they would keep the commandments of God, told that if they did not, destruction would follow. Then we have that marvelous record of 2,060 Lamanite boys—just boys—who joined the army of the Nephites in order to help preserve themselves and their families, and who faced certain death—from any natural standpoint—because they were opposing skilled warriors. But they had been taught by their mothers that God would protect them if they would do their duty.

These 2,060 boys, part of the army of the Nephites, went into battle repeatedly. The last struggle was so terrible that we are told all were wounded; two hundred of them fainted from the loss of blood. When Helaman, their commander, saw their enemies driven away, anxious for his young charges (he called them stripplings) he went through the battlefield and gathered the living. He found the 2,060 alive, although many had fainted from the loss of blood.

Helaman, who was amazed at their miraculous preservation, questioned them. Their response was one of the greatest compliments to motherhood to be found anywhere: "We knew our mothers knew."

They believed what their mothers taught them. They had faith in God. They were preserved, and they helped save their homes and families from destruction.

PREPARATION FOR RESTORATION

During the great struggle for independence in the country under the leadership of George Washington, our Heavenly Father was preparing the way for the restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity.

He gave to certain individuals the inspiration to frame the Constitution of the United States that has been referred to in this conference, the greatest palladium of human rights that we know anything about. Under such a Constitution the gospel of Jesus Christ was restored to the earth one hundred nineteen years ago.

These facts are part of the history of the world, including many more that time will not permit mentioning.

The hand of our Heavenly Father has always been extended in love to his children through his prophets who pleaded with them to repent of their wrongdoing and keep his commandments. When they did, they were blessed, and when they failed, they lost their blessings.

THE STANDARD WORKS

We have here on this stand the Holy Bible containing the Old and New Testament, as well as the Book of Mormon which is the history of the ancestry of the American Indian. We also have the Doctrine and Covenants, containing the revelations of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith, all available to the children of God. We have also the Pearl of Great Price containing other scripture.

We look upon these four volumes as the teachings of our Heavenly Father, and accept them. There is no teaching in them that any individual in the world belonging to any church or no church can find fault with. In every case the admonition is to make men and women better wherever they may be.

These scriptures are available to all. You have been told that there are thousands of your sons and daughters in the world now, seeking to share with our Father's other children the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ before it is too late. We are coming dangerously near to a time when our Heavenly Father will withdraw his spirit from the world because the people of the world will not accept it.

We have been told today that there are now a million and forty thousand members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I say to you, not boastfully, but seeking to explain the truth, that this Church has received in this latter-day a new witness: God the Father and the Son did appear in the woods of Palmyra. A boy received a witness that enabled him to endure all kinds of persecution, and finally, as he was taken by his enemies, he said:

I am going like a lamb to the slaughter. . . . I have a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward all men . . . and it shall yet be said of me—"he was murdered in cold blood." (D.H.C., 6:554-555.)

PROGRESS UNDER CONSTITUTION

..

Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and his brother Hyrum (the great-great-grandfather of the man who sits at my left here on the stand and grandfather of the man who sits behind me in this congregation) died as martyrs at the hands of a wicked mob. They were sacrificed not for any wrong they had done but because they had sought to teach the truth and call the people of the world to repent before it was too late. The work has gone on and under the Constitution of the United States we have been permitted to carry on in this great land. We have been permitted to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our missionaries of course have gone all over the world, but I am speaking now of the United States of America. However, there are many people, many men and women in this land, some of whom may be friends or relatives who are misguided by the idea that the Constitution of the United States isn't as fine a system of government as they have in Russia or Germany or Italy or some other part of the world, notwithstanding the fact that the Lord himself said that he raised up the very men who framed the Constitution of the United States and directed that the membership of this Church should pray for and sustain those who represented the Constitution of this land. I hold in my hand the Bible and can read the Ten Commandments that were given to Moses for the guidance of the people wherein the Lord told Moses what the people should live for and do. If those Ten Commandments had been lived up to by the people of the world down to the present time, this earth could long ago have been celestialized. But the people refused.

OBEDIENCE TO COMMANDMENTS

You know, and I know, that the Ten Commandments contain the will of our Heavenly Father, and I am grateful, not only for the civil laws but also for the laws God has given to us. I feel bound to conform my life to the teachings of the Ten Commandments. I feel equally bound to sustain the Constitution of the United States which came from the same source as the Ten Commandments. Unless the people of this great nation can realize these things and repent, they may forfeit the liberty that they now enjoy, and the blessings that are so multiplied among us. I do hope and pray that they will discover before it is too late that God has spoken again. Your responsibility and mine is to let our light so shine that others seeing our good works will be constrained to glorify him who is the Author of our being.

These books contain the advice of the Father of us all, the Father of the Jews, the Gentiles, the Christians, the pagans. God is the father of our spirits, and down through the ages he has tried to encourage people to do the thing that would bring them happiness rather than unhappiness. Yet today we find this world in such a condition that there is uncertainty upon every hand. It is our duty not only to obey the commandments of our Heavenly Father but also to pray for those who represent the constitutional law of our land. It is our duty to pray for those who hold high positions in the states, and in the nation. Why? Because if they can be influenced by the Spirit of the Lord, and there have been many cases where they have been, the people will receive the blessing they need.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

BLESSINGS OF CONFERENCE

Brothers and sisters, we are coming to the time when we will return to our homes, and I ask you: Where in all the world could we have spent the last five days under sweeter influences than we have enjoyed here in this great Tabernacle? We have been blessed beyond our ability to appreciate our blessings, I think. And now as we go to our homes, will we take to them the influence that we have found here—the blessing that we enjoy here—will it be carried out to encourage those who are not doing what they should? If we do, then this conference will have been to us an added blessing, because inasmuch as we endeavor to bless the children of our Heavenly Father, we receive a blessing ourselves. In other words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren," the Master said, "ye have done it unto me." We are living in perilous times. Brethren and sisters, set your houses in order. Gather your families around you, have your prayers, ask the blessing upon your food, give of your substance to those who are in need.

When I heard the reading of that marvelous record of the funds that have been utilized by this little Church and think of what has been given, and the millions that have been expended by this group of people, I marveled, and I stand here to say that not one of you who has contributed will be one dollar poorer than you were before.

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY

We have this great chorus here today representing Brigham Young University. There isn't any good that could come to that school that would not please me. The leaders of that school are struggling, working, planning, but I am afraid there is a limit to what may be accomplished in a financial way in the immediate future. There are wealthy people among us. There are those who are well-to-do, who may feel disposed and happy to help this institution grow. I want to say that it is one of the finest places for our young people to go to school that can be found anywhere. I hope that these young people here will feel a blessing; I hope they will go back to the school and take with them the spirit that is enjoyed here, grateful for the blessings of our Heavenly Father. They are always close to those who honor him and keep his commandments. And I now advise these young men, protect the virtue of these girls as you would protect your lives, and to these young women, I say, protect the virtue of these boys as you would protect your lives. You are all the children of God, and he loves you, but the adversary will do everything he can to tear down and destroy your opportunities for happiness. That same admonition in regard to these students of the university I give to all the sons and daughters in the Church wherever they may be, and if we will honor God and keep his commandments and live as we should, no matter where the storms may strike, the winds may blow, and the lightnings may flash, we will be as the children of God always have been when they have kept his commandments: we will be under the protecting hand of him who is all-powerful.

We will continue to go forward and grow and develop in life, and in the end we shall find a reward as inheritors in the celestial kingdom of our God right here upon this earth and enjoy the companionship of those we love forever.

OUR FATHER'S WORK

May the Lord bless you, my brethren and sisters, for your faithfulness. And I bless you as he gives me power to do so, that you may continue not only to do as well as you have done in the past but that you may also strive harder than ever to save the world by teaching the people in it who are worthy to live the gospel of Jesus Christ, until it shall have been proclaimed to all, and the opportunity be given to them to understand the truth, because this is our Father's work. This is not the Church of any man. It is the Church of Jesus Christ, and the only Church of Jesus Christ that is on the earth which is entitled to that name by his appointment. Do you appreciate it?

Men, do you appreciate your wives? Wives, do you love and appreciate your husbands? Parents, do you appreciate your children? Children, do you love and appreciate your parents? If we do, then we will love one another, and there will be peace and happiness in our lives and in our communities, and our homes will be the abiding place of the Spirit of God.

I pray that this may be the case and that we may now go from here renewed in our determination to support the Constitution of the United States of America, to maintain the standards of the Ten Commandments, and to observe the advice and counsel of our Heavenly Father, as given by his servants from time to time. When the time comes that this earth shall be cleansed and purified by fire, and the celestial kingdom shall be set up here, may we find our names recorded in the Lamb's book of life entitling us to a place in that kingdom, that there will not be one missing but that every one of us and those we love may be there. This I pray in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President David O. McKay:

The inspired admonition and blessing to which you have just listened were given by President George Albert Smith, President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

The choir music for today's sessions of the Conference has been furnished by the Brigham Young University Chorus with Elder Franklin Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

This has been a most outstanding conference, one of the most significant features of which, besides the inspirational addresses, is the fact that we have had over one thousand young people participating, furnishing the music for the sessions, besides the Tabernacle Choir which always renders an inspirational service. We had 500 young boys and girls Sunday night, the Ricks College Choir, Monday, Monday night the male chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, and on Tuesday night two large groups of lesser Priesthood singers from two stakes, today this large group of young people from the Brigham Young University. We thank you all; we are proud of our young folks and feel inspired when they can join us in the worship of the Lord.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus will now sing, "Peace and Light."

The closing prayer will be offered by President W. Wallace McBride of the South Carolina Stake, after which this Conference will be adjourned for six months.

---

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus sang "Peace and Light."

The benediction was offered by President W. Wallace McBride of the South Carolina Stake.

Conference adjourned for six months.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held Monday evening, April 4, at 7:00 p.m.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided and conducted the services.

The music for the meeting was furnished by the Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Elder Spencer Cornwall.

The Men's Chorus and the congregation sang as an opening number: "Come, All Ye Sons of Zion."

President J. Angus Christensen, of the Palmyra Stake, offered the invocation.

The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir sang: "The Palms."

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Last June I visited away out in Blake's Bay, with President S. Dilworth Young, at the home of a sister who was investigating the gospel, and as we talked to her about her study of the gospel, she said there was one thing about the teachings the missionaries had brought to her that she could not agree with. When we asked her what that was she said she could not believe in the gospel of the "second chance," meaning by that the work, salvation for the dead. Well, after this call tonight, after having had one chance in this conference, I began to understand what might be termed the gospel of the "second chance." They had given me the second chance to do what I had failed to do, probably, yesterday.

MEMBERS AWAY FROM HOME

I attempted to say something yesterday in the interest of those who are away from their homes, the priesthood members, the girls, and particularly our men in military service. There are some figures that are available from our quarterly reports, our annual report, that indicate that for the year 1948 we have had living away from their homes in the stakes of Zion 628 high priests, 417 seventies, and 4,362 elders, or a total of 5,407.

I asked Brother Palmer if he could tell me how many Aaronic Priesthood members there are in this group and I suppose he is still trying to find those figures. I would assume that probably the total number of Aaronic Priesthood members living away from their homes would not be less than the number of Melchizedek members, because most of those in military service at the present time hold only the Aaronic Priesthood.

In other words, we have approximately ten thousand members of the Church who are living away from their homes. (How many Aaronic Priesthood members, Brother Palmer?) 4,110 Aaronic Priesthood members added to the 5,400 would give us then a total of 9,500 members of the Church living away from their homes.

PURPOSE OF PRIESTHOOD REPORTS

Sometimes when we ask you to make reports, there seems to be a misunderstanding as to the purpose of those reports. We have dared ask each quarter for priesthood quorums to report on six activities. Those activities are designed to call your attention each three months to the things that over a century have been found to be the methods by which men can be won to activity in this Church.

Those things on the reports that you are asked to enumerate are: First, the number of council meetings you have held during that quarter. The ideal is that there should be a council meeting of the presidency of the quorum once each week. So we ask you to tell us how many you have held during that time.

The second thing, we have discovered, that brings men into activity is the number of visits that are made to quorum members. We ask you to report that.

The number that you have had out to socials, or rather the number of socials you have had during the quarter, and we are suggesting not less than one each month for a quorum.

The number of projects you have, which would invite the activity of quorum members, and the number of those using liquor and tobacco who have had carried to them the program designed to help them in their efforts to overcome the habit.

And finally, we have asked you to tell us how many you have corresponded with during that period.

The failure of priesthood quorums to follow up in any one of these activities is an evidence that they are not doing all they can to reclaim those who otherwise are slipping away from us.

We have asked you to report one very significant figure that is always one of great concern. We ask you to tell us those who are active and accounted for, the number, and that figure is arrived at by counting those who are present at their meetings. Those who are engaged in other church work during the priesthood hour and those who are away from their homes, not counting those who are on missions. That total figure for 1948 for the Melchizedek Priesthood quorums alone, the number who are active and accounted for, was 45,778, but the total number of members accounted for in the priesthood quorums with a few stakes not reporting, totals 104,953, which means if those reports are at all accurate that we have a total counted inactive or unaccounted for of 59,175.

Now, with those figures before us, it seems clear that in order for us to inaugurate a program that will tend to win them back we would do well to look to our reports as a matter of instruction rather than merely as a medium of reporting to the General Authorities.

CONCERN FOR SERVICE MEN

Now then, regarding those who are living away from home, particularly the service men. We realize that you do not have a great number away from home, but in two concentrated areas, one at San Diego where a large number of our boys are to be found and the other down at San Antonio, Texas, we have the distressing reports from both of these concentrated centers, where we have some hundreds of our boys, that by actual count there are few in those camps who have received a letter from their priesthood quorums or from their bishops, and they have not had their cards reported to the general office of the Servicemen's Committee so that someone living in a nearby branch or ward of the Church might be sent to bring them into our priesthood and church meetings.

Now, brethren, the First Presidency and the Twelve, after discussion, considering a program that would be designed to safeguard the welfare of these young boys, who, for the most part are untrained and inexperienced, ask that there be organized in each stake a committee composed of a member of the stake Melchizedek and Aaronic Priesthood Committees, and that under their direction there would be inaugurated an instruction to all priesthood quorums that would urge them to correspond with their absent members each month, enclosing therewith a tract on some gospel principle and a tract on the word of wisdom that might be obtained from the No Liquor-Tobacco chairman. That letter should be a letter of encouragement and of friendliness in order that they might feel their relationship to the quorum which sends the letter.

It has also been urged that all priesthood quorums send to each such absent service man a copy of the Era and the Church Section of the Deseret News, and that these be supplied by the priesthood quorums from funds which they will raise themselves.

Now, while we have but few from each quorum or from each ward, if we are not able to take care of the few I wonder what is going to happen to our young men when we get the many that we may get with an increasing of the draft or from compulsory military service, which we pray God may not come.

We ask you brethren to redouble your efforts, you stake presidents to again stimulate the carrying out of the instructions, bishops of wards, the presidencies of quorums, in order that these boys will be cared for and their lives safeguarded by that care.

We would like to commend the Presiding Bishopric, who this year have required as an item which they must attain to in order to get a standard quorum award, that they account for the absent members of their Aaronic Priesthood quorums who are away from their homes, not being content merely to count the boys who are now living at home. We ask you Melchizedek quorums to be just as attentive with regard to the boys of your quorums.

PRIESTHOOD COURSE OF STUDY

Now, one more matter. There has been prepared by Elder Joseph Fielding Smith an excellent course of instruction for all Melchizedek quorums under the title, "Church History and Modern Revelation." Each year there have been prepared thirty-six lessons with the understanding that three class periods of not less than forty-five minutes each be devoted to a study of the lesson manual each month, it also being understood that one of the four class periods might be devoted to a quorum business meeting where the membership of the quorum all reside in the one ward. Otherwise, there would be occasional time for an extra lesson, and so thirty-six lessons have been provided for the study of the quorums.

It has come to our attention that in some stakes and some quorums there has been a program that does not permit the carrying out of this lesson program. In some stakes there has been a ward teachers' report meeting being held during the time of the priesthood meeting once each month which, if you will think for a moment, would deny the possibility of carrying out the lesson instructions that have been provided. Also, in some quorums we have learned that the monthly quorum meetings have been held once each month where the membership of the quorum have been taken away from the priesthood meeting on that Sunday.

We ask you brethren to pay attention to the instructions that have been given as to the course of lessons in order that these difficulties might be overcome.

The Lord bless you, my brethren, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

And I give unto you a commandment that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom. Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand."

And then, in the next paragraph he tells us to comprehend all phases of instruction pertaining to the earth, the heavens, to the end,

That ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you. Behold I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor. Therefore, they are left without excuse, . . ."

There are two things which the Lord here asks us to do. that we are to teach and to warn, testify of the truths of the Gospel and to warn the people of the evils in the world.

There are two great phases, departments, of our Church in which the priesthood exercises the right of teaching, one is in the organized stakes; the other, in the mission field. I should like to say a few words about the latter phase of this great modern work. First, regarding some items which pertain to the calling of missionaries.

CALLING OF MISSIONARIES

About a year ago, or so, we suggested that young couples should not be called into the mission field, for reasons given. Just by way of reminding you, we thought it best for the young couples not to go into the mission fields because, in the first place, in the natural course of events, the responsibilities of motherhood would interfere with the work of the sisters, and if anything were done to postpone that responsibility, the Church would become a party to birth control, and the Church will have nothing to do with that evil.

But at that time it was suggested it might be permissible for a young girl to go out and join her husband during the last six months of his mission. Now that was given particularly because some of our young, many of our young men had been out in the war, been on the battlefields, been away from home two, three, four, five years, and now going out into the mission field. Naturally, they wanted to get married when they came home, and so that permission was given. Tonight, we should like to say that it has not worked out very satisfactorily, brethren, and the conditions that justified the giving of such permission have become practically non-existent. We suggest, therefore, that you discontinue encouraging these young girls or giving the thought to them that they might go out and join their husband if they marry just before he leaves, to join him the last six months.

Mission presidents feel that it is not in the best interests of the work. And only by special permission, by special request of some mission president will that be granted; and to you bishops and presidents of stakes we suggest that the thought be discouraged.

It is suggested, secondly, that more care be taken in recommending missionaries. Now you have heard that repeated time and time again. Missionary work is strenuous, the change of climate, often the worry that takes possession of some of our young men at first, sometimes homesickness, discouragement. Unless they are physically strong they break under it, and it is surprising how many during the last six months have so broken. That, too, hinders the work in the mission field. That applies also to those who are past middle age, to elderly couples that would like to go out. They seem strong, capable to do work here at home, but when they get out in the field under different circumstances, not a small number of them fail to meet the vicissitudes and the responsibilities of the mission. So now, before your elderly couple will be sent out to the field the mission president will be communicated with; and if he can use them, all right; if not, we will ask that they remain in the home fields, in the organized stakes.

Now we recognize, bishops, that you are going to have difficulty in satisfying some of these young men who feel that they can go out, who may be physically handicapped. Physicians may declare a weakness in the eyes, probably in the heart. The young men will say, "Well, we can work hard and we should like to go," and sympathetically you say, "All right." They feel as though they will be deprived of a privilege, and no doubt they will in a sense, but let us emphasize the importance of the work here at home. It is just as important, the home missionary work, and they can be here under their normal surroundings, and be near any help, medically, which they might need. So let us try to impress them with the fact that they can serve the Lord here at home to the extent of their physical, intellectual and spiritual ability, and probably better than going out into the world under conditions which might be too strenuous for them.

I am pleased to report to you that the Chinese mission is about to be reopened. The mission presidency, two of them at least, have already been chosen, as you have undoubtedly noticed in the papers, and within the next few months we hope papers will be in such shape that the brethren, under the direction of President Cowley will go over there and establish a headquarters and preach the gospel again to that mighty nation.

SUCCESS IN JAPANESE MISSION

You will be delighted, too, to hear of the success attending our missionaries in Japan. I thought you would be interested in this message from President Clissold:

With a nucleus of several old members who had been meeting with Nisei saints from Hawaii, here in the service, A Sunday School was fully organized at Ogikubo, Tokyo in April 1948, and now has an average attendance of over two hundred. Other Sunday Schools organized in Tokyo are at Shimokitazawa, Denenchofu, and Takanaway. Cottage meetings, Primaries, and study classes are being held in several other areas, making in all 21 weekly meetings in Tokyo, with an average attendance of over eleven hundred people.***

One of the faithful members of the former mission and a man of considerable influence in Takasaki, a city ninety miles north of Tokyo, has been of great assistance to the missionaries assigned to that district. He helps them with a large Sunday School and several weekly meetings, including an M.I.A. gathering of over four hundred young people.

All of the organizations, with one exception, are presided over by missionaries. Since January, however, there have been twelve ordinations to the priesthood, and it is expected that local people will be called to positions of responsibility in the near future.***

Including the mission president and his wife, there are seventeen missionaries in this field. Eight of them are Niseis, six from Hawaii, one from the mainland, United States, and one from Canada. They are without exception capable and earnest young people. As the Cacaasian missionaries are in the process of learning the language, the burden of the work thus far, with one notable exception, has been borne by the Nisei missionaries. They are a great credit to the wards and branches from which they come.

About fifty members of the former mission have been found. [After all these years of disorganization] These faithful saints are the nuclei around which the present organizations are being built. They are practically all people of high standing and influence in the communities in which they live, and are excellent examples of the efficacy of the Latter-day Saint way of life. These humble members, in their steadfastness through almost a quarter of a century of isolation, have demonstrated a loyalty and faith that is unexcelled in the Church. If there has ever been any thought that the first mission in Japan was not successful, the faith and the works of these stalwart members should dispel it forever. To associate with them as they labor to assist the missionaries would fill with deep satisfaction the hearts of the former missionaries who struggled against great odds to glean just a handful of converts out of over twenty years of missionary effort.

We have good word from the Saints in Germany, and encouraging word even from Czecho-slovakia, although government officials refused to let seven of our missionaries enter Czecho-slovakia a month or so ago. But those who are there are encouraged and people are hungering for the truth.

Other missions report progress. It is just inspiring to receive the letters of encouragement from the mission presidents and from elders, missionaries and the sisters, and also to hear the reports of the returned elders from the various missionary fields. Truly the harvest is great, and these mission presidents would tell you that the laborers are few. Though five thousand missionaries, a few under that now—many have come home—are in the field, each mission president is asking for many more than these he has in his missionary corps.

TEACHING AND WARNING

Teaching, warning, testifying of the restoration of the gospel, warning the people, and it "becometh every man also to warn his neighbor." Within the last twenty-four hours there have been gathered here in connection with this conference, I suppose, twenty thousand teachers, probably eight thousand here tonight, an equal number last night in this building and in the Assembly Hall. Within twenty-four hours approximately twenty thousand teachers, and I am speaking to teachers tonight, for the priesthood means teaching, the authority to represent the Lord in teaching the Gospel, the Gospel of the Kingdom.

I thought that one of the most effective means of teaching is proclaiming the glories of the gospel as we heard today, but equally effective in this old world, is that which warns of the dangers. You remember what Paul says in his epistle to the Galatians, about the works of the flesh being manifest, such as adultery, fornication,

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

lying, and he listed all the evils, and he concludes after doing that by saying that "they who do these things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God."

And then in contrast he says: "Now the fruits of the spirit are these, love, joy, peace . . ." and so on, and the blessings that will follow. There are two things always that we should keep in mind: one, the beauty of a righteous life; the other, the warning against indulgence in the evil life, and you cannot get away from that.

INFLUENCES UPON LIFE

As I recall the influences upon my young life, I believe the greatest was the memorizing of that important saying: "My spirit will not dwell in an unclean tabernacle."

Then there were three others, and they were all in the form of warnings. The first came to me as a boy as I sat on a spring seat by the side of my father as we drove into Ogden. Just before we crossed the bridge across the Ogden River, a man came out from a saloon, which was just on the northern bank of the river. I recognized him. I liked him because I had seen him on the local stage. But on that occasion he was under the influence of liquor, and had been for, I suppose, several days.

I did not know it, did not know he drank, but as he broke down and cried and asked father for fifty cents to go back into the saloon, I saw him stagger away. As we drove across the bridge my father said: "David, he and I used to go ward teaching together."

That was all he said, but it was a warning to me that I have never forgotten, about the effect of dissipation.

A little later, a teacher gave us to read a story about a group of young people sailing down the St. Lawrence River. If any of you can find it I wish you would give it to me. I cannot give you the author, I cannot give you the title, but I can give you the memory that has stayed with me, about those young folks who were drinking and carousing and having a good time in the boat sailing down that noted river. But a man on the shore, recognizing, realizing the dangers ahead of them, cried: "Hello, there, the rapids are below you."

But they ignored his warning, defied him. "We are all right," and continued in their jocularly and their indulgences. And again he cried out: "The rapids are below you," and again they gave no heed to his warning.

Suddenly they found themselves in the rapids. Then they immediately began to row for the shore, but it was too late. I do not remember but just the words of the last paragraph, but cursing, yelling, over the rapids, over the falls they went.

Negative? Yes. But I will tell you there are many in the stream of life who are rowing just that way. I have never forgotten the story. I hope I shall find it again.

And the third was a warning of the danger of unchastity. It was not my father who gave me that, but it was a teacher who spoke to a group of us boys about the danger of impurity, of sexual impurity, getting disease, sexual disease, getting it into the blood and transmitting that disease to innocent offspring.

Later the thought was expressed by one of our American poets in that poem in which a boy says, among other things, he is going to have his fling:

"And I said religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil—
The bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot the bill.

For I saw men everywhere
Hot-footing the road to vice,
And women and preachers smiled on them
So long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life,
And I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That go with a house and a home,
And a brood of girls and boys.

I married a girl with health,
And virtue, and spotless fame;
I gave in exchange my wealth,
And a proud old family name.

And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sick and sated with sin.
My deal with the devil was up
And the last bill handed in."

So he thought.

"We were going to be blessed with a child,
And when in anguish she cried,
With love and fear I was wild
But now I wish he had died.

For the son she bore me was blind,
And crippled and weak and sore,
And the mother was left a wreck—
Aye it was so, she had settled my score.

I said I would have my fling,
And they knew the paths I would go,
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.

Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred,
But not enough of the souls unborn
By the sins of their fathers scarred."

WARN YOUTH OF DANGERS

Modern science has made youth a little more daring, but I will tell you the danger is just as great. Warn, warn youth of the dangers of the flesh, the works of the flesh.

Never have I been more thankful in my life for noble parents. It is great to be well born. Not much preaching but just a hint here and a hint there about pure living, and the saying: "When you start out with girls, you treat that young girl, now, David, as you would have any other boy treat your sister."

The training of the teachers, the teachings they receive, rough boys, seemingly not much attention paid to what they say, but those teachings and warnings remain all through life. "Testify," says the Lord through Joseph Smith "and warn." And when you are warned, warn your neighbor.

TESTIMONY

Brethren, I know as I know I am looking into your faces that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is true, and that He is my Saviour, as real as He was when Thomas said, with bowed head, "My Lord and my God!"

I know that if our young people will only accept the teachings and live the standards that they will be the happiest, most joyous persons in all the world, and I know if they do not, that they will bring sorrow upon themselves and upon their wives and children in the future.

I know that the gospel was restored through the Prophet Joseph Smith, by the Father and the Son, who are as real today in connection with the other world as my loved ones and yours. And as teachers here, we are to let the people know it, and warn these men — and this is not imagination — who, after having lived with their wives and brought into this world four and five and six children, get tired of their wives and seek a divorce, that they are on the road to hell. It is unfair to a woman to leave her that way, just because the man happens to fall in love with some younger woman and feels that the wife is not so beautiful or attractive as she used to be.

Only the other day such an incident came before us. Warn him! Nothing but unhappiness for him and injustice to those children.

Well, brethren, God bless you. God bless the work, the missionaries abroad; protect them from evil. They are in the midst of it. God bless these mission presidents, that they may have influence with the young boys who are getting discouraged, some of them, and bless you parents at home who are sacrificing to send them, and you men of the priesthood and the quorums, that you may gather around those who are seemingly indifferent and win them into quorum activity.

I bear you the testimony that this is God's work, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

The Men of the Tabernacle Choir and congregation sang the hymn: "Do What Is Right."

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

President Smith has requested that I speak next. I rather feel that perhaps, if we were to adjourn now, after the powerful and inspired utterances of President McKay, we would be better off than perhaps to have me try to say something, but obedient to the request of the President I shall do the best I can.

I do pray that the Lord will bless me and that you will be good enough to ask him in my behalf that he will grant the blessing, in order that you may be edified, strengthened, and built up.

Over the last year I have been doing considerable reading of a more intensive kind than I have before done, on the matters I have been reading about, and I have been impressed with certain historical facts to which I wish briefly to allude.

EARLY CHRISTIAN HISTORY

For some reason, which is not clear, either from history or from scriptures, it does not appear that Peter, James and John, who were left as the First Presidency of the primitive church, ever appointed any successors to themselves. The result was what might have been expected. There grew up certain great centers, Alexandria, Rome, Carthage, Caesarea, and so on. As time went on, each of these was presided over by a bishop. They had no central guiding hand, and the result was they began to dispute about doctrine, and about rites and ceremonies. Cults grew up, one cult here, another there. These various units, headed by bishops, drifted off into contrary or divergent directions. They called councils from time to time to settle their disputes. The great council of Nicaea about 325 after Christ was the first great ecumenical council. There they tried to settle certain matters of doctrine.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

There was no unity in the church; there was no unifying direction. They were as lost sheep.

The church moved fairly well while the apostles still lived. Then followed a secondary period when, the apostles having died, there still lived those who had known the apostles, and who had received from them instructions. This kept the church from wandering too far and too fast. Then the third church generation came, and not having the anchorage that was given by the apostles first, and next, by those who had known the apostles, they drifted and drifted rapidly, until by the middle of the third century, they had lost the priesthood, indeed they no longer pretended actually to confer it. Their ordinals merely prayed that the Lord would give the powers, the priesthood powers which Christ had conferred upon his apostles and which they, in turn, had, according to the sacred record, conferred upon a very few individuals.

IMPORTANCE OF UNITY

I have never permitted an opportunity of this kind to go by without speaking on this question of unity. I have said to you brethren, over and over again, and I repeat it tonight, that if we were really united, if we really saw eye to eye, and then would move in unison, there is nothing in the world, in righteousness, that we might not do in accordance with the will of the Lord and not to defeat his purposes. But there comes to us as we get farther-flung in the world, there comes constantly back to the First Presidency, signs that if we did not have the priesthood, if it had been lost to us as it was lost to the primitive church, we would be marching along the same roads that they marched to complete apostasy.

Now brethren, there is only one way to be united, and that is to be united. The Lord has set up amongst us, with our priesthood and with our auxiliaries, as nearly a perfect organization as we mortals, in our present condition, can carry on. Just so soon as we undertake, by ourselves and of our own thought and volition, of our own wisdom, to set up other organizations than those set up by the Presidency of the Church, under the direction of the President of the Church, the presiding High Priest of the Church, just so soon as we undertake to do that then we are on a detour. We are no longer going down the middle of the road. We are on a road that could lead to apostasy.

I think perhaps that even now there are evidences that those in the outlying areas farthest away from the central organization of the Church, are feeling, perhaps, the absence of controls a little more keenly than they who are nearer in; and yet I would like to say here that my observation is that among those who are farther away from us, who do not see us every day, there is a higher regard for the General Authorities than there is among those who are around here. Yet there is that seemingly inevitable drawing away tendency in the remoter areas, to this time in details that leave us still strong. But we must be always alert.

The Lord gave us our free agency, as you know, and we may think and we may talk as we wish, but we may not teach false doctrine for that is no part of free agency. In the spiritual domain false doctrine is the equivalent of libel, and slander in the civil domain. Those things we may not do.

PLANS OF MEN

This is an age, a period, when everybody has a new idea as to what to do to cure the ills of society. There are almost as many plans as there are people, plans usually developed by men of no experience no training, no thought, and the plans gain currency among those who are equally untrained, inexperienced and ill taught.

Amongst us, it is quite a common thing for us to look about and see something that needs to be corrected, and so we start a movement to correct it. We see something that should be done, some opportunity we think we see that has not been embraced, and so we form a plan to meet that opportunity as we see it. I think perhaps I might say that not always have our auxiliary organizations brought themselves under restraint, the restraint of the discipline of doing primarily the things that they were set up to do. But whether that be true or not, it is certainly true that here and there somebody gets an idea of what he ought to do and so starts out to do it.

There was handed to us tonight a plan to satisfy all the needs of the members of a proposed group, from an economic, social, physical, spiritual and educational standpoint. Well, that is quite a program, just to start out with right from scratch. They have several hundred members they say.

THE LORD'S PLAN

Now brethren, the Lord has set up, as I said to begin with, an organization that is as nearly perfect as we mortals can live, and the only safety we shall have will be in following that plan and that program.

I sometimes think that maybe we take to our souls a little more unction than we should over the thought that the Lord has set up his work never more to be thrown down or taken away and given to another people. I believe that as I believe I am looking at you, as I know I am looking at you. But that does not say that all of us are going to be among those who stand firm by the plan which the Lord has given. Let us be sure that we do not get away from the Lord's plan.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

You Elders quorum men, Seventies, High Priests, all of you brethren of the Aaronic priesthood, cling by what the Lord has given to you. There is opportunity for all of the activity that you can possibly participate in and as it is under a divine plan there will be nothing in it that is not profitable for you. Do not go off and try to reform the Church. Let us reform ourselves, and the Church will take care of itself.

DIRECTION OF HOLY GHOST

Sometimes people get to preaching, preaching false doctrines. Sometimes the Elders get to telling their own ideas about what the Gospel is, making their own explanations. The Prophet records that on one occasion a man came to him and was very much surprised when the Prophet told him that a prophet was not always a prophet. He was a prophet only when he spoke with the spirit of prophecy.

On two occasions today that passage of the scripture has been quoted and referred to, which was really directed to Orson Hyde, but it is applicable to all of us, that whatever the servants of the Lord say shall be scripture, the mind of the Lord, the will of the Lord, the voice of the Lord, the power of God unto salvation. Sometimes we overlook the beginning, "what ye say under the direction of the Holy Ghost."

You remember that Paul and Barnabas had a little trouble in their time. One of them at that particular occasion did not have the direction of the Holy Ghost, the inspiration of it. Peter and Paul had their troubles. They were not then both being moved by the Holy Ghost.

The Prophet tells—you will find it in his works—that some of the brethren in the early days got very much interested in the book of revelation, a pregnant source of speculation, and he rebuked them for it.

I would like to urge you brethren to read the scriptures yourselves. We have had some wonderful talks today about reading the Book of Mormon. I subscribe to all of it. And the other books were mentioned at the same time, the Bible, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. But read the scriptures and get your own ideas about them.

In speaking about Brother Hezekiah Brown the Prophet Joseph said he was so happy that men could read and think and speculate; we were not cramped like the sectarians were, but he cautioned the brethren that they should be careful about what they taught. There is only one source on the earth that has any right to change or modify or extend any revelation of the Lord, and that is the President of the Church, the Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, the presiding High Priest. He alone, through the inspiration and revelation of the Lord, can change the revelations already given. All the rest of us can think about them, talk about them, speculate about them, but we cannot change them, and until he speaks the revelations stand as is. We ought not, therefore, to get discouraged because somebody sees a revelation in a different light from the way in which we see it. We are entitled to our opinion; the other man is entitled to his opinion, but the revelation stands until God changes it in the regular way.

APPEAL FOR UNITY

Brethren, I return again to this question of unity. Can we not forget our little troubles, our little disagreements? Can we not unify on the words of the Lord, even as He spoke them; and having unified in our belief, can we not unify ourselves in our observance? I am talking, I know, to brethren who are the stalwarts of the Church, the brethren to whom the Lord looks, and President Smith as the Lord's representative looks, to carry on the work of the Church. You must do it. President Smith cannot be everywhere. And you have done a great job. But we are in perilous times, economic, political and spiritual, and if you will just harken to what the Prophet of the Lord says and be guided by the revelations which God has given through his prophets in ancient times and modern times, all will be well.

I pledge you that I will try, with all my mind and soul and heart, to do the things which our leader wishes us to do. I wish that you brethren, each and all of you would follow me in that pledge, and if we shall do that, we shall be nearer heaven, this great priesthood body of the Church, we shall be nearer heaven than we have yet been in this dispensation.

I bear my testimony that I know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ and the first fruits of the resurrection. I know that the gospel and the Priesthood were restored through the Prophet Joseph. I have the testimony of the Spirit to that and the testimony of the Spirit seems to me far greater than the testimony of the senses.

May God be with all of us, at all times, and may we so live that he can be with us under all circumstances, which means that we live pure lives, that we keep away from sin and the places of sin, and that we go to no place where we might not ask our Heavenly Father to go with us, may we so live that we may be saved and exalted in his presence, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I hope that tonight we have all taken into our souls the instructions that have been given.

We have met here in the name of the Lord, as representatives of the Lord, holding his priesthood. We have been entitled, because of so meeting, to divine guidance. Sometimes there are occasions, and I imagine most of us have had them, when we may feel that there is a better way to do things than the way they are being done, but if we will keep the commandments of the Lord—and when I say the commandments of the Lord I refer to the Ten Commandments, and the other revelations that he has given to the children of men through the prophets—if we will observe those teachings we will not go astray. It is when we fail to keep the commandments of God that we fall into darkness.

I am grateful to be here with you. I was doubtful as to whether I should come out tonight, because I am not as strong as I would like to be. I felt however, that I could not miss being here with this body of men, and as a result I have been edified and delighted.

SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES

I would like to re-emphasize, if it needs emphasis, the suggestion that has already been made: Read the scriptures. That is the advice of the Lord. Are you taking it? It was the Savior who said: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

It does not just say, "Read the scriptures—but, search the scriptures." What does that mean to you? To me, it means prayerfully to investigate what the Lord has said, and in that way, if we are humble we will be entitled to his guidance, and we will not be misled.

Within the last few days I received a letter from a man who was excommunicated from the Church, not because he did what the Lord wanted him to do but because he did what he wanted to do, and then he put the responsibility on some of the other brethren, saying that they had advised him what to do. He had forgotten that before he got into the trouble that caused him to be severed from the Church, one of the General Authorities of the Church advised him not to do the thing that he seemed intent on doing, and just as soon as he did that he was in the dark.

Keep the commandments of the Lord, brethren, and you will not wander away into darkness. There is not any time that you may not kneel down, and if you can honestly say, "Heavenly Father, I have done what you have asked me to do, and what you have directed me to do; what shall I do now?" You will get the answer, and you will not be mistaken. But if you do the things that ought not to be done and get your suggestions from the adversary of all righteousness, you will find yourself wandering in darkness and you may lose the pearl of great price.

RIGHTS OF WIVES

I would like to emphasize tonight something that has been referred to before and that is that men, who have been married to women and have agreed before witnesses that they will keep the commandments of God and live as they should, sometimes are so selfish, so wilful, that they forget that their wives have some rights. I want to say that the priesthood does not give any man a right to abuse his wife. The priesthood does give him a right to be kind, to be faithful, to be honorable, to teach the truth and to teach his children the truth, and when he does that he will not fall away into sin. There never has been a time in the history of the world when we have needed divine guidance more than now.

Reference has been made quite plainly tonight to the fact that the Presidency of the Church, three men, have been called to perform certain duties, and, associated with them, other men have been called to assist in carrying out the program of the Church. When these three men and the others who have been called to the Quorum of the Twelve, and those who have been called into the other presiding positions among the General Authorities, are united, we need not be worried about what will happen to the Church. All men and all women have a right to inquire of their bishop, of their stake presidency and high council with regard to matters in the Church. They have a right to inquire and if they are not satisfied they have the privilege then of going beyond these men, but not very often would that be necessary if the man who is asking were in the line of his duty. So let us not forget, brethren, that we have had conferred upon us a wonderful gift, divine authority, that comes from our Heavenly Father. That is a priceless gift bestowed by the Lord. It is not like a recommendation from any other organization. It means that if we are living as we should when that authority of the priesthood is conferred upon us, we are entitled to the inspiration of the Almighty, and we will have it if we keep his commandments. So let us have our homes in order, have family prayers and ask a blessing upon the food. Let us try to learn what the Lord would have us do, not what we would like to do or somebody else would like to have us do.

ACCEPTANCE OF COUNSEL

As I stand here now I can think of a number of men that have gone to the leadership of the Church for advice and if they had taken it they would be in the Church now, but they are out. Those to whom they went had no ulterior motives; those who gave the advice when it was asked had only the desire to bless the one who asked for it, but it was contrary to the ambition and desire of the individual, and because he was already in sin, he could not understand the counsel of the good man who unselfishly advised him what he should do.

This world is in a pitiable condition. There are hundreds of thousands of people who do not even believe in God, that is, in the God of this world, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the Father of Jesus Christ, our Lord. They are in the dark. We cannot expect them to find the way of happiness until they obtain the light, and it devolves upon this great body of priesthood and those who are associated in the various stakes and wards and missions of the Church, holding the priesthood, to let our light so shine that others seeing that we are indeed servants of the Lord will be constrained to accept the Gospel and conform their lives to the truth.

Again let me plead with you, my brethren, be patient with your children. Remember that one of the greatest gifts that comes to you in life is the family that you may enjoy if you have a right to the priesthood and have received it.

INFLUENCE OF PRAYER

We will not always see alike; men will not always reason as their wives do and vice versa, but if you will pray together, with a real desire to be united, I can say to you, you will agree on all important matters.

I noticed a number of months ago up on South Temple Street this legend on a billboard: "The family that prays together stays together." I do not know who placed it there, but I want to say that if you will think about it for a moment you will know that it is true. I admonish you to pray together to the Lord, and I do not mean by that to just say prayers, I do not mean to be a phonograph and repeat something over and over again, but open your souls to the Lord as husbands and fathers in your home, and have your wives and your children join you. Have them participate. There then comes into the home an influence that you can feel when you go there. It has been a great blessing to me to be permitted to travel throughout this Church and enter the humble homes of those who dwell in them, who keep the commandments of the Lord, and to partake of the influences that I find there.

We are not any of us becoming any younger. A good many of us have passed the meridian of life. If we are going to make any corrections, any adjustments, and most of us need to make adjustments, the time to do it is now, not put it off for the future.

GRATITUDE FOR BISHOPS

I would like to urge that we go to our bishops and thank them for their faithfulness and their devotion to us. I live in a ward where we have three of the finest men in the world in the bishopric, wonderful, humble, prayerful men. They do not have any desire to do anything in that ward except to bless the people, and I suppose you will find that in all the wards of the Church, with few exceptions.

Wednesday, April 6Third Day

When we receive the priesthood, when we receive ordinations, when we are set apart to perform certain duties in the Church, by the authority of our Heavenly Father, we should realize that it is a great and wonderful blessing, and that it carries with it a tremendous responsibility. We should not treat it lightly.

We have been together two days. We have had a happy time. Other meetings will be held in this conference before it is concluded, and if we will attend those meetings with a prayer in our heart to have the Spirit of the Lord, to be guided, inspired by him in our thinking, not only in teaching but in being taught, when the conference closes we may go to our homes and take with us the inspiration of the Almighty. We can set our homes in order and we can help to keep our wards and stakes in order—but it will take work. It will take prayerful, thoughtful work.

REPENTANCE NEEDED

There are conditions in the Church that need to be repented of. Reference has been made in this conference to the fact that the sale of liquor is being legalized. Years ago the President of the Church stood in this pulpit and in a general conference and plead with the people not to abandon the Volstead Act. Legislation had been enacted making it illegal to sell liquor or to buy liquor. The Lord has advised us not to use strong drinks, and every Latter-day Saint should pay attention to the advice of our Heavenly Father in regard to that matter. Let me plead with you, search the Word of Wisdom prayerfully. Do not just read it; search it prayerfully. Discover what our Heavenly Father gave it for. He gave it to us with a promise of longer life and happiness, not if we fail to observe it, but if we observe it. Read the Word of Wisdom in the presence of your families and set the example. If we will do that Zion will continue to grow. If we will do that the Church of the Lamb of God will continue to become a power for good in the world.

It is amazing to me how many great and influential men there are in our own country who do not belong to the Church—I do not know whether they belong to any church or not—but who in their correspondence with the headquarters of the Church indicate how pleased they are at what we stand for, and we stand, I hope, always, for what the Lord would have us stand.

BLESSINGS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

Brethren, it is a favor from the Lord to receive the priesthood;

it is a great privilege to represent our Heavenly Father. It is a blessing that, if we are faithful, will open the doors of the celestial kingdom and give us a place there to live throughout the ages of eternity. Do not trifle with this priceless blessing.

Bishops, let me plead with you, when you ordain young men deacons, teachers, or priests, see to it that they have it made plain to them that with that gift that comes from our Heavenly Father, there is a responsibility. If you will do that, they will grow up to be the protectors of the weaker sex, and there will be less sorrow and distress because of looseness of habits among the sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father in the communities in which we live.

The Lord wants us to be happy. That is why he gave us the gospel of Jesus Christ. That is why he conferred the priesthood upon us. He wants us to have joy. That is why he organized this Church and set in it the various offices, and all these things are in order. As has been referred to tonight, by the other brethren, if you will follow the leadership of the Lord, and those whom the Lord sustains, you will not fall away into darkness, lose the light, transgress the laws of God, and forfeit your privileges that he is so anxious that all of us should enjoy.

That is my feeling tonight, brethren. I am grateful to be here. I am thankful when I have the privilege of shaking your hands, looking into your faces, and I am happy when I see you walking as the Lord would have you walk, following his advice and counsel. We will all be happy if we do that, and the world will be enriched, and the missions that have already been opened will continue to function until the people have been warned and the countries that have not yet been warned may have an opportunity yet to be taught the gospel of Jesus Christ. Among those that have not been warned are the most populous nations in the world today. But it is our responsibility to find ways and means to carry the message of life and salvation to every nation.

Thank you, brethren, for your love and for your fellowship, for your kindness and helpfulness to me and my associates who are here upon this stand. We love you. We are grateful to you and for you, and I pray that every one of us will so live that when the time comes for us to go hence and the record is opened of our lives, it will disclose the fact that we have desired with all our hearts to be what God would have us be, and we have been guided by him in paths of peace and happiness and righteousness, and when the time comes that this earth shall be cleansed and purified by fire and it becomes the celestial kingdom—that is what it will be, brethren—when that time comes I pray that we will all have so lived that we will find our names recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life, entitling us to membership here forever in the companionship of our wives and our children, and all that are dear to us, not one missing, and I ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Men of the Tabernacle Choir sang: "The Lord Bless You And Keep You."

The benediction was offered by President Golden L. Woolf of the East Provo Stake.

---

The congregational singing of the Conference was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Sunday sessions and furnished the choral music for those sessions. J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Choir.

The choral singing for the Monday morning and afternoon sessions was by the Ricks College Choir, under the leadership of Elder Alma Dittmer.

The Brigham Young University Mixed Chorus, Elder Franklin Madsen, Conductor, furnished the Choir singing for the Wednesday morning and afternoon meetings.

At the General Priesthood meeting the choral music was furnished by the Men of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conductor.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:10, as also the music for the Church of the Air broadcast, was by the Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir and Organ, J. Spencer Cornwall, conductor of the Choir, Frank W. Asper at the organ, the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper, and Roy M. Darley.

---

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.

Joseph Anderson,
Clerk of the Conference.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

The Church of the Air broadcast was presented Sunday morning, April 3, from 8:30 to 9:00 over radio station KSL and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall, furnished the music for the service, with Dr. Frank W. Asper at the organ. Richard L. Evans was the announcer.

The Choir sang the anthem, "My Redeemer Lives"—Gates.

Elder Ezra Taft Benson of the Council of the Twelve was the speaker, his subject being "Our Homes—Divinely Ordained."

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Americans, from the very inception of our nation, have been lovers of home. It has been our primary educational institution and the center of economic, social, and cultural interest. Our homes have been the bulwark of the nation and the most fundamental institution of society. What fond memories and emotions have surged up in our hearts at the mere mention of home, family, parents, children, brothers, and sisters! Some of the sweetest, most soul-satisfying impressions and experiences of life are associated with home and family ties.

THE AMERICAN HOME

But all is not well with this most basic institution, the American home. In fact, it is in grave danger, if not in deadly peril. There is convincing evidence that a creeping rot of moral disintegration is eating into the very vitals of this temple of American civilization. It gives cause for serious concern.

Marriage, the home, and family are sacred institutions. They are not man-made, but have been established by a kind Providence for the blessing of his children. In the record of that first marriage recorded in Genesis, the Lord makes four significant pronouncements: first, that it is not good for man to be alone; second, that woman was created to be a help meet for man; third, that they twain should be one flesh; and fourth, that man should leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife.

Later, as though to re-enforce the earlier statement, the Lord said:

... What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder (Matthew 19:6);

also

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else. (D. & C. 42:22.)

Children are likewise counseled in holy writ in their duty to parents. Paul the Apostle wrote:

Sunday, April 3

First Day

Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

Honour thy father and mother; (which is the first commandment with promise).

That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth. (Ephesians 6:1-3.)

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS

Regarding the divinely appointed responsibility of parents, the sobering counsel is given that

... they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord. . . . And . . . inasmuch as parents . . . teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, the Son of the living God, . . . and the gift of the Holy Ghost . . . the sin be upon the heads of the parents. (D. & C. 68:28, 25.)

These and other similar scriptures make crystal clear the divine origin of marriage, the home, and family, the heaven-imposed responsibilities resting upon the parents and the penalties imposed when laws governing these hallowed institutions are disregarded.

History reveals that the early pioneers of America recognized and honored these obligations. They were blessed in their homes and families for so doing. Does our record today merit like blessings? If we fail to accept these obligations and to keep the American home morally and spiritually sound, the very future of the nation will be in jeopardy. The choice is ours as parents and citizens.

WEAKENING INFLUENCES

The facts are not reassuring as we soberly appraise them. Far-reaching changes, resulting from industrialization, concentration of populations, commercialization of recreation, and other activities once performed in the home, all tend to lead away from home associations.

Accompanying these changes, and in some measure resulting from them, has been a marked increase in pleasure seeking; the mad rush for money and other material things; the unwarranted indulgence of personal gratifications; the insidious inroads of tobacco, liquor, gambling, and many other tendencies in our complex modern civilization. All these have exerted a pulling power away from the home and have weakened its structure.

There seems to be a tendency for many married people to become soft and to seek a life filled with ease and the pleasures of the moment. They invite the pleasure of conjugality but often refuse to shoulder the responsibility of parenthood. Reliable reports indicate that approximately forty percent of the married women have no children whatever or only one child.

DIVORCE RECORD

The divorce record continues upward at an alarming rate. Fifty years ago there was a ratio of one divorce to every sixteen marriages; by 1946, one to every three. In some American cities divorces nearly equal marriages. Reports show that two-thirds of those seeking divorces have no children.

Frequently in homes where no formal divorce has occurred, there is unhappiness due to infidelity and lack of harmony and filial affection. It is largely from such broken, bad, and neglected homes that our youthful delinquents come. According to J. Edgar Hoover, director of the F.B.I., "The actions of the majority of them were—and are—directly related to the conduct of their parents." Yes, crime begins at home.

In view of these and other well-known but distressing facts, what should be done? Can we safeguard the home and stabilize family life? Can the deterioration in home life be checked and corrected? If not, what is our future?

No nation can rise above its homes. The church, the school, and even the nation, stand helpless before a weakened and degraded home, in building character. The good home is the rock foundation—the cornerstone of civilization. If this, our nation, is to endure, the home must be safeguarded, strengthened, and restored to its rightful importance.

UNCHASTITY

To do so, we must start with youth—our boys and girls. They must know that the foundation of a happy home is laid during premarital days. Their relationships should be on a happy but high plane. There is grave danger in loose and promiscuous relations of young people. The harmful effects of unseemly familiarities are carried over into married life and tend to weaken the structure of the home. Unchastity is the most damning of all evils, while moral purity is one of the greatest bulwarks of successful homemaking. Happy and successful homes cannot be built on immorality.

May I, as a member of a large family of children and a grateful father of six, say to the young men and women of America, keep the fountains of life pure. Guard your virtue as you would your lives. Reserve for the marriage relationship the sweet and soul-satisfying intimacies of life. The God of heaven, who instituted the marriage covenant, so intended. He has commanded purity of life and a single standard for men and women. If you fail as young people properly to restrain yourselves, you will pay the penalty in heartache, disappointment, and loss of self-respect. Do not reach out too eagerly for the excitements and thrills of life or they will turn to ashes in your hands. They will come in their own due time in the sacred bonds of marriage. Youthful sweethearts, be true to God's holy laws. Remember, they cannot be broken with impunity. If you would be happy and successful in your early association, courtship, and homebuilding, conform your lives to the eternal laws of heaven. There is no other way.

IMPORTANCE OF EXAMPLE

As parents, what is our attitude regarding the sacred obligations of parenthood? One of the two major purposes of marriage is children. "Multiply and replenish the earth" (Genesis 1:28) was among the earliest commandments given of the Lord. Nations which refuse to accept this God-given obligation, sink into oblivion. Will our sons and daughters want children because of our attitude and example?

Marriage, designed to be an eternal covenant, is the most glorious and most exalting principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ. No ordinance is of more importance and none more sacred and more necessary to the eternal joy of man. Faithfulness to the marriage covenant brings the fullest joy here and glorious rewards hereafter. The abuse of this sacred ordinance despoils the lives of individuals, wrecks the basic institution of the home, and causes the downfall of nations.

The future homes of America will be fortified as parents uphold the Christian virtues before their children. If parents love and respect each other, and if in their sacred partnership there are full support and unquestioned fidelity, these essentials will be translated into the homes of tomorrow. Conversely, if there are bickering, quarreling, and lack of harmony at home, and participation in the dangerous practice of flirtations with others when away, then the homes of tomorrow will be weakened thereby.

Parenthood carries with it peculiar responsibilities. If these are accepted without quibbling, while enthroning motherhood as the highest calling of women, our children—the parents of tomorrow—will be properly impressed and encouraged in the establishment of like homes.

FAMILY PRAYER

The homes of America need also the blessings which come from daily communion with God. Devotion in the home, which has been such an anchor to youth and parents alike, has all but vanished. A few generations ago it was a common practice. Then families knelt together in prayer; the scriptures were read aloud; and households joined in the singing of church hymns. This practice, if revived, would contribute much to the strength of the home and the nation. The differences and irritations of the day melt away as families approach the throne of heaven together. Unity increases. The ties of love and affection are re-enforced and the peace of heaven enters.

In such homes secret prayers are said night and morning by members of the household. Individual and family problems are approached with confidence after invoking the favor of heaven. Young people participating in such a family devotional have hearts freed from evil intent as they leave for an evening of entertainment.

These will be the restraining influence in the group when gilded temptations arise. Parents who surround their children with the refining influence of daily devotion are making their contribution to the safeguarding of the American home.

MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING

America's homes need, also, the stabilizing influence of a closer relationship between parents and children. Every boy and girl needs the safeguard which an intimate association with mother or father will provide. The failure of parents and children to understand each other weakens the framework of the home. This relationship must be built upon love and mutual confidence. Then when the problems of life arise, father and mother will be the first sought for counsel. Herein is safety.

Such an atmosphere can be created as parents plan for recreation and diversion together with their children. An evening at home in wholesome activity; a picnic in the mountains or nearby park; or a project for fathers and sons and mothers and daughters—these will all tend to increase filial affection and love in the home, and strengthen parent-children relations. Time thus spent yields big dividends. Love at home and obedience to parents increase as the bonds of home are made secure.

Parents in this close association have no difficulty teaching virtue, honesty, industry, the principles basic to our American way of life and the dangers of foreign philosophies and ideologies. Effective parental guidance—the greatest need of the home—is here provided to the profit of the individual, the home, the community, and the nation.

PRESERVATION OF HOMES

Herein, then, lies our path of safety. Our homes must become bulwarks of strength through enthroning righteousness and bringing into them the peace, unity, and unselfishness engendered by personal purity, unquestioned fidelity, and simple family devotion. Parents must accept marriage as a divine institution, and honor parenthood. Children must be inspired by precept and example in preparation for marriage, to guard against unchastity as against a loathsome disease, and to practice the other fundamental Christian virtues. Love and mutual confidence must be safeguarded to strengthen parent-children relationships. Home must become the abiding place of the Spirit of God because the pure in heart dwell therein.

Yes, America's homes, if this great nation is to endure, must be fortified and preserved. They must be morally and spiritually sound. There can be no satisfactory substitute for the home. Its foundation is as ancient as the world. Its mission has been God-ordained.

May God grant that the builders of American homes may have the courage and wisdom to fulfil faithfully their divine obligations, to inspire young people with a conviction of the importance of these God-ordained institutions of marriage, the home, and family, that the marriages of our boys and girls may be consummated under a spiritual influence in the presence of friends and loved ones, thereby laying a safe foundation for their homes of tomorrow.

Sunday, April 3First Day

And so today, in this the greatest of all nations, in this land choice above all others, we pay humble tribute to the home, for a modern prophet declares,

. . . that someday the divinely ordained home is to be the very foundation of the kingdom of God.

May a kind Providence bless the homes of America, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir then sang an anthem, "He Watching Over Israel"—Mendelssohn.

The service was concluded by the Choir singing the hymn, "The Morning Breaks"—Careless.

The One Hundred Twentieth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

The One Hundred Twentieth Semi Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 30 and October 1 and 2, 1949.

General sessions of the Conference were held at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, and the General Priesthood meeting convened in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, October 1, at 7:00.

The Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, which was presented over KSL and through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting Company's system, throughout the United States, on Sunday morning at 9:30 is also made a part of this report.

The full services were broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, and by arrangement through KSL were broadcast over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KJM at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise. The proceedings of the Saturday morning session were also broadcast by delayed transcription over KTXO at Grand Junction, Colorado and KTYL at Mesa, Arizona.

For the first time in the history of the Church, the sessions of the Conference were broadcast by television over the Salt Lake area and certain areas adjacent thereto, this broadcast was over the television station of KSL, operating under channel 5.

Many who could not find accommodation in the Tabernacle congregated in the Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle where they were able by means of television to see and hear the speakers as well as those who presented musical numbers. Large numbers of others who could not find seats in either of these buildings listened to the services by means of amplifying equipment that had been installed upon the grounds.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided at each of the general sessions, excepting the Saturday morning meeting and the General Priesthood meeting, during which meetings he rested at home.

FIRST DAY

MORNING MEETING

The Conference commenced Friday morning, September 30, 1949, the first session beginning at 10:00 a.m.

The Tabernacle was crowded with people, and many who could not find seats in the Tabernacle were accommodated in the Assembly Hall immediately south of the Tabernacle, where they could see and hear the services by means of television.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services.

The choir music for this meeting was furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo Stakes, with Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

*Elder Thomas E. McKay absent, convalescing from illness.

**Elder Alma Sonne presiding over the European Mission.

***Elder S. Dilworth Young presiding over the New England Mission.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

We greet you this morning and hope you are all comfortable. We will open our services, waiting upon our Heavenly Father for his blessings.

This is the opening session of the 120th Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is convening in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Of the General Authorities all are present except Elder Alma Sonne, one of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; Elder Thomas E. McKay, also of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is at home convalescing by direction of his physician; President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy is in New England in charge of that mission.

Elder Joseph Anderson is the clerk of the conference.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over the loud-speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the conference will be seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way. This full service will be broadcast over station KSL, Salt Lake City, as also the services this afternoon at 2:00 p.m., Saturday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., and Sunday at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. By arrangement through KSL these same sessions will be broadcast over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KJM at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise.

I am also pleased to announce that for the first time in the history of the Church, sessions of this conference will be broadcast upon the air by television over the Salt Lake area and certain areas adjacent thereto. The broadcast will be over the television station of KSL which operates under channel 5 as authorized by the Federal Communications Commission.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir singing during today's sessions of the conference will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo stakes, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin this morning's session by the Singing Mothers singing, "Send Forth Thy Spirit."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Octave W. Ursenbach of the Lethbridge Stake, Canada.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang the hymn, "Send Forth Thy Spirit."

The opening prayer was offered by President Octave W. Ursenbach of the Lethbridge Stake.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang, "Open Our Eyes."

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

The use of the radio has made it desirable to make some announcements that we did not need to make when everybody who came into the building could see and hear. Not only is this building now filled to capacity, but there are also thousands of people listening in on the outside. Many are witnessing what you are this morning by television.

A WONDERFUL AGE

We live in a wonderful age. I wonder if we appreciate what it is to live today with all the advantages gained in the nearly six thousand years since our first parents came into the world. Here we are in the tops of these everlasting hills, in this building today that was erected when the people were very poor and in distress. The building itself yet unsurpassed in all the world as a house of worship where one's voice may be heard by so many people.

During the last few weeks we have had many visitors here, some of them of national prominence, some of international prominence. They have come into this structure that our forbears prepared; they have looked around; and they have said, "This is unlike anything I have seen."

Some of them have remarked, "There is an influence here that is different." So there should be. This house is the Lord's house. It was dedicated to him by the people after they had struggled to prepare it. It was presented to him after it had been fully paid for, and since that time all people who have come into this house have come here as the guests of our Heavenly Father.

I say all people. Sometimes I have had individuals interrogate me in regard to whether those who are not members of the Church would be permitted to come here. I have been pleased to answer them, "All of our Father's children are welcome in his house."

Today, we are met not just as a matter of curiosity. We have not met just because it is customary. I hope we have come here with the spirit of worship, with a desire that whatever is said here may be inspired by our Heavenly Father.

"COME AND SEE"

Our sisters have sung beautifully for us this morning. The great organ has been their accompaniment. We who have come to worship must now think seriously of the purpose of life because this world is in a pitiable condition. Notwithstanding the fact that our Heavenly Father down through the ages has been counseling and advising his children through men that he raised up for that purpose, prophets of God, yet there has been controversy. Even in the days of the Savior, among his own associates, there was controversy. People have been suspicious of one another. They have not believed what they have heard, and they have not been willing to do as Philip, one of the disciples of the Savior, recommended to Nathanael who was visiting with him. Philip said, "The Lord has come."

And he described him and Nathanael asked, "Where did he come from?"

And Philip answered, "Why, he came from Nazareth." And then the good man said, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Philip said, "Come and see." (See John 1:43-46.)

Nathanael had been taught to believe that no good could come from Nazareth, and yet he was the man whom the Savior later referred to as an Israelite without guile—a good man, but deceived because of the stories that he had heard.

But when he once learned, when he had accepted the invitation of the disciples to "Come and see," he came to see.

We have had great joy under the influence of His Spirit. We would like everybody to enjoy that blessing, and so when they have asked, "What kind of people are these here?" our answer has been, "Come and see." This morning we are here as children of our Heavenly Father—members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and others, all welcome to his house, all guests of the Lord. And we ought to have a good time.

Just think of our privileges and our blessings. Think down through the ages of the multitudes of wars and destructions that have wiped people out in many parts of the world and entirely obliterated nations, and yet for some reason or another there are many good people who, like Nathanael, cannot believe the truth.

Someone has said of the people of the world that they would rather believe a lie and be damned than accept the truth. That is rather a severe statement, but I think perhaps it will bear acceptance as fact. There is nothing in the world more deleterious or harmful to the human family than hatred, prejudice, suspicion, and the attitude that some people have toward their fellows, of unkindness.

TWO INFLUENCES

The spirit of the adversary is the spirit of destruction. There are two influences in the world. The one is the influence of our Heavenly Father and the other is the influence of Satan. We can take our choice which territory we want to live in, that of our Heavenly Father or that of Satan.

I have many times repeated what my grandfather said. He, too, talked from this stand, and it was he who gave me his name. In advising his family he said, "There is a line of demarcation, well defined. On one side of the line is the Lord's territory. On the other side of the line is the devil's territory." And he said, "If you will stay on the Lord's side of the line, you are perfectly safe, because the adversary of all righteousness can not cross that line."

What does that mean? It means to me that those who are living righteous lives, keeping all of the commandments of our Heavenly Father are perfectly safe, but not those who trifle with his advice and counsel.

TEN COMMANDMENTS

The Ten Commandments are just as necessary for us to observe today as they were by Israel when they were given to Moses in the wilderness. If the people of this world were keeping the Ten Commandments, honoring them, there would be no war. There would be no sorrows and distresses such as afflict mankind, but because there are so many who cannot put themselves in a frame of mind to live righteous lives, they are in confusion and they are in distress.

This building, as I say, was dedicated to the Lord. Some people have criticized in their minds that it has been open to other faiths, to other churches, to people with other beliefs who had a message, as they felt, for us. I am sure that if you had lived in the days of Jesus of Nazareth and followed him, as many people did, through the fields and through the country, you would have found many of them, a majority of them, were not believers in his mission until they were touched by his spirit, and then they became disciples.

They were welcome, and so I say all our Father's children are welcome here, and we hope that when they come they will do so with a receptive mind, and with a prayer in their hearts such as was offered this morning by our brother from Canada. [President Octave W. Ursenbach of Lethbridge Stake.]

A SICK WORLD

We are living in a sick world, in a time when, as we read in the scriptures, the wisdom of the wise shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. That is the condition of the world today. The leaders of the nations—many of them—desire to do the thing that will benefit their nation or the group they belong to, but selfishness in many cases characterizes their conduct, and the result is that instead of peace we have sorrow and distress.

There is only one way. We can legislate until doomsday but that will not make men righteous. It will be necessary for people who are in the dark to repent of their sins, correct their lives, and live in such a righteous way that they can enjoy the spirit of our Heavenly Father.

Think of the beautiful prayer that was offered by Jesus of Nazareth, who gave his life for us, who represented a great race of people who were despised by other races, and who came into the world to bring a blessing. When he was asked, "Teach us to pray," what a beautiful simple prayer he gave. Anybody could repeat it, and if they repeat it with their hearts in tune with the Spirit of the Lord, they can feel the influence that comes from it.

It was not very long after that until he was cruelly murdered, as have been the prophets of God almost from the beginning. The fact remains that all this time our Heavenly Father has had upon the earth men and women who are righteous, who are seeking to do his will and keep his commandments.

GOSPEL MESSAGE

Many of you here today are either from foreign lands or the descendants of those who came from foreign lands. Many of you or your forebears have heard the gospel as it has been taught by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints during a little over a hundred years. Sometimes you have heard it on the street where there was a humble missionary, teaching what the Lord had called him to teach.

There was something that touched the hearts of those who heard. I have had experiences in the mission field. I have seen groups of people stand and listen to a humble missionary explain the purpose of life and talk to the people and encourage them to repent of their sins, and I have sometimes heard people say, "I have never before felt an influence like I feel while I hear that man talk."

I take this occasion to express my appreciation for the opportunity of being here, for the privilege of associating with such men and women as are present this morning. I am grateful for the privilege that came to me of being reared in this part of the world under a government that God himself said was prepared by men that he raised up for that very purpose. I refer to the Constitution of the United States.

I am grateful for my blessings—all of them—and thank you, my brethren and sisters, who from day to day and from year to year as I have gone through life, have encouraged me to go on and represent, as I might, the desires of our Heavenly Father in my own life, that I might receive many blessings.

There is a law irrevocably decreed in heaven from before the foundation of this world upon which every blessing is predicated, and unless we observe that law, we cannot enjoy the blessing. The Lord has told us that. If people disagree with us, if our Father's other children do not believe the gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed in this latter day to the Prophet Joseph Smith, that ought not to incur our displeasure. It ought to enlist our sympathy, because if we know, as Philip knew when he testified of the man who came from Nazareth, we could invite our friends to come and see. If we are just as sure as that, we will let our light so shine that others, seeing our good works, will be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven.

ACCEPTANCE OF TRUTH

I have traveled much in the world, approximately a million miles, advocating the gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed in this latter day. I have found good people everywhere, wonderful people, kind and friendly, but until they received an understanding of the truth and conformed their lives to the teachings of our Heavenly Father, they were not taking advantage of all their opportunities, and when that time came and they accepted the truth, they added to what they possessed before.

When we go into the world and talk to our Father's other children, we do not ask them to give up any truth that they have. We do not ask them to surrender what they have believed, if it is true.

At the present time we have approximately five thousand missionaries traveling among the nations of the earth who are saying to our Father's other children, "Come and see. Keep all the good that you have. Let us sit down with you and add to what you already possess for your own happiness and for your own good, and without money and without price."

That is the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and I assure you I am grateful for the knowledge that I have that it is the truth. It has given me comfort and satisfaction, and I praise his name who is the Author of our being, that we are permitted to be his guests in his house today.

BLESSINGS OF GOSPEL

This morning there is peace and quiet all around us, and yet in many parts of the world there are distress and anguish, and threat of war—disturbances of all kinds. Many people have come out of the world for the gospel's sake and come to the valleys of these mountains in response to the promise,

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matt. 6:33.)

I bear witness to you that that has been realized by the faithful men and women who have come into this part of the world for the gospel's sake.

I pray that during this conference we may rejoice together, that we may feel the influence that makes us happy when we possess it. And when the conference meetings have been finished, and we go to our various homes, I pray that we will have felt that we have been fed the bread of life, that we may live as our Heavenly Father has desired us to live, and devote our time as he has expected us to do, and then as real Christians, as real sons and daughters of the Living God, let us reach out and try to touch those who have not yet received the blessings that we have received, and offer them an opportunity to enjoy what we appreciate.

TESTIMONY

This is the work of the Lord. This is the Church of Jesus Christ, which name was given to it by our Heavenly Father. I do not say that boastfully. I hope no one here this morning will feel that I am arrogant because of my membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I have no such feeling, but I have a feeling of humility, of gratitude, of thanksgiving for the companionship of such men and women as are here, and men and women in the world whom I have traveled with and associated with during these many years, many of whom have not been able to understand the gospel of Jesus Christ. I hope for their sakes and for the sake of those they love that they will eventually receive that blessing, and it will have to come, if it ever does, from the Author of our being through the inspiration of his Spirit.

Again I say, this is our Father's work. This is the Church of the Lamb of God. We who know that have a responsibility that no other people in the world have, and if we will be righteous in our lives, having our own homes and our own lives in order, the spirit of our Heavenly Father will be with us always. People will rejoice in our companionship, and when we go to the other side, we will find our names enrolled in the Lamb's Book of Life, and that will entitle us to an eternal inheritance in the celestial kingdom, and this earth will be that kingdom. I bear you witness of it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

ELDER ELDRED G. SMITH

Patriarch to the Church

There is one advantage in being called on early. I can assure you I will enjoy this conference more than any I have enjoyed before, and I hope that I will have your faith and prayers with me while I stand before you because I assure you I need them.

It is a very inspiring sight to look over this audience, and it is also a frightening feeling not only to see all these people and have them watching me and sensing that responsibility, and using your time, but also adding to it all the people who are listening, as President Smith has announced, through the broadcasting systems, and through television. No one knows how many thousands there are there—I assure you I sense the responsibility of the time I use here and hope I have your faith and prayers in my behalf in helping me to say those things which will be of benefit.

GOAL OF PERFECTION

It has been the goal of all who are striving to do the will of the Lord to accomplish the request of the Savior in his Sermon on the Mount:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.)

This is rather a large order, is it not? It would seem almost impossible to attain. We are only human. And certainly, to err is human. The conflicting forces of good and evil in the world, and our free agency to choose what course we will, make it very hard to do what is right all the time.

LAW OF REPENTANCE

God has given us commandments and instructions and shown us the way, and it is for us to follow. He knows we will step aside at times, so he has given us the law of repentance. Repentance is not only sorrow for our sins, but also turning aside and exerting ourselves to the utmost to make retribution.

There are four kinds of people in the world. There is the kind that does not know when things are wrong, and the kind that knows when things are wrong but does not care. There is the kind that knows when things are wrong and does care, but does not care enough to make them right. And there is the fourth kind that knows when things are wrong and strives intelligently to make them right and to keep them right. Those are the people who know how to progress.

We must be aware of our sins and repent every day of our lives if we would strive for perfection. Repentance is not only for some big sin or for our past sins before we are baptized—it is also regretting every slip we make and honestly striving to do better.

The Lord in his wisdom has divided our time into daylight and darkness. With the dawning of each new day comes a new chance to improve upon the mistakes of yesterday. Let us call upon the Lord for help. Every morning and throughout the day we should pray for strength to do his will. We need it, for it is the little, trivial daily trials that are the hardest to bear serenely. It is the seeming little sins which we scarcely recognize that are the hardest to overcome. Pray for strength, then, constantly, to be kind, honest, charitable; and each night let us pray for forgiveness of the sins we have committed, repent and try harder the next day to do better.

OVERCOMING EVIL

There is an old saying, "There is nothing noble in being superior to some other man. The true nobility is in being superior to your previous self." Without opposition there would be no progress, for it is only as we overcome that we develop strength.

As the steel which is heated and quenched becomes much stronger and more valuable, as a result of that tempering, so do we become stronger and more valuable as we overcome our sins, be they great or small. Each one has his trials to go through, and they all seem to be different. In the process of this tempering of the soul of man, we learn one great principle among many others: the need for repentance. It is this spirit of repentance the Lord requests as a prerequisite to baptism, that through the act of repentance man may start on the road to perfection and receive baptism and the Holy Ghost. But repentance does not stop there. That is the beginning of progress; and as soon as repentance stops, progress stops.

If we are to become perfect, we must constantly overcome the powers of evil. We find the powers of evil on every hand, every day. We learn to combat them in earliest childhood. We are taught by our parents to do good and avoid evil. We are taught to distinguish to some degree between good and evil. We are taught the law of repentance by correcting things that are wrong. Those teachings by mother and father are most enduring, and many great men accredit their success to those early teachings.

Parents, there is the challenge to us. Can we give our children the right start in life? There is also the challenge to the rest of us. Can we so live to be true and faithful to the teachings in righteousness given to us by our parents? Can we be more like the "lonesome pine" seen so often on the uppermost levels of these beautiful mountains of ours—this pine which stands alone, bending and swaying in the wind? These gallant timbers are known to naturalists as "limber pine," so named because of their resiliency, which enables them to ride through the heavy storms that rage around them on occasions. You can tie their branches in knots without breaking the bark. When untied, the branches snap back into their original position.

RESILIENCY NEEDED

We see, in their survival, not strength alone, but victory in their ability to spring erect again, after bending to the gale's fury. Resiliency is an important factor in the goal of perfection. The winds of life may bend us, but if we have resiliency of spirit, they cannot break us. To straighten again courageously after our heads have been bowed in defeat, disappointment, and suffering, is the supreme test of character. Such people live on the mountaintops of life and are on the road to perfection.

There are many who have bowed to disappointment or criticism or for some other such reason have stopped their progress in the priesthood, and have lacked the resiliency to rise to the occasion and, in spite of opposition, continue to progress. Can you acknowledge your mistakes and intelligently try to correct them? Can you also make allowances for others' weaknesses and give them the opportunity to make retribution?

PROCRASTINATION

There is one important thing to remember. As the time of repentance is procrastinated, the ability to repent grows weaker. Neglect of opportunity in holy things brings a forfeit of the chance.

From the Book of Mormon in the Book of Alma we read:

Ye cannot say, when ye are brought to that awful crisis, that I will repent, that I will return to my God. Nay, ye cannot say this; for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world.

For behold, if ye have procrastinated the day of your repentance even until death, behold, ye have become subjected to the spirit of the devil, and he doth seal you his; therefore, the Spirit of the Lord hath withdrawn from you, and hath no place in you, and the devil hath all power over you; and this is the final state of the wicked. (Alma 34:34-35.)

TEACHINGS OF CONFERENCE

May the Lord bless us to be able always to keep his commandments to the best of our ability. And I bless you, my brothers and sisters, with a strength of memory sufficient to take home with you the spirit and teachings of this conference that you may not be forgetful of the kernels of truth and light, and that you may not be so burdened with the numerous teachings of this conference, that you will lose sight of the important things, and that you will remember them and put them into practice and teach them to the many hundreds of our members who are not able to attend this conference.

I bless you, my brethren and sisters, that you may be saints in very deed, through your faithfulness and your devotion to the teachings which are given in this conference, and may God be with us all, that we may ever honor and glorify him. May God be ever honored and glorified for his manifold mercies unto us, his children, I pray through Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER LEVI EDGAR YOUNG

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I wish I might say something to the missionaries of the Church that would be helpful in their work in teaching the gospel. In a broad sense, we are all missionaries who hold the priesthood of God. We are ever ready to give the message of eternal life because of the truth, beauty, and goodness of the divine teachings of the Savior. Out of our faith, we find everything that is holy and pure and of good report. I was thinking this morning of the Sabbath day after the arrival of the pioneers in this valley, July 24, 1847. Divine services were held, and the people were seated in a circle out in the sagebrush, and nearby were the waters of a lovely stream. Gratitude to God was expressed in song and prayer, and the words of Isaiah were read by Apostle Orson Pratt, who gave the sermon:

How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good; that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!

Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. (Isaiah 52:7-8.)

TRUTHS OF GOD

The Saints had sung their sacred hymns during their long journey. They had endured their trials, and the more they suffered, the deeper was their gratitude to God. The missionaries go forth to speak of these things, because the history of this people is in many respects the most majestic and sublime of any people that ever lived. There is a sacred foundation to their teachings. The Latter-day Saints believe and know honestly that Adam came to earth sent of God from heaven. He held the priesthood of God and became the first teacher of the gospel to his descendants. The divine ideals as taught by the Father of us all were held sacred, and from that time to the days of the Messiah upon the earth, the truths of God were planted in the hearts of his children. Maurice Maeterlinck in his book, The Great Secret, says that what we read in the oldest archives of wisdom gives us only a faint idea of the sublime doctrines of the ancient teachers. The older the texts, the more pure, the more awe-inspiring are the doctrines they reveal. They may be merely an echo of sublimer doctrines. We come down to the age of the prophets. Says a noted historian:

How fitting it is that Malachi should seal up the book of the Old Testament prophecy by such a clear statement of the coming of the Lord, the Messenger of the Covenant, the Son of righteousness, and thus give the last prediction of him, with whom the evangelists begin their gospel history.

Hugo Munsterberg of Harvard University wrote, in his Psychology and Life, something of the past glory of the sacred records:

There is a truth, a beauty, a morality, which is independent of psychological conditions. Every straightforward man, to whom the duties of his real life are no sounding brass, speaks with a sound voice to the psychologist: "There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

GOSPEL RE-ESTABLISHED

We have the age in which the Prophet Joseph Smith lived. He was undoubtedly the greatest character in history since the days of the Savior of the world. He re-established the divine principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ in the day in which we live. We first see him in the woods on the frontier of America praying as a child might pray and the Lord appearing to him. Using the words of the Psalmist,

... grace is poured into thy lips, therefore, God hath blessed thee forever. (Psalms 45:2.)

With the Father was Jesus the Savior. Joseph heard the voice of God and the divine words: "This is my Beloved Son!" A new day was at hand. From that moment he was heart and mind to the word of the Lord.

He learned that day that the divisions of Christendom are its most conspicuous reproach and the chief cause of its inefficiency. They present a moral affront to the enterprise inaugurated by Jesus Christ and constitute the outstanding limitation of its progress. Christianity is weakened by its divisions in facing the problems of today, among which are class hatreds, race antagonisms, blindness to social justice, the lure of vicious literature, crime-instigating narcotics, and the spread of military spirit in the world.

PRINCIPLE OF REVELATION

The supreme test of religion is revelation. No religion can be persuasive unless it relies on the principle of revelation. The living Church of Jesus Christ must be revelatory. Christianity in its pure sense is the religion of redeemed personality. While all true men reveal God, the completest carrier of revelation can be no other than a chosen personality.

By the power of the Holy Priesthood which Joseph Smith received from heaven, he established our true relationship to God. Out of this grows the salvation of man—his true immortal life. The nations all bear witness to the need of a light that is not of man. We can give our word to the world that the forces which are to make the world the world it ought to be are now within it. My fellow missionaries: We are to study more deeply and constantly the divine truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We must know the history of the Church of which we are members. We must understand the meaning of the priesthood of God which has been given to us. We must know the divine teachings of the Holy Bible, the Book of Mormon, The Doctrine and Covenants, and The Pearl of Great Price. How beautifully do they teach the words of Shakespeare:

What a piece of work is a man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a God! (Shakespeare, Hamlet Act II, Sc. 2.)

FAITH IN REVEALED WORD

Think of what your message can become as you go forth to teach. But it is going to require of you some sort of planning toward an end. Your minds must become more sensitive to the revealed truths of God as never before. Your faith in your work must deepen from day to day. Let me call to your minds the words of the first two verses of the first chapter of the Book of Mormon:

I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, therefore I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father; and having seen many afflictions in the course of my days, nevertheless, having been highly favored of the Lord in all my days; yea, having had a great knowledge of the goodness and the mysteries of God, therefore I make a record of my proceedings in my days.

Yea, I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians. (1 Nephi 1:1-2.)

What a noble tribute to education these words are. Lehi had become an educated man in his day, and his son pays him loving tribute. So you must study the words of Holy Writ every hour of the day and remember the admonition of the first teacher to the American Indians, called by some the apostle John Eliot:

Work, with faith in Jesus Christ can accomplish anything.

"WORDS OF WISDOM"

What a directive purpose the Prophet Joseph Smith gives us in the words as found in the 88th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

... seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith.

Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing; and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God. (Verses 118-119.)

From the beginning of the history of the Church, Joseph Smith organized schools of learning. He became a student and a member of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew classes established in the Kirtland Temple. He established the University of the City of Nauvoo, encouraged the building of the Seventies' Hall of Science. In volume five of the Times and Seasons is found this brief, but noble statement:

Among the improvements going forward in this city, none merit higher praise, than the Seventies' Library. The concern has been commenced on a footing and scale, broad enough to embrace the arts and sciences, everywhere: so that the Seventies while traveling over the face of the globe, as the Lord's "Regular Soldiers," can gather all the curious things, both natural and artificial, with all the knowledge, inventions, and wonderful specimens of genius that have been gracing the world for almost six thousand years. (p. 762; January 1, 1845.)

REFINEMENT AND CULTURE

The early history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was one of refinement and culture. The people became lovers of good literature. Even when they were camping on the frozen ground of Iowa as they began their exodus to the far West, they read their sacred books and before the campfires they knelt in prayer. We are told that in one of the camps was a copy of Mlle. Cottin's beautiful story, entitled "Elizabeth." It was so sought after that some read the book by the light of the moon. They were sustained by day and by night by ... keeping up the songs of Zion, and passing along Doxologies from front to rear when the breath froze on their eyelashes.

Jane Bicknell Young, the wife of Joseph Young, sang to her children the "Song of the Silent Land":

Into the Silent Land!
Who shall lead us thither?
Clouds in the evening sky more darkly gather
And shattered wrecks lie thicker on the strand.
Who leads us with a gentle hand
Thither, oh, thither.
Into the Silent Land.

They trained themselves to read and to think, but they had no set regulations for their studies. They embraced only guiding principles. They knew nothing of set rules and methods which would have limited their imaginations and initiative, which are so important in the successful presentation of great truths. One of the first things that President Brigham Young did after the advent of the pioneers to Utah was to issue an epistle—and this in 1847—which reads as follows:

It is very desirable that all the Saints should improve every opportunity of securing at least a copy of every valuable treatise on education—every book, map, chart, or diagram that may contain interesting, useful, and attractive matter, to gain the attention of children, and cause them to love to learn to read; and also every historical, mathematical, philosophical, geographical, geological, astronomical, scientific, practical, and all other variety of useful and interesting writings, maps, etc., to present to the general church recorder, when they shall arrive at their destination, from which important and interesting matter may be gleaned to compile the most valuable works on every science and subject, for the benefit of the rising generation. We have a printing press, and any one who can take good printing or writing paper to the valley will be blessing themselves and the Church. We also want all kinds of mathematical instruments, together with all rare specimens of natural curiosities and works of art that can be gathered.

FIRST LIBRARY

In 1851 the first extensive library was brought by ox teams to this state. It had been purchased in New York City by Dr. John M. Bernhisel and was a wonderful collection of books. There were the works of Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Homer, Juvenal, Lucretius, Virgil, Euripides, Sophocles, Plato, Montaigne, Tacitus, Spenser, Herodotus, Goldsmith, and many others of the great masters of the world's best literature. The library received copies of the New York Herald, New York Evening Post, the Philadelphia Saturday Courier, and the North American Review. Of the scientific works there were Newton's Principia, Herschel's Outlines of Astronomy, and Von Humboldt's Cosmos. The treatises on philosophy included the works of John Stuart Mill, Martin Luther, John Wesley, and Emanuel Swedenborg.

Time will not permit my going into the cultural aspects of the early days of the Church. The Latter-day Saints were a cultured people from the first, and they indicated this in their lives. The inventory of the educational resources of Utah have been what Dr. Samuel T. Dutton, of Columbia University, has pointed out. These resources are: First, homes, churches, schools, and libraries; second, newspapers, magazines, museums, drama, industry, and government; third, those intellectual and ethical aptitudes of the people which make it possible for them to be quickened and influenced in the right direction.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF PIONEERS

The pioneers were always striving to understand the arts and sciences, for they sensed keenly the power of all truth. They knew the human constants—hunger and labor, seedtime and harvest, love and faith—which entered into their lives from the very first. They built this Tabernacle in which we are worshiping today. They continued establishing schools and colleges and established a theatre in the wilderness which in time became recognized by the artists of the London stage as well as the famous dramatists of America. Mr. M. B. Leavitt has written in his Fifty Years of the American Stage:

Sweeping as the statement may seem, I do not believe that the theater has ever rested on a higher plane, both as to its purpose and its offerings, than at Salt Lake City, the Capital of Mormondom.

Utah today has become a great state. Ellsworth Huntington has recently written in his book, entitled Civilization and Climate:

The proud position of Utah is presumably the result of Mormonism. The leaders of that faith have had the wisdom to insist on a thorough system of schools, and have obliged the children to attend them. The "Gentiles" have in self-defense been forced to do equally well, and the result has been admirable. Whatever one may think of Mormonism as a religious belief, it must be credited with having accomplished a remarkable work in spreading a moderate degree of education almost universally among the people of Utah.

Count Hermann Keyserling, the noted German philosopher and historian, came to Salt Lake City a few years ago and afterwards wrote in his Travel Diary of a Philosopher these words:

The Mormons have achieved a civilization hardly attained by any other people. In barely half a century they have changed a salt-desert into a garden. They are moreover admirable citizens, law-abiding, honest, and progressive.

MISSIONARIES TO TEACH WORLD

You missionaries of Jesus Christ, our Savior, are taught the divine precepts of the religion of the Master, and you go forth in all the world to teach. Out of the faith of your fathers you take to peoples all that is holy and pure and of good report. Your zeal and self-devotion shall be increased. Your heavenly aspirations, your human sympathies, your endless deeds of charity will bring you the hearts of the people. You need never hesitate, for you have entered upon your many duties and responsibilities, your trials and discouragements "with the zeal of Peter and the gentleness of John." Well may you read the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith as he wrote in the Articles of Faith:

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things. (Thirteenth Article of Faith.)

ELDER RICHARD L. EVANS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I am sure I never fully realize how much I need help until I actually arrive at this moment and this place, and I earnestly hope that I shall have it.

ADVICE GIVEN TO MOSES

I should like to read as preface to the few remarks that I shall make, some verses from the eighteenth chapter of Exodus:

And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses sat to judge the people; and the people stood by Moses from the morning unto the evening.

And when Moses' father in law saw all that he did to the people, he said, What is this thing that thou doest to the people? Why sittest thou thyself alone, and all the people stand by thee from morning unto even?

And Moses said unto his father in law, Because the people come unto me to enquire of God:

When they have a matter, they come unto me; and I judge between one and another, and I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws.

And Moses' father in law said unto him, the thing that thou doest is not good.

Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou, and this people that is with thee: for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone.

Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counsel, and God shall be with thee: Be thou for the people. . . .

And thou shalt teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt shew them the way wherein they must walk, and the work that they must do.

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens:

And let them judge the people at all seasons: and it shall be, that every great matter they shall bring unto thee, but every small matter they shall judge: so shall it be easier for thyself, and they shall bear the burden with thee.

If thou shalt do this thing, and God command thee so, then thou shalt be able to endure, and all this people shall also go to their place in peace.

So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father in law, and did all that he had said. (Exodus 18:13-24.)

DELEGATION OF RESPONSIBILITY

There is a profound wisdom in this early utterance concerning the delegation of authority and of responsibility and of work. Surely it must be evident to every thinking person that there comes a time when, no matter how able or willing a man may be, he cannot further extend himself so far as person-to-person communication and effort are concerned. As surely as this Church grows, it must be apparent to everyone that a greater sense of responsibility must rest with all those who have membership in it and by that membership, therefore, have a responsibility for it.

I called attention on one previous occasion, I think, to the number of days a man may reasonably expect to live—assuming that the scriptural allotment of three score and ten years were granted each of us. If you will get out your pencil and paper and multiply seventy by three hundred sixty-five, it will total about twenty-five thousand days, which means that if we were to spend one day each with twenty-five thousand different people, our lives would be gone. This would indicate the limit of our personal ability to spend time with individual people. But we can extend ourselves in other ways. We are extending ourselves today by television. For many years we have extended ourselves by radio. We can extend ourselves in print and by all other means of mass communication and by delegating responsibility to other people. But in person-to-person appointments in this Church and out of it, there is a limit to which a man can extend himself—a truth which the father-in-law of Moses discovered and expressed many centuries ago, and which is a still more pressing truth in our day as the Church and its responsibilities grow.

ACTIVITY OF MEMBERSHIP

One of the great elements of strength in this Church is the activity of its membership, the individual testimony and responsibility of every member in it, in the priesthood quorums and otherwise. And we must, of course, delegate authority and responsibility. The Lord has done it to us; he has trusted us; and we must trust our brethren and our fellow men in like manner. We shall all make mistakes, but if the Lord with his patience and his wisdom can so long endure our fumbling and faltering, if he can stand by and watch his children as they work out their own salvation, surely we can well afford to watch the performance of one another as each of us attempts to work out his own salvation and to take responsibility of the work of the Church as a whole and for the salvation of one another.

I remember on one occasion some months ago, when Brother George Q. Morris was called to preside over the Eastern States Mission, a farewell testimonial was being given for him by one of the general boards of the M.I.A. As a book was being presented to him on that occasion, Sister Emily Bennett, I believe it was, who was making the presentation, offered some apology because she didn't know whether or not he had that particular book in his library—but they were presenting it to him anyway. President Clark, as I recall, followed her and somewhat facetiously (and yet, I believe, somewhat seriously) said, "Why didn't you ask the First Presidency whether Brother Morris had this book in his library—others, it seems, don't hesitate to ask almost anything and everything of them."

Now, the First Presidency, and all the other brethren, I earnestly believe, are very willing to do what they can do, to the full limit of their time and strength, and certainly when people have questions and problems, they must feel free to ask someone the answers. A man should not carry an unanswered question around with him and let it canker within him without being able to ask for the answer. But I am sure that so far as the Church to its broad extent is concerned, individual audiences with the First Presidency and with the other brethren shall be proportionately fewer. And greater and greater and wider and wider, responsibility on the part of all of us, down to the youngest and least able, must be the watchword for the accomplishment of the things that need to be accomplished.

SHORTCUTS

I don't know why the Lord is content to let us move by the slow means, or at least by the seemingly slow means by which we sometimes seem to move. But the fact that he is content to let us move so slowly must be significant, and it may be that some of the shortcuts that are sometimes suggested would not be good for us, individually or as a Church.

I recall that a personality of great brilliance named Lucifer had some very drastic shortcuts to suggest and they were rejected of our Father in heaven.

I am reminded of another story concerning a shortcut that my able associate on Temple Square, Brother Marion D. Hanks, invited to my attention sometime ago. It was an incident related by the late Justice Sutherland of the United States Supreme Court. Some years ago, he recalled a group of men, who had ascended the Arch of Triumph in Paris, and one very brilliant young man among them was theorizing as to the various ways of descending. There were the stairs down which they could laboriously and slowly descend, or one could jump over the edge of the monument and thus be down much sooner. Then the brilliant young man proceeded to demonstrate his theory: he jumped over the edge, and the next day they buried him.

I think some of the shortcuts suggested these days in the world (and maybe some of the shortcuts suggested among us) may be in this category. It serves the purposes of God, apparently, to work through men, imperfect as they are. Certainly there are many things that he could accomplish more rapidly than by letting us do them in our fumbling and faltering way. Certainly he could send armies of angels to accomplish the things he has placed on our shoulders if he chose to do so. Jesus said to his own generation that God could raise up children unto Abraham from the very stones. I think all this must lead us to only one conclusion, which is basic in this Church: that the Lord lets us move as we move because it is his purpose and glory to bring to pass our eternal and everlasting salvation, our immortality and eternal life; and if he were to take some of these shortcuts, it might do the work without developing the individual.

"WE, THE PEOPLE"

Men are only at their best and most effective under conditions of voluntary cooperation and never under conditions of coercion. When President Smith mentioned earlier this morning the Constitution of the United States, the first line from the preamble came to my mind:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union,

"We, the people"—it was not an edict from some tall tower directing that some mass of people should do something regardless of their own wishes. "We the people" do this. Men are most effective under conditions of voluntary cooperation, and that is one of the great pillars of strength of this Church. The free agency of man is basic. We are committed to it, and corollary with it is our own individual initiative and willing cooperation in a great cause.

Now I have no concern as to the ability of our Father in heaven to accomplish his purposes in the earth. He could raise up children to Abraham from the very rocks. He could send armies of angels. He could take these and other shortcuts. He could no doubt do many things much more quickly, but he is interested in us, in our initiative, in our development, in our agency, in our voluntary willingness to cooperate one with another, and to move toward his purposes for our own soul's salvation as well as for the good of his work in the earth.

I pray that we may each of us sense our responsibility in the world and in the Church, and that we who have responsibility for any part of the work may learn to delegate detail as occasion requires and trust these men, our brethren, and these women, our sisters, to do their part in pushing forward the things that need to be done, and to feel a sense of responsibility as concerns carrying forward this work.

I should like to leave with you my conviction concerning the truthfulness and ultimate destiny of those things to which we are committed in this Church, which we earnestly accept as the Church of Jesus Christ, and I do it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EZRA TAFT BENSON

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My beloved brothers and sisters: Six years ago at the October conference of the Church you sustained me as one of the General Authorities. In spite of my weaknesses and limitations, I stand here today to testify to you of the joy and the happiness which have been mine during those six glorious years. For four and one-half years of the six, I have had the opportunity of traveling among the stakes of Zion, meeting the stake presidencies, high councils, bishoprics, and Saints, and also visiting the missions of the Church and meeting the people there. It has been a priceless experience. In no other place in all the world can anyone be privileged to enjoy the association of such fine men and women as those who constitute the leadership of the stakes and wards of Zion and the missions and branches of the Church. I am deeply grateful for all your kindness.

As though this were not enough, I have had the glorious privilege of a close and intimate association with the leadership of the Church, the General Authorities. I have always loved them, but I have never loved them as much as I do today. Any one of them would give his all, including life itself, if necessary, for the establishment of this great work and the upbuilding of the kingdom. With all my heart, I sustain them and love them and commend to you, my brethren and sisters, their example and counsel.

Some few months ago following a general conference of the Church, I received a letter from a young man in this city. He had been impressed with something that had been said regarding missionary work. In his letter he asked the question—after indicating that he was not a member of the Church—"Why do you people of the Mormon faith send missionaries out into the world, particularly to Christian nations? Why do you not confine your program to the non-Christian people?"

If the Lord will bless me, I should like to attempt to answer that question, within the limits of the time available and my own personal limitations.

CHURCH ESTABLISHED BY CHRIST

It is a common belief of all sects professing Christianity that Jesus the Christ established his divine Church here on the earth during his ministry among men. He came during a period of comparative peace. The religious world was divided into two camps—the pagans of various sects and the Jews. The Jews alone were worshiping the true and Living God. Even they were divided among themselves, the principal groups being the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes. There was also a mixture of the Jewish and pagan philosophies in the Samaritan group.

But Christ came with his message indicating that the law of Moses was fulfilled in him. He brought a higher law, a law of love, the gospel of love, and he established his Church. He selected officers. We read of the apostles, the seventies, bishops, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, and one of the members of that body of leaders later said that these officers should remain in the Church for the purpose of . . . the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

Till we all come in the unity of the faith. (Eph. 4:12-13.)

The Master selected his Twelve. He named them; he sent them forth with the message, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." They went to the lost sheep of the House of Israel and later, through divine direction, to the Gentiles as well. Others were called, and the seventy, following their first mission, came back rejoicing that even the devils had been subject to them in the name of Jesus Christ.

There was a spirit of unity among the members, a spirit of brotherhood; there was a spirit of oneness. They enjoyed rich spiritual gifts. Simple ordinances were performed by men who had authority and had been commissioned. The apostolic ministry was characterized by every evidence that those engaged in it had divine authority to carry the message of the gospel and to administer in the affairs of the kingdom. They went forth freely without pay, because the Master had said, "freely ye have received, freely give." Peter, apparently the senior apostle, directed the activities of the Church.

In 44 A. D. a council of the Church membership was called in Jerusalem, with Peter presiding. According to the records, certain differences were adjusted at that conference, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. Later the apostles scattered; persecution was heaped upon them; and so far as we know, they never met again in a general conference of the Church. The activities of Paul centered at Antioch, but during the period from 68 A. D. to 100 A. D., it appeared that most, if not all, of the original apostles, who had the authority to direct the kingdom—to direct the affairs of the Church—had passed from the earth.

BEGINNING OF APOSTASY

Waves of persecution continued, dissension crept in, political influence was in evidence. According to the writers of the second century, which are usually passed over in silence by many of the religious leaders of the world today, the teachings were orthodox to quite an extent during the first century and into the second century following the advent of the Master. But even during this period there was evidence that an apostasy was beginning. As Constantine came to the throne of the Roman empire, there was a spirit of tolerance shown toward all religious groups. Finally, tolerance increased toward the Christians until Constantine himself more or less espoused their cause.

Great changes were now in evidence. Some would have us believe that the bishop of Rome, about this time, became the head of the Church. There were many bishops presiding over local congregations—churches as they were called—but none of them had authority, as had been given to the Twelve, to direct Church affairs. In fact, the records indicate that at least two of the bishops of Rome died while John, the Apostle was still known among men. Evidently, one was living when John received his last great revelation recorded in the Book of Revelation. None of these had the authority, nor assumed authority, to direct the church established by Christ and his apostles.

In the council called by Constantine, the emperor, in 325 A.D. (Council of Nicaea), which was apparently the first conference called subsequent to the one that was held in Jerusalem in 44 A.D., we are told that only about one-sixth of the bishops were in attendance, and that the bishop of Rome was absent from that important meeting. The emperor directed the council although he was not even baptized. According to the records we have, there was evidently no unity and no inspiration of the Spirit present at the meeting, but force and intrigue were used in an effort to bring political unity for political purposes. In fact, our best authorities seem to indicate that it must have been approximately 354 A. D. before Peter, the Apostle, was ever referred to as a bishop.

PRINCIPLES AND ORDINANCES CHANGED

But long before this time, evidences of apostasy had set in. The corrupting of the simple principles of the gospel, the introduction of pagan philosophies, the unwarranted and unauthorized addition of certain man-made ceremonies, changes in organization and in government—all these and more were in evidence.

There isn't time to go into a detailed discussion of the changes made, but we may take as an example the simple ordinance of baptism, performed by immersion, by those having authority, following which hands of the priesthood were laid upon the heads of the baptized members and the Holy Ghost conferred. Shortly after the passing of the apostles, this ordinance was greatly modified. The mode of baptism was changed. There came a time when baptism was recognized whether or not men held or even claimed authority. They even went to the point of indicating that authority was not necessary. The baptism of infants was introduced. Adults who were baptized were treated as infants and fed on milk and honey for a period. The use of oil was introduced into the ordinance.

The sacred ordinance of the sacrament was changed, that simple and impressive ordinance introduced by the Master. The doctrine of transubstantiation was taught and actual idolatry and the worship of the emblems introduced. A change was made in the selection of officers. Nominations had been made by the Apostles who had that authority. No longer was the principle of common consent, which had been a part of the early Church, practised and followed. Members of the Church were forbidden to read the scriptures, although the Master had said, "Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life." (John 5.39.)

ABOMINABLE PRACTICES INTRODUCED

Many other practices were introduced, one of the most serious, and I am sure one of the most abominable in the sight of God, was the selling of indulgences. This practice was based on the false theory that there was a treasure of merit—that certain of the saints and others through their works had performed more than was required for their salvation—and therefore, there was a treasure available upon which others might draw, who through their unrighteous lives may be short of the requirements for salvation. The doctrine of infallibility, the worship of relics, the introduction of pomp, ceremony, and mysteries, the use of incense, the worship of martyrs, applause to show the relative popularity of speakers in the Church, and even the purchase of office were approved and practised. Rivalry, strife, and disunity were rampant, probably reaching a climax when the bishop of Rome excommunicated the patriarch of Constantinople and the patriarch in turn excommunicated the bishop.

There remained then, only human churches, without authority, which had excommunicated each other. Surely the apostasy was now complete.

APOSTASY PREDICTED

As the restored Church, we affirm that with the passing of the apostolic age, the Church drifted into a condition of apostasy, that succession in the priesthood was broken, and that the Church, as an earthly organization operating under divine direction and having authority to officiate in spiritual ordinances, ceased to exist. This is attested by history. We affirm also that all this was foreseen and predicted by the apostles when they were living, yea, and by the Master in his day. The apostasy had started during the days of the Apostles, and was referred to frequently by them.

You are acquainted with the quotation in Paul's reference to the situation as he met with the elders of Ephesus for the last time when he said,

For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. (Acts 20:29.)

Then his letter to the Thessalonians,

Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come

—the Second Coming of the Master—except there come a falling away first. (II Thessalonians 2:3.)

To the Galatians Paul referred to the apostasy already under way, and marveled that they were so soon removed from him that had called them, into another gospel. He chastised them for so doing, and pointed out that there was only one gospel plan. (Gal. 1:6-8.)

Peter spoke of

... false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies . . . and bring upon themselves swift destruction. (II Peter 2:1.)

In fact, in the great vision given to John while on the Isle of Patmos, he refers to the few churches worthy of his note as being "neither cold nor hot." (Rev. 3:15.) In reference to the restoration of the gospel, the passage often quoted (Rev. 14:6-7) is a clear evidence that the apostasy was to be complete, for when John received this revelation, indicating a condition of the future, he saw an angel flying through the midst of heaven, "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth."

Even in the Old Testament, prophets had prophesied in a similar manner. Isaiah indicated that the earth would be defiled under the inhabitants thereof because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. (Isaiah 24:5.)

Nowhere is the law of Moses referred to as an everlasting covenant. The everlasting covenant is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Amos had spoken of a famine that should come in the land for "hearing the words of the Lord" and that people would "run to and fro to seek the work of the Lord, and shall not find it." (Amos 8:11.)

Not only by history, which is quite conclusive, but through prophecy also we have been informed definitely that there was and there would be a complete apostasy from the truth. Many of the early reformers recognized this fact as they struck out against the false teachings and practises of their day. Wesley, the founder of Methodism, lamented that the "Christians had turned heathen again and had only a dead form left." Even here in America, Roger Williams, head of the oldest Baptist congregation in the land, recognized, as he quit the ministry, that there was no divinely constituted authority or church upon the face of the earth, nor would there be such a church until one arose having apostles and other officers as found in the church established in the Meridian of Time.

APOSTASY ATTESTED FACT

It is an attested fact that as Joseph Smith, a humble boy, went into the woods to pray on that beautiful spring morning in 1820, the world—Christian and otherwise—was in a sad state of apostasy. The answer given to him is to me the greatest evidence we have in all the world that there had been an apostasy from the truth. When he beheld those two glorious beings, the one pointed to the other and said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him." And after Joseph had asked the question, "which of all the sects was right," what was the answer that he received? These are his words:

I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong: . . . they teach for doctrines the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.

He [the Son] again forbade me to join with any of them. (P. of G. P., Joseph Smith 2:19-20.)

TRUE CHURCH RE-ESTABLISHED

Later, the Prophet Joseph was commanded to go forth as an instrument in the hands of God and organize the Church, to publish to the world as an added testimony to the divinity of Jesus Christ, the Book of Mormon which was taken from the sacred records. The Church was organized, and through revelation its name, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, was given, as referred to earlier by President Smith. Then after a few months had elapsed, while the elders were in special conference considering the matter of the publication of the revelations that had been received up to that time, the Lord spoke through the Prophet and gave a very significant revelation and indicated that it should be the preface to the Lord's Book of Commandments. In that revelation we find these significant words, referring to the Lord's servants who would have the responsibility of carrying the message to the world and establishing the kingdom. Said the Lord:

And also those to whom these commandments were given, might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually—(D. & C. 1:30; Italics author's.)

These are not our words. These are words of him who established his Church anciently, and through whose ministry it has been re-established and restored in the day and age in which we live.

A MESSAGE FOR THE WORLD

Now, my brothers and sisters, that is why we send missionaries out into the world, because this message is a world message. It is the truth restored. The Lord indicated this fact in that same revelation, in the opening verse, in which he said:

Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say: Hearken ye people from afar; and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together.

For verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape; . . . (D. & C. 1:1-2.)

This restoration of the gospel, the bringing back of light and truth, is intended for the benefit and blessing of all God's children. And so, humbly and gratefully, our missionaries go out into the world to proclaim that there has been an apostasy from the truth, but that through the goodness of God the heavens have again been opened and the gospel revealed unto man through Joseph Smith, the Prophet.

I am grateful for this knowledge. To me it is the most precious thing in all the world. I would to God that all within the sound of my voice, and all God's children everywhere, could know of the sweetness of the gospel and what it means to hold the priesthood and to feel the fellowship and brotherhood which we have in the Church—yes, to know of the security that comes to the heart of man as a testimony of the truth is borne in upon his soul.

TESTIMONY

I testify to you this day that these things are true, that this is the work of God. I bear this testimony knowing full well that eventually I must stand before the judgment seat of God, as you my brethren and sisters will be required to do. I testify in all humility that God has again spoken from the heavens, following a long period of apostasy, that he has raised up a prophet, that Joseph Smith was the instrument in his hands in restoring again to the earth the Holy Priesthood, the true Church organization with all the blessings enjoyed in former days, and even more, because this is the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. I bear this testimony to you in all humility and with gratitude in my heart, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will sing as a concluding number, "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings." The closing prayer will be offered by President Wendell B. Mendenhall of the San Joaquin Stake in California.

After these things have been accomplished this conference will be adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The afternoon session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and by arrangement with KSL over the other stations to which you are now listening. The conference will also be broadcast over the television station of KSL, channel 5.

The audience should be seated not later than ten minutes before the hour.

Any important messages and calls that have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of the meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo stakes with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

Now, brethren and sisters, there are many people on these streets. Automobiles in many cases are being operated by people who do not know just exactly how dangerous they are, but you ought to know, so I am going to suggest to you that when you leave these grounds you watch carefully if you go into the street at all and wherever you go during this conference protect yourself from accident as far as you possibly can and if you do that I am sure our Heavenly Father will do the rest.

We will now hear the choir after which Brother Mendenhall will offer the benediction.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers. "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings."

The closing prayer was offered by President Wendell B. Mendenhall of the San Joaquin Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

FIRST DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The second session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m., Friday, September 30.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided; President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

The choral music for this session was furnished by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo Stakes, Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting, Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ console.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the second session of the 120th semi-annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The General Authorities are all present except Brother Alma Sonne of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; Brother Thomas E. McKay, also of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is at home convalescing by direction of his physicians; and President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy, who is presiding over the New England Mission.

President Smith is presiding at this session. He has requested that the speaker, President Clark, conduct the services.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television. All general sessions of the conference will be heard and seen in the Assembly Hall in the same way.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over station KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise.

This session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

I may say that reports come to us that there is excellent reception of the television picture at the Brigham Young University, where hundreds of students are witnessing the conference, and as far south as Spanish Fork, and it is said that the reception here in the valley is very good.

Any important messages and calls that come to us from persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to these announcements.

The choir singing for this session will be by the Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo stakes. Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

We will begin the services by the Relief Society Singing Mothers rendering, "Jesus, Our Lord, We Adore Thee."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Alvin C. Chace of the Florida Stake.

---

The Singing Mothers sang, "Jesus, Our Lord, We Adore Thee." President Alvin C. Chace of the Florida Stake offered the invocation.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers sang, "The Twenty-third Psalm."

Elder Joseph Anderson, Clerk of the Conference, read the following report of changes:

Dividend Branch, Santaquin-Tintic Stake, disorganized, membership transferred to Elberta Branch.

Greenbelt Branch, Washington Stake, disorganized, membership transferred to Capitol Ward.

ELDER JOSEPH F. MERRILL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Brethren, sisters, and radio listeners, as a preliminary to other remarks I would like for a moment to refer to the Prophet Joseph Smith, mentioned this morning in both prayer and speech. It is because Joseph Smith lived and functioned that we are all here today, and I have said from this stand and from other stands that in my opinion Joseph Smith was a most marvelous man, the greatest prophet this world has ever seen, aside from Jesus Christ himself, and, as I believe history will declare, one of the greatest Americans that this country has ever known.

Why am I justified in saying all this? I believe that a real, serious, honest investigation of Joseph Smith, from the time of his birth to the time of his death, will justify anyone who goes carefully into all the history and all the things he did in saying that at least he was a most marvelous man, and in saying that, in coming to that conclusion, such an investigator would be guided by exactly the same standard that is used in judging greatness of all other people: by his works shall he be known, by his works he should be judged. And in my opinion every honest, conscientious, intelligent man and woman, in the light of his claims, ought to feel justified in going carefully into a study of this wonderful man.

A PRACTICAL RELIGION

In the few minutes allotted to me I desire to talk in plain, everyday language of some things that I believe are important for all of us to study and think about. First of all, the gospel of Jesus Christ as accepted and taught by the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a very practical religion—one that should enter into every phase of the lives of its members, whether this phase be spiritual or material. One of our basic teachings is that faith without works is dead. “. . . shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.” (James 2:18.) Again, “Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.” (Matt. 7:21.) Other of our teachings pertinent to my theme are articles 12 and 13 of our faith:

We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men . . .

If we implement these articles in our daily lives, we will be good family members, good neighbors, good citizens, and good Church members.

CONSTITUTION DIVINELY INSPIRED

Again, we teach that the Constitution of the United States as it came to us from the founders of this republic is a divinely inspired document. From a declaration of belief as found in Section 134 of The Doctrine and Covenants, and approved by unanimous vote of an assembly of the Church held in Kirtland, August 1835, I make the following quotes:

We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man; and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, both in making laws and administering them, for the good and safety of society.

We believe that no government can exist in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life.

We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same; and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people if a republic, or the will of the sovereign.

Further, we also support the statements in the Declaration of Independence that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed . . .

In the light of the foregoing statements, I am sure that all Latter-day Saints must believe that their religion imposes on them the sacred obligation of trying to be good citizens of the country under whose flag they live. In this country—the United States—this obligation, among other things, entails the duty to vote in elections for public officers. And for whom should they vote? Obviously for those capable people who, they believe, will be true, if elected, to their oaths of office; those who will uphold the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in harmony with it. To do this is a duty that every loyal citizen of this country should feel honor-bound to discharge. The safety and perpetuity of our constitutional form of government demands it, so historians tell us.

CRITICAL ELECTIONS

As I view the situation, the national elections in 1950 and 1952 will be among the most critical and far-reaching in effects this country has had in a century. Powerful forces are being organized and heavily financed to defeat in these elections all candidates who voted for or support the Taft-Hartley labor law. If this movement is successful, misguided leaders of some organized groups will dominate the Congress of the United States, the White House, and every other office of the government, the functions of which would help to bring into existence a welfare state—that is, one which would operate according to the principles of socialism. Not that these leaders favor such a state, but the things they demand would inevitably bring it about, so wise men say. The result would be that our free enterprise system, the system that has operated in this country from its beginning, the one that has enabled it to become the marvel and the wonder of the modern world for the variety and magnitude of its ingenious productive capacity, this system would rather quickly be destroyed, so history teaches. Otherwise the monopoly of selfish labor leaders must be broken. Freedom and personal liberty—the pride and boast of America, the achievement of centuries of human sacrifice and bloody struggle are in great danger due to the rise of this destructive movement, engineered and directed by smart and misguided leaders in whose minds and hearts right, fairness, and justice apparently are given little or no consideration. Their followers apparently have had confidence in their leaders and have accepted as true the false and misleading statements and claims of certain men relative to the provisions of the Taft-Hartley labor law. So in the minds of many workers this law is oppressive, unfair, unjust, and robs workers of their rightful gains, made under the provisions of the repealed Wagner labor act.

PROVISIONS OF TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

But let me ask how many of these workers and other people have ever read the Taft-Hartley law and fully understand what its provisions are? My understanding is that this law was designed to protect the rights and freedom of employees and employers alike, and make unions and corporations equally responsible before the law for their contracts, obligations, etc. What right-minded citizen would have any other kind of law? In any case, two-thirds of the members of each branch of the United States Congress believe the Taft-Hartley bill would be at least a fairly good law, for they passed it over the president's veto. Is this not significant in the light of the fact that many members of his party voted to override the veto?

But the question of whether this is a good or bad law has been, and is being, hotly debated. To make this law function more equitably it needs amendments, it is said. If so, let these be made. But in this situation what should the voters of the country do? From my point of view the right to vote imposes on everyone who has this right the obligation to make a full, fair, and unprejudiced study of the issues involved in an election, and then support candidates who stand for the principles and measures that the voter sincerely and honestly believes will be for the best good of all the people and therefore for the best interests of the country as a whole. If selfishness, greed, unrighteous motives, and ignoble ambition shall dominate in our elections, the freedom that has been the pride and glory of America will vanish—many people will be practically enslaved, as is the case in Russia today—so historians predict.

DESIRE TO GET MORE

But the outlook is none too encouraging, for unjustifiable and insatiable selfishness has already made deep inroads into the economy of this country and is still unsatisfied. The desire to get more and more for less and less, spurred on by some politicians, has been growing stronger and stronger among different groups of people, especially among labor unions.

At this point let me quote from an article in the March, 1949, number of the Reader's Digest which was written by E. T. Leech, editor, The Pittsburg Press, as follows:

that instrument and that would turn our government and country over to the control and dictates of autocratic bosses, whoever they may be.

Our religion teaches without reservation the fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man, and that we should love our fellow men as we love ourselves. We are all enjoined to do this. All my life I have been in full sympathy with those who toil, those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. For more than seventy years I have been one of them. I love the honest toiler. I ask no more of him than I ask of myself—which is—try sincerely to live the Golden Rule in all our relations with our fellow men. What more can we rightfully ask of anyone?

I pray that the Lord will give us all a desire, and the wisdom and the courage to do as he would have us do relative to these and all other matters that concern us and the welfare of our country, and I do it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

ELDER MARION G. ROMNEY

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

I bring you greetings from my beloved colleague, Elder Thomas E. McKay. I stood at his bedside early this morning and said, "Thomas, it is time to get up and go to conference." There is nothing in the world he would rather have done, but he was unable to come. He asked me to express his love to you and also his appreciation for the prayers you have offered in his behalf. He feels that our Heavenly Father has heard your prayers.

I am very grateful for these conferences. They revive my soul. Every one I have attended for years has lifted me up and induced me to renew my determination to devote myself more fully to works of righteousness. During them, the importance of this world's interests and distractions seems to diminish, and life's true values, as set forth in the gospel of Jesus Christ, come into plainer view.

FRUITS OF THE GOSPEL

Does each of you find it so? I hope you do, and I encourage you to take every available opportunity to renew within yourself a determination to obtain the full fruits of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

When earth life is over and things appear in their true perspective, we shall more clearly see and realize what the Lord and his prophets have repeatedly told us, that the fruits of the gospel are the only objectives worthy of life's full efforts. Their possessor obtains true wealth—wealth in the Lord's view of values. We need constantly to deepen our understandings and sharpen our realization of what the fruits of the gospel are.

The Lord has defined them as ... peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come.

(D. & C. 59:23.)

It is a bit difficult to define the "peace in this world" referred to in the revelation. But we may be assured that it is not the ease, luxury, and freedom from struggle envisioned by the world's utopian dreamers. Jesus told his apostles that it would be found by them even in their days of tribulation.

Peace I leave with you,

he said,

... my peace I give unto you.

And then, by way of caution, it seems to me, he added,

... not as the world giveth, give I unto you. (John 14:27.)

PEACE AMIDST TRIBULATION

A little later he re-emphasized this statement in these words:

These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation. (John 16:33.)

Convincing evidence of the truth of this saying of the Master—that people suffering tribulation in this world could at the same time find peace in him—has come out of the most severe experiences.

I suppose that the last few days of the Prophet's life were crowded with about as much tribulation as any human being could endure. He was hounded by traitors, impeached by misguided and false-accusing associates, called to account, promised protection, and then abandoned by his government. That all the while he knew he was approaching martyrdom is clear from the record. On the evening of Saturday, June 22, he wrote in his journal:

I told Stephen Markham that if I and Hyrum were ever taken again we should be massacred, or I was not a prophet of God.

On Sunday, the 23rd, he said to his brother Hyrum,

If you go back, I will go with you, but we shall be butchered.

Monday, the 24th, on leaving Nauvoo, he paused when they got to the temple, and looked with admiration first on that, and then on the city, and remarked,

This is the loveliest place and the best people under the heavens; little do they know the trials that await them.

In this setting, knowing that his own life would be taken from him by force and violence and viewing the trials and suffering which would be visited upon his beloved followers, he said to the company who were with him,

I am going like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am calm as a summer's morning.

This is a classic example of a person having at the same time tribulation in this world and peace in Christ. Many others, both in ancient and in modern times, have had similar experiences.

ETERNAL LIFE

The other fruit of the gospel named in the quotation—"eternal life in the world to come"—must be a glorious thing, for the Lord has said that "he that hath eternal life is rich," (D. & C. 6:7) and that the "gift of eternal life is the greatest of all the gifts of God." (D. & C. 14:7.) He who obtains it will obtain an exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our Father in heaven. Speaking of such the Lord says, among other things:

They are they who are the church of the Firstborn.
 . . . into whose hands the Father has given all things—
 They are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory;
 . . . they are gods, even the sons of God . . .
 These shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever.
 These are they whom he shall bring with him, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven to reign on the earth over his people . . . who shall have part in the first resurrection.
 . . . who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just.
 These are they whose names are written in heaven . . .
 . . . whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God, the highest of all, whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical. (D. & C. 76:54-56, 58, 62-65, 68, 70.)

ASSURANCE OF BLESSINGS

This gift of eternal life in the world to come may not, of course, be fully realized during earth life. An assurance that it will be obtained in the world to come may, however, be had in this world. As a matter of fact, the blessings of the celestial kingdom are promised only to those who have such an assurance. According to the vision, a successful candidate for these blessings must qualify on three counts: First, he must have ". . . received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name" and been ". . . baptized after the manner of his burial"; second, he must have received "the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power"; and third, he must be "sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise." (D. & C. 76:51-53.)

The Prophet Joseph taught that one so sealed would have within himself an assurance born of the spirit, that he would obtain eternal life in the world to come. He urgently and repeatedly admonished the Saints of his day to obtain such an assurance by making their calling and election sure. It is this assurance within a person which brings to him the peace in this world which will sustain him in every tribulation.

MORE SURE WORD OF PROPHECY

So taught the Prophet in explanation of the words of Peter. Although that apostle had heard the voice of God declare, when he was with the Savior on the holy mount,

This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, he nevertheless wrote to the Saints,

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed. (2 Peter 1:19.)

Explaining this statement the Prophet said:

Though they might hear the voice of God and know that Jesus was the Son of God, this would be no evidence that their election and calling was made sure, that they had part with Christ, and were joint heirs with him. They then would want that more sure word of prophecy, that they were sealed in the heavens, and had the promise of eternal life in the kingdom of God. Then, having this promise sealed unto them, it was an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. Though the thunders might roll and lightnings flash, and earthquakes bellow, and war gather thick around, yet this hope and knowledge would support the soul in every hour of trial, trouble and tribulation. (D. H. C. 5:387-390.)

It was such an assurance which sustained the Prophet himself as he went to martyrdom, for unto him the Lord had said in a direct revelation:

... I am the Lord thy God and will be with thee even unto the end of the world, and through all eternity: for verily I seal upon you your exaltation, and prepare a throne for you in the kingdom of my Father, with Abraham your father. (D. & C. 132:49.)

SUSTAINED BY ASSURANCE

The Apostle Paul was likewise sustained by such an assurance. From the hand of the Lord "he had a promise of receiving a crown of righteousness."

... I am now ready to be offered, he wrote to Timothy just previous to his death.

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day. (2 Tim. 4:6-8.)

I think Apostle Alonzo A. Hinckley had an assurance that he would receive the gift of eternal life in the world to come and that he was sustained by that assurance as he endured the sufferings of a slow death, for in a letter which he wrote to the First Presidency after he had been told by his physician that his illness would be fatal, he said:

I assure you that I am not deeply disturbed over the final results. I am reconciled, and I reach my hands to take what My Father has for me, be it life or death. With a spirit of thanksgiving, and I trust free from vanity or boastfulness, I look over the past with satisfaction. I would not turn the leaf down on any chapter of my life. So far as I know, I have honored my Heavenly Father with my time, my humble talents, and all the means that he has blessed me with, and I have dealt justly with all men. I have fought, but I have fought fairly.

As to the future, I have no misgivings. It is inviting and glorious, and I sense rather clearly what it means to be saved by the redeeming blood of Jesus Christ and to be exalted by his power and be with him ever more. (Church Section, March 27, 1949.)

WHOLEHEARTED DEVOTION

These fruits of the gospel—assurance that we shall obtain eternal life, peace in this world sustained by such an assurance, and finally eternal life in the world to come—are within the reach of us all. Sometimes, however, because of our lack of understanding and appreciation of them, I am persuaded that we take too much for granted. We assume that because we are members of the Church, we shall receive as a matter of course all the blessings of the gospel. I have heard people contend that they have a claim upon them because they have been through the temple, even though they are not careful to keep the covenants they there made. I do not think this will be the case.

We might take a lesson from an account given by the Prophet of a vision of the resurrection, in which he records that one of the saddest things he had ever witnessed was the sorrow of members of the Church who came forth to a resurrection below that which they had taken for granted they would receive.

I conceive the blessings of the gospel to be of such inestimable worth that the price for them must be very exacting, and if I correctly understand what the Lord has said on the subject, it is. The price, however, is within the reach of us all, because it is not to be paid in money nor in any of this world's goods but in righteous living. What is required is wholehearted devotion to the gospel and unreserved allegiance to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Speaking to this point, the Prophet taught "... that those who keep the commandments of the Lord and walk in his statutes to the end, are the only individuals" who shall receive the blessings.

Referring to Paul's devotion, he said:

Follow the labors of this apostle from the time of his conversion to the time of his death, and you will have a fair sample of industry and patience in promulgating the gospel of Christ. Derided, whipped, and stoned, the moment he escaped the hands of his persecutors he as zealously as ever proclaimed the doctrine of the Savior. . . . None will say that he did not keep the faith, that he did not fight the good fight, that he did not preach and persuade to the last. And what was he to receive? A crown of righteousness, and what shall others receive who do not labor faithfully, and continue to the end? We leave such to search out their own blessings if any they have. (D. H. C. 2:19-20.)

Explaining to the Prophet Joseph Smith the reason why his exaltation was sealed upon him, the Lord said:

Behold, I have seen your sacrifices and will forgive all your sins; I have seen your sacrifices in obedience to that which I have told you. (D. & C. 132:50.)

CALLING AND ELECTION MADE SURE

A half-hearted performance is not enough. We cannot obtain these blessings and be like the rich young man who protested that he had kept the commandments from his youth up but who went away sorrowful when, in answer to the question, "What lack I yet?" Jesus said unto him,

If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor . . . and come and follow me. (Matt. 19:21.)

Evidently he could live everything but the welfare program.

There can be no such reservation. We must be willing to sacrifice everything. Through self-discipline and devotion we must demonstrate to the Lord that we are willing to serve him under all circumstances. When we have done this, we shall receive an assurance that we shall have eternal life in the world to come. Then we shall have peace in this world.

The Prophet Joseph Smith made this perfectly clear. He said,

After a person has faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins and receives the Holy Ghost (by the laying on of hands), . . . then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, then the man will find his calling and his election made sure. (D. H. C. 3:380.)

Now may the Lord bless us, my brethren and sisters, with an understanding of his great gospel. And may we press forward with diligence and energy to perfect and qualify ourselves to receive and enjoy the full fruits thereof, for they are of all things the most joyous to the soul. Let us each day in solemn honesty confront ourselves with the rich man's question, "What lack I yet?" And thus, with utter frankness, discovering our own limitations, let us conquer them one by one until we obtain peace in this world through an assurance that we shall have eternal life in the world to come. For these blessings I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Singing Mothers and the congregation joined in singing the hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, For A Prophet."

ELDER MATTHEW COWLEY

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am indeed grateful, my brethren and sisters and friends, to be back again in a general conference of the Church. During the past eight months I have visited the Hawaiian Mission, the Central Pacific Mission, the Australian Mission, the New Zealand Mission, the Tongan Mission, the Samoan Mission, the Japanese Mission, and in company with President Robertson and President Aki, we officially opened a mission at Hong Kong, China.

SINCERITY OF MISSIONARIES

I have visited with every missionary in the respective missions who was there at the time of my visit. I have heard the testimonies of these young men and women, and I wish I could relay to you the language of sincerity and conviction which these young missionaries are carrying to the world. If there was ever a day in the history of this sorry old world when we needed to hear the voice of conviction and the language of sincerity, this is the time, and in all the world's confusion it is not only inspiring but refreshing to hear hundreds of our men and our women speaking a language of sincerity to all who will listen. I have heard their testimonies, and I have been inspired.

I have heard the testimonies of some who have said that their own parents were not very active in the Church. If any of those parents are within the sound of my voice, I trust that you will from this very moment sustain your sons and daughters by your own activity, by your own devotion to the Church while they are out in the world at your expense, giving their all in testifying that the gospel has been restored.

CHINESE MISSION

In China, at Hong Kong, on the fourteenth of July, in company with President Robertson and his wife and daughter, President Aki and his wife, and my wife, we went upon what is known as The Peak, the highest eminence overlooking the beautiful city of Hong Kong, and on to the mainland of China, and there we officially opened the mission by a brief service, each of us praying in turn. I will never forget the prayer of Brother Henry Aki, who, as he stood there, facing his homeland, with its four hundred and sixty-five million inhabitants, poured out his soul to God that he might be the means of bringing salvation to his kindred people. What great odds, brothers and sisters, one man holding the priesthood of God among four hundred and sixty-five million of his race! I was never so impressed with the preciousness of the priesthood of God as I was when that dear Chinese brother, who felt the burden that was upon him, implored God to bring salvation to his people.

In our prayers we included by reference the dedicatory prayer offered by President McKay in 1921, I think it was, when he asked God to open up the way for the gospel to be brought to that great nation. We will need missionaries for China—those who are willing to serve among a people who have not yet received the light and knowledge of the gospel.

OPPORTUNITIES IN JAPAN

In Japan we have one of the greatest opportunities for missionary service I have ever heard of or read of in the history of this Church. While I was there, we had twenty-seven missionaries in all of Japan among eighty million people, and coming to the services held by those twenty-seven missionaries were twenty-one hundred people, and they were coming to the missionaries; the missionaries were not seeking them out as we do in other missions of the Church. We would have the same results if we had three hundred missionaries among those eighty million people.

In the city of Tokyo I attended a conference at which we had five hundred in attendance. Possibly only fifty at that conference were members of the Church. We had a choir of ninety voices, young men and women who came about a hundred miles by bus to sing at the conference. They sang our hymns and our anthems, and not one of those ninety young men and women was yet a member of the Church. Some have joined since.

The director of our choir in Tokyo, a graduate of Cambridge University, a successful business man, directed the choir, made up of members and non-members, and it was just as good as many of the choirs I have heard here at home.

CITY OF SHIBATA

President Clissold and I went on one of our trips to the city of Shibata. The mayor of the city heard that we were coming, and after attending to some business with a gentleman about four miles from Shibata, we went into the mayor's office, and he asked us to come with him. We followed him upstairs over a bank building to a large chamber, and there assembled were one hundred and six of the leading businessmen and civic leaders of the city. He had phoned them and gone out to see them to bring them in to hear the ministers of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. After he introduced us, he asked us to speak to those people as we saw fit. With the aid of an interpreter I bore my testimony. President Clissold spoke in Japanese, and at the conclusion of our talks the mayor said to the people: "Ladies and gentlemen, these are the representatives of the Church which we want established here in the city of Shibata." And he said to us: "Send immediately, missionaries," and the following week two missionaries were sent there, a Hawaiian sister and a Nisei Japanese sister from Hawaii who were there on missions.

The mayor of the city has turned over to them a big assembly room in another bank building, and he said: "They can use that until we have a chapel in the city of Shibata."

One of the wealthy men of the city has turned his home over to them as a residence, and in that residence they are holding cottage meetings.

Just outside the city of Shibata there is a man named Mr. Ichishima, who was the second largest landowner in Japan prior to the war. When we visited him, he had with him his banker, his lawyer, and two or three others, and after they had held a meeting together for an hour or so, they joined President Clissold and me, and Mr. Ichishima made a formal offer of his seventeen hundred acres, which surround his home, to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints for some project, school or otherwise. We told him we could not accept it without consulting the Authorities of the Church, and then he said: "Well, send missionaries immediately, not next month, not next year, but immediately."

And so the following week two missionaries were sent to Mr. Ichishima's home, and he turned part of his home over to them as a residence.

When President Mauss arrived in Japan, President Clissold took him to Tennen Shinden to show him this land, this estate. Mr. Ichishima met them at the railway station. The first thing he said to President Clissold was: "We had two hundred and fourteen out to church last Sunday—two hundred and fourteen!"

On his land is a private chapel which belongs to the estate, a Buddhist chapel, and they have boarded off the figure of Buddha and are using it as a chapel for our Church. Mr. Ichishima is the organist for the services. I believe it will not be long before he joins the Church.

REHABILITATION OF PEOPLE

I could go on, brothers and sisters, and tell you about the way these people are coming to our missionaries to study the gospel of Jesus Christ. They have this new freedom offered by the occupation government, and they are trying to make the most of it.

They are receiving the occupation forces of the United States, not as conquerors, but as deliverers, and it is magnificent the way they cooperate with General MacArthur and his forces in rehabilitating their country which was practically destroyed by our bombs. I never once felt a spirit or an undercurrent of opposition to our American forces, and I never heard one member of the occupation forces say an unkind word about the Japanese people. I thank God for General MacArthur who tries to understand the people, who knows as Lincoln knew that the best way to defeat our enemies is to make friends of them. And that is what the Americans are trying to do in Japan.

We have a marvelous opportunity there. The people will join the Church there if we give them the missionaries. They want to know the gospel.

MISSIONARY ACTIVITIES

They have a ladies' dressmaking school in the city of Tokyo. There are three hundred women attending this school, and they have invited a missionary to come over twice a week and teach the gospel to the school. So one of our young Nisei brothers goes over twice a week to hold an assembly of the three hundred women. He teaches the gospel to them in a meeting which lasts an hour and a half twice a week.

We have orphanages there where we are teaching Sunday Schools every Sunday morning. We have a school there at which one of the elders teaches English, and the head of the school said: "You may teach your gospel along with your English."

It is almost unbelievable, the work our missionaries are doing among the Japanese. They have been released from their allegiance to the emperor as a divine personage, and the people want to make the best of the opportunities which Christianity affords and which the freedom we have to give them affords.

PIONEER SPIRIT

I hope that we will do what Brother Merrill suggests, that we will preserve the heritage which we have. Confusion reigns all over this world. I wonder today what kind of valley we would have here now had there existed in the days of our pioneers the spirit which exists among men and women today, this spirit of wanting more and more for doing less and less.

I thought of the pioneers when I was in Japan. When I would arise in the morning, I would see those people out in their rice paddies and their little wheat fields, working from before daylight until after dark at night; it was a hive of industry; there was no idleness, no one looking to anyone else for support or for a livelihood, but all looking to the work of their own hands. And I prayed that the way would be opened for them to receive the means and the ways for bringing temporal salvation to them, eighty million people in an area the size of the state of California.

SUSTAINING OF MISSIONARIES

I testify to you, my brothers and sisters, that the Spirit of God is with your missionaries. They are teaching truth, and they know it. They are paying their own expenses or their people are paying their expenses. You cannot question that kind of sincerity.

It is a sad thing, my brothers and sisters, to hear people say in their testimonies, while they are giving their all for the Church, that in their own homes there are some who are not living the gospel and are not sustaining them in the positions which they hold. Let us begin this business of sustaining one another in our own homes. There is a power of regeneration in the gospel of Jesus Christ. It lifts us up if we will obey it.

I saw Japanese creating pearls at the Mikamoto Pearl Farm in Japan. I saw them injuring an oyster and from that injury creating a beautiful pearl. That can be done with human souls. Some of us may be damaged; some of us may have within ourselves foreign matter, foreign influences, but if we take within ourselves some of that live tissue of Christ—as they take from a live oyster and place in another one, killing the one to produce pearls in the other—if we do that, brothers and sisters, we can make ourselves and those who are not working in the Church, those who are not active in our own homes, pearls of great price. That is the gospel plan.

God grant that we may respond to it, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop

I would have been very happy to give my time to Elder Cowley. I am sure we could all have listened another hour to his wonderful experiences while away and enjoyed the spirit he brings home to us. I love the spirit of this work. I have loved it all my life. I think it is the most wonderful thing in all the world.

GATHERING OF ISRAEL

To me, one of the greatest miracles the world has ever produced has been the fulfilment of the words of the prophets in the gathering of latter-day Israel and our establishment here in the tops of these mountains; this beautiful temple that stands on this block, our fertile valleys, and our very presence, for the Lord said he was married unto Israel, speaking of latter-day Israel,

... and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. (Jeremiah 3:14-15.)

And that is the reason for which we are gathered in this great conference here today, that we might be so fed.

We had the privilege of attending a meeting in the temple a week ago yesterday—all the General Authorities—preparatory to this conference, and one of the brethren, in bearing his testimony, indicated that as a boy he and his brother talked about the prophecies, and he said in substance, "If I ever live to see the Jews gathered back to Jerusalem, then I will know that the prophets knew what they were talking about."

Well, today, that is an obvious commonplace. We know, notwithstanding the fact that Jesus said that not one stone should be left upon another of their great temple, that that land should be plowed as an acre, and that they should be scattered, as the prophets indicated, among all nations and become a hiss and a byword, nevertheless the promise of the Lord was upon that land that it should be rebuilt, and that they should be gathered again and that it should become a great city. Compare that for a moment with the prophecy of Isaiah with respect to the great city of Babylon.

PROPHECIES FULFILLED

Isaiah had declared that Babylon should be destroyed and that it should never be rebuilt, that it should become the home of reptiles and wild animals, and that the Arab should no more pitch his tent there. Today no one would dare declare that the greatest city in the world, if destroyed, should never be rebuilt; but Babylon, the greatest city of its time, never has been rebuilt; the Arabs have not pitched their tents there because its ruins are full of reptiles and wild animals; but Jerusalem, the Lord had decreed, would be rebuilt, and it is now being built.

Brother Kimball, whose assignment is with the Indians, said that President Woodruff indicated that of all the prophecies that were the most difficult for him to believe and understand was the prophecy concerning how the Lord would fulfil all of his promises with respect to the Indians, and yet when we see the work the Church is undertaking today, and the response, similar in a way to what Brother Cowley has just reported from the islands, we can easily understand how the Lord will fulfil in every sense of the word the promises made to this great branch of the house of Israel.

BOOK OF MORMON VINDICATED

Some of us recall how President Grant, standing here in this pulpit, used to tell of his friend who graduated from college as a doctor, and he said to President Grant in substance: "I cannot accept your Book of Mormon because it is full of lies," and then he went on to talk about the fact that the Book of Mormon said that the former inhabitants of this land were experienced and trained in the use of cement. He said, "Everybody knows that is a lie. Cement is a modern product."

President Grant, having a testimony that the Book of Mormon was true, said: "If my children do not live to see vindicated the fact that they did build with cement and were proficient in its use, my grandchildren will live to see it." And he lived himself to see uncovered those great cement highways and cement buildings down in Central and South America, vindicating the truth of the words in the Book of Mormon. How would Joseph Smith have dared to write such things when the book was published in 1830 if he had been the author of it?

And another of the statements contained in the Book of Mormon which President Grant's doctor friend did not believe was where the Savior appeared here in the land of America following his resurrection, and the account says that his voice was heard all over the land, and this doctor said: "You know that is not true, for no man's voice can carry more than a few hundred feet," and yet today, as we speak from this Tabernacle, the voice is going out for thousands and thousands of miles, so today we have lived to see the truth of that statement substantiated.

CONDITIONS FORETOLD

There is another statement in the Book of Mormon that, in my judgment, no man could have made at the time the Book of Mormon was published, with any degree of assurance that he was telling the truth, and that is the statement in Second Nephi with respect to the work of the devil. I want to read a few words from the 28th Chapter of Second Nephi:

For the kingdom of the devil must shake, and they which belong to it must needs be stirred up unto repentance, or the devil will grasp them with his everlasting chains, and they be stirred up to anger, and perish;

For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger, against that which is good.

And others he will pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say: All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well—and thus the devil cheateth their souls and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell; and he saith unto them: I am no devil, for there is none—and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance. (II Nephi 28:19-22.)

I doubt if there was a Christian minister in all the world who would have said there was no devil at the time the Book of Mormon was published in 1830, and yet when a questionnaire was sent out by the Northwestern University School of Religion in 1934 to five hundred Christian ministers, of the five hundred, fifty-four percent, or two hundred and seventy of them, said: "There is no devil." Thirty-nine percent, or one hundred and ninety-five, said there would be no judgment day; and eighty percent were opposed to teaching that hell was a place of burning.

SATAN DECEIVES WORLD

If the world could just get rid of the devil, probably it would be a different world. They little realize how much his influence and power is being felt, for, in the words of Isaiah: He decreed that he would exalt his throne above the stars of God, that he would become like unto the Most High. John, the Revelator, saw the history of this world from its beginning, when there was war in heaven, and he saw Satan with a third of the hosts of heaven cast down upon this earth, and he saw that he should deceive the whole world.

This does not leave very many out, and after listening to the brethren today we realize that we must be very careful if we are not going to be deceived, and in the words of the Book of Mormon:

... he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance. (Idem.)

You remember the experience the Savior had when he went out in the wilderness and found a man possessed of the devil. No one needed to introduce the Savior because they had known each other in the spirit world; since Satan brought with him the knowledge he had there, he said in substance: "Why hast thou come to persecute us before our time, O Jesus, thou Son of the Most High?" (See Mark, 5:7-13.)

And then you remember the conversation that ensued and how the Savior cast him out, and he asked his name, and he said: "Legion," because many spirits had entered into the body of this man, and at their request, Jesus permitted them to enter the bodies of the swine, and the swine ran off into the river and were drowned.

EXPERIENCES IN HOLLAND

I would like to relate an experience I had with two of my missionary companions in Amsterdam, Holland. We went into a home for dinner. The mother was not a member of the Church; her son and daughter were. As we finished our meal, I asked her how it was she had never joined the Church. "Well," she said, "President Richards" (I was then president of the mission), "I find it too hard to live. I just could not keep the Word of Wisdom."

I began to explain to her that the Lord did not give us the Word of Wisdom to deprive us of anything that we ought to have or that was good for us but to protect us against the destructive elements that would destroy the vitality of our bodies, and with that a spirit took possession of her, and instead of the sweet, lovely soul that she was, she began to roll her eyes and looked up at me and in the most sneering voice I have ever been addressed in in my life, said: "Who are you?"

I replied: "I am a servant of the Lord."

Then she turned to her daughter and said: "And who are you?" She answered: "I am the daughter of the house."

Then she turned to me again and asked the same question, and when I replied that I was a servant of the Lord, she said: "So, if you are a servant of the Lord then I have nothing to do here."

With that I called my companions. We laid our hands upon her head. We rebuked the evil spirits. We commanded them to depart from her and that house, and she fell limp on the floor. We carried her in on the bed, and after giving her a drink, in a short time she was her natural self again. The daughter told us that her mother and father had come to America some years previous, and they had something to do with spiritualism here, and she said: "Now the spirits come and annoy her in the night, knocking on the wall until she cannot sleep."

We had another friend in The Hague in Holland tell us that because he had interested himself in spiritualism, if he went to bed at night without praying, the spirits would literally lift him out of his bed and make him kneel down and pray.

There is not time to discuss this matter further, but I want to tell you that there is a spirit of the evil one in this world and he is trying to destroy the souls of men and gather them into his net, and he is trying to do it with our young people.

I would like to read a few words from an article that appeared in one of our recent magazines to show how the devil, whispering in their ears, tries to lead men and women away and ensnare them in his net, as Nephi says.

CHASTITY

I will read the first paragraph of the article entitled "Is Chastity Outmoded?"

Today we talk about sex with an unembarrassed frankness that would have filled our grandparents with amazement and horror. This new liberty in speech has its counterpart in behavior. In many circles the traditional restraints in sex conduct are considered stuffy and out of fashion. Chastity, say many modern people, is outmoded. (Woman's Home Companion, Sept. 1949.)

What in the world could the devil, the enemy of all righteousness, desire more than to make our young people think that chastity is outmoded? To accomplish this, he must make them believe there is no devil, and that there is no hell or judgment day. Thus "he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance."

Now I want to quote from another recent magazine article entitled "The Mistake." This article tells of a boy and girl who made a mistake the night of their graduation from high school, which mistake was followed by the birth of a baby. I want to read the last paragraph of that article which shows how Satan whispered in their ears that everything could be covered up, but how they found through their own experience that this was not true, because he is the father of all lies.

"I'm sorry, darling, for everything."

"Don't be," he said, "we're in it together, and we'll get out of it together."

But later upstairs, long after he was asleep, long after the house and street outside were quiet, Janet turned her head and buried her face in the pillow to stifle the sound the sobs made. Because it wasn't true, as people had said, that you could make a mistake and pay for it. You made a mistake and then you settled down, as she and Ken were doing, to live with it for all the rest of your life.

I read an article in the newspaper at the close of the war, indicating that in Germany there were thirteen thousand illegitimate babies whose fathers were American boys!

Do you believe that in the eternal worlds those boys will ever be able to forgive themselves for having brought sons and daughters into this world — their own flesh and blood — for whom they have never claimed fatherhood and for whom they have never discharged their duty as fathers? We should remember the words of the Prophet Alma to his son Corianton, and teach them to our children:

Know ye not, my son, that these things are an abomination in the sight of the Lord; yea, most abominable above all sins save it be the shedding of innocent blood or denying the Holy Ghost? (Alma 39:5.)

Now, brothers and sisters, Satan is working every way he can to get us to disobey the commandments of God, and I tell you he would have every man and every woman profaning; he would have them all living immoral lives; he would have them disregard every commandment of the Lord if he could, in order that he might do what he had decreed to do, exalt his throne above the stars of God, and become like unto the Most High.

May God help us to recognize the power of evil in the world and to shun it and to serve the living God, I pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER HAROLD B. LEE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I have rejoiced with you this afternoon at the excellence of the addresses which have been delivered, and I pray that for these few moments I may be strengthened by your faith and prayers.

In President George Albert Smith's opening remarks this morning he made reference to the two great forces contending in the world today with the human soul as the prize, and he admonished the Latter-day Saints to stay "on the Lord's side."

POWER OF EVIL

I was reminded of that as the brethren have spoken, particularly Bishop Richards, of the power of evil extant in the world today, and some evidences of that power. As I thought of that, I have remembered that in the life of the boy-prophet, Joseph Smith, before he was given the outbursting of two of the greatest revelations that have ever been given to man, both of those revelations were preceded by a demonstration of the power of evil,—in the Sacred Grove, and on the Hill Cumorah. It seemed to have been necessary that the Prophet was to understand the nature and power of that force in order that he could be prepared to contend successfully against it.

The Master, just before his crucifixion, in fact, it was immediately after the Last Supper, after Satan had entered into Judas Iscariot, as the scriptures record, as he received the sop from the Savior and departed to the place of the betrayal, the Master then proceeded to converse with the other eleven. Whether this took place as he stood at the table or on their way to the place of the betrayal or in the temple, we have no definite way of knowing, but in that conversation the Master gave expression to this significant statement:

Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me. (John 14:30.)

That statement, which is the quotation from the King James Version, is given more significance by the Prophet Joseph in the Inspired Version when he quoted it thus:

. . . the prince of darkness, who is of this world, cometh, but hath no power over me, but he hath power over you.

SATAN'S DOMINION

In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, his preface to his commandments in this dispensation, the Lord said this, making it still clearer as to the nature of this force of evil:

For I am no respecter of persons, and will that all men shall know that the time speedily cometh; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the devil shall have power over his own dominion. (D. & C. 1:35.)

Satan's dominion, as the Lord has further explained, was the dominion of those who do wickedly in and throughout the world. Bishop Richards has called attention to the fact of the disbelief among many in such a being as Satan, and he has shown us that such disbelievers, without their knowing it, are but giving fulfilment to a prophecy uttered twenty-five hundred years ago to the effect that such disbelief and denial of the existence of hell and Satan would be one of the things which would come in this latter day.

Satan, or the devil, is known by various terms. He is called the dragon; he is called the serpent; he is called perdition; he is called Lucifer; and he is called the adversary or the prince of darkness. After an encounter with Moses with this master of darkness, the Lord appeared and told Moses who Satan was, that he was one of the sons of God who came to Elohim with a proposition before this world was that would have destroyed the agency of man. Satan was cast out with all those who followed after him, and they became those striving in this earth in a further effort to destroy the agency of man.

POWERS OF DARKNESS

In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith the Lord said that Satan drew after him a third part of the spirits whom God created, and that they with Satan became the force in the world to try to destroy the work of righteousness. That power was spoken of by Isaiah in a vision which he received which he called a grievous vision, in which it was said: "Set a watchman on the tower to tell what he seeth and report the coming of horsemen and chariots," but a voice spoke out of Mount Seir saying, "Watchman, what of the night." (See Isaiah 21:6-11.) "Watchman, what of the night," suggesting that, more to be feared than the enemies that could be perceived with the physical senses or could be seen by physical eyes were the powers of darkness that came unseen by physical eyes.

That same thought was in the mind of the Master, no doubt, when he said:

And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. (Matthew 10:28.)

The Apostle Paul seemed to understand very clearly this same power when he declared:

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. (Eph. 6:12.)

IMPORTANCE OF DEFENSES

Using words that are common to modern warfare, we might say that there are in the world today fifth columnists who are seeking to infiltrate the defenses of every one of us, and when we lower those defenses, we open avenues to an invasion of our souls. There are carefully charted on the maps of the opposition the weak spots in every one of us. They are known to the forces of evil, and just the moment we lower the defense of any one of those ports, that becomes the D Day of our invasion, and our souls are in danger.

The experiences and the examples of many cases recited in testimonies in this and other dispensations of the gospel seem clearly to indicate that whenever we allow ourselves to become doubtful, bitter in our souls, melancholy, and otherwise downcast, or despondent, we open avenues to the forces which are ready to take us in a snare just the moment these weaknesses are discovered in us.

POWER OF GOD IN WEAKNESS

With these things clearly understood and taught by the scriptures, it seems that we should do well today to look to ourselves as leaders and members of the Church of Jesus Christ. The Lord has told us in the scriptures that Satan is an enemy of all righteousness; because of that fact, those who are standing in high places in our Father's kingdom will become the objects of his attacks. You may well expect, as the Apostle Paul understood, that you who preside in the various places in our Father's kingdom will be subject to the devil's onslaughts. The Apostle Paul said this:

And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan of buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me. (II Cor. 12:7-9.)

So it is with you who in Zion preside in the various places. Sometimes there is given infirmity, difficulty, hardship upon you to try your souls; and the powers of Satan seem to be enrolled against you, watching and trying to break down your powers of resistance; but your weakness, through those infirmities, will give you the power of God that shall rest upon you even as the Apostle Paul was reconciled and comforted by the thought that through his trials the power of God might rest upon him.

SATAN'S ABILITY TO DECEIVE

Satan has been said to have the power to transform himself into an angel of light; and because of that ability to transform himself, the Apostle Paul asked the Corinthians:

Do you think it is any great thing that his ministers can likewise transform themselves into ministers of righteousness (see II Cor. 11:15), in order that they might lead the children of men astray. Because of Satan's ability thus to cleverly deceive, the Lord has given us a key in the scriptures by which we may be able to detect him when he comes presenting himself as that angel of light. And so we are told to be constantly on guard against these things.

Moroni said it is as easy as it is to tell the darkness from the daylight to discover evil from righteousness, for, "the devil persuadeth men continually to do evil and to believe not in Christ, but to deny him, and to serve not God nor keep his commandments. And he persuadeth no man to do good, neither his angels, neither do they who subject themselves unto him." (See Moroni 7:16-17.)

ARMOR OF GOD

Because of that power of evil which is so strong in the world today, the great teacher to the Gentiles declared:

Put on the whole armour of God, that ye might be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, in an evil day. (Eph 6:11.)

But he taught a remarkable lesson. He pictured each of us as a man of armor, clothed on various strategic points of his body with an armor that would protect him against the onslaughts of evil. He said: "Have a girdle around your loins," suggesting the very thing which Bishop Richards has spoken to us about, that one of the avenues by which he finds most easy to overthrow humankind is unchastity. So the Apostle Paul admonished that we have a girdle around our loins.

We are counseled to put on the breastplate of righteousness over our hearts, suggesting that our conduct in life should always be right and proper. Have our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, or in other words, our objectives, the goal we set out to achieve in life be in harmony with the gospel of peace; and have on the helmet of salvation and take the shield of faith and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God. Thus armored, we are now prepared with the weapons common to the warfare of Paul's day, comparable to those things which we would have in similar way upon us today, to attack and to fight successfully and to win this battle in which the forces of evil and the forces of righteousness are contending today.

EXPERIENCE WITH POWER OF EVIL

I want to bear you my solemn witness that I know there are such forces in the world today. It would seem to me somewhat significant as I have thought about it, that the first and only experience of its kind I ever had, came shortly after I came into the Council of the Twelve when I was asked to administer to a young woman who was possessed of an evil spirit. Seemingly, there might have been a purpose in letting me know that these powers were around. In this experience, as I was challenged by the evil spirit, the hairs on my head felt as though pin pricks were in every hair and coursing down my body. I knew in that experience the power of evil, and I knew again the superior power of the priesthood and the powers of the Living God. I came on that occasion to understand what the Savior admonished in his day to his disciples when he said: "The prince of the darkness which is of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me."

He was trying to impress upon his disciples likewise that Satan would come to each of them with cunning, temptation and deceit. Latter-day Saints, the prince of darkness which is of this world cometh among us today. He is knocking without the door of every one of us, of you and me and all who bear the names within themselves of the gospel of Jesus Christ, of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and I pray God that he may find nothing in us, and will go away and let us alone.

I bear you my testimony that I know these powers are in the world and I know the powers of the gospel of Jesus Christ are sufficient to thwart these powers of darkness. God give us strength and understanding sufficient to our day, to help us to live worthy of the callings to which we have been called and be able successfully to assail these powers of darkness, and to win in this greatest of all combats known in the world today. I pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The Presiding Bishopric will meet the bishoprics of the Church here at the Tabernacle this evening at 7 o'clock. Members of all bishoprics, their ward clerks, assistant ward clerks, stake and ward supervisors of ward teaching, and all ward teachers, stake Aaronic Priesthood committees, ward Aaronic Priesthood general secretaries, quorum advisers, stake and ward committees for adult members of the Aaronic Priesthood, and the high council member advisers to the program for Latter-day Saint girls are requested to attend. The stake presidencies and all high councilors are invited. We ought to have a good meeting.

Any important calls and messages that may have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds.

As has been already announced, the choir music for these two sessions today has been furnished by the Singing Mothers from the Jordan Valley Region and the four stakes in Provo under the direction of Sister Madsen, Brother Frank W. Asper at the organ. Brother J. Spencer Cornwall has led us in the congregational singing.

We would like to extend to Sister Madsen and her excellent chorus our deepest and sincerest gratitude for the splendid music which they have furnished, not only at this conference but at conferences which have preceded this, and to express the hope that she and her group may be spared yet a long time to entertain us and build us up with their splendid music.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers will now sing, "Send Out Thy Light." The closing prayer will be offered by President Vivian B. Coon of the Oquirrh Stake, after which the conference will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Saturday, October 1.

The proceedings of that session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the other stations to which you are now listening and will be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

Tomorrow morning the audience will please be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the time of beginning.

Singing by the Relief Society Singing Mothers, "Send Out Thy Light."

The benediction was offered by President Vivian B. Coon of the Oquirrh Stake.

SECOND DAY MORNING MEETING

Conference reconvened at 10:00 a.m. Saturday, October 1, 1949.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. presided at this session of the conference and President David O. McKay, at the request of President George Albert Smith, who was at home, resting, conducted the services.

The singing during this session was by the congregation, Elder Richard P. Condie conducting.

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

After having a very strenuous day yesterday, President Smith deems it advisable to rest at home and his brethren have urged him so to do. He has requested that David O. McKay conduct the services.

This is the third session of the 120th semi-annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The General Authorities all are present except Elder Alma Sonne of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European Mission; Elder Thomas E. McKay, one of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is at home convalescing from a very severe recent illness; and President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of the Seventy, who is in charge of the New England Mission.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJAM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise. This session will be broadcast by delayed transcription over KTXO at Grand Junction and KTYL at Mesa. It will also be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

As announced yesterday, any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone will do well to listen carefully to such announcements as something may be of importance to some of you.

The singing during this morning's session will be by the congregation, Elder Richard P. Condie conducting and Elder Roy M. Darley at the organ.

We will begin the morning services by the congregation singing, "O Ye Mountains High," after which the opening prayer will be offered by President L. Tom Perry of Cache Stake.

The congregation sang the hymn, "O Ye Mountains High."

The opening prayer was offered by President L. Tom Perry of the Cache Stake.

The congregation sang the hymn, "I Know That My Redeemer Lives."

ELDER JOHN A. WIDTSOE

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren and sisters, I trust and pray that while I speak I may be guided by the Holy Spirit of God, that some of my words at least may touch the hearts of some of those who listen.

It is good to meet in these great conferences. Thousands of us are of one mind, of one faith, of one purpose. It is always good to bear witness to the reality of the restoration of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I bear that witness for myself that this is indeed the work of God, that we are not following a mistaken path, but that we are walking in the light of truth, and that more than one hundred years of existence of this Church of the restoration have demonstrated the truth, the integrity, and the reality of the work begun under divine direction by the Prophet Joseph.

A GREAT HERITAGE

We have a great heritage, we Latter-day Saints, a heritage of doctrine, of practice, of tradition. I know of none like it. Just as these conferences coming every six months stand out as unique in the history of the world, so that which we have inherited from those who have gone before us is equally unique and distinctive. It is our duty to respect this heritage, to honor it, and to use it. Things that are not used are dead. They are of little or no value to human kind. It is only by use that knowledge and all the possessions of mankind blossom into life and become of real value.

If this were a testimony meeting, there are thousands here who would bear witness to their knowledge of the truth of this work. A testimony is a living thing. Like all living things it must be fed and nourished and cared for if it is really to be of service and value in human life and in carrying out the purposes of the Lord. So the heritage, that which has been given us, must be used to become effective in the building of God's kingdom.

We have noble traditions handed down from the past. My mind has been concerned for some time with one of these traditions. Some may say that this tradition is not spiritual, therefore not part of the gospel, but the Lord himself has said to some of his servants in early days that before him all things are spiritual, provided, as I understand it, they are used in the building of God's kingdom.

A LAND-LOVING PEOPLE

We Latter-day Saints are a land-loving people. We believe in the land. We are a land-using people. Most of us are farmers, directly or indirectly. Some few years ago—not many years ago—in a census then taken, approximately sixty-five percent, at least, of our people were engaged in agriculture, in tilling the soil, or in making use of the things that grow upon the mountains, in the valleys and on the deserts. That has given us strength. I hope that we as a people will not depart from that tradition. Those who own the land and use it in the end will determine the future of mankind. It will not come from those who work in the factories or who live in crowded cities; from those whose feet are planted upon the land will come the great determining factors in shaping human destiny. It has been so in the past. It will be so in the future. We Latter-day Saints must ever remember the sanctity and the holiness of the land given us by the Father. There is safety in the land.

NEW INDUSTRIAL ERA

Most of us live in the western part of the United States. In all these western states, in Utah, the mother of them all, a new era is opening, an industrial era. Nature has laid down in these western territories large quantities of raw materials, many, most of them perhaps, of a non-metallic character. These deposits will be used more and more in the future. There will be a reaching out to supply the needs of mankind by the use of these raw materials, of which great deposits have been laid down by nature throughout the centuries. I am afraid a good many of us will be tempted to say, "I'll join the industrial procession. I will forget the land." This industrial era is welcomed. There's no question about that; but as it arises, we must keep our minds steadily upon the old established tradition that we are a land-loving and land-using people. We must remember that industry itself thrives best in the midst of an agricultural community. Witness the social troubles of today in our own land. Analyze them, and you soon discover that if we had built, as the Saints a century ago wanted us to build, we would have escaped many of the troubles, chiefly by giving heed to the call of the land.

STRENGTH FROM SOIL

When Joseph Smith laid out his ideal city many years ago, he planned it so that while the farms would all be around the city, every homestead would have a kitchen garden in the rear of the house and a flower garden in front. There was tremendous wisdom in that. Men, no matter what their work may be, or what their daily callings may require of them, if steadily and vigorously they touch the soil, be it ever so lightly or ever so small an acreage, perhaps a back yard, will receive from that contact spiritual strength. There is something in the soil and mother earth that gives strength to all who make things grow on the land.

One great man in our history, Henry Ford, sensing this thing, undertook some years ago to make arrangements by which all the employees of one of his factories might be provided with homes surrounded by a little acreage, on which the owners might toil or play throughout the year, and thereby take away the monotony that follows work in a factory. The plan has only partially been carried out as yet, but thinking men are looking in that direction for social safety.

Some years ago, at the time of the first great war, we undertook in Salt Lake City, in common with other cities, to raise all the food-stuff we could on vacant lots and in the back yards of the city. We were not successful in converting all of them to small farms, but quite a number were so converted. When the season was over and we took an inventory of what we had done, we found that six hundred thousand dollars worth of food had been raised in the back yards and vacant lots of Salt Lake City. That was a real contribution to our war needs in those days.

RECLAMATION OF LAND

Our young people often say, "There is no more land, none for us." To my office come quite regularly men, usually young men, who want to know where to go to find new land. There is much land still available in the west. We can make more if we want to, for nearly all of these western states lie under irrigation. I trust you of Utah will not feel embarrassed when I tell you that the water now used in the state of Utah could be made to serve twice the area now being served. We have it in our own power, with the canals and reservoirs and conditions that exist today, to double the area of cultivated land in this state alone. The same holds true in nearly all the western states. Moreover, it is a pity that the hundreds of pioneer irrigation projects in this and neighboring states, built by the pioneers in their poverty, with their small means and poor tools, remain unfinished. In the state of Utah alone we have hundreds of pioneer irrigation projects waiting for modern pioneers to finish them with modern appliances, modern means. That is the challenge of the pioneer spirit to young and old. We are fixing our eyes too much upon the great projects. They will come, but meanwhile the little projects scattered all over this western country should be our first obligation as individuals, as communities. The states and federal government will and must take care of the larger ones.

FERTILITY OF SOIL

I have noticed also, to my sorrow throughout a rather long life now, that the fertility of our soils seems to be diminishing. Our crop yields are not what they were some years ago, using the same kind of methods as we used then. There seems to be a diminution. That is not the way we should preserve our heritage. When the pioneers came into the west, they found great areas of land made fertile by centuries of sunshine, wind, and rain, frost, and summer heat. Plant food lay upon the top of the soil, so to speak. We have used it, but have not paid back what we have taken from the land. In spiritual and in temporal matters the law of paying for what man gets is ever uppermost.

You farmers who are here, you children of farmers, you understand what I mean. The soil is a willing servant. It yields to the farmer if the farmer treats it right. Forty-nine or fifty years ago this last June I visited the great Rothamsted Agricultural Experiment Station, the mother of the hundreds of experiment stations in the world. The head of the station kindly spent a day with me. He took me to a rolling hill, rather two hills with a valley between, and showed me about ten strips of the same crop, originally, then in full blossom. One was red, another blue, and still another yellow, each one bearing a different color. As we stood admiring the scene in the beautiful English June sunshine, he said, "All that has come because we have asked the soil to do certain things in a certain way, and the soil has responded. That which we started with has disappeared under the influence of our culture." Nearby, was another field where wheat had been grown continuously for fifty years. The soil still tried its best to do its duty, but there was only a small yield. In a nearby field, properly handled, the wheat stood high, comparable with the best.

Man has control over the earth. The Lord has given us mastery. We are not servants upon the face of the earth. We should use that mastery to preserve our heritage. This theme may not be directly spiritual, but it is important to help us in our spiritual lives, perhaps as important as anything that we give our attention to as a people.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES

I rejoice at the testimonies borne here today and yesterday. I have enjoyed them very much. I have been thrilled by them. I could see running through the talks the age-old principles that have made us what we are today, a great people, new witnesses of Christ. I saw in the talks the foundation stones of this work here mentioned one after the other by those who spoke yesterday. Faith has always been the most important cornerstone of our lives in the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is basic to know that God lives, that the story of Joseph Smith is true, that the Lord loves us, and has a great destiny for us. Every speaker touched upon that. Another foundation stone is that we must seek intelligence, education, learning, knowledge. I was thrilled by the quotation made by President [Levi Edgar] Young yesterday, showing how the early hard-handed farmers of middle age or beyond gathered after the day's toil to study Latin, Greek, and subjects of the mind. We must not forsake the tradition of education. Our fathers set up also the doctrine of industry. There is no place for idleness. The idler, the deliberate idler, has no real place in the kingdom of God. All these principles have been bound together by another foundation stone, helping one another, which we call in modern language "cooperation." We cannot be individual members of the Church sufficient unto ourselves. The very fact of membership in the Church and our testimonies compel us to think of our neighbor as we go through life. With these guiding principles: faith, education, industry, and cooperation, with our feet firmly on the land, we are safe. Disaster cannot overtake us.

Now these principles and others were mentioned yesterday. They are always mentioned. There is nothing new in the age-old gospel taught by the Lord to Father Adam when the story of man upon this earth began.

I am grateful to be a member of this Church, to be one with you. I trust I am one with you. I am grateful for the blessings that flow to those who are faithful in this great work. May we all be faithful and worthy of the blessings we need and desire, I pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER CLIFFORD E. YOUNG

Assistant to the Council of the Twelve

I sincerely trust, my brethren and sisters, that what I may say may be prompted by the inspiration of the Lord. I repeat again what I have said sometimes before, it is always an overwhelming thing for me to stand before you, and yet we Latter-day Saints have so much in common that, because of the vastness of our assembly, we should not unnecessarily be disturbed; but somehow or other as one stands here, it is impossible to overcome this feeling.

I read something the other day that is encouraging. Someone said that a person's brain was a most marvelous mechanism, that it begins to work at one's birth and never stops until one stands up and attempts to speak in public.

PRACTICAL RELIGION

I appreciate very much the remarks of Brother Widtsoe. There is something about our theology, our religion, that is so practical, and of course it necessarily must be so. Mormonism is a practical religion. Indeed no religion is of much value unless it has a practical application.

Last winter some of us had a rather unusual experience. We were coming from the East on a train of luxury. We had left Chicago in the afternoon, having all the comforts that one could desire, in fact more than one needed—warmth, plenty of food; the train was almost a palace, and we were riding at ease, feeling so secure. The next morning we found ourselves in the throes of a blizzard, snowbound. That night the heat was off in the train, and by the next morning there was no food. For some time it was too cold to leave the train because of the intense blizzard. Later we found shelter in some railroad houses where we had some heat. The blizzard continued until the third day when it eased enough so that the railroad company could procure planes from Fort Warren, the military base near Cheyenne, and food could be brought in by airplanes. Even then we did not get much of it because the gale was so severe that the food was scattered to the four winds. But it brought home this realization: we may be secure today and yet suddenly be placed in a position of want. These things can happen so suddenly that it behooves us to be on our guard constantly, to be always in a position to follow those who counsel us as to what we should do in these important matters.

We have been told of the great growth of the welfare plan, and we are proud of it. As one views the welfare films which depict the marvelous growth of this agency in the Church, one cannot help sensing a deep feeling of pride, gratitude for the blessings that we enjoy as Latter-day Saints; that we belong to a Church that is practical; that when we pray for the needy and those who may be in want, we not only pray but we also do something about it. Our people are a praying people. We should be a praying people, but we cannot accomplish much, my brothers and sisters, at least that has been my experience, by just sitting or kneeling down and praying, and then doing nothing about it. The Lord never intended that.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED

In the very beginning of the Church, the Prophet Joseph had to work. The Lord gave him a task that was seemingly insurmountable. He revealed the sacred record, the Book of Mormon, and instructed him to translate it. When you recall the fact that here was an unlearned youth with no schooling, no education in the light of what we today call education, who was given a sacred record and told to translate it and that God would help him, it becomes one of the most challenging things that we have in Church history. Consider the fact that the Book of Mormon contains a vocabulary of over five thousand different words (the Bible has a little over four thousand.) Think of the magnitude of the task! The Lord expects his servants to work. He expects us to work, and here he was teaching the Prophet Joseph something fundamental in this Church. When the Pioneers came out here, these valleys were not made to blossom as the rose by the people's merely kneeling down and praying. They had to do something about it. The Lord expected it, and they did do something about it.

I remember reading a statement of Emerson Hough, made after he had visited southern Utah. When he saw what had been accomplished in the building of a canal on the Rio Virgin through the solid rock, it was a challenge to him. The desert was made literally to blossom as the rose. And when he saw it and learned that the men had been called on the job through an announcement of the bishop in a Sabbath day meeting—a request for men and teams with their scrapers and wagons—they had no mechanized machinery in those days—and those men responded and for their pay received shares in the irrigation canal—when Emerson Hough saw all this and learned the story, he said, “Only a Mormon bishop could accomplish such a thing.”

PRAYER AND WORKS

We are proud, my brothers and sisters, that the Lord has established this practice among us, and it is a glorious privilege and a blessing for all of us that when we pray for those who are in need, we have something with which we can help the Lord to answer our prayers. I do not want to be misunderstood in this. I know that the Lord can hear and answer our prayers, but he does not always answer them in the way we would like to have them answered. He answers them in his way, and in a way that gives strength and character to his people, gives faith to them.

My father was a physician. I recall one time going with him to administer to someone who was very ill, and I remember his counsel. After father had administered to this brother, he gave him some advice saying: “Now, you do these things, and they will help you to get well,” and the brother said: “Well, Brother Young, can’t the Lord heal me?” Father said: “Of course the Lord can heal you, but the Lord has given us ways and means that will help us to be healed, and he expects us to use them.”

FAITH OF DR. MIDDLETON

I recall another occasion that came into the experience of Sister Young and me when our only boy was seriously ill. At that time peritonitis was generally fatal. This boy had had it for several days, and it appeared to be a hopeless case. The surgeon, the late Dr. George W. Middleton, who operated on the boy, removed what little of his appendix he could. He remained with us all night, and the next morning told us that we should prepare for the worst. I pay tribute to Dr. Middleton. He was a man of great faith. Those who knew him knew that he had faith. Sometimes he was regarded as too liberal in his thinking, but he did have faith in the providence and the priesthood of the Almighty. Finally he said: “Let us administer to this boy.” I anointed him, and I recall the substance of Dr. Middleton’s sealing prayer. “Father,” he said, “we have done all that we can for this boy. We ask thee now with thy divine power to touch him and to heal him and to sanctify to his good the things that we in our weak way have done.” That prayer stimulated faith. The Lord healed our boy.

NECESSITY OF WORK

It is a glorious privilege, my brethren and sisters, to belong to this Church, a Church that is practical. We have great spiritual powers. These practical things have the elements of spirituality about them.

Anyone who knew anything about the Prophet Brigham Young knew that he was spiritual, that he had unlimited faith, but with it all he realized that his people had to work and had to struggle for what they received, and he inspired the people to provide for themselves. It is said on one occasion that President Young was in a meeting where the brethren were discussing some theological subjects, a meeting that had been called in Nauvoo while the temple was being built. President Young arose and said: "If you will excuse me, I should like to go and work on the temple." It is a striking example of work where work is necessary.

Now we are faced today with some rather serious problems, and I say to you that we will be grateful before we are through that we have within this Church those elements that teach us to provide and to help the Lord to provide for the things for which we pray, and when we pray for those who are in need, we are prepared to help the Lord in answering those prayers.

SPIRITUAL NEEDS

Now, there is another phase of it. We frequently pray for those who mourn and who are bowed down with sorrow, and that is as it should be, but we have the same elements of comfort in the operation of the Holy Priesthood. We are constantly urging our brethren and sisters to visit our people and to administer to them in their spiritual needs. That is another practical way of carrying out some of the teachings that we hold dear. Our ward teachers and our Relief Society teachers have a charge to bring comfort to those who are less fortunate than we and who may be spiritually bowed down, who may be lacking in the things that feed the soul. We can bring comfort to them and help them in their problems.

I repeat that I am not unmindful that sometimes the Lord does not always answer the prayers the way we would like to have them, but he does answer them the way they should be. At times we may need physical blessings, and we do not always receive them, but we receive spiritual blessings and those spiritual blessings help us to make adjustments and to feel that no matter what is, it will be right if we are in tune with the Holy Spirit. The Lord does not expect us to be selfish about it. He expects us to acknowledge his hand, and then we shall be prepared for whatever comes. That is the spirit of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and may God help us that we may always have it. I am grateful to you, my brethren and sisters, for your association, for the strength that I feel as I visit among you in your stakes. I am grateful for my brethren with whom I am associated, for their loving kindness and for their faith. I am grateful to the Lord for his goodness to me. I pray that we may never fail in acknowledging him and in doing the things that we should do to further his work temporally and spiritually, and I humbly ask it in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MILTON R. HUNTER

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My dear brethren and sisters, as I look into the faces of this vast congregation I feel indeed very humble. I ask our Father in heaven if he will direct the things I say.

DIVINITY OF JESUS CHRIST

Whenever I hear the song sung, "I Know that My Redeemer Lives," I thrill throughout my entire body. This morning I would like to bear testimony to the divinity of Jesus Christ and point out a few highlights of his great mission. I know as I know that I am standing here this morning—and I am certainly thoroughly convinced of that fact—that Jesus is the Christ, the Savior of the world, our Redeemer, our Lord, our Advocate with the Father, the Master of the plan of salvation, the Judge of this earth; and, in conjunction with the Father, he is our Lord, our God, and our King.

We read in modern revelation that Jesus Christ was and is our elder brother, the "Firstborn" unto the Father. We accept, as Latter-day Saints, the teachings of the prophets to the effect that Jesus of Nazareth was the Only Begotten Son of the Eternal Father in the flesh; therefore, the revelation I referred to points back to a previous birth, a birth in the spirit world. You and I were sons and daughters of our Eternal Parents in the spirit world. In fact, all the people in this world were of that family, and Jesus Christ was the Firstborn.

PRE-MORTAL LIFE

During his pre-mortal life Jesus Christ rose to the status of Godhood. At that time he was foreordained to be the Savior of this world. Father Abraham was privileged to see in vision the grand council in heaven that was held prior to the peopling of this earth, and he saw, as the Lord showed him, "many of the noble and great ones." The Lord pointed out:

These I will make my rulers. . . . Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born. (Abraham 3:23.)

Joseph Smith tells us that at that grand council the head God of all the Gods called the council, and the purpose was to present a plan whereby his children were to come into mortal earth and have the experience of mortality and then return back into the presence of God. The Eternal Father explained to his children that mortal beings would forget their pre-mortal experiences and the gospel truths after they had come from the presence of God and, therefore, they would have to have a Savior in order that they might be taught the Gospel truths again. He also declared that they would not have the power to break the bands of death and bring about resurrection and that they would have to have a Savior for that purpose also.

As he explained these things, he asked whom he should send to be the Savior. Abraham saw that there stood one in the midst of the group in the grand council in heaven "like unto God." That one answered and said: "Here am I, send me." He said that he would come down to this earth and give men their free agency and they who keep their second estate shall have glory added upon their heads for ever and ever (Abraham 3:26.)

And they who keep their first estate shall be added upon; . . .

and all the honor and the glory should go to the Father.

MISSION OF JESUS CHRIST

Abraham saw that the Eternal Father was very pleased with this one like unto him and said that he would send him. At that time he ordained Jesus Christ, we say "foreordained" him, for his great mission. He ordained him to be the first great high priest over this earth and gave unto him the keys of the priesthood. God gave the Only Begotten the same power that he the Eternal Father enjoyed, the power to do all of the works of the Father with and for the Father. Elohim named that priesthood after his Only Begotten Son. In the relationship to this earth, it was to be called

... the Holy Priesthood, after the Order of the Son of God. (D. & C. 107:3.)

It bore that name among mortals down to the time of Abraham and Melchizedek.

The Eternal Father also told his Son that he would name the plan of salvation after him. Thereupon he named it the gospel of Jesus Christ. And on that occasion an eternal decree went forth from the throne of God that there would be no other name given under heaven whereby mankind could be saved, save the name of Jesus Christ. With that eternal decree going forth, we know that the true Church must bear that name throughout all ages.

There are two great factors in atonement or in the assignment given to the Savior. One was to break the bands of death and give every man immortality, i.e., resurrection. The other was to teach a gospel plan whereby if you and I and all other mortals would render obedience, we would not only receive immortality, but we would be also brought back into the presence of God. There we would receive exaltation along with him, sharing with our Father and his Only Begotten Son all the same type of glory, power, honor, and happiness that they enjoy.

GOSPEL PLAN REVEALED

Shortly after Adam and Eve became mortal beings, or at that time, Jesus Christ began his active mission upon this earth as the Savior of this world, as a mediator between the heavens and the earth, as the one to bring the gospel to mankind; in other words, he began his work to bring about the atonement. He did so by revealing to Father Adam and Mother Eve the gospel plan of salvation. As they had passed into mortality, a veil had been drawn over their minds, as the Lord had predicted would be; therefore, they had become spiritually dead; i. e., they forgot their pre-mortal experiences and the gospel doctrines and were banished from the presence of God. They became spiritually alive by applying the message that they received from their Savior. During Adam's period and throughout Old Testament days, Jesus was known as Jehovah. He spoke at times to Adam from the Garden of Eden. At times he appeared to the first man, and on other occasions he sent angels to teach the father of the human family eternal truths, until Adam had a fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, just the same as you and I as Latter-day Saints enjoy a fulness of the gospel in our dispensation. On one occasion, after Adam had been commanded to offer sacrifices, this particular event occurred. To quote:

And after many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying: Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

And then the angel spake, saying: This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.

Wherefore, thou do all thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore. (Moses 5:6-8.)

SALVATION THROUGH JESUS

Shortly after that event occurred, the voice of the Lord came to Adam, as is recorded in The Pearl of Great Price, and told him that in the Meridian of Time that his Only Begotten would come into the world, would live and teach man how to live, would die and break the bands of death, and bring about the atonement. And then the voice of God pointed out to Adam that the name of his Only Begotten would be

. . . Jesus Christ, the only name which shall be given under heaven, whereby salvation shall come to the children of men. (Moses 6:52.)

Therefore even in the beginning, in the first dispensation of the gospel, that same eternal decree went forth that the name of Jesus Christ would be the one whereby you and I could expect salvation, or even more than that, exaltation in the kingdom of God.

Following the days of Adam, Jesus Christ continued to serve as the mediator between the heavens and the earth by revealing the gospel to the numerous prophets during the various gospel dispensations. On a number of occasions he even appeared to some of the great prophets.

EARTHLY MISSION

Finally, as the holy prophets had predicted, in the Meridian of Time Jesus Christ came into this world. Latter-day Saints accept the doctrine that he was actually and literally the Son, heir in the flesh, of God the Eternal Father. He was born of the Virgin Mary. He was the only man in this life who was born into mortality of the Eternal Father. As I have already stated, you and I are all sons and daughters of God in the spirit world, but Christ's mortal birth, being actually the Son of God, gave him that extra power of godliness needed to be the Savior of the world. In other words, being the Only Begotten gave him power to be the one to break the bands of death. Thus he was endowed by the Father with power within himself over life and death. Also, he is the only perfect man who ever lived, showing us the way whereby you and I might become perfect if we will follow his example.

After living thirty-three years of that type of perfect life, three years of which were devoted to intensive missionary work, the Man of Galilee was crucified. Three days later he rose from the grave, as the prophets had foretold, thereby becoming the "first fruits" of the resurrection. He broke the bands of death and not only made it possible for all men to be resurrected, but he also made it absolutely necessary. No matter how righteously people live here in mortality or no matter how wickedly they live, every man, woman, and child is promised immortality, i.e., resurrection. They must come forth from the grave and stand before the seat of Jesus Christ to be judged for the actions they committed while they lived here on this earth.

CHURCH ORGANIZED

As Brother Benson very beautifully pointed out yesterday, while Christ was here living among mortals, he organized a church. It became a great church, especially in numbers. But, as Brother Benson pointed out, as time passed this church dropped into darkness. Thousands and thousands of pagans joined this church, and they brought into it their pet pagan practices, ideas, and doctrines, which were man-made and many of which were quite crude. Thus they mingled paganism with the teachings that the Savior had given, thereby adulterating Christianity. The result was the bringing about of what is known as the great apostasy. Naturally the Savior could not accept that adulterated church as his. Thereupon he withdrew his Holy Priesthood, leaving the world to grope in darkness for hundreds and hundreds of years.

RESTORATION OF GOSPEL

But the prophets had looked down through the stream of time and had predicted that in the latter days God would stretch forth his hand again to restore the gospel upon the earth; the gospel dispensation known as the Dispensation of the Fullness of Times, the day when all the ordinances, principles and doctrines, powers and priest-hoods that had been in the world from the beginning, would be restored preparatory to the coming of the Lord.

I bear solemn testimony, as have others here today, that that restoration took place approximately a hundred years ago. It began on that memorable spring morning in 1820 when the Prophet Joseph Smith went into the Sacred Grove to pray. In answer to that prayer, God the Eternal Father and his Only Begotten Son appeared to that boy-prophet in their glory. The Father pointed to the Son and said, "This is My Beloved Son. Hear him!" Thereupon Jesus Christ again took his rightful place as the Mediator between the Father and mankind, as the Savior of this world, by conversing with Joseph Smith and by telling him that the true Church was not upon the earth and that if he lived the right kind of life, he had been chosen and fore-ordained to be the instrument in the hands of God through which that Church would be established. Christ also told Joseph that the ministers ("professors") of the world drew near to God with their lips but their hearts were far from him; and that they were teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

FURTHER REVELATIONS

After this glorious vision had taken place, and I might say that it was one of the most glorious manifestations that has ever happened here upon this earth, Jesus of Nazareth continued to function in accordance with his appointment as the Savior of mankind by appearing to the Prophet several other times and also by sending great angels—men who had lived upon this earth in the past—to give to the Prophet Joseph Smith all the keys and powers and authority that had been enjoyed in other dispensations. Revelation after revelation came to the Prophet Joseph Smith until the fulness came, as had been predicted. On one of these occasions when Joseph Smith had the privilege of seeing a vision, the great revelation known as "The Vision," or "The Degrees of Glory," Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon looked into the three degrees of glory and also into perdition and recorded some of the things that are there. I would like to read a few words from Joseph's testimony:

And while we meditated upon these things, the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about.

And we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fulness;

And saw the holy angels, and them who are sanctified before his throne, worshipping God, and the Lamb, who worship him forever and ever.

And now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him, this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him: That he lives!

For we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father—

That by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God. (D. & C. 76:19-24.)

THE SECOND COMING

Latter-day Saints are looking forward to the day, as predicted by the prophets, when Jesus Christ shall come upon the earth to reign as the Lord of lords and the King of kings. We are looking forward to the day when this earth shall be cleansed of its wickedness, when righteousness shall prevail, and when children shall be born in righteousness and will grow up without sin. At that time they shall live, rear their children, and when they become the age of a tree pass from mortality into immortality in the twinkling of an eye.

At the time of the second coming of Jesus Christ to reign upon the earth as the Lord and God "the great and dreadful day of the Lord" will take place. It will be a great day for the righteous and a dreadful day for the wicked. The prophets predicted that at that day the earth "shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble;" also, "the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

We as members of the true Church are looking forward to that great day when Jesus Christ shall come to his own, and when the devil shall be bound for one thousand years and cease to have power, as was explained yesterday, that he does at the present time, over the hearts of the children of men. At the close of that one thousand years' time, the devil will be loosed for a short season, and wickedness will again prevail throughout the world. Then will come the day when Lucifer and all his evil hosts will be cast off this earth. They shall go into perdition and dwell as lost souls forever.

SANCTIFIED EARTH

At that day the earth shall be sanctified. It shall die, so the Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and be resurrected. It shall become a new world. It shall become the celestialized orb prepared for the members of "the Church of the Firstborn." Jesus Christ will judge all inhabitants of this earth. Those who have lived worthy lives from Adam's day on down to the end of the millennium will be assigned to dwell upon this earth forever, to dwell as celestialized beings with Jesus Christ; thus they will be assigned to their celestial glory. All who have inhabited this earth will stand before the judgment seat of Jesus Christ and will be assigned to their future world in which to live forever. Some will be assigned to terrestrial glory, some to celestial glory, and others even to perdition. Many Latter-day Saints will not attain the celestial glory because they did not abide by the commandments of God; therefore, they will be very unhappy because they did not gain celestial life which could have been theirs.

The Father will say to his Only Begotten Son, "This is your world because of the great work that you did in being its Redeemer. You shall now be the Lord, you shall be the God, you shall be the king of this world forevermore. This is your kingdom." Under the direction, then, of the Father who has many other kingdoms, Jesus Christ will preside here as your God and my God if we live worthy of celestial glory.

Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are heirs to this great kingdom on condition that we obey the teachings of the gospel as revealed to earth through the Prophet Joseph Smith. As Brother Romney very beautifully pointed out yesterday, today is the day for you and me to prepare for that great judgment day when this earth shall become the celestialized orb. Then if we are found worthy, we will hear the voice of Jesus Christ say to us to enter into our exaltation and dwell with him forever here upon this earth.

May you and I live clean and pure, be prayerful, be humble, live according to every word that has come from the mouth of God in order that this might be our happy lot, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The congregation sang the hymn, "Zion Stands With Hills Surrounded."

ELDER BRUCE R. McCONKIE

Of the First Council of the Seventy

If the Holy Ghost will give me utterance, I should like to say some things to you about how I think the message of the restoration can be carried to the world with power and effect.

MESSAGE OF THE RESTORATION

This message is, first, foremost, and above all other things: that Jesus Christ is the son of the Living God; that he is the Savior of the world and the Redeemer of men; that salvation was and is and is to come, in and through his name only. We believe that he came into the world to do the will of his Father and work out the infinite and eternal atonement, and that by virtue of this atonement all men who believe and obey the gospel laws will be raised in immortality unto eternal life. It is only by obedience to his laws and his ordinances that we may gain the celestial kingdom.

This message is, secondly, that Joseph Smith, Jr., is the chosen prophet through whom the fulness of the everlasting gospel has been restored in this dispensation. He was chosen by Christ to be the restorer and revealer of all things necessary for the salvation and exaltation of man; he gave again on earth every law, every principle, and every doctrine by conformity to which we may gain the kingdom of God.

This message is, thirdly, that this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is, at this moment, the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth. It is the only place where the plan of life and salvation is found. There is no other path and no other way whereby men can strive and gain the peace and happiness that is available for those who live right in this life, and the eternal life that God has promised the Saints in the world to come.

GUIDANCE OF HOLY GHOST

Now we want to carry this message to the world in the way that the Lord wants us to carry it. We want to preach the truth in purity and in perfection, and to do it in the way the Lord wants it done. The only single formula whereby we may do this is for us so to live (and our elders in the mission fields so to live) that we can be guided by the Holy Ghost. We must be guided by the Spirit. We have to have the Lord tell us how he wants us to teach the message of the restoration, and every doctrine of the gospel, and he will do this by revelation from the Holy Ghost if we are worthy to receive it.

One of the chief differences between us and the churches which are built up, and not unto the Lord, is that the Holy Ghost gives us utterance if we are faithful, but that the people in the world teach with their learning, and deny the Holy Ghost, which giveth utterance.

The Holy Ghost revealed to Nephi about latter-day church conditions. Speaking of this very day Nephi foretold that many would teach "false and vain and foolish doctrines." He said that

Because of pride, and because of false teachers, and false doctrine, their churches have become corrupted, . . . they have all gone astray save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err because they are taught by the precepts of men. (2 Nephi 28:12, 14.)

SOUND DOCTRINE

We have no interest in teaching by the wisdom or learning or according to the precepts of men. We want to teach the gospel the way the Lord would have us teach it, and to do it under the power and influence of the Holy Ghost. If we will do that, we will teach sound doctrine. It will be the truth. It will build faith and increase righteousness in the hearts of men, and they will be led along that path which leads to the celestial world.

But if we teach without the Spirit of the Lord, if we are not guided by the Holy Ghost, we will be teaching at our peril. It is a serious thing to teach false doctrine, to teach that which is not true, to teach that which does not build faith in the hearts of men.

In that same sermon on latter-day church conditions, Nephi said, the Holy Ghost giving him utterance,

... and all those who preach false doctrines, ... wo, wo, wo be unto them, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell! (2 Nephi 28:15.)

There is no hope and no salvation and no blessing in carrying any message to the world by the power of man. The philosophies of the world and the wisdom of the wise shall perish. We cannot touch the hearts of men, but the Lord can, and he will touch them through our ministry if we have the Spirit of the Lord in our hearts. We will get that Spirit if we are righteous in our living and in the things we do.

And so it is that the Lord said by revelation to the whole Church through the Prophet Joseph Smith, that

... the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith; and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. (D. & C. 42:14.)

And so it is that he has sent his elders out in this day commanding that they take no thought beforehand what they should say but instructing that they should treasure up in their minds continually the words of life. Theirs is then the promise that it shall be given them in the very hour that portion which should be meted to every man.

If we can have the Holy Ghost as our guide, we shall be able to touch the hearts of righteous men; we shall do the things that the Lord wants us to do; and this course will give us peace here and eternal reward hereafter.

HEAD OF THIS DISPENSATION

Now, associated with this principle, this only perfect plan and formula for carrying our message to the world, is another. The Lord said to the Prophet Joseph Smith:

... this generation shall have my word through you. (D. & C. 5:10.)

Now, I take it that we are not obligated to teach the message of salvation the way it was revealed to Peter, James, and John, to Moses, or Adam, or any of the ancient prophets, but that the Lord wants us to carry this message the way it was given through the Prophet Joseph Smith. It is the same message of salvation now as it was then. The gospel never changes. All men who ever gain salvation will win it by obedience to the same eternal laws. But in each age it has to be accepted from the oracles whom the Lord sends for that age and time.

Joseph Smith was given the keys of salvation as pertaining to all men who live in the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times. That means that he stands at the head of this dispensation. It means that under Adam, the great high priest who stands at the head of all dispensations, and under Christ who is the Savior of the world, he directs all the affairs of God in the world as pertaining to this dispensation.

When we link the name of Joseph Smith with the name of Jesus Christ in the testimonies we bear, we are doing that which is pleasing to the Lord. If we had lived in ancient Israel and had attended the testimony meetings that they held, we would have linked the name of Moses with the name of Jesus Christ, because he headed that dispensation. And if we had lived in Enoch's day or Abraham's or Adam's, we would have testified of Christ and the man who stood at the head of that particular dispensation.

MODERN SCRIPTURES

But to us the word of the Lord is sent forth through Joseph Smith. It has been given through him in the manner and form, to the degree, and in the plainness that is adapted to the capacity and abilities of people who now live in the world. Some of the ancient scriptures are not so plain and intelligible to us as the modern. They were written for people who had the social conditions, the philosophies, and the backgrounds that existed generations and milleniums ago. What we have, as it has come through Joseph Smith, is adapted to our intelligence and our capacity. If we shall study it in preference to anything else, we shall have more light, more truth, and more understanding of the mind and will of the Lord, and the things that we have to do in order to be saved in his kingdom, than we could gain from any other source.

This does not mean that we do not accept the Bible. We do with all our hearts, and we do not try to spiritualize away its teachings. We believe it to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly. We believe all that God has revealed, and every revelation given to Joseph Smith is in strictest harmony with every revelation given through any prophet in any age. Truth is always the same; revelations never contradict each other. But there is no salvation in reading the Bible and stopping there. People must find a living oracle, a legal administrator, someone who can bind on earth and seal in heaven, someone whose teachings and performances will be recognized by the Lord. And that is where Joseph Smith and the present living oracles come in.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

So that we may carry the message of salvation to the world in this generation through Joseph Smith, we have had certain tools given us. The chief of these is the Book of Mormon. That book is a witness for Jesus Christ. Such is its chief purpose. It testifies of him, and it teaches the doctrines of his gospel in plainness and purity, and let it not be forgotten that our chief mission is to bear testimony of Christ and teach the doctrines of his gospel.

Next, the Book of Mormon is a witness that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God, that he restored the fulness of the gospel and was everything we claim him to have been. No man could have written the Book of Mormon, and any person who will study it with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, following Moroni's counsel, will get the witness in his heart that Joseph Smith obtained that book from the plates in exactly the manner in which he said he got it.

So, by using the Book of Mormon to carry our message to the world, we carry forth the testimony of Christ and of Joseph Smith. If those to whom we preach have righteousness in their hearts, they soon receive by the power of the Holy Ghost the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God; they soon get by revelation from the Holy Ghost the knowledge that Joseph Smith is his prophet and the head of his work for this age and dispensation.

Then, because the Lord giveth not his Spirit by portions, and because they have tasted of the power and inspiration of the Holy Ghost in these two particulars, they will get, also by revelation from the same source, the knowledge that this Church, this kingdom, is the only true and living Church upon the face of the whole earth.

These three things are the very ones we want to get all the righteous everywhere to accept, and the Book of Mormon is the means whereby we may accomplish it.

MOST CORRECT OF ANY BOOK

The Prophet Joseph Smith said that the Book of Mormon was the most correct of any book on earth and the keystone of our religion, and that a man would get nearer to God by abiding its precepts than by any other book.

Why, that is the very thing we want the world to do. We want the people who hear the message that we bear to get so near to the Lord that in contrition and humility they will repent of their sins, come in at the gate of baptism, and grow in faith and in righteousness until they become the sons of God, heirs to his eternal kingdom.

As far as the Latter-day Saints are concerned, if they would read and study that book, with the same real intent, purpose, and faith in Christ of which Moroni spoke, they would discover that faith would grow in their hearts. They would get a knowledge of the principles of salvation. They would have desires of righteousness spring up in their souls. Soon they would not have any inclination or any desire or any aim except to be in harmony with all of their brethren, with their bishops and stake presidents, and with every righteous person in the kingdom.

If you get the spirit of the Book of Mormon, you cannot be out of harmony with the Lord's work and with his mind and will in this day.

TESTIMONY

With these brethren who have testified, I have in my heart a knowledge and an assurance that is real and positive and certain that this work is true. I know just as well as I know anything in this world that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that Joseph Smith is his chiefest prophet and his chiefest witness for this dispensation.

At that strait gate where men must enter if they attain the celestial world, there stands a keeper of the gate who is the Holy One of Israel. He employeth no servant there.

. . . and there is none other way save it be by the gate; for he cannot be deceived, for the Lord God is his name. (2 Nephi 9:41.)

But those who receive the servants of the Lord receive him, and he in turn receives them because they received his servants. And as pertaining to people who lived in this dispensation, when the judgment is set and the books are opened, they will find that the Prophet Joseph Smith will be seated on the right hand of Christ, and it will be with his approval and his approbation and his counsel and his consent that all men from his dispensation who attain salvation will be permitted to inherit it.

I glory in the testimony that I have. I know that this work is true and that this is the Lord's Church. I pray that the work may roll forth and that the Lord's purposes may prevail in the earth, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER MARK E. PETERSEN

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I am very grateful, my brothers and sisters, for the stimulation I have received in this conference. I am grateful for the privilege of going to the stake conferences and for the good that I receive from them. I think it is wonderful to feel the strength of the Saints in the different parts of the Church, and as I go about among the people and feel their strength and faith and note their devotion, I am very grateful indeed that this is truly a great Church. It is a strong Church, and the people who belong to it are a strong people. I am very grateful for this knowledge.

DIFFICULTIES ENCOUNTERED

At times we meet people who find it difficult to live our religion. Sometimes they say it is hard to live some of the principles of the gospel. Occasionally people say they find it hard to live the law of tithing, or the Word of Wisdom. I know that some do find it difficult, but I know also that if they would apply themselves and really convert themselves to these great principles, they would be able to live them and enjoy doing so.

As I have observed some of the people in the Church, I believe that one of the principles they find most difficult to live is the principle set forth in one of the Articles of Faith, the sixth one,

We believe in the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, namely, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

I suppose some of you will think it strange that I say that, but I really believe that there are a number of people among us who find the principle represented in that Article of Faith to be the most difficult they have to live.

FAITH IN GOD

Our first Article of Faith, which has been referred to here, says that we believe in God the Eternal Father and in his Son Jesus Christ and in the Holy Ghost. Without faith in God we wouldn't even have any religion, because faith in God is fundamental to our religion. But such faith is no more fundamental than it is to believe that God can and will reveal himself to mankind. It is just as fundamental to believe that God can reveal himself to mankind as it is to believe that there is a God.

All down through the ages the Lord has revealed himself to men. Then, we must believe in revelation. But to whom does God reveal himself? An ancient prophet said the Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets. Then we must have prophets among us. We had them anciently, from the days of Adam on down to the days of Malachi to whom God revealed himself in harmony with this great principle which is such an important part of our restored religion.

ANCIENT APOSTLES AND PROPHETS

What about prophets in Christian times? When the Church was established on the earth in the days of the Savior, it was founded with apostles and prophets at the head. And why were they put in the Church? Paul explains, as has been mentioned once before, that they were put in the Church for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. They were to remain in the Church until we all come to a unity of the faith, unto a perfect man, unto the fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ.

Throughout the ancient times there was always a tendency to profess belief in God but to reject the teachings of the prophets. Jesus met that situation when he was upon the earth, and among the other things, he made a great appeal to overcome it. He said, "... ye believe in God, believe also in me." (John 14:1.) The great tragedy of ancient Israel was that the people of those days were willing to profess belief in God, but would not follow the teachings of the prophets of God.

What did the Lord reveal to his people through the prophets all down through the ages? He revealed to the prophets, and through them to the people, the things which he expected the people to do, and these expectations of the Lord, as revealed to the people through the prophets, formed the program which our Father in heaven desired his people on earth to follow for their salvation. In other words, these revelations and these directions given to the people through the prophets formed the program of the Church in ancient times.

APOSTLES AND PROPHETS TODAY

We today are no different from the people who lived in the days of the Savior and the ancient apostles, because our Church today also is founded with apostles and prophets at the head, and the teachings of these apostles and prophets form the program of the Church. This program is varied. It has many projects and many enterprises. It includes many commandments and many ordinances. But they are all a part of the program of the Church. We cannot distinguish between them and say that these we will accept and these others we will not accept. We cannot make fish of one and fowl of the other. The hand cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee."

The Sunday School could not say to the Relief Society, "You are not necessary." Not one of us can consistently say that we will sustain the priesthood program, but we will reject the welfare program. We could not say that we will accept the Aaronic Priesthood program, for instance, and that we will reject the Melchizedek Priesthood program. We could not say that we would accept and sustain the auxiliaries of the Church, and, for instance, refuse to sustain the Church publications which help to give bone and fibre and sinew to these organizations.

CONSISTENT SUPPORT OF PROGRAM

Are we in a position of consistency if we try to choose one part of the program of the Church and turn our backs upon the others? Every phase of the program is worthy of our support, whether it be priesthood or Church welfare, whether it be the Church publications or whether it be the auxiliary organizations, or any of the commandments in the gospel.

The program of the Church is inaugurated and sponsored by the heads of the Church. And who are the heads of the Church? They are the prophets of God. And why are they in the Church? For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.

We are the Saints. Our Church makes up the body of Christ. We need the edification and the perfection that come to us through participating in the program of the Church. We have the prophets of God who give us the program of the Church. Let us follow that program so that we may get the blessings God proffers to us.

Instead of going off on a tangent this way or a tangent some other way, let us be willing to follow the prophets of God who stand here at the head of the Church and who receive the divine guidance of the Almighty. Let us have enough faith and enough courage to be real Latter-day Saints. Let us have enough courage and enough faith to believe in the Articles of Faith. I challenge every Latter-day Saint everywhere to believe and accept and sustain the sixth Article of Faith which I read again:

We believe in the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, namely, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

I pray that we may have this courage, that we may have the unity and the harmony as a people to support and sustain the prophet of God by sustaining the program in all its projects and enterprises as he gives it to us, and this I do in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EVON W. HUNTSMAN

Former President of the Tongan Mission

I think I now realize, my brethren and sisters, what Bishop Isaacson meant when he said at our last conference that only those who hear their names called out in this great audience know the shock that one receives. I have felt that shock and it has not left me.

As I stand here in this holy spot and look over this great audience, I feel very humble indeed. All my life I have looked upon this spot as the most sacred spot in all the world, because I do not think there is another place in all the world where so many of God's anointed have stood before so many of his children and taught them the gospel of Jesus Christ. With this thought in mind, I am very humble at this time in reporting my mission to the Tongan Islands.

Sister Huntsman and I will always be grateful to our Heavenly Father and to the brethren who preside over his Church, for the confidence and trust they placed in us in permitting us to go into the far-away land of Tonga to take charge of our Heavenly Father's work in that mission.

I am grateful that I had the opportunity to return to that land, where I spent my first mission, and again take up my labors with those fine Tongan people who are members of God's chosen race. Only those who have had the opportunity of laboring with the Polynesian race know the love and the confidence and the faith those wonderful people have.

The work of our Heavenly Father in the Tongan Mission is alive and growing, and they are enjoying the Spirit of our Heavenly Father in that mission. I know that at times when we speak of the people of the Islands of the Pacific, we sometimes think of them as cannibals, head hunters, people going around through the bush naked, but that is not the case. The Tongan Mission is one of the isolated missions of the Church. It is far away from the so-called civilization of the world, but under that condition the membership in the Tongan Mission has grown to some twenty-seven hundred members of the Church, who are very faithful in performing their duties and preaching the gospel.

Our mode of living changes when we go into the far-away lands of the islands of the sea. We have a new life to live and a new language to learn, we have new living conditions, we have new food, we have new methods of transportation. Everything is new, but Sister Huntsman and I enjoyed very much our labors among the Tongan race.

One of our great difficulties in the Tongan Mission is transportation, as we have to go from island to island on the small boats which are provided in those islands, either a small sailing vessel or a motor launch. I, myself, not being a good sailor, did not enjoy too much some of the trips we had to take, from island to island, to visit our branches and our districts, but we were always well paid when we arrived at our destination and found how happy our native saints were to meet us and greet us, as we came to their shores.

I did receive a lot of consolation from a blessing that I received from President Smith when he set us apart to our mission. He said: "Brother Huntsman, I promise you that you will never become any more seasick than is necessary."

I took that blessing out, or a copy of it, every time I went from one island to another and I read that blessing. I took a lot of consolation from it.

Two great contributions or blessings came to the Tongan Mission while we were there. One of them, of course, is our mission school. Our greatest missionary in the Tongan Mission is our mission school, and when I arrived in the mission field our old mission school was rather out-dated. It was built many, many years ago for a small group of students. We were in a crowded condition. The government knew that we were. The Commissioner of Education had condemned our school, put it at the bottom of the list, and I did not blame him very much, my brethren and sisters. I do not want to say anything about the fine work that was accomplished at our own college, but the school was not a credit to the Church.

I reported this to the First Presidency. They instructed me to purchase a new plantation on which they would build a school. And they have made sufficient appropriations now to erect one of the finest schools in the South Sea Islands. Much of the material had arrived before we left, and this school is now under construction, and, when completed, will be a credit to the Church, and will be the means of breaking down a lot of the opposition that we have to meet in that mission.

That is a fine contribution and the saints of the Tongan Mission appreciate very much this wonderful gift from the First Presidency and the brethren who preside in the Church.

Another great contribution was when the brethren saw fit to send Brother Matthew Cowley, President Cowley, as the mission president of the South Pacific Mission.

In 1921 President McKay visited the Tongan Mission, I think it was 1921 or 1922, and in 1938, President Smith visited the mission. These are the only two of the General Authorities of the Church who had visited the Tongan Mission until 1947, when President Cowley came to visit our mission.

In 1948 he came the second time to visit our mission, at that time accompanied by his wife, who, I understand, is the first one of the General Authorities' wives to have crossed the equator, and I know she is the first one of the General Authorities' wives to visit the Tongan Mission. No one, my brethren and sisters, will know the love and the confidence and the respect that Brother and Sister Cowley have for the Polynesian race until you see them down there among those people, blessing them and teaching them the gospel, and visiting among them.

We appreciate, and the saints of the Tongan Mission appreciate very much the opportunity they now have of at least having a visit from one of the General Authorities once a year. It is a great blessing to them.

Brother Cowley comes to our mission and with his splendid knowledge of the Maori language—he has picked up a little Samoan, a little Tongan, a little Tahitian, and he comes there with a language all of his own now, and he can preach the gospel to our people. I do not know what it will be when he adds to that some of the Japanese and some of the Chinese that he is able to gather here and there.

My brothers and sisters, I bear my testimony that I know the gospel is true. I have heard the name of the Prophet Joseph Smith mentioned for good and evil in that part of the world, on my first mission and on my second mission. I know that these brethren who preside over the Lord's Church are men who have been ordained to preside over his Church. I bear you my testimony. I feel as President George F. Richards once said, I believe many years ago from this stand, that we are a well-taught people insomuch so that if we would only do as well as we know how, our salvation and our exaltation would be secure.

May we so live and conduct our lives, my brethren and sisters, that our exaltation will be secure, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Singing, "Redeemer of Israel."

Benediction by President Frank H. Brown of Big Horn Stake.

SECOND DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The fourth session of the Conference convened at 2:00 p.m. Saturday, October 1.

President George Albert Smith was present and presided. At the President's request, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, conducted the services.

The choir singing for this session was by members of the Tabernacle Choir, J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is the fourth session of the 120th semi-annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Of the General Authorities all are present except Elder Alma Sonne of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is in Europe presiding over the European Mission; Elder Thomas E. McKay, also of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is at home convalescing by direction of his physicians; and President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy, who is presiding over the New England Mission.

President Smith is presiding and has requested the speaker, President Clark, to conduct the services.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television. The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL in Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise, also over KTYL at Mesa by delayed transcription.

The services will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

The choir singing for this session will be furnished by members of the Tabernacle Choir who are able to be here this afternoon, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the services by the choir singing, "God So Loved the World."

The opening prayer will be offered by President A. Leland Elmer of the Panguitch Stake.

ELDER JOSEPH FIELDING SMITH

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

Many centuries ago, before the birth of our Lord, a prophet who was filled with the Spirit of the Lord and a desire that the gospel truths should be carried to all men, in his righteous zeal gave utterance to the following words:

O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people!

Yea, I would declare unto every soul, as with a voice of thunder, repentance and the plan of redemption, that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth. (Alma 29:1-2.)

Then on his reflection he reached the conclusion that he was asking for too much, that perhaps he was sinning in his wish to be like an angel, with a voice of thunder, to reach the ends of the earth; but if Alma were here today, I know he would be very grateful for the facilities and the opportunities that we have to reach the peoples, not only who are assembled but also scattered abroad.

WISH TO REACH PEOPLE

I feel much like Alma this afternoon. I do not desire to speak like an angel nor do I desire to shake the earth, but his desire was righteous in having the wish to reach people. I have that same wish, and I am grateful for the opportunities that present themselves, not only to reach the members of the Church here assembled and who may be listening in, but I hope also that there are multitudes of those who are not members of the Church who are listening to the counsels and the instructions which are being given in this conference, not only for the benefit of the Latter-day Saints, but also for the peoples of all the earth.

After making the statement that he asked for too much, he added these words:

I ought not to harrow up in my desires, the firm decree of a just God, for I know that he granteth unto men according to their desire, whether it be unto death or unto life; yea, I know that he allotteth unto men according to their wills, whether they be unto salvation or unto destruction.

Yea, and I know that good and evil have come before all men; he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless; but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires, whether he desireth good or evil, life or death, joy or remorse of conscience. (Ibid., 4-5.)

FREE AGENCY

President Smith in his opening remarks spoke of free agency, the great gift the Lord has bestowed upon every soul to act for himself, to make his own choice, to be an agent with a power to believe and accept the truth and receive eternal life or to reject the truth and receive remorse of conscience. This is one of the greatest gifts of God. What would we be without it, if we were compelled as some people would like to have their fellows compelled to do their will? There could be no salvation; there could be no rewards of righteousness; no one could be punished for unfaithfulness because men would not be accountable before their Maker.

JOSEPH SMITH A PROPHET

Having made these remarks, I want to say to all those who are listening at this particular time that I have a testimony that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and is, for his work has not ceased, for a righteous man's work does not cease: Joseph Smith was a righteous man when he died; I know that he was called, appointed by our Father in heaven; that he received revelation and guidance from the Son of God that would be of benefit and a blessing to all men if they would receive it.

Now in what I have to say I wish to direct my remarks to those who are not members of the Church, if there are any such listening. I want them to know that I believe this sincerely and absolutely. That is my faith. I think I can say safely it is my knowledge, by the gift of God, that Joseph Smith in the year 1820 did see the Father and the Son; that the Father introduced his Son; that the Son spoke to him, asked him what he wanted to know, and gave him counsel; told him what to do, with the promise that eventually other light would come and the fulness of the gospel, which was not then upon the face of the earth, would be restored.

This is either true or false. To me it cannot be false. To you who sit here looking at me it cannot be false. It is just as true as it is that the sun shines. You know it, and I know it. And every soul upon the face of the earth who has a desire to know it has the privilege for every soul that will humble himself, and in the depths of humility and faith, with a contrite spirit, go before the Lord, will receive that knowledge just as surely as he lives, so that he also may know that this story is true.

TRUTH OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

I am just as firmly convinced that this Book of Mormon from which I have read is the word of God and was revealed, as Joseph Smith declared it was revealed, as I am that I stand here looking into your faces. Every soul on the face of the earth who has intelligence enough to understand may know that truth. How can he know it? All he has to do is to follow the formula that was given by the Lord himself when he declared to the Jews that they who would do the will of his Father should know of the doctrine, whether it was of God or whether he spoke of himself. My witness to all the world is that this book is true. I have read it many, many times. I have not read it enough. It still contains truths that I still may seek and find, for I have not mastered it, but I know it is true.

I know that the testimony of these witnesses recorded in each copy of the Book of Mormon is true, that they stood in the presence of an angel of God who declared unto them that the record as it was translated was correct, that their testimony that God spoke to them from the heavens calling upon them to bear witness of that fact is true, and there is not a soul who cannot receive that testimony if he desires to receive it, by reading this book prayerfully and faithfully, with a desire to know the truth as Moroni has declared by revelation. He shall know the truth regarding the restoration of this scripture given to the ancient inhabitants of this continent.

IMPORTANCE OF ACCEPTING TRUTH

Now this declaration or testimony that I have given is vital to every living soul, for I want to say that if a man unto whom the knowledge of this record comes, and unto whom the testimony has been given that Joseph Smith saw the Father and the Son, and that the gospel was restored by commandment of God and the coming of angels, rejects that testimony and will not follow it through, he will have to face it before the judgment seat of God and give answer why he refused to harken—so it is a vital message to every soul.

Every man who rejects this record, who rejects the testimony of Joseph Smith, who declares him to be a false prophet and this book a fraud, who has had this testimony which it contains given unto him, will stand before the judgment seat of God condemned, because the truth was laid before him. He had the opportunity to hear and receive, and in rejecting it he has placed himself in disfavor with his Father in heaven.

I will read a verse or two from the testimony of Nephi which is given at the close of the record which he kept. I cannot take time to read it all. You will find it in Chapter 33 of Second Nephi. I will read the last four verses.

And I pray the Father in the name of Christ that many of us, if not all, may be saved in his kingdom at that great and last day.

And now, my beloved brethren, all those who are of the house of Israel, and all ye ends of the earth, I speak unto you as the voice of one crying from the dust: Farewell until that great day shall come.

And you that will not partake of the goodness of God, and respect the words of the Jews, and also my words, and the words which shall proceed forth out of the mouth of the Lamb of God, behold, I bid you an everlasting farewell for these words shall condemn you at the last day.

For what I seal on earth shall be brought against you at the judgment bar; for thus hath the Lord commanded me and I must obey. Amen.

The Lord bless you, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER OSCAR A. KIRKHAM

Of the First Council of the Seventy

I humbly pray that I may enjoy the blessings of the Spirit of God. To me it is a high privilege to stand before this audience. I am extremely grateful to my Heavenly Father. I pray that he may let me speak his word.

LOOK UP TO THE SPIRES

While coming over to this meeting this afternoon, I had quite an impressive incident happen to me. I greatly admire these grounds. I often chat with the men who make the flowers grow and bloom. Today I met a familiar brother. I said: "Well, I see you are working today."

"Yes, Brother Kirkham."

"Don't you ever get tired? I see you here early in the morning, and I have seen you here late at night."

"Oh, yes, I get tired once in awhile, but the people enjoy the flowers, and once in awhile they look up at the spires."

I would love to put it into the heart of every man and woman in this Church that they must not grow weary. Way out in your own private lives, in service in the kingdom of God, it may be that at times you may be weary, but I bear humble testimony because of what I have seen throughout the stakes of Zion and especially in the missionary field, that men with whom you have patience and with whom you patiently work, often "look up to the spires."

I was deeply impressed at the Smithfield conference last Sunday. A fine young woman was reporting her attendance at a state convention. One hundred and twenty young women had been called to one of our large institutions from all parts of the state. They were studying American citizenship opportunities. At the stake conference she was asked to make a report. She did so, and it was helpful and inspiring. All at once I saw her grasp the pulpit, and with rare dignity she said to the audience: "I want to bear my testimony."

Then in beautifully chosen words, with deep humility, she declared her faith in God and her gratitude for her heritage, for the blessings she enjoyed.

BE UNAFRAID

I am sure with many of the words of warning that have come to us during this conference, and as we do face a world of great uncertainty, so great, and so fraught with possible destruction we are almost frightened to speak about it at times, or they who know most about it are silent, and yet, in my humble thinking, I say, be unafraid. If we are living as we should live, then there need be no fear. Our faith in God will give us strength, assurance, a sense of safety and security. We need have no fear.

One of our great American thinkers has said:

We do not need to fear these things. We need to fear whether man has faith in God.

GREATNESS IN YOUTH

All my life I have labored with youth, in the out-of-doors, largely. My humble illustrations come largely from that field. I know that deep within youth there is greatness. It is a natural law that the Lord will preserve the right and the truth, and soon you and I will pass this on to the hands of a great generation of youth.

I stood a few years ago with a group of youth in Holland where the tulips grow. There were about a hundred and fifty young American youths about me. We went down to see the loveliest tulip beds in the world. Flowers were not blooming in abundance then, but here and there and in the hothouses there were some fine specimens. An elderly Dutch gardener came out when he saw we had arrived. I remember he held up a brown bulb and said: "This will be my prize winner at the fair."

All we saw were the brown husks of the tulip bulb, but he saw beyond that. He saw the prize bulb at the Holland fair.

I appeal to you, do not neglect your duty to youth but have faith in them. They may look like brown bulbs today, but they will be prize winners tomorrow. They are marching into the greatest world and are the greatest generation, in my humble opinion, that the world has ever seen. That is my faith. I only wish that I might march with them and be a lad of twelve years.

The Lord will be with them and strengthen them. They are magnificent. I have just left a hundred and seventy-five of them in the Northwestern States Mission. It was thrilling to catch their spirit and their hope and their devotion to the service of the Lord.

SUN ALWAYS THERE

Out in the Zuni Indian village one day I followed the runner who went out to give his daily ceremony to the coming of the sun. On the hilltop he stretched forth his arms and chanted. When he started to return to the village, I walked over to him and said, "It is cloudy this morning. Do you always come?"

And then he said, "Oh, the sun is always there."

That is it. "The sun is always there." Let us have faith and know that the sun is always there.

I would like to read one verse from Timothy:

For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. (II Timothy 1:7.)

This thought I would like to suggest in connection with youth and in connection with our own lives: There are many things that will give us inspiration and guidance. It is astonishing when you hear men frankly and freely bear their testimonies—when the message came to their hearts, that was the moment when the Lord spoke to them. I pray that the Lord will quicken the best within us. We are likely to refer to it as conscience. I believe that men and women who live humbly and prayerfully may have within themselves the blessing of the Spirit of God, the gift of the Holy Ghost, a power that will guide them, protect them, reveal to them truth, give them knowledge throughout their days, for their own blessing and protection.

"Somehow we must get back to God," said a great American, "and that is very difficult for modern minds who have lost simplicity."

I shall read a few verses from the Ninetieth Psalm:

Return O Lord, . . .

O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days . . .

Let thy work appear unto thy servants and thy glory unto their children.

And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. (Psalm 90:13-14, 16-17.)

THE VOICE WITHIN

I pray that this spirit of a voice within, the Lord trying to speak to us and guide us, may be with us. It is a very personal affair. We do not need to wait for any great occasion depending on someone else to assist us. His Spirit will be with us every day, at all times, if we serve God humbly and pray for his guidance.

This delightful experience came in the form of a testimony out in the mission that I recently visited. A young missionary bearing his testimony of what it meant to the family for a young man to go on a mission, and how the Lord truly provided, recited this incident:

When I left home I didn't know whether father would be able to make it or not in keeping up the expenses but he and mother said "Go, we'll do the best we can for you, Son."

I came into the missionary field. We had been getting along all right and last week I received a letter from father. He told the story that they were working hard and they had harvested a good crop, and then he told the story of my little brother eleven years old.

Dad said, "I have been giving your brother work on the binder. We were giving him fifty cents an acre to run it. He had done very well; he had worked early and late. Then the day came when we were to pay him. The neighbors had sent in their checks and I was going to pay him. I asked him: 'Now Son what are you going to do with the money?' Your brother said: 'Well, Father, I want a pair of Levis and I want to go to the County Fair and the rest I want to send to my brother on his mission.'"

He enjoyed that voice within. The Lord was guiding him in his tender years. He had caught the spirit that his brother had in missionary service.

With the same feeling I bear my testimony: have patience wherever you are called to labor, that those for whom you work may "look up to the spires," and receive inspiration and comfort. Oh, listen to the voice within, that it may guide you safely on the way. Do not be disturbed by the scare lines of papers and commentators on the radio. Know that you have God with you if you but do his will.

I thank him humbly for these things, and I bear testimony and pray for all of us, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER STEPHEN L RICHARDS

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

I would like to send out greetings and a message to the elders of the Church. I refer to those belonging to the elders quorums, not to all of those who are sometimes designated as elders who belong to other quorums. I think that it is necessary to send this message out by you, my brethren and sisters, because large numbers of this priesthood are not present at our conference here today, and many may not even be listening in to the proceedings.

ELDERS QUORUMS

The elders constitute our largest body of priesthood. There are one thousand and thirty-three quorums, with seventy-two thousand nine hundred and four members enrolled, making the average enrollment in each quorum just about seventy.

The quorums are widely distributed throughout the stakes of Zion and in some of the missions of the Church, affording adequate opportunity for all men holding this priesthood to be served by their quorums.

The quorums are under the direct presidencies and supervision of the stake presidency who determine and ordain the membership and select and install their officers. In fact, the maintenance of these quorums constitutes, perhaps the most direct and exclusive priesthood responsibility which the stake presidencies have.

The membership of the quorums is made up of young men, middle-aged men, and older men. Many of the young men are on missions or are preparing to fill missions or have recently returned therefrom. Some of the young men come into the quorums in contemplation of marriage, and some merely by way of advancement from the Aaronic Priesthood.

To all of these young men I extend my congratulations. Brethren, you have attained a high place and great distinction in the Church of God. You have been accorded recognition for your faith, your clean living, and your worthy ambition to be servants of our Lord. The honor which has come to you and the responsibilities and opportunities which arise out of your high calling are immeasurable, as I shall attempt to show. I pray the Lord to bless you young elders, that your appreciation and enthusiasm for this newly-acquired priesthood shall grow and deepen with the years and your experiences, and that you will never cease to regard it as your most priceless possession.

HIGH HONOR OF ELDERS' CALLING

And now, I address myself to members of the elders quorums who have been members for five, ten, twenty, or more years. Brethren of this group, did you ever think when, as a young man you were ordained an elder preparatory to going on a mission or being married in the temple, that in five, ten, or twenty years you would lose regard for that high honor and the precious gift which has come to you? Did you ever think that the time would come when you would no longer wish the association and fellowship of your brethren in the quorum? Did you ever think then that you would fail to respond to the calls coming to you through your quorum for a kindly service to a fellow member or his family or to others in need? Did it ever occur to you in those days of your young manhood, with this Holy Priesthood resting upon you, when you took your young sweetheart to the holy temple, where your marriage was sealed and sanctified and your home begun, with a resolution in your young heart to attain through your faithfulness those transcendent blessings pronounced upon you—did it ever occur to you then that in five, ten, or twenty years hence you would have forgotten those solemn resolutions and abandoned your ambition and disappointed and saddened your dear companion?

I am sure you never thought that in those early days of your eldership these things would come.

How have they come to all too many of this great body of priesthood? I think perhaps I can tell you, or at least I can try.

LOSS OF INTEREST

Some of you began to slip when you let other affairs and other engagements take you away from your quorum meetings. You began to prefer other company to that of your fellow members. You left the work of the quorums to those few sturdy wheel horses always willing to carry on. You subordinated the quorum to other things you considered more important. You gradually lost the desire for the education and the opportunities it affords. And then after you had removed yourself from the warm, stimulating influence of your brethren in the quorum, you found yourselves becoming critical, critical of the teachings, lessons, and procedure, and you summed it all up as rather dull business, possibly without realizing that you and others like you might have made it most interesting and profitable.

And then you forgot another thing, which our brother who prayed in the session this morning brought to our attention. You forgot when you were ordained that a great confidence and trust was reposed in you, and you forgot that you must be true to that trust. You neglected it.

I remember years ago hearing of a young elders' quorum presidency setting out to visit all the members of their quorum. They came to the home of one, a man of maturity who had had considerable business success, and knocked at his door. He came to the door. They told him who they were, that his name was on the record of members, and that they had come to visit him. He said, these were the words he used: "Well, gentlemen, you may come in if you wish, but I must tell you in advance that I have long since lost interest in the work you represent. I have repented of some of the follies of my youth"—he had been on a mission—"and I now devote myself to more substantial things."

Naturally they were chilled with such a reception, and they were about to depart when they heard the voice of this man's wife, who had apparently overheard the conversation. She called to them: "Brethren, please come again."

Largely in response to her appeal, these young men took courage to go again and again, and after a time, in part through their efforts, in part through the persuasion of his wife, this man repented of the follies he had committed since his youth, and came back to activity in the Church and held a responsible office.

WEAKNESSES OF MEMBERS

Then, my brethren of the quorums, you did other things that drew you away. Without the aid and encouragement of your brethren you succumbed to some weaknesses. If you had smoked before your ordination, you took it up again. If you had never smoked, you formed the acquaintance of men who did, and you took up the practice to be one with them, as you thought. Some of you began drinking a little for the same purpose. You joined the clubs and the societies of these men of the world, sometimes their lodges. You laughed at cheap jokes about the priesthood. You joined in their pleasures and pastimes on Sundays. When you might have been exercising your priesthood, you played golf with them; you went hunting and fishing; and after awhile some of you forgot, forgot that you belonged to a quorum, that you were bound to your brethren by sacred ties, forgot even that you had been set apart and vested with a holy power to make you men "different" from other men in the world.

Now I grant that this may not have been the course of all who have become inactive in the elders' quorums of the Church. Exact-ing occupations, in some cases, disappointments, real or fancied differences with Church Authorities, and pure indolence may have made their contributions, but on sober consideration, my brethren, I believe you will agree that the course which I have outlined is that which many have followed.

MESSAGE FOR INACTIVE

Now this is the message that I send out to you elders of the Church who are inactive in its affairs and indifferent to your responsibilities and opportunities. Study yourselves. Hark back to the days when you received the priesthood. Try to live again the joy and pride which it brought to you. Trace your lines of authority and find out how proximate you are to the restoration of the priesthood in this dispensation. Never disparage in your own estimation the office of an elder in the Church of Christ. Remember that this Church was organized by two elders, the first and second elder of the Church, and that it was the first office in the Church. No higher priesthood than that of elder is required to be a minister of the gospel and to preach to the nations of the earth. No higher priesthood is required to go into the holy temple and receive the lofty blessings that are therein bestowed. No higher priesthood is required to enter into the eternal covenant of marriage and become the head of a great household.

I once heard President Joseph F. Smith say, over in the Assembly Hall at one of the special priesthood meetings held in connection with the general conference of the Church, that if all the priesthood of the Church were to be obliterated save one elder only, he would have the inherent right and power under appointment to reorganize the entire Church with all its offices.

Be proud to be an elder. Enrich your lives by close association with your fellow quorum members. Make the quorums of the elders the finest clubs and fraternities in this world.

Do you know, my brethren, that the greatest reservoir of power and strength in the whole Church is in these quorums of the elders? Make that power available to the Church, and it will go forward by leaps and bounds.

The final appeal I make to you, my brethren, is do not disappoint and grieve your wives and families. Every understanding faithful Latter-day Saint woman knows that the highest blessings which may come to her and her children must come through the priesthood. She knows that there can be no perpetuation of the family in eternity without a husband and father honoring the Holy Priesthood. Many a good wife and mother today is filled with apprehension and sorrow in the neglect and behavior of the elder who stands at the head of her household.

For her sake, for the sake of her children and your children, and other men's children, I plead with you to forsake worldly habits and your indifference and neglect and criticism, and come back to the association of your brethren who love you.

DIVINITY OF PRIESTHOOD

You know when you stop to think that the priesthood you hold is genuine. Very few of you have strayed so far that you have lost that testimony. It may be dormant, but it is not dead. It will be rekindled, with your renewed activity, and it will bless your lives with inexpressible happiness and joy.

I know that that priesthood which we are honored to bear is genuine and divine. I know that it is more than a name. I know that in it is an essence of force and of power. I cannot explain it, but I know that there is a constituency in it which someday we will understand, and that it emanates from God himself.

I have felt that power. I have seen its effects. I know that the Prophet Joseph Smith received it from angelic ministers, and I know that it has been transmitted to you and to me to be used in the blessing of God's children and the establishment of his work. I will try to honor that priesthood. Will you, my brethren?

I pray that we may and that God will help us so to do, in the name of the Lord Jesus, whose servants we are. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "High On the Mountain Top."

ELDER JOSEPH L. WIRTHLIN

First Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

To me, my brethren and sisters, this great conference has been a spiritual feast. The Spirit of the Lord has been here in rich abundance, and I am sure all of us have partaken of that fine sweet spirit of assurance, and I trust that the moment or two that I occupy, I might enjoy the Spirit of the Lord.

We are facing a disintegrating world. These are dark days. Some of the great nations of the past, such as Great Britain, France, Japan, and others, find themselves in spiritual and temporal bankruptcy. We look to the south and what do we see, nations in the throes of revolution. In the Orient, communism and famine are stalking over the land; and in our great nation there are certain trends which give us deep concern.

In contemplating conditions in the world, we wonder why this world-wide disorder. I think there is an answer and the answer is in the fact that men have forgotten God and many of the divine principles which would have brought peace, prosperity, and good will among the nations.

VIRTUE OF HONESTY

I am thinking particularly of one virtue that has been cast aside; namely, the virtue of honesty, that of which Richard C. Cabot of Harvard University declared: "The continued existence of any group—tribe, nation, or industry—implies the dominance of honesty as a cohesive force between them."

The first murder in the history of the human family was a result of a dishonest act. Two young men took their offerings to the Lord. Abel presented the Lord with the firstlings of the flock. Cain presented to the Lord the products of the field, but they were not the best. Abel's offering was received by the Lord. Cain was rebuked for his offering because in it there was the element of deceit. Cain became angry, and in a jealous rage slew his brother, Abel.

DISHONESTY BRINGS WAR

In every great war that has been fought, the cause can usually be traced to some dishonest act on the part of one leader on one side or the leaders on both sides. In World War I, it was declared by some of the leaders of the great nations involved in that terrible struggle that the written solemn word given by them for the maintenance of peace in the form of treaties was but scraps of paper.

Before World War II, the leaders of Europe got together, and finally Chamberlain of Great Britain returned to his people indicating that there would be peace in his time. But he had hardly returned to his countrymen when the guarantees, the promises and the words of honor that were given by the leaders of men, were cast aside, and one of the greatest and one of the bloodiest wars in all history was fought.

Salvation of the world depends upon a revival of the cardinal principles of honesty. It must become the foundation for all negotiations between nations wherein diplomatic trickery and double-talk are to be eliminated and cast aside. Other than this, World War III will become a holocaust involving the destruction of civilian populations as well as armed forces.

INDIVIDUAL HONESTY

Honesty cannot become a national, a world-wide virtue, unless it becomes a primal part of the thinking, the actions, and the character of the individual. We have some shining examples of individual honesty. I think of one pioneer grandmother who was upon her deathbed. She seemed to be reflecting over the events of her life, and finally she called her son to her side and said: "I am still in debt. I owe the dairyman up the street five cents."

Of course the dairyman was immediately paid, but in the thinking of this pioneer grandmother, an obligation of five cents was just as important as if it had been an obligation of several thousand dollars.

I think of Jacob of old who had sent his sons to the land of Egypt to purchase grain. The sacks of grain were returned and in the mouth of each sack the money was found. Jacob wanted to impress upon the ruler of Egypt that he was an honest man, and so his sons returned with double the amount of the cost of the grain.

We think of Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, emancipator and liberator, titles that will go down on the pages of history till the end of time. The title that we love best to think of, as far as Abraham Lincoln is concerned, is that of "Honest Abe." And I am sure that of all the titles this great man carries, "Honest Abe" would please him the most.

Mark Twain was in the despair of financial distress. His advisers suggested that he work out some sort of a compromise with his creditors but he declared to them: "There is but one compromise, one hundred cents on the dollar."

That is a far cry from bankruptcy. Whatever might be said of Mark Twain, he was an honest man.

After all, honesty or dishonesty can become an integral part of our characters. Honesty can be taught in the schoolroom. In the schoolroom there can be put forth honest efforts or there can be cheating. In the schoolroom great truths can be taught to the students, or false doctrine.

I say that any teacher, whether it be in the schoolroom, or whether it be in a Sunday School class, who fails to teach the truth, and particularly in Church organizations, the truth as revealed to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith, is not honest with his students, himself, nor his God.

HONESTY IN GOVERNMENT

In business there can be dependable, honest merchandising or there can be false advertising, or poor quality of merchandise sold. In the great field of politics there can be forthright, honest leadership, or there can be double-talk, unfulfilled promises, which eventually lead to the destruction of American fundamentals. In administration of government affairs, if the administrators are honest in handling the public funds—which after all, belong to the people—they will administer them in such a way that there will be frugality and savings and not extravagant expenditures.

As we think of present-day conditions, there come to mind the words of one of the founders of this great Republic, Thomas Jefferson—and I should like to say that had he been alive today the words that I am about to quote to you could not be more fitting. He said:

I place economy among the first and most important virtues, and public debt as the greatest of dangers to be feared. To preserve our independence we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. We must make our choice between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude. If we run into such debts, we must be taxed in our meat and drink, in our necessities and our comforts, in our labors and in our amusements. If we can prevent the government from wasting the labors of the people under the pretense of caring for them, they will be happy.

Over the years we have been singing, "God Bless America," and I want to say to you that God has blessed America and her people more abundantly than any other people or nation in all the world. But that time has come, my brethren and sisters when we should pray, "God save America," on a basis of applying the principle of honesty and integrity in all of our dealings, individually, collectively, nationally, and internationally; thereby we can save the Constitution of the United States and preserve for ourselves and unborn generations the blessings that come from a government that was given to us by Almighty God.

HONESTY IN WORK

There can be honesty or dishonesty in the field of labor, an honest day's work and also an honest day's pay. If management and labor could but come to this simple solution, there would be an elimination of strife and difficulty. Idleness, too, breeds dishonesty, for idleness anticipates getting something for nothing, and the darkest hour in any man's life is when he sits down and plans to get something for nothing.

I submit the question to you as to whether or not a member of this Church who affiliates himself with any organization that destroys the principle of free agency and freedom of action is honest with himself and God. I do not believe that there is any compromise between truth and that which is false. No man can maintain his standing in the Church of Jesus Christ and compromise with error, for as the Savior said:

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. (Matt. 6:24.)

HERITAGE OF HONESTY

Now, my brethren and sisters, what does this mean to you, and what does this mean to me? It means that you and I have a heritage from our pioneer forefathers in the form of a banner of honesty untarnished, and there rests upon each and everyone of us the obligation to see that that banner is as brilliant, sweet, and clean as the day it was handed to us.

Joseph Smith, in writing the Articles of Faith, said this: We believe in being honest, we believe in being true.

One of the evidences of an honest man is one who first is honest with God in paying back to the Lord that tenth which belongs to him. An honest tithpayer is an honest man. He is dependable. He is one who will keep his word. He is one that we can depend upon to keep and fulfil his contracts.

I have heard President Grant relate many times the story of a great farm implement manufacturer who said this:

I would rather have the word of a Mormon farmer than I would his written contract or note.

Brigham Young declared:

Woe to those who profess to be Saints and are not honest. Only be honest with yourselves, and you will be honest to the brethren. Men must be honest. They must live faithfully before God and honor their calling and being on the earth.

And again he declared:

It is much better to be honest, to live here uprightly, and forsake and shun evil, than it is to be dishonest. It is the easiest path in the world to be honest, to be upright before God; and when people learn this, they will practice it.

HONESTY DEFINED

It is as one unknown writer declared:

Honesty is the will and the effort to keep one's agreements, explicit and tacit. It can be expressed in words (veracity), or in actions such as fulfilment of contracts and habits such as fidelity, loyalty and punctuality.

Newman Smart declared:

Inward truthfulness is essential to moral growth and personal vigor. What a flaw is in steel, or a foreign body in our tissues, a falsehood is to the character—a source of weaknesses, a front where it may break under strain.

Honesty, then, after all, is the king of all virtues because the good life presupposes itself. Dishonesty cuts the arteries by which social life is nourished. Mutual deceit is social murder. Self-deceit cuts the blood vessels of one's own existence. It is suicide.

And as Mark of old declared to the early-day Saints:

Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother. (Mark 10:19.)

As I have read this verse of scripture I wondered why Mark had included in it "Honour thy father and mother," and the thought came to me that any honest son and any honest daughter will honor father and mother not so much from the point of view of lip service but from the standpoint of being prepared to help father and mother in any way possible. That is honesty in honoring father and mother.

EXAMPLE OF HONESTY

Now, as Latter-day Saints, we have a great destiny and a great future. The old Prophet Isaiah declared to the world thousands of years ago that the house of the Lord would be established in the top of the mountains. He went on to say that all nations should flow unto it, and men should be heard to say,

... Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. (Isaiah 2:3.)

I am sure because of the fact that the house of God is established in the top of these mountains where the prophets of God are found, where the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ is being preached to the world, that the first great virtue we must hold out to the world, if we are to set them the proper example, is that of honesty, square dealing among ourselves, and with the world as a whole.

May God bless us and sustain us, that we will be honest with the Lord, honest with one another, honest with those who are not of our faith, and I am sure out of this that the world will come to know us as the Lord's people and men will be heard to say, Come, let us go up to the house of Jacob's God and learn of his ways and walk in his paths.

I leave you my testimony that this is the work of the Lord, that a boy fourteen years of age saw the Father and the Son in the wilderness; they actually spoke to him and used him as the instrument through whom the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was restored to the earth in the last days for the salvation of all the Lord's children. I bear you this testimony in his holy name. Amen.

ELDER SCOTT TAGGART

Former President of the Swiss-Austrian Mission

My brethren and sisters, I am sure that this will be probably the most difficult task of my experience, if I were not sure that I enjoy the faith and prayers of many of my friends in the audience.

Lest I forget, in the few minutes allotted to me, I should like now to express my gratitude, and that of my family, for the experience that has been ours in recent years, for the privilege of presiding over one of the missions of the Church.

We went to Europe with other brethren and their wives, among the first to return to Europe after the war. It was an interesting time to be there, a difficult time, and we went back to problems that were quite new to mission presidents. These problems, however, with the help of the saints and with the help of the Lord, were solved, and we are glad to report that in Switzerland and in Austria, as well as in other missions which we were privileged to visit, a substantial progress has been made.

Our saints think a very great deal of you over here. Probably somewhere today they are in session, in a conference session, because we usually have conference in early October. A year ago today we were meeting in Vienna, Austria, and I recall that we sent greetings to you at the request of the saints.

They long so much to be among you, to be numbered with the body of the Church, not to be the small minority that they are over there. In fact, their desire to come here constitutes one of the principal problems confronting our missions. I think it is a problem with all the European missions excepting those where conditions are such that they cannot get out, such as Germany. The question of emigration is a very constant problem over there. And there are reasons why they want to emigrate, and I am afraid that many of them will not be denied the privilege of emigrating and joining the body of the Church. First of all, as I suggested, these brethren and sisters, want to belong with you. They want to be with the majority of the Church for once, and not a small, unpopular minority. They want to come over here where they can receive their patriarchal blessings.

They have been very diligent in research work, and they have now the genealogical records of their ancestors. They want to come over here where they have access to the Temples of the Lord, where they can be sealed to one another and attend to the temple work for their forefathers.

They want to come over here, in many instances, and it is always one of the reasons, to improve their economic condition. I think it is a legitimate reason, though we never would encourage them to come over here if that were the principal reason.

And again, they want to come, brethren and sisters, because they want to get away from that constant threat of war. Switzerland has seen the threat of war, the threat of invasion, at various times. Austria has tasted of the dread of war, and they have recognized that war is an ever-present possibility over there. The heavens are never completely free of the clouds of war, the threat of war. We felt that tension at times and felt how necessary it was for us to enjoy the presence of the help of the Lord in the conduct of our mission.

We want to say to you that your missionaries, your sons and daughters who helped us over there, have done a remarkable work. They have done much towards bringing back members of the Church who have become indifferent. In spite of the fact that we lost approximately twenty percent of our active membership through emigration, the attendance has been higher than in several years, and tithe-paying and fast offerings have reached an all-time high in the mission. I attribute that very largely to the help of the missionaries who, first of all, visited the saints, not alone those who come regularly but those who, for a time, had disassociated themselves from the Church. Much good was accomplished as a result of that.

It was a great pleasure to me to learn that President Bringhurst has been able to send missionaries into Austria, something we had not yet accomplished when we left, and I know the enthusiasm with which those people in Austria have received those missionaries. We wish we could be there to help them.

We appreciated the friendly attitude of the officials generally and of the press. Not at any time while we were in Switzerland was a vicious article written against the Mormons in the press of Switzerland. Their attitude was rather one of indifference, friendly indifference, but in no instance did they oppose us openly. The only exception to that was in one or two instances where periodicals, published by church organizations, who resented our presence in their communities, wrote the usual articles against the Church in admonishing their people to have nothing to do with our missionaries.

The officials, generally, were very kind and very helpful, and while we had to deal with individuals and while we had to deal with red tape and bureaucracy there, as much as we would have to at home, generally speaking, we were well received and they gave us what cooperation they could.

I speak, particularly, also of those of our service men and women who are in Europe or who have been in Europe since the occupation. It is hard for you to realize, probably, how much good those people did in associating themselves with the saints in such places as Vienna, Lizst and Salsburg, Austria, and various places in Germany, to give slight help and encouragement to the Saints, and meeting with them in their services, sharing with them their testimonies. These will always be greatly appreciated by the people over there, and I want them to know if they should be in the audience, and their people if they are here, that their work is appreciated; their help over there in the mission field is appreciated.

It was our great privilege to be so located in Europe, at the crossroads of Western Europe where it was possible from time to time to see the presidents of other missions, and I tell you it was a privilege that we will not soon forget, a privilege of great value to us, to meet these wonderful men and women who are in charge of the missions of the Church in Europe, from President Benson who was there first, President Sonne, on down to every single one whose association we enjoyed over there on occasion. They are men of God, they are diligent workers for the Church and they are doing a great good over there. Our hearts are with them though we have been away from them for some six months.

Now, just a word about the welfare which you have sent over there. Since we are among the first to come back you have a right to know that your welfare that you have given, very often at a sacrifice, has accomplished great good among the people. Fortunately, it was not necessary for us to use any of that in Switzerland, though it was necessary for us to send substantial amounts into Austria, particularly in the larger cities such as Vienna, but we saw it go into Germany and we saw how it was distributed there, under the able leadership of President Wunderlich. Practically all of it had to be distributed in West Germany because it was not possible to get into East Germany behind the iron curtain, except that it be turned over to the Russian occupation forces for them to distribute as they saw fit.

As we were preparing to leave, the last large shipment of welfare supplies that had come was taken into East Germany through Czechoslovakia. I say it has been distributed through the able leadership of President and Sister Wunderlich and their helpers.

Your work has been appreciated and effort has been made in all the branches of Europe to get our brethren and sisters over there to understand that that relief, that welfare, has not come to them from your surplus, but that in very many instances it represents an actual sacrifice on your part. We tried to get them to understand that and to appreciate it. We reminded them that in many instances, some of them were better off than some of the men and women who contributed to their welfare.

We admire and love the saints in Switzerland and Austria very much. Occasionally we heard the complaint that they were second class members of the Church, but brethren and sisters, let me assure you that they are not, by any interpretation of the word, second class members of our Church. What they meant by that was that they were deprived of access to the temples of the Lord. They were deprived of the privilege of having their patriarchal blessings, of doing their own temple work, of being members with you of the body, the majority of the Church, but they are true and faithful members, and only those could be classed as second class members who have made themselves second class, as some of us over here do, by failure to live up to the standards and precepts of the Church.

The mission is in good hands in the hands of President and Sister Bringham. We have every confidence that the mission will continue to progress and develop. They have able leaders, every single branch in Switzerland and Austria was under the leadership of local brethren, and every organization, every auxiliary organization had its local leadership, so that our missionaries were left free to preach the gospel. They all did a splendid job.

We are most appreciative of the opportunity we had of serving and we do hope that our influence will have been felt for good wherever we went. We appreciate the cooperation we had from officials, both the Swiss and the occupation authorities representing our government. Without exception they were helpful and kind to us.

Now, in closing, I should like to call attention to the writer, O. Henry. On his deathbed, O. Henry was reported to have requested that his bed would be moved close to the window. He remarked: "I don't want to go home in the dark."

I think that is why we are here today, brethren and sisters, we are seeking light today. We do not want to anticipate a future in darkness, and today we are receiving from the mouths of these General Authorities, the light which will make life pleasant for us, which will make life safe for us, which will make the future more secure.

And then to repeat a part of a prayer which was given in the United States Senate: "Help us Lord to do what is right when we want to but do not know what is right, but help us especially, Lord, to do what is right when we know very well what it is and don't want to do it."

Now, my prayer, brethren and sisters, is that we will adhere strictly and closely to the admonitions of these great leaders of ours. There will be times when the Spirit of the Lord will not be with us, when we cannot count upon its accompaniment, because of our own faults, because of the nature of our own lives. We are safe in depending upon the leadership and the guidance of these men who live close to him, and who do appreciate and who do enjoy his constant presence. And that we may do that is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

The time has come when I shall make a few remarks to this conference, and I trust that while I stand before you the Lord will bless me, for I need his blessing, and I hope that you who are here and that you who are listening in and you who are seeing our services will add your prayers to mine.

OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH

In the early days of the Church, indeed before the Church was organized, the Lord on more than one occasion told the Prophet and those working with him that they were to cry repentance to the people. At last he commanded them that when they preached they should preach not of tenets, but cry nothing but repentance unto this generation.

I assume that that imposes upon us who stand in responsible positions of leadership in the Church, the obligation to speak of things that involve the need of repentance, and I thought today, in the few moments that I shall stand before you that I would talk about the Sabbath.

I am going to read a good part of what I say from the revelations of the Lord, so that you will understand that the words I speak are not my words; they are the words of the Lord.

INSTRUCTIONS AT SINAI

At Sinai you will recall the Lord said:

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work:

But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it. (Ex. 20:8-11.)

Before coming to the modern revelation, I should like to say that ancient Israel found that one of its most difficult commandments to observe was that of remembering the Sabbath day. After they were led into captivity, they were among a people who knew not the Sabbath which they knew, and very soon they began to partake, as we are partaking (and let me say it is amazing how we follow round the clock of earlier peoples in our wanderings, or beginning of wanderings from the early tenets as they were taught to us) of the sins of those among whom they lived. It came to be, as it is with us, that not alone was the matter one of laboring on the Sabbath, but it was also one of recreation on the Sabbath. So rather trivial regulations (as they seem to us) were made by captive Israel in order to prevent ancient Israel from breaking the Sabbath.

TIME FOR RECREATION

Now on this question of recreation, which I may return to again if I have time, I should like to say that there is not much excuse for most of us now to resort to the Sabbath for recreation. Those who labor have a forty hour week, which means that they have Saturdays off. They have an eight-hour day, which gives them quite a lot of time either in the morning or in the evening, and there is no need whatsoever to resort to the Sabbath day for recreation. There is an abundance of recreation time during the week.

MODERN REVELATION ON SABBATH

On August 7, 1831, the Lord gave to the Prophet, then in Jackson County, Missouri, a revelation which included directions about observing the Sabbath. I am reading from Section 59.

"And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world," that is what the Lord said way back yonder,— "that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world,"—that is as true today as it was when the Lord spoke it, for our breaches of the Sabbath "spot" us with the transgression of the world—"thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day." I call your attention to the fact that this meeting in the house of prayer is the only assembly which the Lord authorizes on the Sabbath day. We are to go to the house of prayer and "offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day."

For verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; Nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days and at all times;

But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart that thy fasting may be perfect, or, in other words, that thy joy may be full. . . .

And inasmuch as ye do these things with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts and countenances, not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance—

Verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this, the fulness of the earth is yours, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees and walketh upon the earth;

Yea, and the herb, and the good things which come of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses, or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards. . . .

And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made to be used, with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion.

And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments. . . .

But learn that he who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come.

I, the Lord, have spoken it, and the Spirit beareth record. Amen. (D. & C. 59:9-13, 15-17, 20-21, 23-24.)

FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS

In November 1831, at Hiram, Ohio, in the great revelation dealing with many other things, the Lord referred to the Sabbath again. I am reading from Section 68:

And the inhabitants of Zion shall also observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

And the inhabitants of Zion also shall remember their labors, inasmuch as they are appointed to labor, in all faithfulness; for the idler shall be had in remembrance before the Lord.

Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness; they also seek not earnestly the riches of eternity, but their eyes are full of greediness.

These things ought not to be, and must be done away from among them; wherefore, let my servant Oliver Cowdery carry these sayings unto the land of Zion.

And a commandment I give unto them—that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people.

These sayings are true and faithful; wherefore, transgress them not, neither take therefrom.

Behold, I am Alpha and Omega, and I come quickly. Amen. (D. & C. 68:29-35.)

In a revelation given to the Prophet on December 27, 1832, I am reading from Section 88, the Lord said:

And as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith.

Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing; and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God;

That your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High.

Therefore, cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings. (D. & C. 88:118-121.)

On another occasion the Lord said to the Prophet, and I am reading from Section 90, given at Kirtland, Ohio, March 8, 1833:

And set in order the churches, and study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people. (D. & C. 90:15.)

And at Winter Quarters, President Brigham Young declared "The Word and Will of the Lord":

Let him that is ignorant learn wisdom by humbling himself and calling upon the Lord his God, that his eyes may be opened that he may see, and his ears opened that he may hear;

For my Spirit is sent forth into the world to enlighten the humble and contrite, and to the condemnation of the ungodly. (D. & C. 136: 32-33.)

I have read these commandments regarding what should be done and what might be done on the Sabbath, and I have noted that the Lord told them to build a house of prayer into which they should go to learn the things which I have read to you.

ACTIVITIES AT HOME AND ABROAD

Now, the ancient Israelites, as I have already told you, had a great many rules and regulations regarding what they might do on the Sabbath day. They found it necessary to draw distinctions between what they might do in their homes and what they might do when they were abroad.

This raised difficulties. So in order to give a little more scope to their home activities, they made a rule, a regulation, that if they were in a street that was a cul-de-sac (closed at one end), each household along the street would contribute a handful of meal, and out of this meal they would make a cake, and then they would hang up this cake at the end, the open end of the street, and thus all the street became part of the household of this whole group. If the street was open, they did the same thing by hanging a cake at each end of the street where they lived.

My reason for making that explanation is that I think there is a difference between what we may do in our homes and what we may go abroad to do.

The Lord has told us what we may do in the house of prayer, and what we may do in the house of prayer we may do, I take it, in our homes. We may seek learning. We may read good books. We may acquaint ourselves with languages, tongues, and people.

I call your attention again to the fact that the only places of gathering to which we are authorized to go, the only gatherings we are authorized to attend, are the meetings in the house of prayer. No other gathering is authorized on the Sabbath.

I think we may listen to good music in the home. I do not think we may go joy riding, nor to beach parties, nor on picnics! Nowadays, as this conference is witnessing throughout this valley and in adjacent areas, you may have what we may call movies right in your home. We shall have them tomorrow, Sunday. I think there is a great difference between looking at a good movie in your home and going to a movie house, a very great difference. But the home movies we look at should be of a kind that teach things specified in the revelations as in order in the house of prayer.

Some of you are using in your Sunday Schools visual aids which in fact are frequently only movies. But their character should be carefully guarded, and I am sure they will be, that nothing be shown that does not contribute to the learning we may get in the house of prayer, for in Sunday School you are in the house of prayer. You will then be gaining the knowledge which the Lord said should be gained in the house of prayer. But that gives you no license to go to commercial movies on Sunday, because we are not authorized to go to such gatherings. I think there is a sharp distinction in this matter.

HORSE RACING

Of course, I do not suppose there is any need of my even mentioning, though perhaps it might be well for me to mention, that horse racing on Sunday is not a proper place for a Latter-day Saint to be. They have a good deal of it, they tell me, in the southern part of the state. I have been in touch with some of the officers and know how difficult they think it is to handle. If you Latter-day Saints cannot stay away from horse racing and betting on Sunday, I am not sure how much the Lord is going to listen to your prayers about some other things that you very much desire. Of course, we may not gamble at any time or in any place.

Now, I am merely making some suggestions to you as to what I think are sharp lines of distinction. I think you may do anything in your home on Sunday or in the house of prayer on Sunday which the Lord has said you might do, and the words of the Lord in the revelations to which I have referred will tell you what you may do in the house of prayer.

BLESSINGS OF SABBATH OBSERVANCE

Now, may the Lord help us to observe the Sabbath day and keep it holy, because, as I read to you at the very beginning, this commandment regarding the Sabbath was given, among other reasons, "that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world."

And then there follow along in that same revelation all the things which the Lord has given to us from the earth, and to me those things are recited by the Lord as showing what we are entitled to if we keep the Sabbath.

May the Lord help us keep the Sabbath I humbly pray, adding my testimony to those that have been borne regarding the truth of this great work, the divinity of the mission of Joseph Smith, the sonship of Jesus, that we have the restored gospel and the restored priesthood. That the Lord will bless us, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

The members of the Tabernacle Choir will sing as the closing song, "Behold A Host Arrayed in White."

The closing prayer will be offered by President E. Francis Winters of Star Valley Stake, Wyoming, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening, when, in accordance with the custom of the Church, the general meeting of the Priesthood of the Church will be held in this building. Only the Priesthood are invited to be present. Persons not holding the Priesthood will kindly refrain from attempting to enter the building. That session will not be broadcast.

The session at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the various stations to which you are listening. That session will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

Because the Tabernacle Broadcast comes from 9:30 to 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, those desiring to attend the broadcast must be in their seats by 9:15. As the choir may be rehearsing during the time the audience is gathering it is necessary to request that the audience come in and take their seats quietly and refrain from making any disturbing noise of any kind during the broadcast.

I should like to say to Brother Cornwall that if the day is inclement I hope that he will let the people in from the outside as early as possible.

The regular session of conference will begin at 10 a.m.

Any important messages and calls that may have come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The singing this afternoon has been by members of the Tabernacle Choir.

At the conclusion of this meeting the general sessions of conference will be adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Sunday, October 2, remembering the Priesthood meeting tonight at 7 o'clock.

The Choir will now sing, "Behold A Host Arrayed in White."

---

The Choir sang, "Behold A Host Arrayed in White." The benediction was offered by President E. Francis Winters of the Star Valley Stake.

THIRD DAY MORNING MEETING

Sunday morning, October 2, 1949.

Long before time to commence the Tabernacle Choir and Organ Broadcast, at 9:30 a.m. the great Tabernacle, auditorium and galleries, was crowded to capacity, as also the Assembly Hall directly south of the Tabernacle, and hundreds if not thousands of people assembled on the grounds, amplifying equipment having been installed so that all could listen to the proceedings as they were broadcast from the Tabernacle. Those who were fortunate enough to find seats in the Assembly Hall could both see and hear the services by means of television.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the meeting.

The Tabernacle Choir furnished the choir singing for this service.

CHOIR AND ORGAN BROADCAST

Preliminary to the commencement of the Sunday morning session of the General Conference, which convened at 10 o'clock a.m., the regular Sunday morning Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast was presented from 9:30 to 10:00.

This broadcast, which was presented through the courtesy and facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network, throughout the United States, was written and announced by Richard L. Evans and originated with Station KSL, Salt Lake City. It was as follows:

(Organ began playing "As the Dew" and on signal the organ and choir broke into "Gently Raise," singing words to end of second line, and humming to end of verse for announcer's background.)

Announcer: Once more we welcome you within these walls with music and the spoken word from the Crossroads of the West.

The Columbia Broadcasting System and its affiliated stations bring you at this hour another presentation from Temple Square in Salt Lake City, with J. Spencer Cornwall conducting the Tabernacle Choir, Frank W. Asper, Tabernacle Organist, and the spoken word by Richard Evans.

We open with the quiet conviction of Alfred Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" sung to the music of Henry Holden Huss: "... when that which drew from out the boundless deep, ... turns again home."

(Choir sang "Crossing the Bar"—Huss) (Organ background)

Announcer: With Dr. Asper at the Tabernacle Organ today we turn to one of the writings of Karg-Elert—a majestic march movement written around a theme of thanksgiving: "Now Thank We All Our God."

(Organ presented "Now Thank We All Our God"—Karg-Elert)

Announcer: The Men's Chorus of the Tabernacle Choir recalls a hymn by O. P. Huish as arranged by Mr. Cornwall: "Jesus, My Savior True, Guide Me to Thee."

(Men's Chorus sang "Guide Me to Thee"—Huish)

Announcer: Dr. Asper next presents a light and lovely impression from the pen of Ralph Kinder: "In Springtime."

(Organ presented "In Springtime"—Kinder)

Announcer: The choir continues from Temple Square with a worshipful utterance by L. Stanley Glarum, with text taken from Psalm 47: "Sing Praises Unto Our King, for God is King o'er All the Earth."

(Choir. presented "Sing Praises"—Glarum) (Organ background)

Announcer: There is a lesson sooner or later learned by almost all of us, and that is that there are some things we have to leave to time. If we were to call for self-confession, we might well have a large showing of hands from those who have sometime planted seeds but who couldn't wait for shoots to show above the surface and so have dug them up to see what they were doing. But we can't dig up the seed and have a harvest or break open a bud and have a flower. We have to leave some things to time. When someone is confined with illness or injury, his first question is, "How long will it be?" The seasoned physician will sometimes say, "A few days," when he knows full well it will likely be much longer, but he tries to fit the forecast to the endurance of the man who is down. We can help the healing process; but, despite the pressure of our impatience, there is much we have to leave to time. Sometimes we see someone who seems to be "getting away with something" without prevention or punishment, and we may feel that justice is unreasonably slow as well as blind. But time overtakes all offenses and offenders—sometimes sooner than we suppose. Sometimes we see people we are impatient to improve. But we can't force the minds of men. We can teach, persuade, and persevere, and set before them a convincing example—and leave the rest to time. Of course we can't leave everything to time. We can't condone complacency. We must actively oppose the intrusion of every evil. We must earnestly be about our business and be anxiously engaged in a good cause. We must plant when it is time for planting or we shall have no harvest. But having done the best we can do, we must learn to leave what we can't do to the growing, developing, mending, mellowing process of time. And if we have faith enough, patience enough, perseverance enough, time will work many wonders. It will reveal truth and discredit untruth. It will silence slander. It will soften many sorrows. It will heal many wounds—wounds of the flesh, of the heart, of the mind and of the spirit. It will right many wrongs. It will bring compensation, retribution, vindication. And even if in our time we don't find all the answers, immortal men can afford to have faith in the limitless future—if we do each day what can and should be done and leave to time what time alone can do.

(Without announcement choir sang "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing"—Wyeth) (Organ background)

Announcer: We have heard the choir recall a hymn with words by Robert Robinson and music by John Wyeth: "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing."

And now from the organ we hear the fervent phrases of a hymn melody by A. C. Smyth: "Come Thou Glorious Day of Promise."

(Organ presented "Come Thou Glorious Day of Promise"—Smyth) (Organ background)

Announcer: With the words of a fifth century hymn and the music of T. Tertius Noble, we recall the New Testament account of the calming of the troubled waters: "And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship . . . and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish? And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm. And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith? (Mark 4:37-41) "Fierce was the wild billow, dark was the night, . . . trembled the mariners, peril was nigh; then saith the Light of Light; 'Peace! It is I! . . . Jesu, deliver, come thou to me, soothe thou my voy'ging over life's sea; thou, when the storm of Death roars sweeping by, whisper, O Truth of Truth, 'Peace, It is I!'"

(Choir sang "Fierce was the Wild Billow"—Noble)

(Organ played "As the Dew")

Announcer: Once more we leave you within the shadows of the everlasting hills. May peace be with you, this day—and always.

This concludes the one thousand and fiftieth presentation continuing the 21st year of this traditional broadcast from the Mormon Tabernacle on Temple Square, brought to you by the Columbia Network and its affiliated stations, originating with Radio Station KSL in Salt Lake City.

J. Spencer Cornwall conducted the singing of the Tabernacle Choir. Frank W. Asper was at the organ. The spoken word by Richard Evans.

President George Albert Smith:

This is the fifth session of the 120th semi-annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square, Salt Lake City. The house is crowded to capacity.

Of the General Authorities all are present except Elder Alma Sonne of the Assistants to the Twelve; he is in Europe in charge of the European Mission. Elder Thomas E. McKay, also of the Assistants to the Twelve, is at home convalescing by direction of his physicians. President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy is in New England in charge of that mission.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television. The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL of Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise.

They will also be televised over the KSL television station, channel 5.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir singing for today's sessions of the conference will be by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting, and with Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the morning session, and Elder Alexander Schreiner for the afternoon session.

We will begin the services by the Tabernacle Choir and congregation singing, "How Firm a Foundation." It is suggested that all you Latter-day Saints who know that hymn keep it in mind and help the Choir. They do not need our help but I think we should do our part when we have an opportunity to sing an occasional hymn.

The opening prayer will be offered by President Delbert L. Stapley of the Phoenix Stake, Arizona.

Singing by the Choir and the congregation, "How Firm a Foundation."

The opening prayer was offered by President Delbert L. Stapley of the Phoenix Stake.

Singing by the Choir, "Praise for Peace."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. MCKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

It is always more or less an ordeal for me to face an audience, and particularly a congregation in this historic Tabernacle. I've been in hopes for years that I would outgrow that feeling, but I still think, study, and pray in anticipation; I tremble as I stand before you with the sense of inadequacy to give a timely message as it should be given; and after it's over, worry in self-reproachment for having failed to do justice to the cause. I suppose you brethren have all sensed these same feelings; so I ask for your sympathy, your help this morning. I particularly pray for guidance of the Holy Spirit.

TEACH ALL NATIONS

Said the Savior to his Apostles:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. (Matthew 28:19-20.)

Nearly every member of the Church understands that there are two general ecclesiastical divisions in the Church of Jesus Christ: one made up of the organized stakes and wards; the other, of the missionary work.

It is of this second division I wish to speak this morning.

Many of us fail to realize the value and potent possibilities of this great branch of Church activity.

1.—As an example of voluntary service in the cause of the Master, it is unexcelled.

2.—As an incentive to clean living among youth, as a contributing factor to character building, its influence is immeasurable.

3.—As an educative force and uplifting influence upon our communities, its effect is clearly manifest.

4.—As a contributing factor to a better understanding among nations, and to the establishing of international friendship, it wields a significant influence.

5.—As it is the purpose of the Almighty to save the individual, not to make him a mere cog in the machinery of the state, the missionary service works most harmoniously in the consummation of this eternal plan!

Remember the worth of souls is great in the sight of God; . . .

And if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people, and bring, save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father!

And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy if you should bring many souls unto me! (D. & C. 18:10, 15-16.)

NUMBER OF MISSIONARIES

Its importance, significance, and magnitude may be glimpsed when I tell you that the total number of missionaries assigned by the First Presidency, now actively engaged in missionary work, has reached 5001. At the next official meeting of the Missionary Appointment Committee, undoubtedly there will be assigned fifty or sixty additional missionaries whom bishops and stake presidencies have recommended.

In addition to these, there are between 1200 and 1500 missionaries assigned by mission presidents, a number of whom are devoting all their time to the preaching of the gospel in the missions, and others working part time, making a total of approximately 6500 missionaries in the world today.

This number is exclusive of the 2900 missionaries laboring in the stakes of Zion—a total number of approximately ten thousand.

In monetary terms, applying it only to the five thousand plus appointed officially by the First Presidency, this means that missionaries and their parents in stakes and wards are spending at the present time in cash $275,000 every month, or $3,300,000 each year.

The text I have just quoted, "go ye unto all the world" is really the missionary injunction given by the risen Christ to his Apostles. In effect he says:

Consider this work unfinished until all nations shall have accepted the gospel and shall have enlisted themselves as my disciples.

Now, that command was not given to men indiscriminately; for even to the Twelve, to whom he addressed that commission, he later gave a formal assignment and blessing:

... as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.
And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. (John 20:21, 22.)

With the same direct commission from the risen Lord who with the Father appeared in person in the beginning of the nineteenth century, the proclamation of the gospel is being made by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to "every nation, kindred, tongue and people" as fast as means and personnel can carry it forward.

FORTY-SIX MISSIONS

Though the Church is young in years and comparatively small in numbers, there are today, including the great mission on Temple Square, forty-six organized missions in Europe, the United States, Canada, Mexico, South America, the Pacific Isles, Japan, and China.

In these missions there are 1470 branches; if we include independent Sunday Schools, there are 1780. That number is exclusive of wards and branches in organized stakes.

The forty-six men who preside over these missions are chosen generally from the rank and file of the Church. They are businessmen, contractors, ranchers, college professors, lawyers, physicians and surgeons, dentists, and members of other professions. When the call comes to any such, no matter what his responsibilities or circumstances, seldom if ever does he offer an excuse, but, as Samuel of old, replies: "Speak, thy servant heareth," even though such acceptance means a financial sacrifice and sometimes the loss of political preference.

The missionaries, generally, are young men and women, ranging in age from twenty to thirty years, with a sprinkling among them of more experienced men and women.

It is well to say here that the direct responsibility of preaching the gospel rests upon the priesthood of the Church—not upon the women, though the efficiency of the latter in cottage meetings, in Primaries, and Sunday Schools, and in other phases of missionary work, is of the highest order, and their willingness, even eagerness, to labor is not excelled by that of the young men.

WHO MISSIONARIES ARE

Who are these youths chosen to represent the Church? They, too, as their mission presidents, come from the rank and file. They are farmers, artisans, factory workers, bank clerks, secretaries in business firms, and other vocations. Some who are married leave their wives and their children who help to support them in their work. All of them look forward to the time after their return when they, with congenial loving companions, may build happy homes.

As already stated, each pays his or her own expenses, in most cases, of course, with the assistance of parents. True Christianity is love in action. There is no better way to manifest love for God than to show an unselfish love for your fellow men. This is the spirit of missionary work. Our hearts respond to the cry of the poet:

"O brother man! fold to thy heart thy brother.
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer."

These men go out in the spirit of love, seeking nothing from any nation to which they are sent: no personal acclaim, no monetary acquisition. Two or three years ago, many of these missionaries were honorably discharged from military duty. Not a few had saved their government allowance to pay their expenses in the mission field if and when they should be called.

INFLUENCE OF MISSIONARY SYSTEM UPON YOUTH

In this fact we get a glimpse of the helpful influence of the missionary system upon the youth. Every deacon, teacher, and priest, every elder in the Church understands that to be worthy to be a representative of the Church of Christ, he must be temperate in his habits and morally clean. He is taught that there is no double standard of chastity, that every young man, as well as every young woman, is to keep himself free from sexual impurity.

I once read one of the most impressive letters of a mother to a son that I think has ever been written. It contained only three words, except the signature: "Quinn, keep clean," and was signed, "Lovingly, Mother."

Young men in the army, therefore, who looked forward to serving as missionaries and saved their money for that purpose, cherished higher ideals than their "buddies" who sometimes prodigally spent their earnings in saloons, gambling dens, and brothels.

In more than one instance, Latter-day Saint soldiers sent home their earnings of their parents to be deposited in the savings bank to bear their missionary costs after the war. And we know of two or three young men each of whom added in effect: "If I do not come home, use the money to pay the expenses of some other young man to go out as a missionary."

TRUSTWORTHINESS

These young men are instructed that they go out as representatives of the Church, and that a representative of any organization—economic or religious—must possess at least one outstanding quality, and that is: trustworthiness. He was right who said, "To be trusted is a greater compliment than to be loved." And whom do these missionaries represent? First, they represent their parents, carrying the responsibility of keeping their good name unsullied. Second, they represent the Church, specifically the ward in which they live. And third, they represent the Lord Jesus Christ, whose authorized servants they are.

These ambassadors, for such they are, represent these three groups and carry in that representation one of the greatest responsibilities of their lives.

Now, what is the outstanding message that they have to give to Christian, as well as to un-Christian countries? There must surely be something distinctive to justify their presence in all parts of the world.

DIVINITY OF JESUS CHRIST

First, their message is that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the redeemer and Savior of mankind. To these missionaries—"Jesus is not a legendary figure in history," to paraphrase a question asked by Hall Caine to the Christian world,

... he is not merely a saint to be painted in the stained glass of church windows, a sort of sacred fairy not to be approached and hardly to be mentioned by name. But he is still what he was in the flesh, a reality, a man of like passions with ourselves, a guide, a counselor, a comforter, a great voice calling to us to live nobly, to die bravely, and to keep up our courage to the last.

These missionaries declare with Peter of old

... there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. (Acts 4:12.)

RELATION TO OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The second distinctive message is this: Every missionary should clearly understand, and so declare in unmistakable words, the relation of this Church to other Christian organizations—that it is neither an outgrowth nor a division of any of them. True, the Church is generally classed with the Protestants; but Protestantism began with the great dissenters—Martin Luther, Philip Melancthon, Ulrich Zwingli, John Knox, and others. These great reformers denounced corrupt practices in the Roman Church, particularly the selling of indulgences wherein delinquents could make satisfaction by money contributions, a practice carried on under one pretext and another until it became a regular financial expedient for increasing papal revenue.

It was extended even to souls in purgatory.

The great men whom I have named rebelled against this evil and others, and organized churches in protest.

Accordingly, when the second Diet of Spires in 1529 passed a resolution

... disallowing further religious innovations in the Lutheran states, whilst prohibiting the profession of the Zwinglian and Anabaptist forms of the reformed faith, the Lutheran minority protested, and this protestation was signed by fourteen cities as well as by the elector of Saxony, the landgrave of Hesse and four other provinces. Hence the name Protestant as a designation of the evangelical party.

Protestantism, under many different names, spread over Europe and later among the American colonies, and freedom to worship as one sincerely wished became more and more the proscribed right of the individual, but in the hearts of many a true believer in Jesus of Nazareth, there remained an abiding belief, a feeling that the authority to represent him had been taken from the earth, and that there ... can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew.

TRUE CHURCH RESTORED

This in effect is what the Lord told the Prophet Joseph Smith when as a fourteen-year-old lad he inquired which of all sects was right and which should he join. Joseph was told to join none of them for

"they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof." (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith, 2:19.)

A few years later, specifically, April 6, 1830, Joseph Smith received by the spirit of prophecy and revelation instructions from the Savior "to organize his Church once more here-upon the earth."

Thus was established by direct revelation and divine authority from the Eternal Father and Jesus Christ who founded the Church in the Meridian of Times, the Church of Latter-days, which is set up as a fore-runner, if you please, to the establishing of the kingdom of God upon the earth. In the words of President John Taylor, with such an organization there is a chance for the Lord, God to be revealed. There is an opportunity for the law of life to be made manifest, a chance for God to introduce the principles of heaven upon the earth and for the will of God to be done upon earth as it is done in heaven. (J. D. 18:140, Oct. 10, 1875.)

With these two great fundamental truths as the heart of their message, namely, (1) the divinity of the mission of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, and (2) the restoration of his gospel in this age, the missionaries are to the best of their ability, fulfilling the injunction to preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever the Lord has commanded.

This, then, brethren, is a world-wide Church organized preparatory to the establishing of the kingdom of God on earth by means of which . . . the Lord God may be revealed, and an opportunity for the laws of life to be made manifest.

AMBASSADORS OF GOOD WILL

These thousands of missionaries and men who hold the priesthood everywhere are ambassadors of good will, the ultimate purpose of whose service is to change the hearts of men everywhere from selfishness and greed to tolerance, compassion, and brotherhood. And, so, with all our hearts we can sing:

Go, ye messengers of glory;
Run, ye legates of the skies;
Go and tell the pleasing story
That a glorious angel flies,
Great and mighty,
With a message from the skies.

Go to ev'ry tribe and nation;
Visit ev'ry land and clime;
Sound to all the proclamation.
Tell to all the truth sublime:
That the gospel
Does in ancient glory shine.

Go, to all the gospel carry.
Let the joyful news abound;
Go till ev'ry nation hear you.
Jew and Gentile greet the sound.
Let the gospel,
Echo all the earth around.

Bearing seed of heav'nly virtue,
 Scatter it o'er all the earth;
 Go! Jehovah will support you;
 Gather all the sheaves of worth;
 Then, with Jesus,
 Reign in glory on the earth.

—John Taylor

May the heart of every missionary be inspired by the spirit of his Lord, whose authorized servant he is, to the end that selfishness and violence now so powerful in the world will be replaced by loyal service, truth, and brotherhood! I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER SPENCER W. KIMBALL

Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My brothers and sisters and friends, in all humility I stand before you today, and I desire to address my remarks to all you who sit before us and to those many who are outside the walls of this building but who are listening and seeing.

A PROPHET OF GOD

When the prophet on Friday morning opened this glorious conference and bore his testimony to this world, I wonder if it affected all of you as it did me. My mind went back to the twenty-third chapter of Matthew where the Lord Jesus Christ was speaking to people who disregarded the solemn and sacred things that were there for their acceptance. In words condemnatory he said:

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; . . .

and then later:

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee. . . . (Matt. 23:29-30, 34, 37.)

You folk in the Church and out of the Church heard a prophet of God bear testimony that this was the only true and living Church upon the earth. Did you listen, or do you also build sepulchres for the dead prophets and tombs for those who have passed away long ago and disregard the living ones? I bear witness to you that the Prophet of God who bore testimony to you on Friday morning is the recognized head of God's kingdom here upon this earth, and you would do well to listen and to accept it in your hearts. I bear testimony also, in all solemnity, that this is the true and living Church and that it is officered by men who are called of God, and it is accepted of the Lord, and that the gospel which it promulgates, by these thousands of missionaries abroad and the other thousands here at home, is the gospel of Jesus Christ which will cure all ills and solve all problems and will exalt mankind as well as save him.

WORK AMONG LAMANITES

I had thought of saying something about the Indian or Lamanite program at this conference, but I have been "pressed by the spirit," as Paul said, to speak upon other matters; however, I should like to make this one statement, that the work among the Lamanites, though still in its infancy, is going forward at an incredible pace. The responsiveness of the children of Lehi is unbelievable. There will be many hundreds of baptisms this year both in stakes and missions, and I pray the blessings of the Lord upon all those who are contributing toward fulfilment of the promises with which the Lord has filled his books of scripture.

Much has been said in this conference already about the fundamental principle of repentance. President Clark repeated the other night the passage where the Lord said, "... preach nothing but repentance unto this people."

It seems that most of us think that repentance is for the other person, for the one who has committed murder or adultery or theft or something that is very heinous, but repentance, as I read the scriptures, is for us all.

NEED FOR REPENTANCE

It is my pleasure, also, to go into the homes of the leaders in the missions, wards, and stakes of Zion, and I am deeply appreciative of the fact that most of our people are trying to live the commandments of the Lord. I find in this Church many people who amaze me with their close approach toward perfection, but I do find, as I go about the Church, some who need this principle of repentance. I thank the Lord for this glorious principle. I find parents who have lost the natural affection for their children. I find children who disown and disclaim their parents and evade responsibility concerning them. I find sometimes husbands who desert their wives and their children, and who use almost every pretext to justify such action. I find wives who are demanding, unworthy, quarrelsome, and who are uncooperative and selfish and worldly, provoking such action. I find those who gossip and bear false witness against their neighbors. I find brethren who hale each other into the courts on trivial matters that could have been settled by themselves. I find blood brothers and sisters who fight over inheritances and bring each other into the courts of the land and drag before the public the most intimate and personal family secrets, bringing all of the skeletons out of the closets, leaving nothing sacred, having little regard for each other, interested only in that which they might acquire by such action. I saw one family split wide apart, half of the brothers and sisters on one side, and half on the other, in a most disgraceful feud. At the funeral half of them sat on one side of the aisle and half on the other. They would not speak to each other. The property involved was worth only a few thousand dollars, and yet they are avowed enemies. I have seen people in wards and branches who impugn the motives of the Authorities and of each other and make them "offender for a word." I have seen people in branches where they have broken wide apart and say unkind things about each other and will hardly speak to each other. They bring into their meetings the spirit of the evil one instead of the spirit of the Christ.

FAULTS TO BE OVERCOME

I have seen husbands and wives, living under the same roof, who are selfish, unbending, and unforgiving, who with their misunderstandings have hardened their hearts and poisoned their minds. Then I have seen many people who have become offended at Church authorities, their ward, stake, mission, auxiliary, and priesthood leaders, for things which have been said or were imagined to have been said or thought.

To the children who are unkind to their parents the Lord has said, "Ye hypocrites," (Matt. 15:7.) "He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death." (Matt. 15:4.) To the intolerant, God has said, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." (Acts 11:9.) To the gossip he has said from Sinai: "Thou shalt not bear false witness. . . ." (Exodus 20:16.) To those who would impugn motives he said: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." (Matt. 7:1.) And to those who would criticize the Authorities and use them as stumbling blocks, who would absent themselves from their meetings, who would fail to pay their tithes and other obligations because of fancied offenses, I would like to read from the Doctrine & Covenants, Section 121:16-18, 20-21:

Cursed are all those that shall lift up the heel against mine anointed, saith the Lord, and cry they have sinned when they have not sinned before me, saith the Lord, but have done that which was meet in mine eyes, and which I commanded them.

But those who cry transgression do it because they are the servants of sin, and are the children of disobedience themselves.

And those who swear falsely against my servants, . . .

Their basket shall not be full, their houses and their barns shall perish, and they themselves shall be despised by those that flattered them.

They shall not have right to the priesthood, nor their posterity after them from generation to generation.

And to all who sin in devious ways, the Savior says:

. . . except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. (Luke 13:5.)

ALL NEED TO REPENT

And so, repentance is not for the murderer alone, nor the adulterer. It comes to them, too, but to all those who have been tempted of the evil one to commit sins of omission and sins of commission.

As I read the scriptures, I find that all the various sins are condemned. May I name only a few whom he calls to repentance: the murderer and the adulterer and the thief, the proud, the coveter, the drinker, the smoker, the ungrateful, the liar, the gambler, the drunkard, the selfish, the unforgiving, the accuser, the defrauder, the gossip, the profane, the vulgar, the intolerant, the malicious, the idler, the persecutor, the envious, the jealous, and to all these the Lord says:

. . . repent and walk more uprightly before me. (D. & C. 5:21.)

Repentance is required of us all. In this dispensation the Lord said:

. . . entangle not yourselves in sin, but let your hands be clean, until the Lord comes. (D. & C. 88:86.)

Paul told the Romans:

. . . There is none righteous, no, not one. (Romans 3:10.)

Even in the days of Kirtland the Lord flashed forth this indictment:

Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many who are in the church at Kirtland;

For they do not forsake their sins, and their wicked ways, the pride of their hearts, and their covetousness, and all their detestable things, and observe the words of wisdom and eternal life which I have given unto them.

. . . I, the Lord, will chasten them. (D. & C. 98:19-21.)

He called even the Prophet Joseph to repentance, though his sin was as nothing compared to ours:

. . . now I command you, my servant Joseph, to repent and walk more uprightly before me, and to yield to the persuasions of men no more; (D. & C. 5:21.)

His sin had been in yielding to the persuasions of Martin Harris to permit him to borrow the sacred records and let them be viewed. The Lord said further:

Wherefore, I will that all men shall repent, for all are under sin, except those which I have reserved unto myself, holy men that ye know not of. (D. & C. 49:8.)

And surely every man must repent or suffer, for I, God, am endless. (D. & C. 19:4.)

A MERCIFUL LAW

Repentance is a glorious and merciful law. It means a sorrow for sin, a confession of sin, abandonment of sin, restitution for sin, and then the living of the commandments of the Lord, which itself includes the forgiving of others, even those who sin against us. The Father says:

By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them. (D. & C. 58:43.)

The Lord has made provisions for those who commit heinous crimes, but I shall not dwell specifically upon them today. Those who are in deep sin should go to their ward, stake, or mission authorities for assistance. I am talking now, generally, about the sins that many of us commit.

In the Doctrine & Covenants, Section 59, the Lord says,

But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. (v. 12.)

Long years ago in every testimony meeting we had people who arose and said to their brothers and sisters, substantially, this: "I confess before you my weaknesses and imperfections and ask your assistance, your help, your tolerance, your understanding, and I pray the Lord will forgive me." We do not hear it so much any more. I think the Lord so instructed us, that we might seek forgiveness of our sins, by having confessed them humbly, acknowledging them before the people and the Lord.

Now, in Proverbs 28:13, the Lord inspired his prophets to say,

He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

ABANDONMENT OF SIN

And then to the Nephites this word came from the Lord:

And whosoever repented of their sins and did confess them, them he did number among the people of the church;

And those that would not confess their sins and repent of their iniquity, the same were not numbered among the people of the church, and their names were blotted out. (Mosiah 26:35-36.)

The abandonment of sin is an important part of repentance and is a requirement before forgiveness can be expected. The Lord says we may know a man has repented if he confess and forsake his sins and:

whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy. (Prov. 28:13.)

RESTITUTION

The sinner should make restitution. It is obvious that the murderer cannot give back a life he has taken; the libertine cannot restore the virtue he has violated; the gossip may be unable to nullify and overcome the evils done by a loose tongue; but, so far as is possible, one must restore and make good the damage done. Perhaps the warning of the Redeemer "... thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite" (Luke 12:59) may have reference to restitution as well as to the suffering of the sinner. Again the Lord says: "... and they [the sins] shall not be blotted out until he repent and reward thee four-fold in all things where-with he has trespassed against thee." (D. & C. 98:44.)

One of the most important elements in repentance and forgiveness is living the commands of God for the Father says in his preface to his latter-day revelation,

... I the Lord cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance,

Nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven. (D. & C. 1:31-32.)

FORGIVENESS OF SINS

Now, the doing of the commandments includes many things, and much good works, but one of its very important aspects is the purging of our own hearts and forgiving others their trespasses against us.

To obtain forgiveness of our sins, we must forgive. Read the scriptures given us on that point: "And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Eph. 4:32.) Then in the Lord's prayer to the people in Jerusalem, he said: "Our Father which art in heaven, ... forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." (Matt. 6:9, 12.) Did he not mean in the same manner and in the same degree, perhaps, as we forgive our debtors? He made it a little more clear, even, to the Nephites, for after he had said, "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors" (III Nephi 13:11) he said, "For, if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you;

"But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (III Nephi 13:14, 15.) And again to the Nephites the Lord says: "... ye shall also forgive one another your trespasses; for verily I say unto you, he that forgiveth not his neighbor's trespasses when he says that he repents, the same hath brought himself under condemnation." (Mosiah 26:31.) Condemnation, then, comes to you who will not forgive, probably even greater than to him who gave the offense.

Even the ancient Apostles suffered on this account:

"My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another and forgave not one another in their hearts; and for this evil they were afflicted and sorely chastened.

"Wherefore I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another; for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses standeth condemned before the Lord; for there remaineth in him the greater sin." (D. & C. 64:8-9.)

THE HIGHER LAW

Now, the Savior said to his people when he was upon the earth, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," (Matt. 5:38) and then he went on to give us the higher law. He proceeded: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

"And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.

"And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." (Matt. 5:39-41.) And again Jesus said: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy.

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Matt. 5:43-44.) Why? That you might have the benefit of it. It does not injure him so much when you hate a person, especially if he is far removed and does not come in contact with you, but the hate and the bitterness canker your unforgiving heart.

One great blessing that comes to those who will forgive, and love their neighbors and enemies also, is: "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: . . .

"For if ye love them which love you, what reward have you? do not even the publicans the same?" (Matt. 5:45, 46.) And then he commanded: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. 5:48.)

"HOW OFT SHALL I . . . FORGIVE"

Perhaps Peter had met people who continued to trespass against him, and he asked: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" (Ibid., 18:21.) And the Lord said: "I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven." (Ibid., 18:22.) ". . . and as oft as thine enemy repenteth of the trespass wherewith he has trespassed against thee, thou shalt forgive him, until seventy times seven." (D. & C. 98:40.) Until seventy times seven! That seems very difficult indeed for us mortals, and yet there are still harder things to do. When they have repented and come on their knees to ask forgiveness, most of us can forgive, but the Lord has required that we shall even forgive them if they do not repent nor ask forgiveness of us.

In D. & C. Sec. 98:41-45, he said: "And if he trespass against thee and repent not the first time, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him.

"And if he trespass against thee the second time, and repent not, nevertheless thou shalt forgive him.

"And if he trespass against thee the third time, and repent not, thou shalt also forgive him.

"But if he trespass against thee the fourth time thou shalt not forgive him, but shall bring these testimonies before the Lord; and they shall not be blotted out until he repent and reward thee four-fold in all things wherewith he has trespassed against thee.

"And if he do this, thou shalt forgive him with all thine heart;" we must still forgive. The Lord will avenge us. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord," (Rom. 12:19) and man must not seek vengeance nor retaliate against those who have damaged him. Bitterness injures the one who carries it more than the one against whom it is directed.

JUDGE NOT

Can we ever forget the lesson taught us by the Lord Jesus Christ when he said:

Judge not, that ye be not judged.

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye, (Matt. 7:1-5.)

The contrast between the huge beam and the tiny mote brings to our attention, forcibly, that we mortals should totally avoid judgment of our fellow men. When a beam is obscuring our own vision, how can we know their motives, intents, and desires? And not knowing, how can we judge righteously?

Another indictment of us who accuse others is the touching story of the woman taken in adultery and brought before the Savior for judgment. Her accusers, apparently with monumental beams in their eyes blinding them, brought the unfortunate sinner demanding the extreme penalty of stoning. The Lord was wise beyond their comprehension and could not be trapped by these wanton sinners.

... But Jesus stooped down and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

So when they continued asking him, he lifted himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground. (John 8:6-8.)

And when he looked up a little later, all the accusers " . . . being convicted by their own conscience," (v. 9) had sneaked away.

UNHOLY JUDGING

Another impressive example of unholy judging comes to us in the Lord's parable of the unmerciful servant who owed to his lord ten thousand talents but being unable to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children and all that he had, and payment to be made. The servant fell down and begged for a moratorium, and when the compassionate lord had loosed him and forgiven his debt, this conscienceless person straightway found one of his fellowservants who owed him an hundred pence, and taking him by the throat demanded payment in full, and upon failure of the debtor, cast him into prison. When the lord heard of this rank injustice, he chastised the unmerciful servant:

. . . O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

Shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had pity on thee?

And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. (Matt. 18:32-34.)

Then the Redeemer, summarizing, said to his disciples:

So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. (Matt. 18:35.)

According to my Bible, the Roman penny is an eighth of an ounce of silver, while the talent is 750 ounces. Accordingly the unmerciful servant was forgiven 600,000 units but would not forgive one unit.

I met a woman once, demanding and critical. She accused her stake president of harshness and would have displaced him if she could. She had committed adultery, and yet with her comparative debt of 600,000 pence she had the temerity to criticize her leader with a hundred pence debt. I also knew a young man who complained at his bishop and took offense at the leader's inefficiency and his grammatical errors, yet he himself had in his life sins comparable to the talents and had the effrontery to accuse his bishop of weaknesses comparable only to the pence.

Those of us who have sins, heinous or less serious, would do well to sing frequently the beautiful hymns: "Should You Feel Inclined to Censure," by George H. Durham; "School Thy Feelings, O My Brother," by President Charles W. Penrose; and "Let Each Man Learn to Know Himself," so much sung and loved by President Heber J. Grant.

EXAMPLES OF FORGIVENESS

Remember that we must forgive even if our offender did not repent and ask forgiveness. Stephen yet in his young life had mastered this principle. His accusers, unable to find anything against him other than fancied blasphemy, stoned him to death. Not waiting for them to repent, Stephen displayed his saintliness by using his last breath to forgive them saying: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." (Acts 7:60.) They had taken his very life, and yet he forgave them. The Prophet Joseph moved to his certain death with the same spirit of forgiveness. The Lord Jesus also gave to us the lesson. Before they asked forgiveness, before they repented, while they were still in their murderous passion, he found it in his heart to forgive them and to ask his Father to "... forgive them; for they know not what they do." (Luke 23:34.) He did not wait till his crucifiers, the high priests, scribes, elders, and Pharisees, should have a change of heart, but forgave them while they were yet covered with his life's blood.

DUTIES OF OFFENDED ONE

It frequently happens that offenses are committed when the offender is not aware of it. Something he has said or done is misconstrued or misunderstood. The offended one treasures in his heart the offense, adding to it such other things as might give fuel to the fire and justify his conclusions. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why the Lord requires that the offended one should make the overtures toward peace. He says:

And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess thou shalt be reconciled. (D. & C. 42:88.)

To the Nephites the Lord said:

... if ... thy brother hath aught against thee—

Go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I will receive you. (III Nephi 12:23-24.)

And to the disciples in Judea he said:

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

Leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. (Matt. 5:23-24.)

Do we follow that commandment or do we sulk in our bitterness, waiting for our offender to learn of it and to kneel to us in remorse?

FORGIVENESS INVOLVES FORGETTING

And this reconciliation suggests also forgetting. Unless you forget, have you forgiven? A woman in a branch in the mission field where there had been friction finally capitulated and said, "Yes. I will forgive the others, but I have an eternal memory." Certainly she had not fulfilled the law of forgiving. She was meeting the letter but not the spirit. Frequently we say we forgive then permit the grievance to continue to poison and embitter us.

The Lord forgets when he has forgiven, and certainly must we. He inspired Isaiah to say:

I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins. (Isaiah 43:25.)

And again in our dispensation, he said:

Behold, he who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven; and I, the Lord, remember them no more. (D. & C. 58:42.)

And we are instructed by him that

. . . thou shalt forgive him with all thine heart; . . . (D. & C. 98:45.)

No bitterness of past frictions can be held in memory if we forgive with all our hearts.

So long as we are bitter, hold grudges, are unrepentant ourselves, unforgiving to others, how can we partake of the sacrament? Read again what God said in the matter:

Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. (1 Cor. 11:27-29.)

SETTLING DIFFERENCES

Brothers and sisters and friends, if we will sue for peace, taking the initiative in settling differences—if we can forgive and forget with all our hearts—if we can cleanse our own souls of sin, accusations, bitterness, and guilt before we cast a stone at others—if we forgive all real or fancied offenses before we ask forgiveness for our own sins—if we pay our own debts, large or small, before we press our debtors—if we manage to clear our own eyes of the blinding beams before we magnify the motes in the eyes of others—what a glorious world this would be! Divorce would be reduced to a minimum; courts would be freed from disgusting routines; family life would be heavenly; the building of the kingdom would go forward at an accelerated pace; and the peace which passeth understanding would bring to us all a joy and happiness which has hardly "entered into the heart of man."

And a final word from the Lord:

Wherefore, I command you again to repent, lest I humble you with my almighty power; and that you confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments of which I have spoken, of which in the smallest, yea, even in the least degree you have tasted at the time I withdrew my Spirit. D. & C. 19:20.)

May the Lord bless us all that we may continually carry in our hearts the true spirit of repentance and forgiveness until we shall have perfected ourselves, looking toward the glories of exaltation awaiting the most faithful, I pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and the congregation sang the hymn, "O Say, What Is Truth?"

ELDER ANTOINE R. IVINS

Of the First Council of the Seventy

My brethren and sisters, I believe that I have enjoyed this conference thus far to the fullest extent that a nervous man can. The testimonies that have been given have been wonderful, and we have heard much that is worthy of our remembrance and reflection. It is my desire to bear you my testimony as to the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and if in doing so, I can say any little thing that will comfort any of us or give us greater courage in living the gospel of Jesus Christ then I shall be happy.

INFLUENCE OF JOSEPH SMITH

Not long ago, as I was leaving the office, I met a man who told me that he was a prominent lecturer. I have never heard him, but he alleged that he is a prominent lecturer. He had in his hand a pamphlet, "Joseph Smith Tells His Own Story." He said he was looking for the best printed picture of the Prophet Joseph Smith, for purposes of his own, of course. He was a man, I presume, of Jewish faith, for he said he was a Jew. As he showed me that picture, he made this remark: "Joseph Smith is not dead. He is no more dead than Abraham and Moses and Christ. His influence has extended throughout the whole world. It is felt wherever one goes." I said, "I hope that is true," and he said, "I know it is true. I have been around and felt his influence."

I am glad that I have faith in the Prophet Joseph Smith and the story that he told us. I believe implicitly in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as interpreted by the Church, and the prophets who stand at its head. If I have any doubts, it is only as to my ability to properly understand and properly interpret that gospel in my life.

FIRM FOUNDATION

Not very long ago, also, I sat at a banquet table next to one of our good sisters. During the conversation she told me of two teenage boys, brothers they were, who had just left the Church and had become affiliated with another. In explaining it to her, they said, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has nothing to offer us." It seems to me that that is a strange thing for a young man born in the Church to be able to say, and of course I don't believe a word of it, that is, I don't believe that it is true, because it came perhaps out of the ignorance of those two boys as to the Church and its teachings. We have sung "How Firm a Foundation" is laid for us. I believe that foundation is of such a peculiar nature and so thoroughly and deeply laid that any man or any woman who comes to understand it should accept it and appreciate it. Every man who worships should know the God he worships. Some people who teach tell us that the glorious thing about God is that men cannot understand him; but Christ said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God." (John 17:3.) He implies there, and I infer, that it is possible to come to know God if we will worship him well; and the great thing, as has already been intimated this morning, that came back to us through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith was the clear definition as to the personality of God and of his Son, Jesus Christ. That is the great and basic foundation stone, so far as my faith is concerned, and it came back to the world through the Prophet Joseph Smith. That is why we go to Christian people to teach the gospel, because at the time of the Prophet Joseph Smith there was not, and there is not today, so far as I understand, another Christian denomination which teaches the true personality of God. How can you worship really, honestly, and sincerely without knowing it?

THE PRIESTHOOD

There is another foundation stone that he was instrumental in bringing to us, which was represented last evening in the gathering of twelve thousand people on this block, and that is the priesthood of God. It is the greatest power, the most desirable thing in the world.

When I was in Tennessee one time, a good Methodist asked me if we thought we were the only people, to which I replied that God loves all people and will reward them as they live. We are, however, the custodians of his priesthood, and that priesthood is essential to the performance of the ordinances that he has set up as essential to our exaltation in his kingdom. Without it one cannot even be baptized into the Church. I hope that our friends who are not of us will not be offended when I use an illustration that I read in a letter from a young man who wrote from Barcelona, Spain, recently. He said, "I have come to realize that baptism into the Church of God is essential. I believe that the Catholic baptism is ineffective and Protestant baptism is still worse." Now, I have no enmity toward them. I say this only to show that people do believe, as we do, that baptism is essential. It is set forth in the scriptures unequivocally, but it must be performed by a man who holds the corresponding priesthood to do it. So then, we have another reason for going to even Christian peoples with the message which we bear. That priesthood brings us the privileges of our endowment in the temple. It brings us the privilege of being sealed to our wives for time and all eternity, that our children may be born under the covenant and be ours through eternity if their lives justify it, than which no greater blessing could ever be given to man. If those three things are not something to offer to the people of the world, what do they want? Getting past that, we have other things that were restored. We have the true manner of the administration of the sacrament of Christ. There is no other place in the world that you can find stated the blessings that must be used on the water and the bread, than in the revealed scripture of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. You find it in the Doctrine and Covenants. You find it in the Book of Mormon.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

The Church fosters education as no other religious organization in the world, I think, has ever done. The dominant church boasts the oldest college, I believe, in the world, located in Mexico. It is true that it is old, almost as old as the discovery of America, but what was it used for? It was used to educate a few people who could minister to the masses, but it was never made available to the masses of the people, not even desirable, some writers say, that the masses should be educated, but the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints offers an educational program to young and old, the like of which no other church has ever done.

We have our youth program, which is being copied by many today, which is an offering to the young that they should not consider lightly.

One could go on, if time permitted, to enumerate the many benefits and blessings that come from membership in the Church, so that one wonders why anybody should let trivial things drive him from it.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

I heard the other day of a man who left the Church because his son was denied entry into the temple—I imagine, justifiably so. You find people who leave the Church because, sometimes, they think the bishops and stake presidents do not understand them. They do not think of these broad and basic things, faith in God; faith in the revealed word as it has come from the Prophet Joseph Smith.

that he was actually an inspired servant of God; faith in the appointed leaders who have followed him with an unbroken line of authority to minister in these things. They are the important things, it seems to me, brethren and sisters, and when we think Mormonism, if you want to call it that, when we think of the gospel, it seems to me that those basic things are the ones that we should think of and appreciate, and we should not worry too much about the prohibitions that it gives us. There is not a single one of them that is not set up for the benefit and blessing of men. It is true that many men are frail and have great difficulty in observing all of those things, but they should not let their failure to observe them, their lack of power to observe them, drive them out of the Church, because in other sections they are given liberty and license that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints cannot condone.

HIGH MOTIVES OF OFFICERS

The Lord has to use human elements in the guidance of this great work, and it is not to be expected that any bishop or any stake president or any of the leaders shall be absolutely perfect in his life, but I would have you understand that it is my belief that those who stand as the presiding officers of this Church have nothing but high and holy motives in the things which they do and that they constantly and continuously and always seek the spirit of God to prompt them in the decisions they make, the programs they suggest.

Brethren and sisters, the Church offers a program that should be attractive to all, because it is through the observance of that program that men will not only live better and more righteous lives here on the earth and gain while they live here greater joy and greater happiness and greater satisfaction, but it also paves the way to exaltation in the presence of God, our Heavenly Father, when this mortal sojourn shall end.

It is my testimony to you that I feel, deep down in my heart, the truth of these things, that because I sense this, I am willing to devote my life to their teachings as one of the great missionary forces to which President McKay has referred today. I only hope and desire in serving you that I may do it with full love and fellowship, without hate, in my heart, toward any man, that when men come for advice God may inspire me to give them the advice that will encourage them and comfort them, that in all my ministry the spirit of God may characterize my acts.

May God bless us, I pray in Jesus' name. Amen.

ELDER ALBERT E. BOWEN
Of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

As I have listened to the various speakers during this conference, I have been impressed with the persistence of one theme. Every speaker has urged us all to greater fidelity to principles and a closer conformance in practice to the teachings of our belief. Now I come to think of it, I can't remember any time when this was not so. I have no remembrance of sermons in our religious services which did not exhort the congregation to live in closer harmony with gospel teachings. Always the admonition is to do better.

ADMONITION TO DO BETTER

So characteristic is this feature that I am led to wonder if listeners might not sometimes be tempted to ask, "Aren't you ever satisfied?" "Can you not tell us for once that we are doing well enough?" I cannot remember ever having heard such complacency expressed. I have heard plenty of commendation for the good done and encouragement for the advancement made. I have heard recitals of incidents evidencing individual deeds of great sublimity wherein men have risen to lofty heights of spiritual and moral grandeur. These have been acknowledged as benefactors of mankind and extolled as exemplars of what is praiseworthy. But always such men and deeds are held forth as exhibitions of the inherent human capacity to rise above baser instincts and climb to higher standards of goodness. Their attainments, it will be noted, are rehearsed for their admonitory value—as a basis for enticing others, in emulation, to improve themselves by struggling upward to the high plane achieved by their exemplars. So always the same exhortation, whether expressed in direct terms or by manifest implication, is there, urging us on to do better, to conform to the standards of our high ideal.

Moreover, I am persuaded on reflection that such will and should always be the case. There can be no end to importunings for improvement because improvement, growth, progress, self-betterment is a concept basic to our creed. It is a cardinal principle going to the depths and bottomed on the meaning and purpose of life.

THE GOSPEL PLAN

The gospel is the revelation of God for the salvation of man. Coming from God it is perfect, the authentic plan for right living. If observed in its completeness, it will make men perfect, and ultimate individual perfection, according to gospel teachings, is the goal of life, its real purpose. When men attain it they will be saved, which is the ultimate of all hopes and aspirations, the inspiration for all striving. In that matchless sermon delivered from the mountainside, Jesus admonished his listeners:

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. (Matt. 5:48.)

And Paul and Timothy, writing to the Philippians said of the Savior that he,

... being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. (Phil. 2:6.)

HUMAN FRAILTIES

But men are mortal and beset by human frailties. They are enticed by the pressures of immediate carnal desire to depart from the high standards of the perfect law. When they are under the influence of an exalted occasion, they make high resolves. They firmly determine to avoid past mistakes and to do better. But gone out from under the spell of that influence and absorbed in the complicated pursuits of life, they find difficulty in holding fast to their noble purposes. In competition with their fellows they are influenced by the natural instinct to play a winning game. An opportunity presents itself to turn a good deal, to outsmart a fellow man, or profit at another's expense by suppressing some facts or misrepresenting others, or practising some other form of deception. Or it may be that they see a chance to gain advantage by evil speaking about a rival or to gratify a debasing appetite or a lustful passion, and under the pressure of the immediate impulse the high resolve is dimmed, the noble determination submerged, and they slip below the standard of their ideal. So it is essential that they come again, and frequently, under the influence which kindles anew the warmth of spirit in which good resolutions are begotten, that they may go out fortified to withstand the pressures of temptation which lure them into false ways. Happily, if they refresh themselves frequently enough under ennobling influences, the spirit of repentance will be at work with them, and they will make conquest of some temptations—rise above them—and advance thus far toward their final goal.

RESOLUTION TO DO GOOD

That is one reason why, when we congregate together, we must always and forever be admonished and urged and inspired to renew and strengthen our good determinations, by degrees to correct our imperfections and advance in the scale of goodness. So long as men are subject to be lured by ignoble desires from the perfect law of life, they need constant reminders to bring them back and fortify them against repeated departures. So long as that condition obtains, which is throughout mortality, just so long will it be needful that religious services be devoted to admonition and persuasion and, if may be, to inspiring with the resolution to withstand evil and cleave to the good—to conquer even the desire to yield to debasing appetites or passions or to lower themselves to the level of ignoble deeds.

I trust, therefore, that none of us shall feel that admonitions and exhortations and even reprovings are offered in the spirit of complaining or of chastisement, but rather as reminders of the necessity in our own self-interest of moving forward to higher planes. It is one of the prime offices of religion and of worshiping assemblies that interest should be centered on the grandeur of purity and perfection of life. It has ever been so, and is not something peculiar to our day. It is a practice as old as history and must endure to the end of time.

EARLY CHRISTIAN EXHORTATIONS

If you go back to the early history of the Christian Church, you will find it there. The epistles of Paul, for example, are full of chidings for transgressions, pleadings to forsake evil ways and exhortations to live righteously.

Know ye not,

he wrote to the Corinthians, that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, . . .

Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. (1 Cor. 6:9-10.)

He also pleaded with them to put away envyings and strife and dissensions, which he denounced as carnal and not compatible with the spirit which belonged to those who had accepted the Christ. The things he warned against are such as reveal blemishes in human behavior and make manifest its imperfections.

So Peter in his epistle addressed to the saints in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia urges

. . . laying aside all malice, and all guile, hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings. (1 Peter 2:1.)

He reminded them that in times past, before Christ had been preached to them, they had walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries and admonished them that they must now make an end of these things. He exhorted them to patience in persecution, long-suffering, endurance of scorn, if need be, because of forsaking former ways to humility, charity, and steadfastness in the faith, husbands and wives respecting and fortifying each other. (See 1 Peter 3.)

These expounders of the early Christian faith, it is to be observed, were not content to deal in abstractions or to gloss over evil doings lest some might take offense. They particularized to the degree that no one could be left in doubt as to what they meant. They neither compromised principles nor softened their censure of wrong. Thus, Paul, after the sweeping generalization that the "unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God," proceeds to tell specifically some of the things which make men unrighteous and unfit for the kingdom. The unrighteous include thieves, the covetous, drunkards, revilers, and extortioners, as well as those whose hearts are so eaten out with envy that they become breeders of strife and dissensions. Peter expands the list of things that belong to the qualities of unrighteousness to include malice, guile, hypocrisies, evil speaking, lasciviousness, lusts, revelings, and abominable idolatries. These no doubt were practices indulged by the particular congregations to whom Paul and Peter wrote.

If you will take the trouble to go through the gospels and the letters and epistles and narratives of the men whom Jesus commissioned to carry his message and perpetuate it in the world, you cannot help noting the striking sameness of evil things they exhorted against with the deeds and habits which fall under censure today. The catalogue of vices seems to have been fairly complete way back in that remote period. There hasn't been very much added, and there isn't much to subtract from the list. After all the intervening centuries of teaching, we still need the same admonitions against the same vices. Neither has there been any virtue added to Christ's teaching. These facts perhaps ought not to prove so startling as they may seem when recognition of them first bursts upon our consciousness.

STRUGGLE FOR PERFECTION

The persistence of these human frailties from the beginning of the race till now is but an indication of the heritage of mortality rooted down deep in it. The age-old urging to conquer them attests that mortal imperfections are antagonistic to other instincts native to the human family. There is then set up in the individual a conflict between the opposing forces of good and evil. We should accordingly expect the vices and the virtues respectively, to be essentially of the same nature till the conflict is over, though there may be differences of degree and of manifestation. The conquest of evil by the good is the struggle of life. It is the struggle for perfection and the attainment of salvation which is supremacy over evil. We must not be too discouraged because progress is slow, for it involves working changes in human desires and inclinations. Perfection has to be achieved; salvation has to be won. They do not come as free bestowals. The process seems to be through winning the struggle for supremacy between human imperfections and the mandates of the God-given perfect law. It is by meeting adversities, battling down obstacles, rising triumphant over opposing forces that man builds muscle and moral and intellectual fibre and spiritual stamina. It is the process by which he has built up his amazing mastery in the physical world and the forces that operate in it reducing them to servitude and ordering them to his bidding. There is no such thing in this world as getting something for nothing. Everything has its price. Every step forward in the realm of human progress, in the amazing advance of man in his mastery in the physical world has come out of grueling toil and sweat, heartbreaking disappointments and failures and, after failure returning again to the struggle.

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

The Ladder of St. Augustine
Henry W. Longfellow

PRACTICE OF VIRTUES

That inexorable law is operative in the spiritual realm as well as in the temporal domain. It is the law of life operative in all its aspects that progress, growth, advancement are the result of struggle and conquest. In the spiritual realm the struggle is between good and evil, a struggle for the supremacy of righteousness. There is only one way to win in that struggle, and that is to practise the virtues and cease to practise evil. The formula is simple. It consists in adopting as habitual behavior that set of principles and teachings which collectively we call the gospel. There is no other way. Our lives are patterned, our natures formed, our characters established by the things we do and not by theoretical professions of principles or abstract contemplations. If you want to overcome envy, you have to practise rejoicing in the good fortune and successes and attainments of your fellows; if you want to purge yourself of covetousness, you have to practise generosity and contentment in seeing others prosper as you would like yourself to prosper; if you want to be rid of reviling, you must practise reverence and respect for worthy things; if you want to avoid drunkenness, you have to practise sobriety; if you want to be cleansed of lasciviousness, you have to practise continence and purity of thought; if you want to conquer thieving, you must practise honesty; if you want to be free of the vice of extortion, you must practise benevolence and fairness toward others, and so on we might go till we have enumerated every vice and its opposing virtue throughout the whole catalogue of gospel precepts. Obey them in practice, make them the governing feature in your lives and you will win perfection, and hence salvation.

FIDELITY TO GOSPEL LAW

It is easy to conceive that greater progress might have been made if those entrusted with the teaching of the gospel law had maintained a greater fidelity to its principles. I have already called attention to the practice during apostolic times of naming the evil practices which must be done away and recommending conformance to the saving principles of the Christian teaching. But in the interest of winning converts and spreading power this practice was relaxed to suit the temper of the world. As Macaulay observed, the surest and easiest way to win converts is to lower standards. In an early century a great deal of effort was expended in an attempt to reconcile Christian teaching with pagan philosophy. This was an impossible task, but an apparent harmony was achieved by bending Christian doctrines into conformity which resulted in its adulteration and the consequent weakening or destruction of its saving power. It did win a more universal favor, facilitate the drawing in of greater numbers, but at a devitalizing cost which always flows from compromising principles of right. It was even brazenly taught by men in places of power, entrusted with guidance, in the interest of perpetuating and extending their sway, that certain Christian principles were to be suppressed because not congenial to people given over to contrary indulgences, so that, as Macaulay declared: ". . . instead of toiling to elevate human nature to the noble standard fixed by divine precept and example," the standard was lowered "till it was beneath the average of human nature."

Thus was sacrificed the true office of divine worship and guidance. Instead of holding up before men the ideal of the God-given and perfect gospel law and fortifying them for the struggle incident to the conquest of evil, they were seduced into deadening compromises with sin, and progress toward the ultimate triumph of righteousness was immeasurably retarded. In this contemplation it ought to be clear to us that in all our worshiping assemblies it should be accepted as established usage, to be received without resentment, but gratefully, that the law of God should be reiterated and emphasized and exhortation given for conformance of life thereto. You leaders cannot discharge your duties as such unless you see that this is done. Only thus can we be regenerated by the gospel's saving power and through obedience to it rise triumphant above our mortal imperfections, which may God grant us power to do, I pray in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

While the brethren are analyzing the rules of our Heavenly Father for happiness, as they have done, I am reminded that the missionary field of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is one of the greatest developers of character that is known in the world today. I have received letters in the last few days, one from the eastern part of South Africa. Two of our missionaries had been sent into a section where there had not been any missionary work done for a long time, if ever, and instead of going to the poor they sought out those who were well-to-do and had the time to listen to them, and the result has been that meetings have been opened in clubs and other organizations to these two young men.

The purpose of the invitation was that they might pass on to the larger groups some of the truths that these young missionaries had defended in the presence of individuals. It is marvelous how far it goes.

I also received another letter recently from South America from a young man who was just made an assistant to the president of one of our missions, a counselor to the president of the mission. When that young man's mother was living in Scotland during World War I she became acquainted with a young man in the Air Service and she came to me one day after the war was over (I happened to be in England at the time and was president of the European Mission); she told me she had become interested in a young man but he was not a member of the Church. He had proposed marriage to her and she did not know what to do about it. I said, "Do you think you can convert him by living a righteous life if you marry him?" She said, "I can try." The result was they were married. It was my pleasure later after they had moved to this part of the world to see her with two fine sons. One of them filled a wonderful mission in Texas and that section of the country and is now active in the Church in California; the other one, to whom I have referred, is in South America. She only had two sons, but she did what I had hoped she would do, she lived such a consistent life, such a considerate life, that she finally won her husband, without preaching to him, to a desire to belong to the Church that she belonged to, because he wanted the privilege, and he found he could get it if he was faithful, of having that wife and his children for all eternity. The gospel goes so far in so many ways, awakening us to our opportunities, that sometimes we do not appreciate it.

I am sure that today we have been fed the bread of life if we will remember the things we have heard, and there is one thing I hope you will all remember. One time after I had finished talking to a large audience a man came up to me and said, "Brother Smith, you have been talking to me." I think every one of us must feel that these brethren have been talking to us, not to somebody else, and if we improve ourselves first then we will be able to improve our neighbors and that is our privilege.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir will now sing another one of our old-time hymns, "Though Deepening Trials." The closing prayer will be offered by President J. Earl Lewis of West Utah Stake, after which this conference will stand adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The proceedings of the sessions will be broadcast over all those stations that you have heard about several times in this conference and the proceedings will also be televised over station KSL on channel 5.

This afternoon the audience should be in their seats not later than ten minutes before the hour of opening the meeting. The meeting is supposed to start at 2 o'clock.

Any important messages and calls that we might have will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaker on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen and see whether they are wanted.

The choir music for this session has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ.

In the midst of this world's sorrow and distress we have listened in the House of the Lord to the voice of inspiration. The Choir will sing to us a hymn that is very appropriate if we will all pay attention to it, "Though Deepening Trials Throng Your Way."

The Choir sang the hymn, "Though Deepening Trials Throng Your Way."

Benediction was offered by President J. Earl Lewis of the West Utah Stake.

Conference adjourned until 2 p.m.

THIRD DAY AFTERNOON MEETING

The concluding session of the Conference was held Sunday afternoon, October 2, at 2:00.

Again a great concourse of people came together to listen to the proceedings of the Conference. The Tabernacle was filled to capacity, the Assembly Hall was fully occupied, and great numbers assembled upon the grounds of Temple Square.

President George Albert Smith presided and conducted the services at this meeting.

The Tabernacle Choir was in attendance and furnished the choir singing, under the leadership of J. Spencer Cornwall; Alexander Schreiner was at the organ console.

President George Albert Smith:

Again may I suggest to the ushers that they encourage people to sit as closely together as possible so that those who are standing may, some of them, find seats. I am sure you will all be happy if you know that others are comfortable.

This is the closing session of the 120th semi-annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We are convened in the Tabernacle on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. Every seat is filled and hundreds of people are standing. The Assembly Hall is filled with people and a great number are on the grounds listening in.

Of the General Authorities all are present except Elder Alma Sonne of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is in Europe in charge of the European missions; Elder Thomas E. McKay, also of the Assistants to the Twelve, who is at home convalescing by direction of his physicians; and President S. Dilworth Young of the First Council of Seventy, who is in New England in charge of that mission.

These services will be broadcast in the Assembly Hall over a loud-speaking system and by television.

The proceedings of this session will be broadcast over KSL at Salt Lake City and by arrangement through KSL over the following stations: KEYY at Pocatello, KVNU at Logan, KSUB at Cedar City, KSVC at Richfield, KJM at Vernal, KID at Idaho Falls, and KGEM at Boise.

It will also be televised over KSL television station, channel 5.

Any important messages and calls that come to us for persons supposed to be in attendance at the conference will be announced at the dismissal of this meeting over the loud-speaking system on the grounds. Everyone would do well to listen carefully to such announcements.

The choir music for this session will be rendered by the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

We will begin the afternoon services by the Tabernacle Choir singing, "Holy Art Thou."

The opening prayer will be offered by President Gordon S. Brewerton of Alberta Stake, Canada.

Singing by the Choir, "Holy Art Thou."

The opening prayer was offered by President Gordon S. Brewerton of the Alberta Stake.

The Choir sang "Give Thanks Unto The Lord."

President David O. McKay presented the General Authorities, General Officers, and General Auxiliary Officers of the Church, and they were unanimously sustained as follows:

President George Albert Smith:

You have just participated in sustaining the General Authorities of the Church, and general officers. I wish all the world could see that one part of our program. I wish they could all be here and see this audience, as far as that is concerned. All those who represent and direct the affairs of this Church are sustained by the members of it and everyone who is in good standing in the Church has the opportunity to manifest his or her pleasure or displeasure as the case may be.

These officers have been presented by President McKay. President George F. Richards, who is president of the Council of the Twelve, will now address us, and following him, Bishop Thorpe B. Isaacson of the Presiding Bishopric.

PRESIDENT GEORGE F. RICHARDS

President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles

My dear brethren, sisters, and friends, here present and on the air, I greet you in affectionate fellowship as sons and daughters of God, which we are, and pray God's blessings upon you, that the light of Christ may direct you in the straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting.

LOVE OF GOD

When the hymn was announced in the afternoon meeting yesterday, "God So Loved the World," the thought occurred to me, that is the title of that which I desire to say when called upon to speak.

Completing the quotation:

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3:16.)

This represents the love of the Father for us, his children. Then I thought of another scripture:

. . . I lay down my life for the sheep.
No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down myself. . . . (John 10:15, 18.)

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. (John 15:13.)

Taking these two quotations together, we see the gift of the Father and of the Son to the world, of all that the atonement meant of mental and physical suffering in life, and in his death upon the cross, of which it can be said in truth, that as a gift to mankind it was the greatest ever given; a sacrifice, the greatest ever made; a service, the greatest ever rendered; a demonstration of love such as is possessed only by the Gods.

WORK OF CHRIST TRACED

I would like, if possible, for us to become better acquainted with our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and his life's work, that knowing him better, we might love him more, and loving him more, serve him better, and thereby obtain eternal life, God's greatest gift to man.

Quoting from Isaiah, 53rd Chapter:

He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. (Isaiah 53:3-6.)

Under the direction of the Father, he created the heavens and the earth and all things existing thereon, as attested by scriptures.

All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. (John 1:3.)

And worlds without number have I created; . . . and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. (Moses 1:33.)

Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, who created the heavens and the earth. (D. & C. 14:9.)

Jesus Christ ministered as the God of this world from the beginning until he came to earth in the meridian of time.

And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the Lord;

And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. (Exodus 6:2-3.)

Lift up your head and be of good cheer; for behold, the time is at hand and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world. (III Nephi 1:13.)

PHYSICAL APPEARANCE OF CHRIST

The following is taken from "Conscript Fathers." I quote:

In these our days appeared a man named Jesus Christ, who is yet living among us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as a Prophet of great truth; but his own disciples call him the Son of God. He hath raised the dead and cured all manner of diseases. He is a man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with a ruddy countenance, such as the beholder may both love and fear. His hair is the color of a filbert when fully ripe, plain to his ear, whence downward it is more of orient color, curling and waving on his shoulders; in the middle of his head is a seam of long hair, after the manner of the Nazarites. His forehead is plain and delicate, the face without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a comely red; his nose and mouth are exactly formed; his beard is the color of his hair and thick, not of any length, but forked. In reproving he is terrible; in admonishing, courteous; in speaking, very modest and wise; in proportion of body, well-shaped. None has seen him laugh, many have seen him weep. A man, for his surpassing beauty, excelling the children of men. (Heart Throbs, Vol. 1, page 425.)

The following pen picture of the Savior was written by J. A. Francis of Los Angeles and is just as true as if it had been spoken by one of the prophets:

"Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until he was thirty, and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never wrote a book. He never held an office. He never went to college. He never put his foot inside a big city. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place where he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompanies greatness. He had no credentials but himself. He had nothing to do with, in this world, except the naked power of his divine manhood.

"While still a young man, the tide of popular opinion turned against him. His friends ran away. One of them denied him; another betrayed him. He was turned over to his enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed on the cross between two thieves. His executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth while he was yet dying, and that was his cloak. When he was dead, he was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

"Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone, and today he is the center of the human race and the leader of the column of progress. I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that were ever built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned put together have not affected the life of man upon this earth as profitably as has that one solitary man."

PARALLEL IN LIVES OF SAVIOR AND JOSEPH SMITH

In the life and accomplishments of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, we see a strong resemblance to that of the Savior. When the Savior chose his twelve disciples, he chose them from the humble walks of life. It is the Lord's way.

For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called;
But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, the things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

That no flesh should glory in his presence. (II Corinthians 1:26-29.)

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, I am well pleased with your offering and acknowledgements, which you have made; for unto this end have I raised you up, that I might show forth my wisdom through the weak things of the earth. (D. & C. 124:1.)

Joseph Smith was born of humble parentage in an obscure village. He never went to college nor attended high school, but he accomplished in the short period of his life of thirty-eight and one-half years more than any other mortal man of his time, if not of all time. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were martyrs to the truth. They were murdered in cold blood by a disguised and ruthless mob.

During the short life of the Prophet Joseph Smith he was instrumental in the hands of the Lord in the establishment of the Church and kingdom of God on earth as seen in vision by the Prophet Daniel. Through him the everlasting gospel in its fulness was restored, with all its gifts, blessings, principles, and ordinances, and the power and authority of the priesthood to administer the ordinances of the gospel to the children of men, who, by repentance and obedience, are prepared to receive them.

The works of Joseph Smith and the spirit that prompted them live on in the hearts and lives of his followers who are numbered by the hundreds of thousands now living and have influenced the lives of other hundreds of thousands who have gone to their reward.

More than a century has passed since the martyrdom of the Prophet, but his works and the spirit which actuated them are increasing in the earth. Many have died for the religion established by the Prophet Joseph Smith, and there are many thousands today who would do likewise if necessary. He gave his life for the cause and, like the Savior, sealed his testimony with his blood.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

As a witness for the Lord Jesus Christ, I bear you my testimony that God the Eternal Father lives, a glorified and exalted being, having a body of flesh, bones, and spirit as tangible as man's, and that he has revealed himself anew to the world through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith, whom he raised up to be the mighty Prophet of the last days; that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Savior and Redeemer of the world; that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Living God; and that the work in which we, as Latter-day Saints, are engaged is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ which all men must receive if they would be saved in the kingdom of God.

I bear this testimony to you and to all the world, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER THORPE B. ISAACSON

Second Counselor in the Presiding Bishopric

President Smith, and my dear brothers and sisters, the other day as we were attempting to guess our time when we would be called upon to speak, Bishop Wirthlin spoke and said: "No man knoweth the day nor the hour," and he was not referring to the original passage of scripture, either.

GRATITUDE FOR CHOIR

I know we are all grateful for this choir today. I thought this morning when President McKay was giving the number of missionaries in the field, probably the choir should be included. The men of the choir furnished our music last night at the general priesthood meeting, and it was very beautiful, and this morning again their songs have been so appropriate. The choir comes here each week, each Thursday evening, and each Sunday morning early to practise. I am confident that we are all very proud of them. They are a choir of service. They are indeed a missionary choir, and I know we are grateful to the conductor, Brother J. Spencer Cornwall, and the fine organists and all the members of the choir, Brother Lester F. Hewlett, the president, and all those who are associated with him. We cannot think of the choir on Sunday morning without thinking of the Spoken Word by our beloved brother and friend, President Richard L. Evans.

STRENGTH IN PRAYER

As I look into this great audience, I feel very weak and very humble, and I pray that the Lord will help me. I have prayed to the Lord, not once, but many times the last few days, and I pray to the Lord first because I believe in prayer, and second, I pray to the Lord because I know of my weaknesses and I know of my incapacities, and I am very dependent upon the help of the Lord. I would feel sorry for anyone who would attempt to occupy this position if he felt in his own strength, that his own sufficiency, was enough. I will be very grateful to you if you will say a short prayer for me, because I need it very badly.

Sometimes I have wished that all of you could have this opportunity for just a moment, not because I think you would enjoy it any more than I do, but because it is indeed a humbling experience and certainly a sobering experience.

I have felt the prayers of this conference were very strengthening, indeed, every one of them. I have enjoyed the words of our brethren. I love them as men; I admire and respect them.

Prayer is indeed a privilege; it is indeed a blessing; and it is indeed a comfort. Prayer is not just a duty.

PAGEANT AT HILL CUMORAH

I had made some study and preparation to discuss a subject that I thought might be appropriate at this conference, but I am not going to give that talk. Instead, if you will pardon me, I would like to share with you an experience that I recently had at Hill Cumorah and the Sacred Grove at Palmyra, New York.

I am grateful for the privilege of being in Palmyra at the time the pageant was presented, entitled America's Witness for Christ. This pageant was presented by the missionaries, approximately one hundred and ninety of them, of the Eastern States Mission, under the direction of Dr. Harold I. Hansen of the Utah State Agricultural College faculty, and President George Q. Morris of the Eastern States Mission.

The pageant is the story of the Book of Mormon. The rustic setting of Hill Cumorah is the stage or the background of that pageant. The scenes are those of the Angel Moroni receiving his instructions from his father Mormon, the story of the Prophet Joseph receiving his instructions from the Angel Moroni, and other scenes of the Nephite and Lamanite people, the story of the Book of Mormon, and the great message of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

The pageant was held on three nights, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Thursday evening, the first night, the newspapers estimated that there were between twelve and fifteen thousand people who attended that pageant. The second night it was estimated there were between twenty and twenty-five thousand people who attended the pageant, and on the last night, the third evening, it was estimated that there were between twenty-five and thirty-five thousand people assembled to witness that great pageant.

NON-MEMBERS IN ATTENDANCE

We must keep in mind that probably ninety percent of that great gathering were non-members of the Church. To me it was great evidence that the prejudice and ill feeling, though not entirely diminished, was certainly at a low ebb. The newspapers of the cities in New York were very liberal, very courteous, and very praiseworthy of that great pageant.

The highway patrol of the state of New York estimated that there were thousands of carloads of people the last night who could not get to see the pageant because the parking lots and the highways were all congested. The police rendered us most excellent service.

The officials of those cities were very friendly. It was reported that one of the businessmen of Palmyra or Rochester stated that he thought the communities should assist by making contributions to the pageant, and they ought to make a collection and help finance that great pageant. Of course, our appreciation was expressed to them, and we told them this was not necessary; nevertheless it was the attitude that he expressed which we appreciated.

Hundreds of the homes there were opened to people. Many of our missionaries while they were there at Palmyra preparing for the pageant, stayed in the homes of people who were not members of the Church.

BLESSING SOUGHT

The pageant was scheduled for nine-thirty in the evening. The dates had been selected when the moon was not shining, because the participants wanted darkness of the night on the hill. All the lights were turned off in that vicinity at the beginning of the pageant. At nine-ten every night those missionaries were asked to assemble at a certain wooded spot on Hill Cumorah, behind one of the large scenes, in the darkness. There was that great audience out in front, not knowing what was going on, but there those missionaries assembled every night at nine-ten, quietly, in a circle, huddled together, praying to the Lord that he would bless that pageant, that it would go forward without any interruption and that the audience would partake of the spirit of the pageant.

I remember the first night it started to rain about six o'clock. There was some concern whether or not it would prevent presentation of the pageant. It is all outdoors: the stage, the audience, and the scenes. I remember shaking hands with two fine young missionaries who had their pageant costumes on, and I said to them, as I shook hands with them, "I hope the rain will not spoil the pageant."

One of them looked me straight in the eye and he said: "Oh, Bishop, don't worry, the rain will not spoil the pageant. Nothing will spoil the pageant, because the elders of this mission have united our faith and called upon the Lord to bless this pageant that the message would go forward to the thousands of people who assemble to witness it."

Now some may call that simple faith, but I call that most beautiful, most humble faith. By the time the pageant was ready to start, the storm had ceased and the stars were out bright.

It was stated that no group of professionals in all the world could present that pageant as those humble missionaries presented it because their hearts and souls were in it and because they knew this story to be true. They were living that story; they were preaching that story; and for that reason great honor and credit is due those missionaries.

FAITH EVIDENCED

The audience was kept informed of the pageant proceedings by narrators who were speaking over a central loud-speaking system. Beautiful spotlights were flashed upon the different scenes on the Hill Cumorah. A commercial firm was employed to furnish the loud-speaking system, and a few of the Mormon missionaries who were mechanically inclined were assigned to help the technician with the loud-speaking system.

The last night the technician became very much concerned that the loud-speaking system might not continue to operate, and he told the missionaries he did not know what to do. There was that great audience of thousands of people. They could not follow the pageant without the loud-speaking system functioning, because some of the audience were a block away from the Hill and from the scenes. But as he became concerned, all he would have needed to do was to ask those missionaries, but he did not do that, so they took it in their own hands. They went out behind that truck in the wooded section of Hill Cumorah, and as we would expect, those missionaries knelt down and prayed that the Lord would see to it that the loud-speaking system would continue, and the loud-speaking system did continue until the pageant was over.

That kind of faith is the kind of faith that we have been hearing about the last few days here. That is the kind of faith that draws men close to God, their Eternal Father. May I quote from Alma just a word about that same kind of faith:

Yea, there are many who do say: If thou wilt show unto us a sign from heaven, then we shall know of a surety; then we shall believe.

Now I ask, is that faith? Behold, I say unto you, Nay; for if a man knoweth a thing he hath no cause to believe, for he knoweth it. And now as I said concerning faith—faith is not to have a perfect knowledge of things; therefore if ye have faith ye hope for things which are not seen, which are true. (Alma 32:17-18, 21.)

May I digress here, just a little, to say to those teachers or to any philosophers or to any men who have to do with young people, that you never say anything or do anything knowingly or unknowingly that would shock that beautiful faith in the lives of young people. Conviction kindles conviction; faith promotes faith; and testimony inspires testimony.

Faith is one of the great principles of the Church. Faith is that which brought our forefathers to this country. I am grateful for the faith of my grandfather in Denmark where he accepted the gospel because he had faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The pageant closed the third night, and before that great audience, as they saw the last scene, four missionaries, in the darkness of the night, with a brilliant spotlight flashed upon them, stood on top of Hill Cumorah. They were dressed in beautiful long white robes and each of them with his bugle turned toward that beautiful monument of the Angel Moroni and played in unity, "An Angel From On High." Those thirty thousand people could not have witnessed that scene without their hearts being touched; it was one of the most thrilling yet touching experiences of my life.

CONFERENCE IN SACRED GROVE

Never in my life have I appreciated, probably, as I did that very moment what that beautiful story has meant to us as a people. The next day following that great pageant those same missionaries held their missionary conference on a beautiful Sabbath morning in the Sacred Grove. They had held two sessions there Friday and Saturday. Since their pageant was produced at night, they had their days for their conferences.

Saturday afternoon was devoted entirely to testimony bearing. Sunday morning's meeting was programmed; speakers were called upon to speak; but in the afternoon it was not programmed, and the meeting started at one o'clock in the afternoon, with the idea that it would perhaps close by four o'clock, and we would thus get an extra hour of testimony bearing.

I wish everyone could have been in that Sacred Grove that beautiful afternoon as those elders, without wasting a minute's time or a second's time, came forward and stood by the microphone. There was no pulpit to stand by, so they stood there by the loud-speaker and gave their testimonies, one by one. Those three hours passed all too quickly. Four o'clock came, and as the missionaries had expressed the desire to bear their testimony in the Sacred Grove, they were not all through, and it was decided to continue the meeting until five o'clock, but at five o'clock they were not through and it continued till six o'clock. At six o'clock they were not through, and we continued the meeting until seven o'clock—until every missionary there had had an opportunity to bear his or her testimony. I think eighty-nine of them that afternoon bore their testimonies.

PRIVILEGE OF A MISSION

You could not have doubted that testimony if you had heard those young men and women. Some of them had been in the mission field only a month, and, oh, how they thanked the Lord for the privilege of that mission. I thought what a shame it would have been if any one of those boys or girls had been denied that mission, and I thought of the thousands of others who probably will want to go on a mission some day, and sometimes they are made to feel as if they cannot afford it. I hope some of us in the Church who have been blessed perhaps more than others with financial security and material things, will share it with some missionary who wants to go on a mission, and never let it be said that a boy was kept home from a mission because someone could not afford it.

As those missionaries came forward, I wished their fathers and mothers could have heard the great love they expressed for them. They truly love and appreciate you. Every one of them, without an exception, was so grateful for his father and mother, and many of them were sons and daughters of widowed mothers. Oh, how the gratitude came from their souls for the love of their widowed mothers. Some of them had experienced the loss of their father or mother while they had been in the mission field, but there was no evidence of bitterness. Every one of them acknowledged the hand of the Lord, even in that sorrow that came to them while they were away.

But there were some who pleaded with the Lord to bless their parents and their loved ones while they were in the mission field. I am sure that if you parents and the brothers and the sisters and the loved ones could have heard those boys, you would have tried harder to live as they are teaching. How they thanked the Lord for the blessings that had come to them. I was astounded at the strength of their testimonies. Two or three of them had only been out two or three weeks, and how they loved their companions, how they loved their mission president, and the same thing could be said of all of the five thousand missionaries who are in the field today.

I do not see how the homes, the families, and the loved ones of those missionaries could help but partake of that same sweet spirit when they so humbly prayed for them. Many of them spoke to the Lord so kindly, acknowledged their shortcomings, and prayed to the Lord that he would help them overcome those weaknesses. I am sure that the Lord was looking down upon those missionaries with all of his tender mercy.

GOD'S PAY

As the day closed and every missionary had borne his testimony, I could not help but think of this poem, and I would like to read it as a tribute to those missionaries and all missionaries. It is entitled, "Who Does God's Work Will Get God's Pay":

Who does God's work will get God's pay;
No human hand God's hand can stay.
He does not pay as others pay.
But God's high wisdom knows a way;
And this is sure, let come what may;
Who does God's work will get God's pay.

At seven o'clock at night the sun went down—the shadows fell, and it seemed as if God in heaven had looked down and pronounced a silent benediction on the heads of all who were assembled in the Sacred Grove that day. Yes, it was as if those servants of the Lord had been able to lift up the corner of the veil and had a little glimpse into the eternities to come.

May God bless the missionaries all over the earth. May our homes and all of us partake of the spirit that they are privileged to enjoy, and I know and you know why they are privileged to enjoy that spirit. It is because they live so close to the Lord.

I know that the Spirit of the Lord was there in the grove that day. I know that sacred spot was the place to which the Prophet Joseph went as a boy and knelt down and prayed to the Lord, and there the Father and Son appeared to him. I know that those thousands who saw the story of the pageant could not help but receive some influence and inspiration for having witnessed it, and I am confident that they are hungering to hear more about it.

May the Lord bless us in our work that we may live as those missionaries preach. May the Lord bless us that we may have the Spirit of the Lord with us to guide us in our every act every day, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Tabernacle Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "For the Strength of the Hills."

ELDER HENRY D. MOYLEOf the Council of the Twelve Apostles*

It was thirteen and a half years ago, my brethren and sisters, that the Great Church welfare program was given to us. I am certain that the Lord has been with us every day of those many years and has guided and directed the course which this program has taken.

PROGRESS OF WELFARE PROGRAM

My mind today goes back to one of the early meetings which we held, as I remember it, in Barratt Hall, when President McKay told us that we might not be able to see too far into the future as to the work to be done in this great field of endeavor, but that just like a locomotive engineer taking his train out of the station at night, that light which preceded the engineer and his locomotive was symbolic of what we would experience. I am sure that those utterances were prophetic because there has never been a time during those thirteen odd years when we have failed to have our way lighted at least a short distance ahead.

I am conscious that we may have made, and undoubtedly have made, mistakes in the program, both members of the general committee, presidents of stakes, and bishops of wards, but, generally speaking, our course has been straightforward and ahead. And as we review the work which we have accomplished, it satisfies us. We are conscious that the Lord has blessed us and that we have yet a work to do.

We have heard a great deal in this conference about our duties and our responsibilities in the Church. I am sure that we are a blessed people, that much has been given to us, and those who receive much are expected to give much. I would like to know how far we would have progressed in this program if all the bishops in this Church and all stakes of Zion had exerted themselves to the utmost from the beginning until now because we have accomplished what we have by the help of relatively few, whereas this program was intended for all. There is no one too rich and no one too poor in this Church but what he might have participated in this welfare program.

My heart goes out in gratitude to my Heavenly Father today, that the hearts of so many people in the Church have been touched. They have responded to this program, and they have given of their time and of their means, their talents, to further its purposes, and to give aid and sustenance to those who were in need.

HELP GIVEN GERMAN FAMILY

I received a letter not long ago from a family of Saints in Germany, a family who are dear to me because I, among other elders in the Church, assisted them in establishing in their hearts the faith that was necessary to apply for baptism in this Church. In this letter from a widowed grandmother she reported that all of the male members of their family for four generations had been exterminated by the war, save one crippled grandson. They had one granddaughter who was ill. The doctors had told her, told the grandmother and the mother, that there was no chance for her life, that there was only one thing that would save her life, because she suffered from diseases incident to malnutrition, and that was to put her on a diet of cracked wheat.

It was not by chance that the prayers of this family were answered. They had been faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord ever since they entered into the waters of baptism. They had found strength and courage to go forward and carry on in the absence of all their male members, because of those blessings and that consolation which came to them as a result of the prayers which they offered. The next day, after the doctor had pronounced this solemn decision, a welfare package arrived in that home; and when it was opened, the first thing they found was twenty pounds of cracked wheat which this welfare program had furnished.

I am sure that incidents of that kind could be multiplied a thousandfold in the lives of Latter-day Saints, not only in Europe but also here at home, and I wonder if there are any of us who would begrudge that which we have done, that which we have contributed towards this welfare program, when we realize what it has meant in the lives of the children of our Heavenly Father all over this earth. And I want to say we do not have to go to Germany or to any faraway land to find the benefits that have been derived from this program, for we find them here at home.

INGLEWOOD STAKE PROJECT

I had the privilege Monday of last week, after our quarterly conference in the Inglewood Stake, of going out near Venice to see a little project, a very humble project which a ward had instituted there under the inspiration and guidance of a bishop, who in very deed is a servant of the Lord. And there I found some elderly men, men who were not physically fit or qualified to participate in the activities of industry in competition with younger men. They were well past sixty-five, all of them. One man came up to me and told me that he was grateful for that opportunity. He told me that he had been a lifelong friend of my father. I thought that it might very well have been my father, in place of that man, receiving the benefits of this program, for there he was engaged upon this project, carrying out the details of it. In fact, he was really supervising it.

It consisted of nothing more than shredding newspapers, magazines, papers of all kinds, in a very simple machine which they had purchased second-hand. When they could not gather up enough papers because of lack of trucks and facilities, they bought paper in order that they might shred it and bale it. And they were receiving forty dollars a ton for that baled paper and giving employment to a group of fine brethren. The interesting thing about it was how from small beginnings we can accomplish great things.

This brother, as a result of the work which he was doing there, and a life-long experience in business and in industry, was planning a new industry to employ other people. I am sure the day will come when that little ward project will become a stake project, or even a regional project. The benefits of it will be enjoyed by many of our brethren in other parts of the Church because it is one of those industries that could be copied in every big city and in many of the smaller ones.

They have paid for everything they have received out of the proceeds of the business itself, and they have made it profitable. So I drew from that experience this thought, that in the welfare program we need the experience and training of older men and of older women, and when they come to us in our projects to assist us, they are bringing to us something more valuable than that which we give them. It was evidenced right there by the work that this man was doing, and I know there are thousands of other elderly brethren who are fit and qualified to assist us in that same way.

FAITH INCREASED

We have had a great deal said at this conference—and I have thrilled with every word that has been uttered here by my brethren—about the necessity for our living the gospel, keeping the commandments of the Lord. I love President Smith's admonition for us to stay in the territory of the Lord and out of the territory of the adversary.

I wonder if there is any tangible way that we can show our faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and in his work better than we can when we are engaged in this welfare work, contributing of our time and of our means and of our talents to further the interests of those who may not be so fortunate or so young as we are at the moment.

It is my testimony to you, my brethren and sisters, that none of us can engage in this work and find ourselves in the territory of the adversary or under his power or under his dominion. This work cultivates and develops within the men who participate in it a faith in God.

We heard a testimony borne yesterday afternoon, after the afternoon session, in a meeting we held over in the welfare office, of one of the humble sons of Israel concerning the welfare work, and what had been accomplished by a little group of men, calling upon the Lord in humble prayer when they were in serious difficulty and did not know which way to proceed in the operation of that project, and the peace and the comfort and the satisfaction that came to them as a result of that prayer.

I do not know where we could find in this Church any instrumentality that causes men to turn their hearts toward God any more than by turning our hearts to our fellow men and becoming indeed concerned in their welfare. We profess a great love for our brethren and sisters in this Church. My heart goes out to all of you. I love you from the bottom of my heart. There is not anything that I have or anything that I might do to assist you in your lives and in your work that it would not be my pleasure to do. And I hope and pray that the Lord will give me strength and courage to go forward and to accomplish all of the desires of my heart and all that he has in store for me in your behalf.

WORK OF THE LORD

This work is true. It did not take me long to become converted to the welfare work. President Grant called me in one day and said: "Brother Moyle, we would like you to work in this welfare program." He did not ask me if I was converted, nor did he give me any time to convert myself, but I knew then and I know now that Heber J. Grant was a prophet of God, and when he spoke to me, gave me an assignment, I knew that that assignment came from God, and there was no such thing entered my heart as to question whether or not the prophet of God knew what he was talking about. So I immediately responded as I had been brought up to do all my life. I have never spent one moment of my life since that call but what I have been conscious of the fact that those of us who have been engaged in this welfare work have been engaged in the work of the Lord. We have been engaged in a work which has done much to instil in the hearts of men a testimony of the existence of God and the divine calling of his present-day prophet; and it was with no small degree of satisfaction that we received President George Albert Smith's blessings when he came to the presidency of this Church.

I felt as if I should go to him and tell him that it would be my privilege to resign and step aside if there was someone of his own choice or calling that he would like to take over the responsibilities that were then mine. And he simply said to me, "I want you to continue."

And so I have had the audible, the tangible, the conscious privilege of having two prophets of God tell me that the work in which we are engaged in this Church is that which the Lord would have us accomplish.

It is a further testimony to me that this work which was initiated under the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith is indeed the work of God. I know that the Prophet Joseph Smith was called of the Lord to open up this dispensation, the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, and to give to all of us every blessing and every privilege and every power that it is right for man to receive, and we have received these blessings, my brethren and sisters. I know, as I know that I live, that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ and that this work is his work, and that we are engaged in his ministry. I wonder, with this knowledge and assurance burning in our hearts, how we can fail, those of us who have been in attendance here in this conference today, to take to heart the advice and the admonition that has come to us from these inspired brethren whom I love, every one of them.

START WITH SIMPLE PROJECTS

I have this one word to say further about welfare before I sit down. Let us not wait until some great project comes into view or into our imagination which calls for a great expenditure of money, something that we can envision as paying all of our debts and obligations and meeting all of our assignments in the Church with little or no effort upon our part, some project that does not require any work on the part of the membership of the Church, something that we can hire done.

My brethren and sisters, those are not the kinds of projects we want. I would much rather start in with a simple, helpful project, and depend upon the Lord throwing light ahead of us as we proceed with that humble project, and inspiring us to enlarge it as he may see fit.

I think likely New York Stake has set us an example. They have a welfare project today which consists of producing shoe polish. Now that is a pretty humble activity, and still it has within it the right objective, the right philosophy. The stake has not called upon us for any money to assist in the establishment of that project. I can promise those brethren that if they stay true to their trust and are faithful in the performance of that humble project, that light will be given them in the manner and form in which they could expand in that great city where it has seemed to be so impossible to start any welfare work.

May the Lord bless us, my brethren and sisters, and may we go back home instilled and imbued with the idea that this testimony of ours of the divinity of the work in which we are engaged calls upon us to do something for our brethren and sisters here upon this earth, and that we may turn our hearts to the less fortunate and thus assist them, I humbly pray, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

If Brother Roscoe C. Cox, former president of the Hawaiian Mission is in the audience we would be glad to have him come to the stand. I may say that Brother Cox has been home, as have quite a number of the other mission presidents, for several years. We have tried to find an opportunity to hear from each of them from time to time, but there is insufficient time in three days of conference. We shall be glad to hear from Brother Cox.

ELDER ROSCOE C. COX

Former President of the Hawaiian Mission

I think that trip up here was the highest mountain I ever climbed, and perhaps the longest mile I ever walked.

Now what to report. I can report that it was July 4, 1942, that my family and I and the lady missionaries from the Hawaiian Mission and the then Japanese Mission arrived here in Salt Lake City. We had been whisked out of Honolulu, as it were, with very few people knowing of our departure. We were notified but hours ahead that space was available on one of the ships, and that we could go home.

We were happy to be back in Utah in that wartime, but we brought with us an eternal gratitude for the privilege that had been ours of serving in those lovely islands. They had been changed by the impact of war, but they still were lovely.

I can report that we were very fortunate in having several of the General Authorities visit us while we were in the Islands. We had President McKay and Brother Callis, and all the members of the Presiding Bishopric. One of the things that impressed me most during the three years we were there was a trip we made to Molokai, to the leper settlement, with Brother and Sister Callis. It was the first time Brother Callis had ever been in an airplane. He had refused to go on an airplane, but when we told him how impossible it would be for him to visit those lepers by any other means, he finally consented.

There, in a meeting we held in the well-kept chapel in that leper settlement, the judge of the village arose to bear his testimony. Minus his toes, and with the disease eating away at him, he said: "I thank God that I have the leprosy, because it brought to me the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

Up until the time he contracted that dread disease, he had not had time to bother about the gospel of Christ or about more serious things of life, and then he contracted that sobering disease. He knew the sores of that disease would pass away when his body passed away, as it has since done, but he knew he had something more eternal in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Another thing that few people knew about, that happened while it was our privilege to be in the Islands, was that the work of the Lord was established somewhat on the Island of Wake, where our Government had sent so many men to labor to build up the defenses of that island. One of those men was Brother Forrest Packard of Pocatello, Idaho. He stopped off in Honolulu on the way to the island, got a few tracts and a few song books. Later he wrote for more and for other Church literature.

I corresponded with the First Presidency. They authorized that a branch should be established on the Island of Wake. On the fifth of December 1941, I received a long letter from Brother Packard telling of the work that was being done there, and he told me that on the following Sunday he would send me a full list of the membership. Two men, I think, had been baptized up to that time. And in that letter, Brother Packard said: "The men are mostly of the rough type, but since no liquor or beer is allowed on the island, they are forced to think more seriously of life and its meaning."

I would change just one word in that and I would say they are able to think more seriously of life and its meaning. He had a good congregation coming to our meeting, but the list was never received. The following Sunday is known to us as Pearl Harbor Day. Brother Packard spent some four years or more as a prisoner of the Japanese, but he furnished us with that one truth that I wish could go to every man and woman in this nation today, especially those who are seeking to gain a betterment of their condition through some way other than through righteousness. "Since no liquor or beer is allowed on the island, men are able to think more seriously of life and its meaning."

God has been good to me and to my family, very good. I trace a lot of it back to a day on the banks of the Kilauea Volcano. A group of us spent a night there when that crater was putting on a grand show. We got down and played with the lava. We gathered up the fine strings of lava, known as Paley's Hair.

In that group was President David O. McKay and Hugh J. Cannon. They were making a trip around the world. They had just come from China.

Morning came. When they were leaving, they shook hands goodbye, with some of us who were staying on for another hour or two. President McKay had gone, possibly two rods distant; then he returned, and again he took my hand, and looked through me, as only President McKay can look through a person, and said again: "God bless you, Elder Cox."

My brothers and sisters, there was a power in those words, a power as real as the power of that volcano on whose brink we stood, scarce twelve feet from the molten lava. Yes, there was a power greater, by far, than that of the volcano and more lasting; and God has blessed me.

Soon after that He blessed me with a companion who developed in his heart a love for the Japanese people and a desire to teach them. Later, he returned to the island, and started a Japanese Sunday School. The work resulted in the establishment of the Japanese Mission in Hawaii, now known as the Central Pacific Mission. Finally, he was called to re-establish the Japanese Mission over in the Islands of Japan. He has just recently been released. He is now in Honolulu, President Edward Lavon Clissold, formerly of Salt Lake City, one of the grandest companions that God could give to any missionary.

He blessed me with a life's companion, of whom President McKay said when he was recommending me to President Clark and President Grant: "I have been thinking of Brother Cox for some time, but when I went down to Ephraim last Sunday and met Sister Cox, then I knew he was the man we wanted."

When the call came for us to go to Hawaii, it seemed miraculous that the Lord should bless us with a man to take over our business so that we worried not one moment on how it should be carried on. That man is now editing the Bear River Valley Leader at Tremonton, Brother Andrew N. Rytting.

And he blessed us with a mission secretary than whom there could be none better, who later succeeded me as Mission President, Elder, or President Eldred Waldron, now of Logan. He blessed us with a hundred eighty of the finest missionaries that were ever sent to any land, for whom I thank God. And he blessed us with the love and respect of those people.

O, how I wish that that same power that I felt on the banks of Kilauea, back in 1921, could be felt in councils between labor and capital and in the councils between nations today, for then I know that peace, lasting peace, could come to the world. And how I wish I could feel that same power today, as I say, God bless you, my brothers and sisters. Amen.

PRESIDENT GEORGE ALBERT SMITH

I am delighted with what has been said during this entire conference. The Lord has blessed those who have addressed us. He has blessed those who have furnished us with such delightful music.

We are almost ready to adjourn, and from this building and the adjoining building there will go men and women to many parts of the world.

You will find no other place in the world that is more peaceful or more comfortable or more delightful than here where we have been during the last few days, waiting upon the Lord with the assurance that when even two or three should meet together in his name, he would be there to bless them. Surely, we have been blessed.

WICKEDNESS IN WORLD

The world is sick. It is not the first time it has been sick. It has had a good many different experiences of that kind. Sometimes nations have had to be wiped out because of the wickedness of the people who live in them. The Lord, all down through the ages, has spoken to his leaders and teachers who are inspired, but when the world refuses to heed after it has been properly taught, it places itself in a position of saying to our Heavenly Father who owns this world—he is our landlord—"We do not need you. We will do just as we please."

Unfortunately, people who think that way do not realize how they are shortening their own experiences in life, and setting the stage for the sorrows that may follow.

Think of the condition of our own nation, with all the blessings that we enjoy; and yet men, women, and children are being distressed and annoyed because of the determination on the part of a few to have their own way. This nation does not belong to the people who live here. We are permitted to be citizens of it just as we are permitted to be members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is not our Church, and this is not our nation.

A BLESSED LAND

The Lord raised up men to frame a Constitution for this nation because it was his nation. It was his desire that the people here would be blessed, and there have been no people in all the world who have been more blessed than those who live in the United States of America.

We have every comfort that you can think of, every blessing that is enjoyed by people in any other nation, and then we have the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience because the Lord himself made that provision in the Constitution of the United States and in the framing of the laws that govern this nation.

I wonder if we appreciate that. Do we realize that we can lose it all just as we can lose it with any epidemic? If an epidemic of some kind, that we did not have a remedy for, was to break out among the people and increase and increase, it would be possible for this entire nation to be wiped out.

CARELESSNESS EVIDENT

Yet we are trifling with our Heavenly Father and his advice and his counsel. He gave to us his commandments through Moses, anciently, and he gave us advice and counsel in our day through the Prophet Joseph Smith that is intended to keep us in a frame of mind that we would honor God and keep his commandments, that we would love one another.

It does seem strange how careless we are when we realize we may be destroyed. Think of the atom bomb. If it is all that they say it is, it would be possible to wipe out one of our great cities with its millions of people in just a few moments of time.

Do we want that kind of thing? Are we going to continue contending for something of physical power and physical strength or are we going to the Lord and honor him and keep his commandments?

JUDGE NOT

I will read you something in the scripture I have here, something that will give us cause to think. It is so easy to criticize someone else, so easy to find fault, and sometimes we speak harshly of our neighbors and friends. Now this is what our Heavenly Father gave us in the days of Matthew. He said:

Judge not, that ye be not judged.

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? (Matt. 7:1-4.)

As a people we are advised not to be critical, not to be unkind, not to speak harshly of those with whom we associate. We ought to be the greatest exemplars in all the world in that regard. Consider the criticism today. Pick up your newspapers and see the unkind things that are being said by individuals about others, and yet many times the individual who is criticizing has a beam in his own eye and does not see at all clearly, but he does think his brother has a mote in his eye. I would like to call attention to that situation.

There is growing in our own country, really, a conflict between capital and labor, or may I say between the rich and the poor. What does the Lord say about things of that kind?

WELFARE PROGRAM

We have been told this afternoon about the welfare program, about how it is possible to help those who are in need. Since the war closed, this Church has imparted of its substance in very large measure to those who are in need. But all this time we have been just as well off, or better off, perhaps, than we would have been if we had not sent over 16,000 packages, 9000 quilts and 131 carloads of food and bedding and clothing to Europe to people who were needing it more than we needed it. We have not missed it.

The Lord gave a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith. He said:

Behold, thus saith the Lord unto my people—you have many things to do and to repent of; for behold, your sins have come up unto me, and are not pardoned, because you seek to counsel in your own ways.

And your hearts are not satisfied. And ye obey not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness. (D. & C. 56:14-15.)

OUR SHORTCOMINGS

I thought when one of our brethren was talking to us and telling us of the little shortcomings each of us may have, and each of us has some, I am sure—some more than others—I thought how careless we are in observing the Sabbath day.

How careless we are about attending to our prayers. How careless we are in failing to thank the Lord for the food that we have so abundantly, I would like to say abundantly, and that there is no necessity for any man, woman, or child in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to go without, for the Church is organized to help those who lack the necessities of life. There is plenty for all, and to spare.

GENEROSITY SHOWN

We have in the Church many wonderful individuals—and out of the Church many wonderful individuals. I heard of a case here just a few days ago of a man who had been informed that a child had polio and had to go to the hospital. The probability was it would recover but would remain ill for months or years. I am speaking of a man who is not a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He lives in this part of the world, however.

He was told of the situation, and that there was no way of obtaining what was needed. When he was informed it would take $700 to provide treatment for this particular child, and it was not known where the money could be obtained, he said, "You get what is needed and send the bill to me."

The man was a wealthy man. He will not miss it. In fact, there is an old saying that has come down to us that they who give to the poor but lend to the Lord. This man has made an investment in the life of a child, and he has made an investment in his own happiness that will return to him great dividends.

Not all people who are well-to-do would think they could do that. They would say, "Get somebody else. Let us take up a collection. Get somebody else to do it."

ADVICE TO RICH AND POOR

This is what the Lord says further in that same chapter, and I am reading from the fifty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

Wo unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! (D. & C. 56:16.)

That is what the Lord says of the rich people who refuse to impart of their substance to those who are poor. But he says something just as serious to the poor man who is not doing his best. He says:

Wo unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, and who will not labor with your own hands! (D. & C. 56:17.)

That is the situation of many of our own brothers and sisters in America with all the blessings that we enjoy—better wages, better homes, better opportunities for education than have ever been known before. Yet we have today men who not only will not work themselves, but they also will not permit somebody else to be employed. They are not willing to earn their living by work, but they propose to take it from the rich man.

THE PURE IN HEART

So the Lord says of them, "Wo unto them," the same as he says of the poor. Then he said further, "But blessed are the poor who are pure in heart." There is quite a difference there,

. . . blessed are the poor who are pure in heart, whose hearts are broken, and whose spirits are contrite, for they shall see the kingdom of God coming in power and great glory unto their deliverance; for the fatness of the earth shall be theirs. (D. & C. 56:18.)

They are those who have not the wealth of the world but still have life and being and intelligence, and who are anxious to do the thing the Lord would have them do.

He says further,

For behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man, and the poor shall rejoice;

And their generations shall inherit the earth—

there will be more poor than any other kind, undoubtedly—

. . . and their generations shall inherit the earth from generation to generation, forever and ever. And now I make an end of speaking unto you. Even so. Amen. (D. & C. 56:19-20.)

IDLERS AND LABORERS

That was the Lord talking to the Prophet Joseph Smith in our day in June 1831.

He has further said,

Thou shalt not be idle; for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer. (D. & C. 42:42.)

Now, my brethren and sisters, we have both rich and poor in our organizations. If we are poor, we can be worthy just as the Lord indicates here. We can be pure in heart and do our best, and he will not permit those who do their best to suffer for the necessities of life among the people who are in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Our welfare program has been a wonderful thing, a program by which unemployed may be employed, and a way has been opened for men and women who cannot do much work but who can do something to be gainfully employed. How much better off we are when we are occupied with some reasonable work.

Consider the condition in the world, the number who are determined to take from the rich man not what belongs to themselves, but that which belongs to the others. God has permitted men to get wealth, and if they obtained it properly, it is theirs, and he will bless them in its use if they will use it properly.

I hope we are not going to become bitter because some men and women are well-to-do. If we are well-to-do, I hope we are not going to be self-centered and unconscious of the needs of our Father's other children. If we are better off than they are, we ought to be real brothers and sisters, not make-believe. Our desires should be to develop in this world such an organization that others, seeing our good works would be constrained to glorify the name of our Heavenly Father.

We have had a wonderful conference. Where in all the world could you go to find such an organization, to witness such assemblies as we have had here on this block, this week? This is the Lord's house. This is the Lord's work. You have been addressed and advised and counseled by the servants of the Lord, men who are giving their time and the best they have in them—as has been indicated—some of them not well enough now because they have overworked. They are trying to do what our Heavenly Father would like all of us to do.

COVETOUSNESS

We must not fall into the bad habits of other people. We must not get into the frame of mind that we will take what the other man has. Refer back to the ten commandments, and you will find one short paragraph, "Thou shalt not covet." That is what is the matter with a good many people today. They are coveting what somebody else has, when as a matter of fact, many of them have been cared for and provided with means to live by those very ones from whom they would take away property.

We must not get into that frame of mind. Others may do that, but if we have the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ in our hearts, we will not be deceived in that regard.

We are told that we cannot serve God and some other master. We have to make our choice, and if we want to be the servants of God and the children of our Heavenly Father and earn his blessings, we must do it by honoring him and by keeping his commandments. Our feelings, and our love, if I may use that expression, should go out to all the world as far as they will receive it. We in our humble way, with the blessings of our Heavenly Father, go among them to teach them the gospel of Jesus Christ that will prepare them for eternal happiness.

SACRIFICE BRINGS BLESSINGS

I am grateful to you, my brethren and sisters, for the privilege of being here with you today. As I look into your faces and see this great audience in this, the Lord's house, I would like to say in the name of Jesus Christ, that our Father in heaven will bless you for whatever sacrifice you may have made to come here to worship. He will bless your families, and he will bring to you a richness of experience and light that you could obtain in no other way. That your sons and daughters may grow up to honor our Heavenly Father, I humbly pray.

The most precious of all the jewels that the Lord has bestowed upon any of us are our children, and we are responsible for them in their tender years. The Lord says that the parents in Zion (or in any of the stakes which are organized) who fail to teach their children faith in God, repentance, baptism when eight years of age, the sin be upon the heads of the parents, not upon the schoolteachers, not upon the mayors and governors, but the sin be upon the heads of the parents. We must not suffer the effects of that sin in our lives.

Let us gather our families together when we return to our homes, and under the influence of prayer thank our Heavenly Father for our blessings and face our problems honestly and faithfully, with love in our hearts for all people, for the Lord says we must love our enemies as well as our friends. If we can learn to do that, we will be happy.

Now that peace and joy and comfort and satisfaction may abide with all of us who are here, with all the members of the Church wherever they may be in all the world, and with all our Father's children, that they may learn as a result of obedience to his commandments how to be happy in this life and prepare for eternal happiness is my humble prayer.

That is what the gospel is for, to prepare us not just for the comforts of mortality but for eternal happiness. That we may live to be worthy of these blessings, I pray, and I invoke upon you all the favor and blessing of our Heavenly Father this day and henceforth in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

President George Albert Smith:

The Tabernacle Choir will sing the concluding number, "By Babylon's Wave." The closing prayer will be offered by President George R. Woolley of the American Falls Stake, Idaho, after which this conference will adjourn sine die.

Any messages that have been brought in will be broadcast at the close of this meeting.

The choir's music for today's sessions of the conference has been furnished by the Tabernacle Choir with Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Frank W. Asper at the organ for the morning session and Alexander Schreiner at the organ for the afternoon session.

I would like, on behalf of this wonderful audience and the other audiences that have assembled here, to express appreciation and gratitude for this wonderful choir that has been our greatest missionary for many years and continues to be. I am sure you all join with me in invoking upon them the favor of the Lord for their unselfish service and for the fine thing that they have done all these years by broadcasting to the nations of the earth, because their message goes far across the ocean to other places.

I want to express my appreciation to the ushers and to those who have made it possible for so many people to have comfortable places to sit. I want to express my appreciation to the people who have taken care of this block and who have kept it beautiful so that when people come here they see something they do not see in other places. Think of our blessings, brethren and sisters, and remember them and let us evidence our appreciation of them as the days go by.

This evening the Deseret Sunday School Union will hold their conference in this building at 7 o'clock and all who desire to come are invited to be present.

Again, God bless you and peace, sweet peace, be in your hearts and in your homes, I humbly pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Choir sang, "By Babylon's Wave."

President George R. Woolley of the American Falls Stake offered the benediction.

Conference adjourned sine die.

GENERAL PRIESTHOOD MEETING

The General Priesthood meeting of the Church was held in the Tabernacle Saturday evening, October 1, at 7:00.

The Tabernacle not being large enough to accommodate all the brethren of the Priesthood who came to the meeting, the Assembly Hall was also filled with men of the Priesthood who enjoyed the services by means of television.

The choral singing was by the men of the Tabernacle Choir.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., First Counselor in the First Presidency, presided and conducted the services.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

President Smith telephoned a few moments ago saying that he felt he ought not to come tonight. He sent his greetings to you, his message of love and affection and expression of a sincere hope that he would be able to be with us tomorrow.

President McKay was to preside tonight but I think probably he has been delayed in a traffic jam. If our streets were twice as wide maybe we never would get here.

The singing during this session will be by the men of the Tabernacle Choir, Elder J. Spencer Cornwall conducting and Elder Alexander Schreiner at the organ.

The opening song by the Choir and congregation will be "Do What Is Right," after which President Rulon P. Peterson of the Lake View Stake will offer the opening prayer.

Singing, "Do What Is Right."

The opening prayer was offered by President Rulon P. Peterson of the Lake View Stake.

The men of the Tabernacle Choir sang the hymn, "O My Father."

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

This is a great gathering. As we look out over this sea of faces and see the crowd in the doorways and standing and sitting in the aisles, we all feel that this is the greatest meeting we have ever had. I do believe that tonight in the matter of numbers, we have the largest number the Church has ever seen. There is no other place in the world where this could occur, because in no other place in the world could there be a body of Priesthood of this size holding the Priesthood of God.

I shall have something to say a little later so I shall say no more now.

Elder Eben R. T. Blomquist will please come to the stand. Brother Alma Peterson, if he is here, former president of the Danish Mission, will please come to the stand now, and President E. Bentley Mitchell of the Tahitian Mission.

It is unnecessary for me to tell you brethren that the Priesthood we hold is of two branches, the Aaronic and the Melchizedek, and we will ask the president of the Aaronic Priesthood, Bishop LeGrand Richards to come to speak to us now.

BISHOP LEGRAND RICHARDS

Presiding Bishop of the Church

Just as soon as I can get my breath I will start. Brother Ivins tells the story of a deacon who was called, extemporaneously, to speak in one of our stakes. He stood up a minute and switched from one foot to the other and said, "Brothers and sisters, I am just stalling for time." Then he preached a nice sermon on the Word of Wisdom. He then looked at them and said, "I have surely put myself on the spot, haven't I?"

DOES THE GOSPEL FIT?

Now brethren, I am happy to be here; I am happy in my work in the Church; I love the brethren, and I love the Saints. I have the privilege of interviewing a good many missionaries as I travel from stake to stake, and I always ask them how they feel about going on a mission and how the gospel fits them. I say, "When you go into a store to buy a suit of clothes, it either fits or it does not fit. Does the gospel fit you? How do you feel when you hear the Prophet Joseph Smith's story of having gone into the woods to pray, and having seen the Father and the Son and what transpired there? Can you accept all of that; do you believe it? Do you believe that John the Baptist came and conferred the Aaronic Priesthood upon Joseph and Oliver and that Peter, James, and John conferred the Melchizedek Priesthood? And that Elijah, Elias, and Moses brought the keys of their dispensations; does all that fit?" When they say it does, then I say: "Then you know that we do not have just another Church—we have the only true Church."

I feel that the most important thing in our teaching in this Church is to try to impress upon our people the truth of the gospel, and I want to tell you from my experience that I do not think they have to be old men and old women to know the gospel is true. I have more young people at our conferences tell me they know the gospel is true, than the older ones, and I believe them.

On the day of Pentecost, Peter called the people to repentance and they were pricked in their hearts and said, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized, everyone of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." And I know the promise is unto our children, and they can know the truth of the gospel through the gift of the Holy Ghost. I am not quite so much worried, sometimes, about the children as I am about the older folk.

EZEKIEL'S CONTRIBUTION

I attended a Sunday School class not very long ago, and they were considering the life and mission of the prophet, Ezekiel, and the brother in charge of the class proceeded to say that we did not know very much about Ezekiel. Then he told a little about the condition of the world at the time Ezekiel lived, but said nothing about his teachings or prophecies. He was about to close the class. I very seldom say anything in a Sunday School class when I am there, but I said, "Brother So-and-so, were you going to close right at that point?" He said, "I thought so, is there anything you would like to add?" I told the class that Ezekiel had made one contribution to this great Latter-day cause thousands of years ago, that no other prophet had made, for it was he who gave us the knowledge that there were two records to be kept, not only one of Judah and his posterity, but one of Joseph and his posterity, and save for Ezekiel we would not know that there was to be another volume of scripture, and I said that it seems to me we ought to capitalize on what Ezekiel left us.

MISSIONARY EXPERIENCES

It reminded me of when I was in the mission field in the Eastern States. Into one home I went, the man was not a member of the Church, and every time I would leave he would say, "I believe I have been a Mormon all my life, but did not know it;" but I could not get his wife to come in and listen to me. She would go into the next room and iron. You know ironing is a quiet job. I do not need to tell you that I usually take my "loud-speaker" along with me, just in case, and I made sure she heard all I had to say. The last visit I made there I said, "Mrs. McDonald, you would surely honor me if you would come in today and listen to me." She finally consented. I said, "You may never see me again in this world." We had just started our discussion and in walked her son from Harvard College. She said, "My boy, you are just in time. You take this book," because I had her take the Bible to follow me, "and you show us how this man is trying to lead us astray." I took one hour and a half and I closed my Bible. The discussion that day was on the House of Israel, the new land the Lord had promised to Joseph, the ultimate final gathering in the latter days, and the two records to be kept; and I turned to her son from Harvard and said, "You tell your mother how I am trying to lead you astray, will you please?" He said, "Mother, this man is not trying to lead you astray, he is teaching you the truth." Before I left she said, "Mr. Richards, even if I do not believe all you say, there is something about you I cannot help but like. Will you pray with us before you go?"

In that same city we were holding a street meeting, and the Gospel Hall people were holding a convention a short distance away. They adjourned their meeting to come and try and break up ours. I said, "You men would like to be gentlemen, wouldn't you?" As I recall, there were about sixteen ministers there that night. I said, "You give us twenty minutes to finish our meeting and then we will stay thirty minutes and listen to you." I said to the crowd, "Won't we?" There were between two and three hundred there, and they indicated they would. During their thirty minutes they painted the Prophet Joseph as black as anybody could. "Why," they said, "if you would let them, the Mormons would bind the Book of Mormon in the same cover with the Bible and ask us to take it and like it." I did not like to see that meeting close right at that point, so I stepped up to this minister and said, "You would not mind if I made an announcement before the meeting closes, would you?" He said, "No, go ahead." So I turned to the crowd and said, "If you will come back next Tuesday night at 7:30 we will tell you why we bind the Book of Mormon in the same cover with the Bible and ask you to take it and like it." And I said, "Bring your Bibles along with you because you will not need them after next Tuesday night if you are not willing to accept the companion volume of scripture. Ezekiel said the Lord would bring forth the record of Joseph which He would join to the record of the Jews and the two should become one in His hand." When they came that night, and the crowd was larger than the previous one, I said, "How can any of us stay the hand of God from bringing forth the record He has promised?" As I remember we sold sixteen copies of the Book of Mormon that night.

Well, I have had so many experiences that I cannot understand why we cannot plant the truth in the hearts of our people until no outside thing or movement in the world can have any influence with them. We have so much more to offer than any other church in the world.

I was out tracting in that city one day and I had been to a particular house several times when the lady of the house said, "Mr. Richards, what are you trying to do anyway, are you trying to make Mormons out of all of us?" "Well," I said, "I will tell you one thing, I will never ask you to join the Mormon Church," and that seemed to put her mind at ease. Then I said, "If I could show you where you could trade a dollar for five dollars, I would not have to ask you to do it, would I?" After I had been home a few months I received a letter from her calling me "Brother Richards." She said, "I decided to trade the dollar for five dollars. I was baptized a member of the Church last Friday night."

I think that any elder in Israel who cannot make Mormonism look better than five to one had better get hold of the scriptures and go to work and study the gospel.

I was in The Hague, Holland, and was invited into the home of the owner of a large furniture store. His associates were all business men. I cannot take the time to tell you how I got there, but I was there by invitation, and I was there to discuss a certain subject of the gospel—the universal salvation of man, including the work for the dead. This happened to be a Bible class and they spent a night each week studying together. They all had their Bibles and they turned the class over to me. After having discussed this subject for about an hour and a half, I closed my Bible and there wasn't anything said for a few minutes. Finally the daughter of the house turned to her father and said, "Father, I cannot understand; you always have the last word to say on everything and tonight you have not said a word." He said, "My daughter, there isn't anything to say. This man is teaching us things we have never heard of before and he is teaching them to us out of our own Bibles." And he did not have anything to say.

Well, why don't we teach these things to our children until they become like the Rock of Gibraltar, founded upon a faith that cannot be moved?

ETERNAL MARRIAGE

You take our principle of eternal marriage and the eternal duration of the marriage covenant. I have had similar experiences in teaching this principle. I spoke on this subject in Quitman, Georgia, and I took the statement from Brother Rulon Howells' book, "Do Men Believe What Their Church Prescribes?" and read what other churches prescribe on this subject. There is no church I have ever heard of that believes the marriage tie or the family unit will endure beyond the grave. We cannot imagine anybody being satisfied with a religion like that unless he is like the lady I met back in New Bedford. I tried to teach her this principle and she said, "I'll tell you, Mr. Richards, if there is any marriage relationship beyond the grave, I'll take chances on getting something better than I have now." (Laughter.) "If I live with my husband until I die, I think I will have done pretty well."

As I say, I spoke on this subject in Quitman, Georgia, and at the close of the meeting a Baptist minister came up and introduced himself and told me who he was. I said, "Did I misquote you," because I had read of the belief of the Baptist Church on this subject. He said, "No, Mr. Richards, it is just like you say, we do not all believe all the things our churches prescribe." I said, "You do not believe it either. Why do you not go home and teach your people the truth. They will be glad to receive it from you, and they are not yet ready to accept it from the Mormon elders." That was all I could get out of him. He said, "I will see you again."

The next time I went to Quitman my picture appeared in the paper, because I was president of the mission, and when I went up to that little church he was waiting for me. I said, "I would be glad to know what you thought of my last sermon." He said, "Mr. Richards, I have been thinking about it ever since and I believe every word you said, only I would like to have heard the rest of it." You know I never quite get finished on a subject, the clock travels too fast. This principle is not difficult for even ministers to accept when you explain it to them.

I was at the Manti Temple recently with my father, and President Anderson, who is here tonight, told of a minister who had visited the temple grounds a few weeks ago. When he heard our story of our belief in eternal marriage and the eternal duration of the family unit he said, "You know, I had two of my young people come to me recently, and they wanted me to marry them for time and all eternity," and he said, "I did it. I thought that was the kind of marriage we all ought to have, but they do not teach it in their churches."

I spent an hour and a half in the study of one of the most prominent ministers in the United States. He died a few weeks ago, and at the time of his death he was chaplain of the United States Senate. While I was in his study we discussed this subject. He said, "Mr. Richards, our church does not give us any hope that there will be a continuation of the marriage tie or the family unit beyond this life, but in my heart I find stubborn objections." Then he used this illustration, and it was better than I could have given him. I have used it since, myself. He said, "When you take the kitten away from the cat, in a few days the cat has forgotten all about the kitten, and when you take the calf away from the cow, in a few days the cow has forgotten about its calf; but when you take the child away from its mother's bosom, though she lives to be a hundred years old, she never forgets the child of her bosom. I find it difficult to believe that God created love like that to perish in the grave." But he could not tell his people that from the pulpit because he could not hold his job and teach them Mormonism.

I want to tell you that we have so much more than any other church that five to one does not begin to show it. Why do we not get into the hearts of our boys and girls and our men and women so that no power under heaven will have the power to take them away from this Church.

God bless you in the great work you are doing, I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ELDER EBEN R. T. BLOMQUISTFormer President of the Swedish Mission*

I am reminded tonight of forty-one years ago, I arrived as an immigrant boy in Salt Lake City. It was conference time, October. As we left the train and walked up the street, we came to the Temple Block, and people had gathered here by the hundreds. I shall never forget when I came into the Tabernacle. I heard the beautiful music. I looked at the Apostles, the prophets of God. A dream had been realized; the longing to come to Zion and participate had been fulfilled.

Four years ago in October conference, I sat and listened and everyone who spoke referred to the tremendous missionary work that was before us. Missionaries would be sent all over the world again, to the north and south, and so forth, thousands of them. Silently within my heart I prayed that I would be given an opportunity to go back to my native land and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A few days later I received a call from President McKay asking me to come to his office, and then I was asked, together with Sister Blomquist, to go to Sweden. I shall never forget the feelings that came over me.

It was a wonderful and interesting experience to go back to Sweden. Sweden had not been at war. It was neutral. It had been at peace with the world. Things were in a fine condition there. We had only a few local missionaries, but there was a longing desire within my heart that the little land which was part of the Swedish Mission, Finland, should also have a fairer chance.

President Benson, who presided over the European Mission, came over to Sweden. He was the first Apostle that had been there for a number of years, and how the people loved him. They stood by the door and wanted to shake his hand. He was loved by all of them.

We traveled to Finland, and there up in the northern part was a little group of the Saints, that had been there for many years, gathered together. Early one morning Finland was again re-dedicated and opened for missionary activity.

It did not take very long until we started to hold meetings, and people came by the hundreds, yes, by the thousands, and listened to the gospel message. In most places we did not have large enough places or homes to meet in, so people would stand up for two and three hours and listen to our message.

We did not have any literature in the Finnish language. We had it in Swedish, and so there was a matter of using two interpreters, very often, one from English to Swedish, from Swedish to Finnish, so a fifteen-minute sermon would take about forty-five minutes, but the people listened.

There was hardly any room to be had for our Elders, but two people became interested. They asked if they could come to Sweden. We did not have very much room over there, but I took my private office, put in a couple of beds, so this couple could come over to Sweden, have a room in which they could stay, and our Elders could use their room over in Helsingfors, Finland. Thus the work started.

These fine people that came to Sweden thought they had been treated so nicely that they wanted to do something for the Church. They had a very fine friend over in Finland who was a good translator, and he started to translate, but he said: "I will have nothing to do with the Church, or nothing to do with the Mormons." His father-in-law was a theologian and a teacher at one of the universities, but he started to translate, first a series of tracts written by Doctor Widtsoe and later those written by Brother Charles W. Penrose. And as he was translating these tracts, he tried, he wanted to find something wrong with them. He read the Articles of Faith, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. He wanted to find fault, but a year later, as we visited in Helsingfors and we were about ready to turn over the mission to a new Mission President, as Finland had become an independent mission, he told me how he had studied the gospel, how he had tried to live it, and now he was positive that this was the gospel of Jesus Christ, that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the true and living God.

I said: "Would you like to tell this congregation here tonight of what you have found?"

He did. The next day he was baptized into the Church. He is now the First Counselor to the Mission President.

You would like to know, perhaps, what happened to the folks that came to Stockholm. Well, they are also members of the Church and he is a member of the Branch Presidency.

It was a matter of opening up new branches, and we have at the present time, forty-four in Sweden. Now we have had approximately a hundred and twenty-five missionaries. The work has gone forward. The elders have gone into new places, and there they have borne their testimonies and, strange as it may be, after they have been in a little town for a month or two they have made friends and shortly after that they have baptized new folks into the Church.

The ministers of the different churches have found that we have been very successful, as through the kindness of the First Presidency and the General Authorities, we have been able to purchase six buildings over in Sweden which we have renovated and made into fine, beautiful chapels. We have these buildings located in the finest locations in the best part of the cities, and most of them are surrounded with a beautiful little park, with trees, lawn, shrubs and flowers.

The missionaries have done a most excellent work, and I should not forget now to bring greetings from your boys and girls over there. They are wonderful missionaries. They are doing an excellent job.

I have been asked several times since I came home, "How is the political situation in Sweden?" I like to tell you that Sweden in itself is a beautiful country. It is like the Garden of Eden, flowers, forests, lakes, and beautiful, orderly cities, and wonderful people.

"Are you now scared of the Russians?"

The people over in Sweden are not concerned about the situation very much. They have maintained a neutral quality, because of their strategic position.

"But aren't many things socialized over there?"

Yes, things are over-socialized over there. When I left Sweden I had a little taint of liberalism in me, but I want you to know that it has been taken out of me, because I have seen where we can socialize things so much that it becomes rather bad instead of good.

I could tell you about how you can get a building renovated over in Sweden. I could tell you that if you want to put in a little stove that you cannot put in yourself, though you could do it in fifteen minutes, but you would have to have five or ten inspectors come and see first where you are going to put it and then spend two days in putting it in.

Now I hope that the day will never come when we shall so have our liberties taken away from us that we cannot do a little task at home but must have somebody else do it for us.

I should say something about socialized medicine. Many have asked me regarding it. We have some of the finest hospitals that could be built any place in the world, and I want to tell you that the people enjoy being sick. And I want you to know that people enjoy short hours. They enjoy forgetting to work.

Now I want to bear you my testimony that I was happy when I again saw the stars and stripes, when I saw the Statue of Liberty. And as I came into the New York harbor, I sent up a silent prayer that the land of liberty should always remain the land for which God has prepared it.

May God grant that each and everyone of us may follow the leadership of this Church. As I have listened during this conference I have felt how these men of God have stood before us and said, like the prophets in the days of old, "Come, let us get together," like the Prophet Isaiah said, "Come, let us get together."

May God grant that we may continue to be faithful, and that these wonderful Saints who have come from all over the world may find Zion within them, and Zion here.

I thank you for the kindness that you have extended to the Saints that have come from Sweden. They are wonderful people and you will be blessed for everything that you have done. The other day a sister came to me and said: "I have a letter here from President Widtsoe, and he is welcoming me here, and then he has said, 'Is there anything that we can do for you to help you?'" My, what a service, what a love, and what a great thing the Welfare Program is.

God bless you all, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr.:

President Blomquist is one who has some familiarity with the problems that must have faced Sweden in this war, with Russia on one side and German-occupied Norway on the other. I would like to tell you what the leader of the Salvation Army in Sweden said to me when he was here. I commented on the remarkable skill which Sweden must have exercised in order to keep out of this turmoil and he said, "Well, we think we were inspired." I confess I do not see how they could have done what they did do without, for some reason in the purposes of the Lord, they had inspiration.

We will next hear from Brother E. Bentley Mitchell, former president of the Tahitian Mission.

ELDER E. BENTLEY MITCHELL

Former President of the Tahitian Mission

I must confess, my dear brothers, that I am more than overwhelmed as I stand here in the most important gathering of men in the world today, in this gathering of the priesthood of our Father in heaven.

Before I start, I would like to make this one comment that henceforth and hereafter, I shall try a little harder to be a law abiding citizen. Henceforth when I come to conference I will make a little more effort to find a seat.

Five years ago, at the October conference, I had the privilege of attending these meetings, and not long after that I departed for the islands of the sea, and it was necessary, unfortunately, that my family should remain behind for a period. For nine long months I waited in Tahiti for the war to end, for transportation to be made available, that my dear wife and children might join me there.

I would like to thank my Father in heaven and to bear witness before you, the priesthood of this Church, of the gratefulness of my heart for the privilege that our Father in heaven and the leaders which he has called to preside over this Church, gave me and my family when we were called to the Tahitian Mission.

I labored there some three years and seven months, from 1930 to 1934, and I left there a portion of my heart with those fine people of the Pacific Islands, those fine Polynesian people, and of course we were happy to return. For eighteen long months we labored in the mission without the benefit of the help of the elders of Zion, and then, as the war was finished and transportation became available, we had the privilege of greeting, in our mission, the first four missionaries to return after the war had ended.

I would like to pay a tribute also to those fine brethren who labored in the Tahitian Mission with us. If we did have any success as we labored there, that success was due to the fine support and to the marvelous missionary boys that labored with us. I think I am safe in saying that no finer boys ever went out into the mission field than those elders who labored with us. I know that the Lord will bless them richly and abundantly for their fine efforts, for the great work that they did there.

For many years the Church had not been permitted to labor in some of the islands of the Society group, and we were fortunate and blessed by the Lord in being able to reopen that portion of the mission, Tubuai the first place where the gospel was preached in the Pacific Islands by Addison Pratt and others who were sent out by Joseph Smith. We were able to reopen that portion of the mission after nine long years, and it was most gratifying to go back there and find that our people had remained, for the most part, true to the faith, and that they had throughout those long years maintained their activities in the Church, and they had maintained a prayer in their hearts that some day the Lord, in his goodness, would return the missionaries from Zion to them.

We were also very fortunate in being able to obtain property on which could be erected a fine new chapel and other facilities for the use of the Tahitian people. For many long years that need had existed. The Lord blessed us and we were able to purchase property on which to build a fine new building. That building is almost completed now, and it will be the best missionary that the Tahitian Mission ever had.

I remember one time going over to the Island of Bora Bora by plane to meet with some of our Saints over there and to discuss with members of one of the other religious groups there the possibility of sending missionaries to that island, and though those people had never seen me before, when I stepped from the plane, the first thing they said was: "Good morning, President Mitchell, how is the building program coming? How soon will our new building be completed?"

Those people were not members of the Church, but they looked to the Church with a great deal of anticipation, and the Church in the Tahitian Mission is before the eyes of all the people. We were fortunate also in having the good will of the government there. We had the cooperation and the respect and the good will of several of the governors who were there during our time, and most particularly did we find the blessing of friendship with the governor who is there at the present time. He very kindly extended us an invitation to return to Tahiti to stay as long as we wanted. And he came down to the wharf when we left, and he placed a garland of flowers on my neck and asked that sometime I might come back.

Well, now, that is the work of the Lord, brothers. It was not anything that we did of ourselves. The Lord blessed us, and I want to bear that testimony to you.

We were fortunate in being able to commence the work among the Chinese of Tahiti, of which there are 18,000 living there, and since last October there have been some forty-five full-blooded Chinese people join the Church in Tahiti, the first in Tahiti in any large numbers, and they are the finest young people that we have in the Tahitian Mission. They are sincere, they are honest, they are clean, and the Church means everything in the world to them.

I see my time is up, but I cannot sit down without bearing my testimony to you, that I know that this is the true and the living gospel, and that I know that these leaders who sit here are inspired men of God. I know, brethren, through the experience that the Lord has blessed me with, that great joy and satisfaction can come into our lives through service, and I ask humbly that my Father in heaven might yet see fit to use me in the service of his children here upon the earth.

It is a glorious thing to labor in the mission field, and I shall ever be grateful for it. I bear my testimony to you, in the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Choir and congregation sang the hymn, "Now Let Us Rejoice."

PRESIDENT DAVID O. McKAY

Second Counselor in the First Presidency

I am sure that everyone present feels to say sincerely in his own heart, thank the Lord for the spirit of the brotherhood of Christ. I am overwhelmed at this vast audience. I believe it is the largest Priesthood meeting held in the history of the Church. We sense even though dimly that the strength of Zion is to "put on the authority of the priesthood."

I pray for the inspiration of the Lord, and for your sympathy while I attempt to say something which will be of interest and value to you leaders of Zion.

"EVILS AND DESIGNS"

One of the most significant statements in the Doctrine and Covenants, one which carries with it evidence of the inspiration of the Prophet Joseph Smith, is found in the 89th Section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation . . . (D. & C. 89:4.)

METHODS OF TOBACCO INTERESTS

"Evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men. . . ." The purport of that impressed me in the twenties, and the thirties of this century. I just ask you men tonight to recall the methods employed by certain tobacco interests to induce women to smoke cigarettes.

You remember how insidiously they launched their plan. First, by saying that it would reduce weight. They had a slogan: "Take a cigarette instead of a sweet."

Later, some of us who like the theatre, noticed that they would have a young lady light the gentleman's cigarette. Following this a woman's hand would be shown on billboards lighting or taking a cigarette. A year or two passed and soon they were brazen enough to show the lady on the screen or on the billboard smoking the cigarette.

I find here a clipping which I set aside in the early thirties, which corroborates this idea. This is 1931:

It is well known that the cigarette manufacturers are after the young women and girls, now. They say there are twenty-five million of these in the United States, and if they can popularize smoking among them, they will be able to increase their sales from three billions, six hundred million dollars annually to six billion dollars. This is their claim and their aim.

CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Now, it is common to see beautiful young women depicted on billboards, and in the popular journals advertising certain brands of cigarettes. "Last year three of the large cigarette manufacturers, we are informed, spent fifty-four million dollars in advertising their wares. This is probably a greater outlay than has ever before been spent to popularize any kind of merchandise.

"There is hardly a dead wall in the country or a railroad right of way that escapes the cigarette posters. The revenue from one Broadway, New York, billboard covering the front of a building, it is said, exceeds the rent for the building itself.

"The radio has become one of the most successful means of advertising cigarettes. Attractive programs are presented, not for the purpose of entertaining the youth, but for the purpose of enticing and encouraging them to reach for a cigarette.

"Parents meekly submit to this and later deplore the fact when their children are hopeless cigarette addicts."

I may be wrong, but I thought I saw an indication recently that conspiring men now have evil designs upon our youth. Keep your eyes and ears open, to observe if they are not taking the same steps now to get our young men as they did to entice women to use that vile weed. You know that:

Sin is a monster of such hideous mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen,
But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

CONFIDENCE IN YOUTH

Lest you might think from what I am going to say in giving some statistics, that I am losing confidence in the youth, I want to say here that my confidence in them is unshaken. Every week I sit with my brethren and hear recommends from you bishops, of young men and young women to go on missions. While there are some whom we think you should not have recommended, the great majority of these young men and young women are the noblest in the land. They are not addicts; they are not seeking evil ways; they have high ideals.

The young men, even the boys in Sunday School, particularly those in the Deacons Quorums, Teachers and Priests, and girls of corresponding age, are a credit to the parents, a credit to the Church. As an illustration, out in Uintah recently, I had the privilege of dedicating three church edifices. I learned from the president of the stake that many people had "given their all."

EXAMPLES OF DEVOTION

I have heard that expression in other places, and took it at first that it was just an exaggerated expression of devotion. But when I learned on this occasion of a widow who had given all she could possibly give—others, each of whom had sold their last cow, and others who had taken the tax money that had been saved, then I began to realize that there was something in that phrase. And the whole thing was climaxed by the following incident.

The ward was putting forth every effort to finish the meeting-house, but it was unpaid for. They needed more money. I am not sure that young boy's father is in the Church. I think he is, but he would not contribute, and I have to imagine the devotion of his mother. But this young boy, about fourteen, had saved money by shining shoes, washing automobiles, doing odd chores, and had saved a hundred and fifty-nine dollars.

He had heard of a recent call for more contributions and said to the president of the stake who was cashier of the bank: "I need the nine dollars, but I wish you would take the hundred and fifty and give to the bishop to help pay the cost of that meetinghouse."

"But," said the president, "you cannot afford it."

"Yes, I can."

He gave his hundred and fifty dollars as a contribution. Several months passed and the ward needed more money, and that young boy out of his meager savings gave a total of two hundred and twenty-five dollars.

An entire group of the lesser priesthood taking turns in shifts carried every brick from one old meetinghouse over to the new.

Well, I could multiply incidents of the devotion of the youth, so I have not lost confidence in them, but, we must not close our eyes to the approaching wolves who would ravish the flock. We must not close our eyes to the fact that there are conspiring men who would pollute young boys, and girls of corresponding age for sake of increasing profits. I have these things in mind as I read you the following statistics:

A VICE TO BE SHUNNED

I think tobacco is a vice which should be shunned as the bite of a rattlesnake. When I say that, I am not unaware of the fact that though seemingly there are some young men who can use tobacco without serious injury, there are many others who are poisoned, their character weakened, and their health undermined by the ingredients of the cigarette. The Lord has said that tobacco is not good for man. That should be sufficient for Latter-day Saints.

Too many of our boys are tampering with cigarettes. I do not like to hear tobacco programs on the radio. Young people say: "Well, they are the best we have." Of course they are, because tobacco interests can pay the highest salaries and get the best actors, and singers to further their evil "designs."

REPORT ON DELINQUENCY

I have been favored recently, as I have told you once before, in receiving a monthly report of the young people who are arrested in Salt Lake County. Note from the following how many delinquents are users of tobacco:

In January there were 94 fingerprinted. Eighty of these were tobacco users, and sixty-eight used liquor. Twenty-two of them belonged to our Church; thirty to the Catholics, twenty-seven to the Protestants, and fifteen no religion at all. There were five deacons, three priests and five elders among them.

February there were seventy-one fingerprinted. Fifty-six used tobacco and fifty-one drank liquor.

March, eighty-eight. Seventy-eight tobacco users, and seventy-four drinkers.

April, there were a hundred and four. Eighty-seven used tobacco, eighty-six used liquor.

May, ninety-three. Seventy-five tobacco, sixty-seven liquor.

June, ninety-four. Ninety-two tobacco users, eighty-six whiskey.

July, one hundred and six. Ninety-four tobacco users, eighty-eight liquor.

Out of the six hundred and fifty, five hundred and sixty-two used tobacco, five hundred and twenty drank liquor.

TOBACCO AND LUNG CANCER

Recently there came to this city a gentleman who has been specializing on cancer, Dr. E. L. Winder, Department of Surgery, Washington University School of Medicine, St. Louis, Missouri. He is attached to the National Cancer Foundation and is one of the most eminent men in cancer treatment in the country. He spent a few days here in Salt Lake City the week of August 29th.

He came to the laboratory in which Dr. George R. Hill, Jr., works, because the company who employs him had published a paper on arsenic content of tobacco smoke. This gentleman stated that he had come to Utah to make a study of lung cancer since he had heard that cigarette smoking is appreciably lower in Utah than in any other state, "because Mormons do not smoke." He reports that lung cancer, virtually unknown a hundred years ago, and occurring only rarely in 1912, is today taking the lives of more men than any other type of cancer. More than twenty percent of the cancers attributed to men are lung cancers. They have been endeavoring to find out why this increase in lung cancer, and have found the answer—cigarette smoking, definitely and unmistakably so.

He has personally investigated over five hundred cases of lung cancer and says that in every case but four, these men have been smoking cigarettes, from one pack to two packs a day, for some twenty to thirty years. And then he adds: "That percentage is far too great to be meaningless."

He says that the average patient of lung cancer dies at fifty-two years of age, and that the average lung cancer lasts only thirteen months before proving fatal.

He interviewed eleven or twelve Mormons who call themselves "Jack-Mormons," having lung cancer, and found them in every case but one, a man seventy-four years of age, to be heavy smokers.

Dr. Hill asked him if he had found similar cases among women. The doctor answered, "No, but I look for a very great increase in lung cancers among women in the next ten or fifteen years."

DRINKING ON INCREASE

Liquor drinking is increasing. In Salt Lake County we have reports from seven of these liquor stores. From June 1st to 5th of 1948, one store that week—note only about four days—sold $62,381 worth. The corresponding week this year $72,000. June 14th to 19th, $65,900, practically $66,000. And this year, corresponding week $78,900, or $79,000. The increase in the first week was $9,700, the second $13,000, the fourth, $4,000, the fifth, $3,000, the sixth, $12,000, seventh, $19,000, eighth, $13,000, and in August $10,000.

"In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men, I have warned you, and forewarn you..."

Now, we do not want to condemn the unfortunates, but we do want to warn our boys and girls against these evils. We must not shut our eyes to the fact that all this smoking and all this drinking is not done by those who are non-members of the Church. Even if we have only a small percentage, it is worth our while to be on our guard and try to save our boys and our girls from these evils.

RESULTS OF ALCOHOLISM

A young man who, addicted to drink, became an alcoholic, and finally took his own life in a New York hotel, left his last will and testament as follows:

I leave to society a ruined character. I leave to my parents as much misery as they can bear. I leave to my brothers and sisters the memory of a misspent life. I leave to my wife a broken heart. I leave to my children the memory of a drunkard's name.

James L. Gordon, by whom this is quoted says this ought to be written on the memory of every youth who is prone to say to himself, "I can drink and I can let it alone."

OBLIGATIONS TO YOUTH

Some of our foolish girls, here in the city particularly, are becoming addicts to nicotine. We should warn them, labor with them, not drive them from us, bring them into our Mutuals, our Sunday Schools, and into our socials where they may mingle with those who cherish higher ideals. I want to tell you, brethren, that we cannot with impunity sit by and be satisfied with having the best of our boys and girls come to auxiliary and priesthood meetings and let the others go unvisited.

If parents are failing in guiding the youth then it is the duty of ward teachers and priesthood quorums and auxiliary teachers to supplant in the lives of these children the love which they are losing perhaps because of broken homes.

PREVALENCE OF DIVORCE

If I had time to give you the number of these young people who have been fingerprinted who come from broken homes, you would see where one source of this evil lies. Divorces are altogether too common in our Church. I hope the time will come soon when there will be no divorce granted, no sealing cancelled, unless that couple first come to a member of the priesthood, stake or ward, and try their best to avoid a separation.

STANDARDS OF SERVICEMEN

Now I conclude with a reference to the standards of our boys during the war. Many of them, under difficult conditions, proved themselves strong enough to resist the temptations. Only today a returned soldier came and put this into my hands with the remark: "I collected this while overseas during the war years."

No matter what else you are doing,
 From cradle days through to the end;
 You are writing your life's secret story,
 Each night sees another page penned.
 Each month ends a thirty page chapter,
 Each year the end of a part;
 And never an act is misstated,
 Nor even a wish of the heart.
 Each morn when you wake the book opens,
 Revealing a page clean and white;
 What thoughts and what words and what doings,
 Will cover its surface by night!
 God leaves that to you, you are the writer,
 And never one word will grow dim;
 Until someday you write the word "finish"
 And give back your life's book to Him.

God help us as men of the priesthood to keep the lives of our boys and girls pure and white, that they may return, with us, back to the presence of our Father in heaven, worthy of the welcome, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants," I pray, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRESIDENT J. REUBEN CLARK, JR.

First Counselor in the First Presidency

Are you bringing the figures, Bishop? I thought there were so many, perhaps they could not count them. I always question these figures.

Tonight, October 1, 1949, there are here in the Tabernacle, including the baptistry and the vestry, 10,082; in the Assembly Hall, 2,307; a total of 12,389. On April 1, 1949, (last conference), there were in attendance 12,392. I think we have the extra three here tonight, and so we're as many as were at our April meeting.

In October, 1948, we had 10,275 in attendance. The doorways and hallways are packed, the Assembly Hall is overflowing, many are on the outside unable to get in.

We are hoping that sometime, before too long a period goes by, we shall be able, somehow, to provide a hall that will seat all of you brethren that want to come.

POWER IN UNITY

Brethren: We have had a glorious meeting. The time is getting late. I am not going to say very much. I do want to repeat my theme song, which is brought to my mind every time I stand before this great audience of priesthood. If, brethren, you could only know what your power would be if you were really and truly united, you would not delay a day in reaching that unity.

Now, unity does not consist merely in words, or professions of loyalty; it consists in actual acts. We must see eye to eye, and we must act accordingly. Bishops and presidents of stakes cannot—and have unity in the Church—decide that they have a special situation which requires special treatment. There are the same basic passions, the same basic problems, everywhere in this broad land. They have been with men from the beginning. Now, there seems to be at the moment, or for the year, or for the years, a resurgence of the evil part or side of men, but there are no new passions, no new ambitions, no new greeds, no new thirsts for power, no new cruelties. It is all the same old story.

WAY TO HANDLE SIN

When we think that our present condition is something new and that we can tamper with it, when we think that we can approach it by some other means than have been proved effective in the past, I fear we may be fooling ourselves. Somebody says, I believe, that when you have a thorn the thing to do is grasp it, like this, not toy with it in your hands or you get hurt.

It is my belief that there is only one way to handle sin and that is to take it by the throat and throttle it. Now, I do not mean that you go around killing people; I do not mean that you should throw them out of the Church; I do not mean that you should be unkind, unsympathetic, uncharitable, but the Lord does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, though he has all charity for the individual sinner, whom he tries to win back.

I had thought before conference began that I might say something about the great council of heaven, the part Lucifer played in it, but we have handled Lucifer pretty roughly this conference; and the story of the grand council has been told two or three times. President Hunter gave us a very elaborate version of it today.

SATAN'S PLAN

To my mind, as I read the scriptures, the thing boils down rather simply. I do not know whether Satan was offering a new plan or whether he had offered it before, but it sounded as if he thought it was a new plan. Satan offered the Father to take over all the spirits in the great council and save them all. Nobody was going to be lost, and all he asked of the Father was that the Father abdicate. He did not use that word. Maybe it is not used up in heaven, but we know what it means down here. The Father was to turn all of his power over to Satan, was to disappear, get out of the picture.

The Son apparently had been organizing worlds before, interpreting the passage in the Book of Moses, where the Father said to Moses: "Worlds without number had He created; by His Only Begotten Son had He made them."

The Son proposed he would take it over and apparently do as he always had done, give all the power and the honor and the glory to the Father. There was no suggestion of abdication.

What Satan wanted, quite evidently, was the full possession, ownership, of this creation of spirits that is involved in the peopling of this earth; so he tried to get them by gift, and that being denied, he is following along and trying to get us through the commission of sin. If we sin sufficiently we become his subjects.

As I read the scriptures, Satan's plan required one of two things: Either the compulsion of the mind, the spirit, the intelligence of man, or else saving men in sin. I question whether the intelligence of man can be compelled. Certainly men cannot be saved in sin, because the laws of salvation and exaltation are founded in righteousness, not in sin.

We grow only by the things we overcome, our failings that we put under foot. We climb up, get on top, one after the other of our failings, till in the end, if we are righteous living, all of our failings are under our feet, and that is what salvation and exaltation require.

CHASTITY

I thought that I might conclude the few remarks I want to make tonight, by some statements which I have written out, because I wanted to be fairly sure of what I said regarding chastity. And I want to say I approve of all that President McKay has said regarding my belief in the substantial purity of the great bulk of our people. But this devil is out amongst us, there is no question about it. It is just as real as though there was an army of invasion of mortal men. So what I have written has been written in broad terms, but I want you to understand that what I say as including my firm belief that the great bulk of our young people are clean.

The Ten Commandments contain two provisions I wish now specially to note: "Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife."

It seems to me that the besetting sin today is sensuality, sex perversion, sex indulgence.

SEX DESIRE

There is some belief, too much I fear, that sex desire is planted in us solely for the pleasures of full gratification; that the begetting of children is only an unfortunate incident. The direct opposite is the fact. Sex desire was planted in us in order to be sure that bodies would be begotten to house the spirits; the pleasures of gratification of the desire is an incident, not the primary purpose of the desire.

Remembering that fact, many problems will disappear, particularly the one presented by these who seek full gratification without begetting children.

Our art, literature, drama, movies, television, music, the ads in magazines—in great part run to sex. It seems to have become the uppermost thought in many minds. It colors their whole lives. This is all wrong. A mind engrossed in sex is not good for much else.

UNCHASTITY TOO COMMON

Unchastity is too common. It is in our schools, from the graders up. It is in our business houses and industrial plants. It is too large a part of our ordinary social life.

Parents are grasping at straws in an effort to hold their children. The cry is raised that the Church needs a book on sex. But what should such a book tell? Already the schools have taught sex facts ad nauseam. All their teachings have but torn away the modesty that once clothed sex; their discussions tend to make, and sometimes seem to make, sex animals of our boys and girls. The teachings do little but arouse curiosity for experience. It is said these courses tell enough about the generation of human beings to enable the youth, largely, to escape parenthood. Books are written, courses are given about courtship and marriage. To what point? We have not too far to go to get to the heathenish abominations and practices of the pre-Christian and early Christian times, against which the Lord again and again lashed out to ancient Israel and to early Christians.

BE CHASTE

A word on chastity can be given in one sentence, two words: Be chaste! That tells everything. You do not need to know all the details of the reproduction processes, in order to keep clean. Be chaste because God commanded it. That is all there is to it. "Thou shalt not commit adultery," said the Lord at Sinai, and he has drawn no fine distinctions such as some would like to draw between adultery and fornication. The Lord used the words interchangeably.

SEX IN MARRIAGE

As to sex in marriage, the necessary treatise on that for Latter-day Saints can be written in two sentences: Remember the prime purpose of sex desire is to beget children. Sex gratification must be had at that hazard. You husbands: be kind and considerate of your wives. They are not your property; they are not mere conveniences; they are your partners for time and eternity.

CULTIVATION OF MODESTY

If you would be chaste, as God has commanded, then avoid conduct and practices that arouse the passions. A wise and pure boy or girl, one that wishes to be clean, will not "pet," nor "neck," nor "love-play," nor practice any other undue physical familiarity, by whatever name known. At best, these are gross and provocative indiscretions; at worst they are the preludes to certain and, too frequently, planned transgressions. These are all uncleanly in the sight of the Lord. If youth will abandon these, if it will decently re-cloth itself, and cultivate modesty—a largely lost virtue—it will be a long way on the road to chastity, which will bring untarnished happiness here and eternal joy in the hereafter.

And what I say to youth, I say to you young married people who are said to be, in many cases, far too lax in your morals. What may unchaste parents expect from their children, except unchastity.

EVILS OF DIVORCE

And with all this unchastity comes the great evils of divorce which is increasing amongst us at a wholly undue rate. The Lord has made clear from the beginning that these things are not pleasing in his sight.

May the Lord bless us. May we be on guard. There is no such thing with us as transgressing today, confessing tomorrow, paying the price, and then transgressing the next day all over again. That is not the gospel of Jesus Christ.

God bless us and help us to guide the youth. Again I pay tribute to the youth, the clean youth, and the great bulk of them are, but this danger is amongst us. It will not do to think it, or hide our eyes to it. O, brethren, be a unit in fighting sin, in sustaining those who are placed in authority, from the highest to the lowest, in the Church. Be a unit in clinging to the fundamental principles of the gospel, that God may bless us, I humbly pray, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

The men of the Tabernacle Choir sang "Discovery."

President Jesse A. Udall of the St. Joseph Stake offered the closing prayer.

---

The congregational singing of the Conference was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Conductor, and Richard P. Condie, Assistant Conductor, of the Tabernacle Choir.

The Salt Lake Tabernacle Choir was in attendance at the Saturday afternoon and Sunday sessions and furnished the choral music for those sessions. J. Spencer Cornwall directed the singing of the Choir.

The Relief Society Singing Mothers of the Jordan Valley Region and the four Provo stakes, with Sister Florence Jepperson Madsen, director, furnished the choral music for the Friday sessions.

The music of the Tabernacle Choir and Organ broadcast, Sunday morning, 9:30 to 10:00, was directed by J. Spencer Cornwall, Frank W. Asper was at the organ console, and the spoken word was by Richard L. Evans.

The music for the General Priesthood meeting was furnished by the Tabernacle Choir Men's Chorus, under the direction of J. Spencer Cornwall.

Accompaniments and interludes on the great organ were played by Alexander Schreiner, Frank W. Asper, and Roy M. Darley.

Stenographic notes of the Conference were taken by Frank W. Otterstrom and Joseph Anderson.
